3. Infinite wiſdom, that does nothing in vain, and therefore will not needleſsly keep one in humbling circumſtances, Lam. iii. 32. 33. But though he cauſe grief, yet will he have compaſſion according to the multitude of his mercies: for he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. God ſends them on for humbling, as the end and deſign to be brought about by them: when that is obtained, and there is no more uſe for them that way, we may aſſure ourſelves they will be taken off.

2dly, The providence of God, viewed in its ſtated methods of procedure with its objects, inſures it. Turn your eyes which way you will on the divine providence, ye may conclude thence, that in due time the humble will be lifted up.

1. Obſerve the providence of God, in the revolutions of the whole courſe of nature, day ſucceeding to the longeſt night, a ſummer to the winter, a waxing to a waning of the moon, a flowing to an ebbing of the ſea, &c. Let not the Lord's humbled ones be idle ſpectators of theſe things: they are for our learning, Jer. xxxi 35. 36 37. ‘Thus ſaith the Lord, which giveth the ſun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the ſtars for a light by night, which divideth the ſea, when the waves thereof rore; the Lord of hoſts is his name. If thoſe ordinances depart from before me, ſaith the Lord, then the ſeed of Iſrael alſo ſhall ceaſe from being a nation before me for ever.’ Will the Lord's hand keep ſuch a ſteady courſe in the earth, ſea, and viſible heavens, as to bring a lifting up in them after a caſting down, and only forget his humbled ones? No.

2. Obſerve the providence of God in the diſpenſations thereof about the man Chriſt, the moſt noble and auguſt object thereof, more valuable than a thouſand worlds, Col. ii. 9. Did not providence keep this courſe with him, firſt humbling him, then exalting him, and lifting him up? firſt bring him to the duſt of death in a courſe of ſufferings thirty-three years, then exalt him to the father's right hand in eternity of glory? Heb. xii. 2.—‘Who, for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is now ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God.’ Phil. ii. 8. 9. ‘And being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs. Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him.’——The exaltation could not fail to follow his humiliation, Luke xxiv. 26. Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory? And he ſaw and believed it would follow, as the ſpringing of the ſeed doth the ſowing it, John xii. 24 There is a near concern the humbled in humbling circumſtances have herein.

(1.) This is the pattern providence copies after in its conduct towards you. The Father was ſo well pleaſed with this method in the caſe of his own Son, that it was determined to be followed, and juſt copied over again in the caſe of all heirs of glory, Rom viii. 29. ‘For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt born amongſt many brethren.’ And who would not be pleaſed to walk through the darkeſt valley treading his ſteps?

(2.) This is a ſure pledge of your lifting up, Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation, was conſidered as a public perſon and repreſentative, and ſo is he in his exaltation. So Chriſt's exaltation enſures your exaltation out of your humbling circumſtances, Iſ. xxvi. 19. 'Thy dead men ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe: awake and ſing, ye that dwell in duſt.'—Hoſ. vi. 1. 2. 'Come, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us: he hath ſmitten, and he will bind us up. After two days he will revive us, in the third day he will raiſe us up, and we ſhall live in his ſight.' Eph. ii. 6. 'And hath raiſed us up together, and made us ſit together in heavenly places in Chriſt Jeſus.' Yea, he is gone into the ſtate of glory for us, as our forerunner, Heb. vi. 20. 'Whether the forerunner is for us entered, even Jeſus made an high Prieſt for ever.'——

(3.) His humiliation was the price of our exaltation, and his exaltation a full teſtimony of the acceptance of its payment to the full. There are no humbling circumſtances ye are in, but ye would have periſhed in them, had not he purchaſed your lifting up out of them by his own humiliation, Iſa. xxvi. 19. Now his humbling grace in you is an evidence of the acceptance of his humiliation for your lifting up.

3. Obſerve the providence of God towards the church in all ages. This has been the courſe the Lord has kept with her, Pſal. cxxix. 1.----4. Abel was ſlain by the wicked Cain, to the great grief of Adam and Eve, and the reſt of their pious children: but then there was another ſeed raiſed up in Abel's room after, Gen. iv. 25. Noah and his ſons were buried alive in the ark more than a year; but then they were brought out into a new world, and bleſſed. Abraham for many years went childleſs; but at length Iſaac was born. Iſrael was long in miſerable bondage in Egypt; but at length ſeated in the promiſed land, &c. We muſt be content to go by the footſteps of the flock: and if in humiliation, we will ſurely follow them in exaltation too.

4. Obſerve the providence of God in the diſpenſations of his grace towards his children. The general rule is, 1 Pet. v. 5.——For God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. How are they brought into a ſtate of grace? Is it not by a ſound work of humiliation going before, Luke vi. 48. And ordinarily the greater meaſure of grace that is deſigned for one, the deeper is their humiliation before, as in Paul's caſe. If they are to be recovered out of a backſlidden caſe, the ſame method is followed; ſo that deepeſt humiliations ordinarily make way for the greateſt comforts, and the darkeſt hour goes before the riſing of the Sun of righteouſneſs upon them, Iſa. lxvi. 5.——13.

Laſtly, Obſerve the providence of God at length throwing down wicked men, however long they ſtand and proſper, Pſal. xxxvii. 35. 36. I have ſeen the wicked in great power, and ſpreading himſelf like a green bay-tree: yet he paſſed away, and lo he was not; yea, I ſought him, but he could not be found. They are long green before the ſun, but at length they are ſuddenly ſmitten with an eaſt-wind, and wither away; their lamp goes out with a ſtink, and they are put out in obſcure darkneſs. Now, it is inconſiſtent with the benignity of the divine nature, to forget the humble to raiſe them, while he minds the proud to abaſe them.

3*dly*, The word of God puts its beyond all peradventure, which, from the beginning to the end, is the humbled ſaint's ſecurity for a lifting up, Pſal. cxix. 49. 50. Remember the word unto thy ſervant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me. His word is the great letter of his name, which he will certainly ſee to cauſe to ſhine, Pſalm cxxxvii. 2.——'For thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name;' and in all generations has been ſafely lippened to, Pſal. xii. 6. Conſider,

1. The doctrines of the word, which teach faith and hope for the time, and the happy iſſue the exerciſe of these graces will have. The whole current of ſcripture, to thoſe in humbling circumſtances is, Not to caſt away their confidence, but to hope to the end; and that for this good reaſon, that it ſhall not be in vain. See Pſal. xxvii. 14. 'Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thine heart: wait, I ſay, on the Lord.' And compare Rom. ix. 33. Iſa. xlix. 23.——'For they ſhall not be aſhamed that wait for me.'

2. The promiſes of the word, whereby Heaven is expreſsly engaged for a lifting up to thoſe that humble themſelves in humbling circumſtances, James iv. 10. 'Humble yourſelves in the ſight of the Lord, and he ſhall lift you up.' Matth. xxiii. 12.——'And he that humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted.' It may take a time to prepare them for lifting up, but that being done it is ſecured, Pſal. x. 17. 'Lord thou haſt heard the deſire of the humble; thou wilt prepare their heart; thou wilt cauſe thine ear to hear.' They have his word for deliverance, Pſal. l. 15. And though they may ſeem to be forgotten, they ſhall not be always ſo; the time of their deliverance will come, Pſal. ix. 18. 'For the needy ſhall not always be forgotten: the expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever.' Pſal. cii. 17. 'He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their prayer.'

3. The examples of the word ſufficiently confirming the truth of the doctrines and promiſes, Rom. xv. 4. For whatſoever things were written afore-time, were written for our learning: that we through patience and comfort of the ſcriptures might have hope. In the doctrines and promiſes the lifting up is propoſed to our faith, to be reckoned on the credit of God's word; but, in the examples, it is, in the caſe of others, ſet before our eyes to be ſeen, James v. 11. 'Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.' There we ſee it in the caſe of Abraham, Job, David, Paul, and other ſaints: but, above all, in the caſe of the man Chriſt.

Laſtly, The interceſſion of Chriſt, joining the prayers and cries of his humbled people in their humbling circumſtances, inſures a lifting up for them at length. Be it ſo, that the proud cry not when he bindeth them, yet his humbled ones will not do ſo, they will cry, Pſal. xlii. 7. 8. Deep calleth unto deep, at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindneſs in the day-time, and in the night his ſong ſhall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life. And though unbelievers may ſoon be outwearied, and give it over for altogether, ſure believers will not do ſo; but though they may, in a fit of temptation, lay it by as hopeleſs, they will find themſelves obliged to take it up again, Jer. xx. 9. 'Then I ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not ſtay;' and continue to cry on night and day, Luke xviii. 7. knowing no time for giving it over, till they be lifted up, Lam. iii. 49. 50. Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaſeth not, without any intermiſſion, till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven. Now Chriſt's interceſſion being joined with theſe cries, there cannot miſs to be a lifting up. Conſider,

1. Chriſt's interceſſion is certainly joined with the cries and prayers of the humbled in their humbling circumſtances, Rev. viii. 3. 'And another angel came and ſtood at the altar, having a golden cenſer; and there was given unto him much incenſe, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all ſaints upon the golden altar, which was before the throne.' They are by the Spirit helped to groan for relief, Rom. viii. 26. and the prayers and groans, which are through the Spirit, are certainly to be made effectual by the interceſſion of the Son, James v. 16. And ye may know they are by the Spirit, if ſo be ye are helped to continue praying, hoping for your ſuit at laſt on the ground of God's word of promiſe; for nature's praying is a pool that will dry up in a long drought. It is the Spirit of prayer is the laſting ſpring, John iv. 14. Pſal. cxxxviii. 3. 'In the day when I cried, thou anſweredſt me; and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul.' Truly there is an interceſſion in heaven, on the account of the humbling circumſtances of the humble ones. 'Then the angel of the Lord anſwered and ſaid, O Lord of hoſts, how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jeruſalem, and on the cities of Judah, againſt which thou haſt had indignation theſe threeſcore and ten years?' Zech. i. 12. How then can they miſs of a lifting up in due time?

2. He is in deep earneſt in his interceſſion for his people in their humbling circumſtances. Some will ſpeak a good word in favour of the helpleſs, that will be little concerned whether they come ſpeed or not: but our Interceſſor is in earneſt in behalf of his humbled ones; for he is touched with ſympathy in their caſe, Iſa. lxiii. 9. 'In all their affliction he was afflicted.'—And moſt tender ſympathy, Zech. ii. 8.—For he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye He has their caſe upon his heart, where he is in the holy place in the higheſt heavens, Exod. xxviii. 29. and he keeps exact account of the time of their humbling circumſtances, be it as long as it will, Zech. i. 12. Moreover, it is his own buſineſs, the lifting up they are to have is a thing that is ſecured to him, in the promiſes made to him, on the account of his blood ſhed for them, Pſal. lxxxix. 33. 36. So not only are they looking on earth, but the man Chriſt is in heaven looking for the accompliſhment of theſe promiſes, Heb. x. 12. 13. 'But this man after he had offered one ſacrifice for ſins, for ever ſat down on the right hand of God; from thenceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footſtool.' How is it poſſible, then, that that looking ſhould be baulked? Moreover, theſe humbling circumſtances are his own ſufferings ſtill, though not in his perſon, yet in his members, Col. i. 24. Who now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh, for his body's ſake which is the church. Wherefore there is all ground to conclude he is in deep earneſt.

Laſtly, His interceſſion is always effectual, John xi. 42. 'And I knew that thou heareſt me always.'——It cannot miſs to be ſo, becauſe he is the Father's well-beloved Son, his interceſſion has a plea of juſtice for the ground of it, 1 John ii. 1.——'We have an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous.' Moreover, he has all power in heaven and earth lodged in him, John v. 22. and, finally, he and his Father are one, and their will one. So, for the preſent time, both Chriſt and his Father do will the lifting up of the humbled ones, but yet only in the due time.

SECONDLY, I proceed to a more particular view of the point. And,

I. We will conſider the lifting up as brought about in time, which is the partial lifting up. And,

Firſt, Some conſiderations for clearing the nature thereof.

1. This lifting up does not take place in every caſe of a child of God. One may be humbled in humbling circumſtances, from which he is to get a lifting up in time. We would not from the promiſe preſently conclude, that we being humbled under humbling circumſtances, ſhall certainly be taken out of them, and freed from them, ere we get to the end of our journey. For it is certain, there are ſome, ſuch as our imperfections, and ſinfulneſs, and mortality, we can by no means be rid of while in this world. And there are particular humbling circumſtances the Lord may hang about one, and keep about him till they go down to the grave, while in the mean time, he may lift up another from the ſame, Heman was preſſed down all along from his youth; Pſal. lxxxviii. 15. others all their life-time, Heb. ii. 15.

Objection. If that be the caſe, what comes of the promiſe of lifting up? Where is the lifting up, if one may go to the grave under it? Anſw. Were there no life after this, there would be weight in that objection; but, ſince there is another life, there is none in it at all. In the other life the promiſe will be accompliſhed to the humbled, as it was, Luke xvi. 22. Conſider that the great term for accompliſhing the promiſes, is the other life, not this. 'Theſe all died in the faith, not having received the promiſes, but having ſeen them afar off, and were perſuaded of them, and embraced them,'—Heb. xi. 13. And that whatever accompliſhment of the promiſe is here, it is not of the nature of a ſtock, but of a ſample or a pledge.

Queſtion. But then may we not give over praying for the lifting up in that caſe? Anſw. We do not know when that is our caſe; for a caſe may be paſt all hope in our eyes, and the eyes of others, in which God deſigns a lifting up in time, as in Job's, Job vi. 11. What is my ſtrength that I ſhould hope: and what is mine end that I ſhould prolong my life? But, be it as it will, we ſhould never give over praying for the lifting up, ſince it will certainly come to all that pray in faith for it; if not here, yet hereafter. The promiſe is ſure, and that is the commandment; ſo ſuch praying cannot miſs of a happy iſſue at length, Pſal. l. 15. 'And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorify me.' The whole life of a Chriſtian is ſuch a praying waiting life, to encourage whereunto all temporal deliverances are given as pledges, Rom. viii. 23. And not only they, but ourſelves alſo, which have the firſt fruits of the Spirit; even we ourſelves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. And whoſo obſerves that full lifting up at death to be at hand, muſt certainly riſe, if he has given over his caſe as hopeleſs.

2. However there are ſome caſes wherein this lifting up does take place. God gives his people ſome notable liftings up, even in time, raiſing them out of remarkable humbling circumſtances. The ſtorm is changed into a calm, and they remember it as waters that fail, Pſal. xl. 1—4. Two things may be obſerved on this.

(1.) One may be in humbling circumſtances very long, and ſore and hopeleſs, and yet a lifting up may be abiding them of a much longer continuance. This is ſometimes the caſe of the children of God, who are ſet to bear the yoke in their youth, as it was with Joſeph and David; and of them that get it laid on them in their middle age, as it was with Job, who could not be leſs than forty at his trouble's coming, but after it, lived one hundred and forty, Job xlii. 16. God by ſuch method prepares men for peculiar uſefulneſs.

(2.) One may be in humbling circumſtances long and ſore, and quite hopeleſs in the ordinary courſe of providence, yet they may get a clear and warm blink of a lifting up, ere they come to their journey's end. The life of ſome of God's children is like a cloudy and rainy day, wherein in the evening the ſun breaks out from under the clouds, ſhines fair and clear a little, and then ſets. And it ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear, nor dark.—But it ſhall come to paſs, that at evening time it ſhall be light, Zech. xiv. 6. 7. Such was the caſe of Jacob in his old age, brought in honour and comfort to Egypt unto his ſon, and then died.

(3.) Yet whatever liftings up they get in this life, they will never want ſome weights hanging about them for their humbling. They may have their ſinging times, but their ſongs while in this world, will be mixed with groanings, 2 Cor. v. 4. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened.—The unmixed diſpenſation is reſerved for the other world: but this will be a wilderneſs, unto the end, where there will be howlings, with the moſt joyful notes.

Laſtly, All the liftings up the humbled meet with now are pledges, and but pledges, ſamples, and earneſt of the great lifting up abiding them on the other ſide; and they ſhould look on them ſo.

(1.) They are really ſo, Hoſ. ii. 15. ‘And I will ‘give her her vineyards from thence, and the valley of ‘Achor for a door of hope; and ſhe ſhall ſing there as ‘in the days of her youth, and as in the day when ſhe ‘came out of the land of Egypt.’ Our Lord Jeſus is leading his people now through the wilderneſs, and the manna and water of the rock are earneſts for the time of the milk and honey flowing in the promiſed land. They are not as yet come home to their Father's houſe; but they are travelling on the road, and Chriſt their elder brother with them, Cant. iv. 8. who bears their expences, takes them into inns by the way as it were, and refreſhes them with partial liftings up, after which they muſt get to the road again. But that entertainment by the way is a pledge of the full entertainment he will afford them when come home.

Objection, But people may get a lifting up in time, that yet is no pledge of a lifting up on the other ſide. How ſhall I know it then to be a pledge? Anſ. That lifting up, which comes by the promiſe, is a certain pledge of a full lifting up in the other world: for as the other life is the proper time of the accompliſhing of the promiſes, ſo we may be ſure, that when once God begins to clear his bond, he will certainly hold on till it is fully cleared, The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me, Pſalm cxxxviii. 8. So we may ſay as Naomi to Ruth, upon her receiving the ſix meaſures of barley from Boaz, Ruth iii. 18. He will not be in reſt, until he have finiſhed the thing this day. There are liftings up that come by common providence, and theſe indeed are ſingle, and not pledges of more: but the promiſe chains mercies together, ſo that one got is a pledge of another to come, yea, of the whole chain to the end, 2 Sam. v. 12.

Queſtion. But how ſhall I know the lifting up to come by the way of the promiſe? Anſw. That which comes by the way of the promiſe, does at once come the low way of humiliation, the high way of faith, or believing the promiſe, and the long way of waiting hope and patient continuance, James v. 7. Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the huſbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, untill he receive the early and latter rain. Humility qualifies for the accompliſhment of the promiſe, faith ſucks the breaſt of it, and patient waiting hangs by the breaſt till the milk come out abundantly.

(2.) But no lifting up of God's children here are any more than pledges of lifting up. God gives worldly men their ſtock here, but his children get nothing but a ſample of theirs here, Pſal. xvii. 14.; even as the ſervant at the term gets his fee in a round ſum, while the young heir gets nothing but a few pence for ſpending-money. The truth is, the ſame ſpending money is more valuable than the world's ſtock, Pſal. iv. 7. ‘Thou ‘haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time ‘that their corn and their wine increaſed.’ But though it is better than that and their ſervices too, and more worth than all their on-waiting, yet it is below the honour of their God to put them off with it, Heb. xi. 16. ‘But now they deſire a better country, that is, an hea‘venly; wherefore God is not aſhamed to be called their ‘God; for he hath prepared for them a city.’

Secondly, The partial lifting up itſelf. What they will get, getting this lifting up promiſed to the humbled. Why, they will get,

1. A removal of their humbling circumſtances. God having tried them a while, and humbled them, and brought down their hearts, will at length take off their burden, remove the weight ſo long hung at them, and ſo take them off that part of their trial joyfully, and let them get up their back long bowed down: and this one of two ways.

(1.) Either in kind, removing the burden for good and all. Such a lifting Job got, when the Lord turned back his captivity, increaſed again his family and ſubſtance, which had both been deſolated. David, when Saul his perſecutor fell in battle, and he was brought to the kingdom after many a weary day, expecting one day to fall by his hand. It is eaſy with our God to make ſuch turns in the moſt humbling circumſtances.

(2.) Or in equivalent or as good, removing the weight of the burden, that though it remains, it preſſes them no more, 2 Cor. xii. 9. 10. And he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me. Therefore I take pleaſure in infirmities—— Though they are not got to the ſhore, yet their head is no more under the water, but lifted up. David ſpeaks feelingly of ſuch a lifting up, Pſal. xxvii. 5. 6. ‘For ‘in the time of trouble he ſhall hide me in his pavili‘on: in the ſecret of his tabernacle ſhall he hide me, ‘he ſhall ſet me upon a rock. And now ſhall mine ‘head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me: ‘therefore will I offer in his tabernacle ſacrifices of joy, ‘I will ſing, yea, I will ſing praiſes unto the Lord.’ Such had the three children in the fiery furnace; the fire burned, but it could burn nothing of them but their bonds; they had the warmth and light of it, but nothing of the ſcorching heat. Sometimes God lifts up his people this way in their humbling circumſtances.

2. A comfortable ſight of the acceptance of their prayers, put up in their humbling circumſtances. While prayers are not anſwered, but trouble continued, the hangers on about the Lord's hand are apt to think they are not accepted nor regarded in heaven, becauſe there is no alteration in their caſe, Job. ix. 16. 17. ‘If I had ‘called, and he had anſwered me, yet would I not be‘lieve that he had hearkened unto my voice; for he ‘breaketh me with a tempeſt.’ But that is a miſtake; they are accepted immediately, though not anſwered, 1 John v. 14. And this is the confidence we have in him, that if we aſk any thing according to his will, he heareth us. The Lord does with them as a father with the letters coming thick from his ſon abroad, reads them one by one with pleaſure, and carefully lays them up to be anſwered at his convenience. And when the anſwer comes, the ſon will know how acceptable they were to his father, Matth. xv. 28. So, &c.

3. A heart ſatisfying anſwer of theſe prayers, ibid. ſo as they ſhall not only get the thing, but ſee they have it as an anſwer of prayer, and they will put a double value on the mercy, 1 Sam. ii. 1. Accepted prayers may be very long in anſwering, many years, as in Abraham and David's caſe, but they cannot miſcarry of an anſwer at length, Pſal. ix. 18. The time will come when God will tell out to them, according to the promiſe, that they ſhall change their note, and ſay, Pſal. cxvi. 1. I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice, and my ſupplication. Looking on their lifting up as bearing the ſignature of the hand of a prayer-hearing God.

4. Full ſatisfaction, as to the conduct of providence, in all the ſteps of the humbling circumſtances, and the delay of the lifting up, however perplexing theſe were before, Rev. xv. 3. Standing on the ſhore, and looking back to what they have paſſed through, they will be made to ſay, He hath done all things well. Theſe things which are bitter to Chriſtians in the paſſing through, are very ſweet in the reflection on them; ſo is Samſon's riddle verified in their experience.

5. They get the lifting up, together with the intereſt for the time they lay out of it. When God pays his bonds of promiſes, he pays both ſtock and intereſt together: the mercy is increaſed according to the time the man waited on, and the expences and hardſhips ſuſtained during the dependence of the proceſs. The fruits of common providence are ſoon ripe, ſoon rotten; but the fruit of the promiſe is readily long a ripening, but then it is durable: and the longer it is a ripening, it is the more valuable when it comes. Abraham and Sarah waited for the promiſe about ten years, at length they thought on a way to haſten it, Gen. xvi. that ſoon took in the birth of Iſhmael, but he was not the promiſed ſon. They were coming into extreme old age, ere the promiſe brought forth, Gen. xvii. 11. But, when it came, they got it with an addition of the renewing of their ages, Gen. xxi. 7. and xxv. 1. The moſt valuable of all the promiſes was the longeſt in fulfilling, viz. the promiſe of Chriſt, that was four thouſand years.

Laſtly, The ſpiritual enemies that flew thick and throng about them in the time of the darkneſs of the humbling circumſtances, will be ſcattered at this lifting up in the promiſe, 1 Sam. ii. 1. 5. ‘ And Hannah prayed, and ſaid, my heart rejoiceth in the Lord, my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies.——They that were full have hired out themſelves for bread, and they that were hungry ceaſed.’—Formidable was Pharaoh’s hoſt behind the Iſraelites, while they had the Red-ſea before them; but, when they were through the ſea, they ſaw the Egyptians dead on the ſhore, Exod xiv. 30. Such a ſight will they that humble themſelves under humbling circumſtances get of their ſpiritual enemies, when the time comes for their lifting up.

Thirdly, The due time of this lifting up. That is a natural queſtion of thoſe in humbling circumſtances, Watchman, what of the night? And we cannot anſwer it to the humbled ſoul, but in the general, Iſa. xxi. 11. 12. So take theſe general obſervations on it.

1. The lifting up of the humbled will not be longſome, conſidering the weight of the matter; that is to ſay, conſidering the worth and value of the lifting up of the humble? when it comes, it can by no means be reckoned long to the time of it. When ye ſow your corns in the fields, though they do not ripen ſo ſoon as ſome garden ſeeds, but you wait three months or ſo, ye do not think the harveſt long a coming, conſidering the value of the crop. This view the apoſtle takes of the lifting up in humbling circumſtances, 2 Cor. iv. 17. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. So that a believer looking on the promiſe with an eye of faith, and perceiving its accompliſhment, and the work of it when accompliſhed, may wonder it is come on ſo ſhort on waiting. Therefore it is determined to be a time that comes ſoon, Luke xviii. 7. ſoon in reſpect of its weight and worth.

2. When the time comes, it and only it will appear the due time. To every thing there is a ſeaſon, and a great part of wiſdom lies in diſcerning it, and doing things in the ſeaſon thereof. And we may be ſure infinite wiſdom cannot miſs the ſeaſon by miſtaking it, Deut. xxxii. 4. ‘ He is a rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment.’——But whatever God doth will abide the ſtricteſt examination in that, as all other points, Eccleſ. iii. 14. I know that whatſoever God doth, it ſhall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doth it, that men ſhould fear before him. It is true, many times caſt up to us as the due time for lifting up, which yet really is not ſo, becauſe there is ſome circumſtance hid to us, which renders that ſeaſon unfit for the thing. Hence, John vii. 6.——‘ My time is not yet come, but your time is always ready.’ But when all the circumſtances, always foreknown of God, ſhall come to be opened out, and laid together before us, we will then ſee the lifting up is come in the nick of time, moſt for the honour of God and our good, and that it would not have done ſo well ſooner.

3. When the time comes that is really the due time, the proper time for lifting up a child of God from his humbling circumſtances, it will not be put off one moment longer, Hab. ii. 3.—At the end it ſhall ſpeak——it will ſurely come, it will not tarry. Though it tarry, it will not linger or put off to another time. O what reſt of heart would the firm faith of this afford us! There is not a child of God but would with the utmoſt carefulneſs proteſt againſt a lifting up before the due time, as againſt an unripe fruit caſten to him by an angry father, that would ſet his teeth on edge. Sith it is ſo then, could we firmly believe this point, that it will undoubtedly come in the due time, without loſing of a minute, it will afford a ſound reſt. It muſt be ſo, becauſe God has ſaid it: were the caſe never ſo hopeleſs, were mountains of difficulties lying in the way of it, at the appointed time it will blow, Heb. Hab. ii. 3. A metaphor from the wind riſing in a moment after a dead calm.

4. The humbling circumſtances are ordinarily carried to the utmoſt point of hopeleſſneſs before the lifting up. The knife was at Iſaac’s throat before the voice was heard. 2 Cor. i. 8. 9. ‘ For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Aſia, that we were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength, inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life: but we had the ſentence of death in ourſelves, that we ſhould not truſt in ourſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead.’ Things ſoon ſeem to us arrived at that point: ſuch is the haſtineſs of our ſpirits. But things may have far to go down, after we think they are at the foot of the hill. And we are almoſt as little competent judges of the point of hopeleſſneſs, as of the due time of lifting up. But readily God carries his people’s humbling circumſtances downward, downward, ſtill downward, till they come to that point. Two reaſons hereof to be noticed.

(1.) One from the explanatory cauſe of it. Herein God is holding the ſame courſe which he held in the caſe of the man Chriſt, the beloved pattern copied after in all the diſpenſations of providence towards the church, and every particular believer, Rom. viii. 29. He was all along a man of ſorrow: as his time went on, the waters ſwelled more, till he was brought to the duſt of death; then he was buried, and the grave-ſtone ſealed; which done, the world thought they were freely quit of him, and he would trouble them no more. But they quite miſtook it; then, and not till then, was the due time of lifting him up. And the liftings up that his people get moſt remarkable, are only little pieces faſhioned after this grand pattern.

(2.) Another from the final cauſe, the end and deſign providence aims at in it, and that is to carry the believer cleanly off his own, and all created bottoms, to bottom his truſt and hope in the Lord alone, 2 Cor. i. 9.—‘ That we ſhould not truſt in ourſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead.’ The life of a Chriſtian here is deſigned to be a life of faith: and though faith may act more eaſily, that it has ſome help from ſenſe, yet it certainly acts moſt nobly, when it acts over the belly of ſenſe. Then is it pure faith, when it ſtands only on its own native legs, the power and word of God, Rom. iv. 19. 20. ‘ And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead—neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah’s womb. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith; giving glory to God:’ and thus it muſt do, when the matter is carried to the utmoſt point of hopeleſſneſs.

Laſtly, Due preparation of the heart, for the lifting up out of the humbling circumſtances, goes before the due time of that lifting up according to the promiſe. It is not ſo in every lifting up; the liftings up of the common providences are not ſo critically managed; men will have them, will want them no longer, and God flings them to them in anger, ere they are prepared for them, Hoſ. xiii. 11. I gave thee a king in mine anger.—They can by no means abide the trial, and God takes them off as reprobate ſilver that is not able to abide it, Jer. vi. 29. 30.

This due preparation conſiſts in due humiliation, Pſal. x. 17 And it often takes much work to bring about this, which is another point that we are very incompetent judges of. We would have thought Job was brought very low in his ſpirit, by the providence of God bruiſing him on the one hand, and his friends on the other, for a long time. Yet, after all he had endured both ways, God ſaw it neceſſary to ſpeak to himſelf, for his humiliation, chap. xxxviii. 1. By that ſpeech of God himſelf he was brought to his knees, chap. xl. 4. 5. And we would have thought he was then ſufficiently humbled, and perhaps he thought ſo himſelf too. But God ſaw a farther degree of humiliation neceſſary, and therefore juſt begins anew again to ſpeak for his humiliation, which at length laid him in the duſt, chap. xlii. 5. 6. And when he was thus prepared for lifting up, he got it.

There are ſix things, I conceive, belong to this humiliation, preparatory to lifting up.

1. A deep ſenſe of ſinfulneſs and unworthineſs of being lifted up at all, Job xl. 4. Behold, I am vile, what ſhall I anſwer thee? I will lay mine hand upon my mouth. People may be long in humbling circumſtances ere they be brought this length: even good men are much prejudiced in their own favours, and may ſo far forget themſelves as to think God deals his favours unequally, and is mighty ſevere on them more than others. Elihu marketh this wrong in Job under his humbling circumſtances, Job. xxxiii. 10. 11. 12. And I believe it will be found there is readily a greater keenneſs to vindicate our own honour from the imputation the humbling circumſtances ſeem to lay upon it, than to vindicate the honour of God in the juſtice and equity of the diſpenſation. The blindneſs of an ill-natured world, ſtill ready to ſuſpect the worſt cauſes for humbling circumſtances, as if the greateſt ſufferers were ſurely the greateſt ſinners, Luke xiii. 4. gives a handle for this bias of the corrupt nature. But God is a jealous God, and when he appears ſufficiently to humble, he will cauſe the matter of our honour give way, like a ſandy brae under our feet, while we ſhall be obliged to gripe haſtily to the vindication of his.

2. A reſignation to the divine pleaſure as to the time of lifting up. God gives the promiſe, leaving the time blank as to us. Our time is always ready, and we raſhly fill it up at our own hand. God does not keep our time, becauſe it is not the due time. Hence we are ready to think his word fails; whereas it is but our own raſh concluſion from it that fails, Pſal. cxvi. 11. 'I ſaid in my haſte, All men are liars.' Several of the ſaints have gotten on the finger-ends by this means, and thereby learned to let alone filling up that blank. The firſt promiſe was thus uſed by believing Eve, Gen. iv. 1. Another promiſe was ſo by believing Abraham, after about ten years on-waiting, Gen. xvi. Another by David, forecited, Pſal. cxvi. 11.

If this be the caſe of any child of God, let them not be diſcouraged upon it, thinking they were over-raſh in applying the promiſe to themſelves: they were only ſo in applying the time to the promiſe; a ſnapper that ſaints in all ages have made, which they repented, and ſaw the folly of, and let alone that point for the time to come; and then the promiſe was fulfilled in its own due time. Let them in ſuch circumſtances go and do likewiſe, leaving the time entirely to the Lord.

3. An entire reſignation as to the way and manner of bringing it about. We are ready to do, as to the way of accompliſhing the promiſe, juſt as with the time of it, to ſet a particular way for the Lord's working of it; and if that be not kept, the proud heart is ſtumbled, 2 Kings v. 11. But Naaman was wroth, and he went away, and ſaid, Behold, I thought he will ſurely come out to me, and ſtand and call on the name of the Lord his God, and ſtrike his hand over the place—But the Lord will have his people broke off from that too, that they ſhall preſcribe no way to him, but leave that to him intirely, as in that ſame caſe, ver. 14.—'He went down and 'dipped himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, according to the 'ſaying of the man of God—and he was clean.' The compaſs of our knowledge of ways and means is very narrow, as if one is blocked up, oft-times we cannot ſee another: but our God knows many ways of relief, where we know but one, or none at all; and it is very uſual for the Lord to bring the lifting up to his people in a way they had no view to, after repeated diſappointments from theſe airths whence they had great expectations.

4. Reſignation as to the degree of the lifting up, yea, and as to the very being of it in time. The Lord will have his people weaned ſo, that however haſty they have ſometimes been, that they behoved to be ſo ſoon lifted up, and could no longer bear, they ſhall be brought at length to ſet no time at all, but ſubmit to go to the grave under their weight, if it ſeem good in the Lord's eyes, and in that caſe they will be brought to be content with any meaſure of it in time, without preſcribing how much, 2 Sam. xv. 25. 26.—If I ſhall find favour in the eyes of the Lord, he will bring me again—But if he thus ſay, I have no delight in thee: behold, here am I; let him do to me as it ſeemeth good unto him.

5. The continuing of praying and waiting on the Lord in this caſe, Eph. vi. 18. 'Praying always with 'all prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit, and watch'ing thereunto with all perſeverance.'—It is pride of heart and unſubduedneſs of ſpirit, that makes people give over praying and waiting, becauſe their humbling circumſtances are lengthened out time after time, 2 Kings vi. 33. But due humility going before the lifting up, brings men into that temper, to pray, wait, and hang on reſolutely, ſetting no time for the giving it over, till the lifting up come, whether in time or eternity, Lam. iii. 49. 50.

Laſtly, Mourning under miſmanagements in the trial, Job. xlii. 3.—Therefore have I uttered that I underſtood not, things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. The proud heart dwells and expatiates on the man's ſufferings in the trial, and caſts out all the folds of the trial on that ſide, and views them again and again. But when the Spirit of God comes duly to humble, in order to lifting up, he will cauſe the man to paſs, in a ſort, the ſuffering-ſide of the trial, and turn his eyes on his own conduct in it, ranſack it, judge himſelf impartially, and condemn himſelf: ſo that his mouth will be ſtopped.

This is that humility going before the lifting up in time in the way of the promiſe.

II. We proceed to conſider the lifting up, as brought about at the end of time, in the other world. And,

Firſt. A word as to the nature of this lifting up. Concerning it we ſhall ſay theſe five things.

1. There is a certainty of this lifting up, in all caſes of the humbled under humbling circumſtances. Though one cannot, in every caſe, make them ſure of a lifting up in time, yet they may be aſſured, be the caſe what it will, they will, without all peradventure, get a lifting up on the other ſide, 2 Cor. v. 1. 'For we know, that 'if our earthly houſe of this tabernacle were diſſolved, 'we have a building of God, an houſe not made with 'hands, eternal in the heavens.' Though God's humbled children may both break-faſt and dine on bread of adverſity and water of affliction, they will be ſure to ſup ſweetly and plentifully. And the believing expectation of the latter might ſerve to qualify the former, and make eaſy under it.

2. It will be a perfect lifting up, Heb. xii. 23. They will be perfectly delivered out of their particular trials, and ſpecial furnace, be what it will, that made them many a weary day. Lazarus was then delivered from his poverty and ſores, and lying at the rich man's gate, Luke xvi. 22. and fully delivered. Yea, they will get then a lifting up from all their humbling circumſtances together. All the imperfections will then be at an end, inferiority in relations, contradictions, afflictions, uncertainty, and ſin. If it was long a coming, there will be a bleſſed moment when they ſhall get altogether.

3. They will not only be raiſed out of their low condition, but they will be ſet up on high; as Joſeph, not only brought out of priſon, but made ruler over the land of Egypt. And they will be lifted up,

(1.) Into a high place, Luke xvi. 22.——‘The beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's boſom.’——Now they are at beſt in a low place, but upon this earth; there they will be ſeated in the higheſt heavens, Philip i. 23. with Eph. iv. 10. Often, in their humbling circumſtances, they are obliged now to embrace dunghills: then they will be ſet with Chriſt on his throne, Rev. iii. 21. To him that overcometh will I grant to ſit with me in my throne.—Though their belly now cleaves to the earth, and men ſay, Bow down that we may paſs over you, they will then be ſettled in the heavenly manſions, above ſun, moon, and ſtars.

(2.) Into a high ſtate and condition, a ſtate of perfection. Out of all their troubles and uneaſineſſes, they will be ſet into a ſtate of reſt; from their mean and inglorious condition, they will be advanced into a ſtate of glory; their weighted and ſorrowful life will be ſucceeded with a fulneſs of joy; and, for their humbling circumſtances, they will be clothed with eternal glory and honour.

4. It will be a final lifting up, after which there will be no more caſting down for ever, Rev. vii. 16. When we get a lifting up in time, we are apt to imagine fondly we are at the end of our trials; but we ſoon find we are too haſty in our concluſions, and the cloud returns, Pſal. xxx. 6. 7.——In my proſperity I ſaid, I ſhall never be moved——Thou didſt hide thy face, and I was troubled. But then indeed the trial is quite over, the fight is at an end: and then is the time of the retribution and triumph.

Laſtly, There will not be the leaſt remaining uneaſineſs from the humbling circumſtances, but, on the contrary, they will have a glorious and deſirable effect. I make no queſtion but the ſaints will have the remembrance of their humbling circumſtances they were under here below. Did the rich man in hell remember his having five brethren on the earth, how ſumptuouſly he fared, how Lazarus ſat at his gate; and can we doubt but the ſaints will remember perfectly their heavy trials? Rev. vi. 10. But then they will remember them as waters that fail, as the man recovered to health remembers his toſſings on the ſick bed; and that is a way of remembering that ſweetens the preſent ſtate of health beyond what otherwiſe it would be. Certainly the ſhore of the Red Sea was the place that, of all places, was the fitteſt to help the Iſraelites to ſing in the higheſt key, Rev. xv. 3. And the humbling circumſtances of ſaints on the earth, will be of the ſame uſe to them in heaven.

Secondly, A word to the due time of this lifting up. There is a particular definite time for it in every ſaint's caſe, which is the due time, but it is hid from us. We can only ſay in the general,

1. Then is the due time for it, when our work we have to do in this world is over. God has appointed every one their taſk, fight, trial, and work; and, till that is done, we are in a ſort immortal, John ix. 4. and xi. 9. That work is,

(1.) Doing work; work ſet to us by the great Maſter, to be done for the honour of God and the good of our fellow-creatures, Ecclef. ix. 10. We muſt be content to be doing on, even in our humbling circumſtances, till that be done out. It is not the due time for that lifting up, till we are at the end of that work, and ſo have ſerved our generation.

(2.) Suffering work. There is a certain portion of ſuffering that is allotted for the myſtical body, and the head has divided to the ſeveral members their proportions thereof; and it is not the due time for that lifting up, till we have exhauſted the ſhare thereof allotted to us. Paul looked on his life as going on in that, Col. i. 24.

2. When that lifting up comes, we will ſee it is come exactly in the due time; that it was well it was neither ſooner nor latter: for, though heaven is always better than earth, and that it would be better for us, abſolutely ſpeaking, to be in heaven than on earth; yet certainly there is a time wherein it is better for the honour of God, and his ſervice, that we be on the earth than in heaven: Philip. i. 24. Nevertheleſs to abide in the fleſh is more needful for you. And it will be no grief of heart to them, when there, that they were ſo long in their humbling circumſtances, and were not brought ſooner.

Use 1. Let not then the humble caſt away their confidence, whatever their humbling circumſtances be: let them aſſure themſelves there will come a lifting up to them at length; if not here, yet to be ſure hereafter. Let them keep this in their view, and comfort themſelves with it, for God has ſaid it, Pſal. ix. 18.—‘The needy ſhall not always be forgotten.’—If the night were never ſo long, the morning will come at length.

2. Let patience have her perfect work. The huſbandman waits for the return of his ſeed, the ſea-merchant for the return of his ſhips, the ſtore maſter for what he calls year-time, when he draws in the produce of his flocks. All theſe have long patience, and why ſhould not the Chriſtian too have patience, and patiently wait the time appointed for his lifting up?

Ye have heard much of the crook in the lot, the excellency of humbleneſs of ſpirit in a low lot, beyond pride of ſpirit, though joined with a high one; ye have been called to humble yourſelves in your humbling circumſtances, and aſſured in that caſe of a lifting up. To conclude, we may aſſure ourſelves, that God will at length break in pieces the proud, be they never ſo high; and he will triumphantly lift up the humble, be they never ſo low.

The unity of the body of Chriſt, and the duties the members owe one to another.

BEING

The Subſtance of ſeveral SERMONS

PREACHED ON

1 Cor. x. 17.

For we being many are one bread and one body; for we are all partakers of that one bread.

ONE great reaſon why communions do ſo little good, is, that communicants are ſo little concerned in one another for their ſpiritual welfare. And this hath its riſe from their not diſcerning, and ſeriouſly laying to heart the ſpiritual relation there is among them, by them avouched and publicly teſtified by their partaking of one bread at the communion-table. People readily have ſome notion that it is a communion with Chriſt; but few conſider that it is a communion of ſaints, and what duties flow from it as ſuch. I would therefore lay this matter before you, in order to purſue the benefit of our late ſolemn occaſion.

The ſcope of theſe words is to ſhew, That thoſe who partaked of idolatrous feaſts were by that action declared one body with idolaters. This is proven by a parity of reaſon, viz. that thoſe who partake of the Lord's table, declare themſelves one body with the ſaints. In the preceeding verſe he ſhews the nature of the ſacrament of the ſupper; it is the communion of the body and blood of Chriſt; a ſign, ſeal, and appointed means of our joint feeding on a ſlain Saviour, like ſo many eagles on the ſlain body. Here he ſhews the nature of the ſociety of ſaints, for whom it is appointed, viz. that they are one body, viz. the body of Chriſt; and therefore being united to him, they have certainly communion in his body and blood. For we being many are one bread and one body: for we are all partakers of that one bread.

In the words are two things.

1, The ſpiritual conjunction and communion of ſaints among themſelves aſſerted; We, many, &c. He ſpeaks of the whole multitude of believers. They being many particular ſaints, ſome men, ſome women, teachers, taught, weak, ſtrong, are yet ſo joined, and have ſuch intimate union and communion one with another, that they are one bread, i. e. one body repreſented by the one ſacramental bread. If ye aſk whoſe is that body? or who is the head of it? It is Chriſt's, 1 Cor. xii. 27. 'Now ye are the body of Chriſt, and members in particular.' Not his natural body, but his myſtical body: and therefore the many are not ſuch as meet at one communion-table in one congregation, but all the members of Chriſt's myſtical body through the world, for Chriſt has but one body: and as many grains do make up but one ſacramental bread, ſo they being many do make up but one body.

2. This ſpiritual conjunction and communion of ſaints among themſelves, inferred from their all partaking of that one bread; For we being many are one bread, &c. By that one bread is meant, that bread which is exhibited in the ſacrament, viz. both the inviſible bread, which is Chriſt himſelf, and the viſible bread which we take into our mouths, the latter the ſign of the former. Believing communicants partake of both: they partake of that bread, which is the Lord; ſo are all united to, and hold communion with the head as members, and therefore are one body among themſelves: they partake of the ſacramental bread, which is an inſtituted ſign of the other, and thereby profeſs their communion with Chriſt the head, and conſequently their communion with the ſaints, as members of the ſame body with them. And, in this laſt, hypocritical communicants join with them, by their partaking, declaring, and avouching themſelves to be of the communion of ſaints of the myſtical body of Chriſt, and binding themſelves to the duty of that communion; although in reality they are not ſo, as not partaking of the inviſible bread, which is Chriſt the Lord. The caſe is the ſame as to baptiſm. For by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, 1 Cor. xii. 13.

The point to be handled is this doctrine.

DOCTRINE. There is a communion of ſaints among themſelves, as being conjoined into one myſtical body of Chriſt, declared and avouched by partakers of the ſacraments, eſpecially that of the Lord's Supper, every one for themſelves.

There are two parts of this doctrine. One is, That there is ſuch a ſtrait and intimate communion and conjunction among the ſaints, that they are really and truly one body myſtically, however many they be. The other is, That one's partaking of the ſacrament is a declaring and avouching himſelf to be of that communion. By a communion I mean a ſociety having a common intereſt in things.

I. I ſhall [illegible] of this communion of ſaints as one body. And,

1. Who are the member of this communion——of this happy ſociety the body of Chriſt? There are two ſorts of members of it, ſome in ſhew only, ſome in reality. As to the former, I offer two things.

(1.) The openly wicked and profane, amongſt whom may be reckoned the groſsly ignorant, and all ſuch as have no form of Godlineſs, are not ſo much as viſible or apparent members of the communion of ſaints. They are excluded from the communion of ſaints above, Gal. v. 19.——21. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt-- adultery, fornication, &c.---Of the which I tell you before, as I have told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God. From the communion of ſaints below, Acts xxvi. 18. 'To open 'their eyes, and to turn them from darkneſs to light--'that they may receive inheritance among them that 'are ſanctified,'---and viſibly belong to the devil's family, John viii. 44. What though they have been baptized, and are yet in the viſible church, they have in effect renounced it. Rom. ii. 25.——But if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made uncircumciſion. For though they were baptized into this one body, 1 Cor. xii. 13. yet they will have no communion with that body, nor the head of it. Though they get on Chriſt's mark of baptiſm in their infancy, they have now got the devil's mark on above it. So Rom. ii. 25. therefore not to be admitted to the Lord's table, Matth. vii. 6. Give not that which is holy unto dogs.——

(2.) Maſked hypocrites are ſeeming viſible members of this communion, but not real members of it. They are brethren of the ſaints, but only half brethren, Cant. i. 6. falſe brethren, Gal. ii. 4. They are among them, and communicate among them, but they are not of them, 1 John ii. 19. But they want the wedding garment, and though the ſervants cannot but admit them as viſible ſaints, the Maſter will throw them out, as none of that communion in his ſight, Matth. xxii. 12.

Hypocrites belong to the myſtical body, as a branch bound up, but not knitting with the ſtock belongs to the tree, or as a tree-leg belongs to the body; but not otherways. See the caſe of theſe members in theſe three things.

1. They are uſeful for the myſtical body of Chriſt with their gifts, as the tree-leg with its ſtrength to the natural body. So was Judas and Demas, &c. Graceleſs well gifted miniſters and profeſſors, they may have a mouth to ſpeak for truth, ay and hands to act for it too, and the profit redound to the ſaints, not themſelves, who have no heart to embrace it in reality; and to adorn the communion as long as they keep green, as ſuch branches do the tree, by which God is honoured before the world, Pſal. lxxxi. 15.

2. They are under the particular care of the body, as the tree leg, ———and the branch under the gardener's inſpection. Hence they get their gifts increaſed for the good of the body, are preſerved from many ſnares they would otherways fall into if they had nothing at all to do with the communion of ſaints, as may appear from the way they go when they turn apoſtates. They fare the better they are in good company. But,

3. They are laid aſide at length, as the branch, John xv. 2. and the tree leg, if not before, yet at the time when the body goes to reſt, Pſal. cxxv. 5. Though the living leg be broken, ſo crazed that for the time it can be of no diſcernible uſe for the head, nor for the other members of the body, it is not caſt by, nor ſeparate from the body, but its weakneſs borne with, and it healed at length. But the tree leg goes for altogether.

As to the latter, there are three ſorts of theſe real members.

1. Real members in God's deſign, but not yet formed. Theſe are all the elect, who are yet to be born, or yet to be born again, and we cannot have a full view of the body without eyeing them, Eph. i. 10. That in the diſpenſation of the fulneſs of times, he might gather together in one all things in Chriſt.'—They ſhall all of them be formed at length, all conjoined unto the body, and all belong to the perfection of the body, for carrying on of which the miniſtry is appointed, Eph. iv. 11—13. For the body of Chriſt is all the elect knit to him as the head, Eph. v. 23. 'For the huſband is the head of the 'wife, even as Chriſt is the head of the church.'

2. Real members already perfected, at leaſt as to their ſouls. Theſe are the ſaints triumphant, who are with us members, fellow members of the body of Chriſt, though glorified ones. Therefore, Heb. xii. 22, 23. But ye are come to the general aſſembly and church of the firſt born——and to the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. Even they, as high as they are, are of this communion of ſaints, of the ſame family of heaven with us militant on earth, though they are in the upper rooms, and we in the lower, Eph. iii. 15.

3. Real members formed, but not perfected yet. Theſe are the ſaints on earth, even all of them upon the face of the earth, whatever particular viſible church they belong to: at whatever diſtance they are one from another, though they never ſaw, nor never will ſee one another's faces till they come to meet in glory, they are all one body, all members of that one body of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xii. 12. 'For as the body is one, and hath many 'members, and all the members——being many are 'one body, ſo alſo is Chriſt.'

Theſe laſt are they whom our text ſpeaks of, as one body partaking of the ſacramental bread, viz. the body of Chriſt, as to that part of it which is on earth; and of this we ſpeak. So there is a communion of ſaints on earth, and all the ſaints are members of it: wherever they dwell, whatever leſſer points of doctrine, worſhip, &c. they differ in, they have communion with one another, as being all conjoined into one body.

II. Wherein this communion of ſaints conſiſts; or how they are one body.

1. They have all one head, viz. the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the head of all the ſaints, Eph. i. 22. 23. And gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body.—They are all united to him by his Spirit, 1 Cor. vi. 17.——'He that is joined to the Lord 'is one ſpirit.' And from him as their head, they derive vital influences, Col. ii. 19. From which all the body, by joints and bands, having nouriſhment miniſtered, and knit together, increaſeth with the increaſe of God. There may be great difference betwixt members, in reſpect of growth, livelineſs, and uſefulneſs; but the meaneſt have communion with the higheſt in one head, which is common to them all. So they are all under the direction, government and influence of Jeſus Chriſt, as their common head.

2. They are all animated, enlivened and actuated by one Spirit, viz. the holy Spirit of Chriſt. This Spirit dwells in Chriſt as the head, and in all the ſaints as his members, Rom. viii. 9. and unites them to the head, and among themſelves too, ſo that they are one body, 1 Cor. xii. 13. A tree-leg, though bound cloſe to the body, is no member of it, becauſe it is not animated by the ſoul and life of that body; but if there were a body of a man, whoſe head did reach the clouds, any toe of that man's foot, though defiled by the ground it toucheth, is as really a member of that body as the ſhoulders are, having communion with them in the ſame ſoul or ſpirit, which actuates the one as well as the other.

Great is the difference of the ſaints ſouls or ſpirits, as men and women; ſome are bold, ſome fearful. It is as eaſy for ſome to draw the ſword in Chriſt's quarrel, as for others to ſpeak a word for him. Some are of clear, chearful, eaſy, active ſpirits; ſome under a ſpirit of heavineſs and indiſpoſition for action; but as ſaints they have all one Spirit: whoſo could diſcern, how unanimouſly they vote Chriſt to be the king of the heart, of the church, of the world, againſt the torrent of ſollicitations from the devil, world, and fleſh; how, as with one eye, they look up to God in Chriſt as their only happineſs, and away from the world which the reſt of mankind fix their eye on; how with one heart and one ſoul they all groan under the remains of ſin, and for perfection in holineſs, though ſome louder than others; he behoved to ſay, theſe have all one Spirit of faith, holineſs, and contempt of the world, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. Num. xiv. 24.

3. One grace of faith wrought by the ſelf ſame Spirit in them all, Col. ii. 12. terminates in and knits them to one head, the Lord Jeſus, Eph. iii. 17. As all the lines drawn from the circumference meet in the centre, and there have communion; ſo the faith of all God's elect meet in Jeſus Chriſt, and thus they have communion among themſelves, Tit. i. 1.—4. Thus are they one body, as being all knit to the head, by one and the ſame ſpiritual band for kind. The ſtrong faith gripes here, the weak faith reacheth to him; though the weak hand of faith is not ſo ſteady, nor gripes ſo hard as the other, yet both knit, Cant. iv. 9. and v. 1.

4. They have all one heart and mind in reſpect of fundamentals, Eph. iv. 5. One faith, viz. of doctrine, the ſubſtance of which was and ever will be the ſame, Heb. xiii. 8. Whatever be their different ſentiments as to inferior truths, they all agree in the main, Acts iv. 12. 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there 'is none other name under heaven given among men, 'whereby we may be ſaved.' Thus, according to the promiſe, Jer. xxxii. 39. they have 'one heart and one 'way;' for they are all partakers of that one unction, which teacheth all things neceſſary to ſalvation, 1 John ii. 20. 'But ye have an unction from the holy One, 'and ye know all things.' For they are all taught of God: and that doctrine which contradicts the experience of the ſaints, and reliſhes not with diſcerning ſouls exerciſed to godlineſs, is juſtly to be ſuſpected, Matth. xi. 19.——'Wiſdom is juſtified of her children.'

5. They are united to one another in love, Col. iii. 14. Eph. iv. 16. This is a powerful cement. Love cements hearts and ſouls, and ſo knits faſt. They love one another, though they never ſaw others faces, if they do but know there are ſuch perſons in the world. They love them for the common image of God which they bear; and in all the company of ſaints this love will break over all the differences in leſſer matters among them; ſo that it is made a mark of a member of that communion, 1 John iii. 14. We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren.

Laſtly, They have a communion in one another's gifts and graces, as the caſe ſtands in the natural body, Eph. iv. 16. There is a diverſity of gifts and offices in the common body of ſaints; ſome are teachers, ſome taught; rulers, ruled. Some excel in one gift or grace, ſome in another; ſome perhaps cannot be ſaid to excel their fellow ſaints in any things; but all theſe are for the common advantage of the body, 1 Cor. xiii. 27. and the glory of the head. And, wherever they are, they belong to the whole body, as the light that is in the eye, the ſtrength in the arms, the ſwiftneſs in the legs, belong to, and are for the good of the whole body, 1 Cor. iii. 22. 23. 'Whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, 'or the world, or life, or death, or things preſent, or 'things to come; all are yours, and ye are Chriſt's.' And every the meaneſt member and gift has its own uſe and neceſſity. See 1 Cor. xii. 13. and downwards.

Use. Here is a fellowſhip ye may all partake of, and I invite you all to the communion of ſaints, 1 John. i. 3. That which we have ſeen and heard, declare we unto you, that ye may alſo have fellowſhip with us. Many are ruined with their love of that they call good-fellowſhip. What fellowſhip deſerves that name? Not the communion of ſinners ruining one another under the influence of Satan and their luſt; not the fellowſhip of drunkards and revellers, whoſe common profit and pleaſure goes away like the crackling of thorns,—only that it leaves a ſtink behind; not the fellowſhip of the men of this world, in advancing ſome temporal gain; but the communion of ſaints, the pleaſanteſt, richeſt, beſt fellowſhip in all the world. O! leave the communion of ſinners for this; come out from among them, and be ſeparate, joining yourſelves to this communion.

III. The properties of this communion.

1. It is a moſt honourable communion, for it is a communion with the holy Trinity, 1 John i. 3.—And truly our fellowſhip is with the Father, and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt. And,

(1.) The Father is the head and Father of the communion, Eph. iv. 6. 1 Cor. xi. 3. He is Father Creator of all men, Acts xvi. 29. But of the communion of ſaints he is Father by a ſpecial, gracious ſaving relation. So that they are all his children, John i. 12. 2 Cor. vi. 17. 18. And they have communion with him, and union through the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſince he and the Father are one.

(2.) The centre of this communion is the Son, the bleſſed Mediator. In him all meet, 1 Cor. xi. 3. The ſaints meet in Chriſt as their head, and in him the Father meets with them, 2 Cor. v. 19.——'God was in 'Chriſt reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them.'——Chriſt preſents all believers through the world unto his Father, ſaying, 'Behold, I, and the children which God has given me,' Heb. ii. 13. So, being the Mediator's, they become his, John xx. 17. In this reſpect Chriſt is called the way to the Father, John xiv. 6.——'I am the way, and 'the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me.'

(3.) The holy Spirit is the internal original bond of this communion, knitting all the members to Chriſt, and among themſelves, Eph. iv. 4. He brings them together into Chriſt, and to his Father, fixes and holds them there by his infinite power, that they can never be broken off again. So believers members of this communion, have communion with the Father and the Son, 1 John i. 3. and the Holy Ghoſt, 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

2. It is a moſt rich communion. There are ſocieties and companies this day joining ſtocks together, to advance worldly wealth; but the richeſt of them have nothing but trifles in compariſon with the company or communion of ſaints. The communion of ſaints is the company trading to heaven, and their wealth is paſt reckoning. For a view of it, conſider only theſe two things.

(1.) They have communion with Chriſt, a common intereſt with him who is Heir of all things, ſo that they may ſet their name under his, on all that is his. They have communion with him in his perfect righteouſneſs, Iſa. xlv. 24. Hence they are all fair, Cant. iv. 7. clear as the ſun, Cant. vi. 10. In his active obedience, ſo that they have obeyed in Chriſt, as they ſinned in Adam, Rom viii. 3. 4. In his ſufferings and death, Gal. ii. 20. In his reſurrection and aſcenſion, Eph. ii. 6. and glory. Compare Heb. vi. 20. They have a common intereſt in all his purchaſe, and, as poor as ſome of them ſit, they want nothing, but are complete, Col. ii. 10. 'And ye are complete in him.'

They have a real participation of Chriſt himſelf, Heb. iii. 14. Of his death and his reſurrection, Rom. vi. 4. 5. Of his Spirit, Philip. ii. 1. Of the divine nature, 2 Pet. 4. Of his offices; they are prophets, Pſal. cv. 15.; prieſts and kings, Rev. i. 6. And of his fulneſs, John i. 16.

(2.) They have communion with God; for ſo runs the covenant, 'I will be your God.' And Pſal. cxliv. 15. God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, is theirs. All his attributes are theirs; the power of God to protect them, the wiſdom of God to guide them, &c.; and with him all things, ſince all is his, and he is theirs, 1 Cor. iii. 21. 22. 23.

Behold the riches of this company. And (1.) None of the ſaints bring any thing with them to put into the ſtock; but they are admitted freely. (2.) Not only is a part for every one, but each one has all; and ſo it may be, ſince the ſtock is infinite.

3. It is a moſt extenſive communion. And it extends,

(1.) Over the earth; and ſo is called the Catholic or univerſal church, 1 Cor. i. 2. Though vaſt tracks of land and huge ſeas interpoſe betwixt them; though they have different languages, ſo that ſome of them cannot underſtand what others ſay, and their cuſtoms are very different; yet none of theſe hinder their being members of one and the ſame body.

(2.) To the heavens. The ſaints above belong to the communion of ſaints, Heb. xii. 23. Ay, and the holy angels too, in the ſame ſenſe, ver. 22; for the head of the ſaints is the head of angels too, Col. ii. 10.

Laſtly, It is a holy communion. It is a fellowſhip of ſaints, Eph. ii. 19.——Ye are no more ſtrangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the ſaints, and houſehold of God. The head, centre, and bond, and members of this communion, are all holy. They are a ſociety ſet apart for God, drawn out of the world lying in wickedneſs, walking in the way of holineſs, with diſplayed banners towards the holy land.

SECONDLY, That one's partaking of the ſacrament is a declaring and avouching himſelf to be of that communion. By partaking of baptiſm we have all done it once; and by the Lord's Supper it is done as oft as we communicate in it. By the former in our infancy, it is done with our virtual conſent; by the latter with our expreſs conſent. This point will be clear, if we conſider the relation the ſacrament has to the communion of ſaints.

1. It is a ſign and badge of the communion of ſaints. We are one bread, ſays the text. The one bread ſignifying, that we are one body; and by receiving the ſign, and wearing the badge of the ſociety, we declare two things according to the nature of a diſtinguiſhing ſign.

(1.) That we are no more of the communion of the world lying in wickedneſs, which is the oppoſite ſociety, 1 Cor. x. 21. Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the table of devils. That we have left our Fathers houſe and people, and are no more to ſhare with them in their way and manner of life. It is the putting on the ſign of Zion's King, that we may be diſtinguiſhed from thoſe that belong to the enemy.

(2.) That we are henceforth of the communion of ſaints, and not neutrals, Rev. xiv. 1. That we have joined ourſelves to that bleſſed ſociety of ſaints, the head of which is Jeſus Chriſt, to take part with them for better and worſe. We have ſaid to them as Ruth to Naomi, Ruth i. 16.——Whither thou goeſt, I will go: and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God my God.

2. It is a ſeal of the communion of ſaints, and ſeals it effectually to all thoſe that do ſincerely take hold of the covenant, Rom. iv. 11. The righteouſneſs of faith is the poſſeſſion of the ſociety of ſaints, and the ſacrament ſealing that to a man, ſeals his being of that communion. A believer may be ſore preſſed with that queſtion, How ſhall I put thee among the children? But the ſacrament, to put it out of doubt, ſeals and confirms his being put among them. Their being one body, is ſealed by their partaking of one bread. So 1 Cor. xii. 13.

3. The ſacraments are the external bonds of this communion, whereby they are viſibly embodied into one ſelect ſociety, 1 Cor. xii. 13. And hence it is that the uncircumciſed under the Old Teſtament were to be cut off from their people. The church of God makes a viſible ſociety in the world; and it is not the hearing of the word that is the bond of it, for that is left common to any who will; but the ſacraments, which are not to be given but to viſible believers.

4. It is an engagement to the duties of this communion of ſaints. 'I therefore the priſoner of the Lord, 'beſeech you, that ye walk worthy of the vocation 'wherewith ye are called, with all lowlineſs and meekneſs, with long ſuffering, forbearing one another in 'love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit 'in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one 'Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptiſm, Eph. iv. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Whoſoever is embodied into a regular ſociety, by his entering into it, is obliged to walk by the rules of it. And ſo the ſacrament is an engagement or oath to walk by the rules of holineſs, which are the rules of the communion of ſaints.

Now, whoſoever does receive the publick ſign, ſeal, bond, and engagements of a ſociety, does thereby publicly declare and avouch himſelf to be of that ſociety; but, by partaking of the ſacrament, the partakers do take on the publick ſign of the communion of ſaints, therefore, &c.

USE. I draw ſome practical inferences from this doctrine.

I. There is a very near and ſpecial particular relation amongſt the partakers of the ſacraments, viſibly conſtitute by their joint partaking of them. They do thereby declare themſelves to be of one body, the head whereof is Jeſus Chriſt: even baptiſm alone conſtitutes this ſpecial relation, 1 Cor. xii. 13. for by that holy ſign, the baptized are diſtinguiſhed from thoſe without the viſible church, and have all given up their names to Chriſt. Much more does the receiving of the Lord's ſupper alſo, as ſaith the text.

As for the inviſible real members of the communion of ſaints, i. e. the real members of the inviſible church, God alone certainly knows them in particular. But the viſible members of it are ſaints by profeſſion, not viſibly contradicted by their habitual practice, Rom. i. 7. 1 Theſſ. v. 5. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night nor of darkneſs. Amongſt theſe there is a ſpecial relation, as one viſible body of Chriſt; thoſe who are only baptized, though they may be complete members of the inviſible body, being only incomplete members of the viſible; and ſuch as partake of the ſacrament of the ſupper, complete ones, as admitted unto all external privileges of the communion of ſaints, even the higheſt of them, which is that of the Lord's table. And therefore there is a more full relation amongſt communicants than others. Hence I would ſay,

1. Ye who are baptized, yet openly wicked and profane, or groſsly ignorant of the fundamentals of religion, being come to years, are apoſtates in effect, having by your way viſibly cut off yourſelves from the communion of the ſaints. For in your infancy ye were baptized into that body; but now by your unholy lives, ye openly declare yourſelves to be none of it, and have taken on the devil's mark, and declare yourſelves to be of the world lying in wickedneſs, Rom. ii. 25. To you I ſay,

1*ſt*, Have ye not thus openly rejected communion with God, that ye may maintain communion with the world? If you will have nothing to do with the family of heaven, do ye not renounce the Father of it for your Father? If you will be none of Chriſt's myſtical body, do ye not refuſe him for a head? Yea, ſure, 1 John i. 3.

2*dly*, Had it not been better for you, if ye repent not, to have lived and died among Pagans, where the name of Chriſt was never heard, than to have been baptized into one body with the ſaints, and yet caſt off all by your openly profane life? 2 Pet. ii. 21. For it had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, than, after they have known it, to turn from the holy commandment delivered unto them.

2. Ye who are ſaints by profeſſion, yet only baptized, not partakers of the Lord's table, why do ye continue ſo? Who is there that values a communion or ſociety, and does not endeavour to partake of all the privileges thereof, that may be of uſe to them? And, if ye have any value for the communion of ſaints, why do ye not lay out yourſelves to be one bread with them? Siſt your conſciences before the Lord, and it will not be excuſed from contempt of communion with Chriſt; with his myſtical body, and the means thereof.

3. Ye who are ſaints by profeſſion, and both baptized and partakers of the Lord's table, your external privilege is great; ye ſtand viſibly related to the communion of ſaints, as viſible members thereof. What a ſad miſs will it be, if you fail of real memberſhip, and all your intereſt in it be but ſhew and pretence, as it will be, if ye be not real ſaints? it will be a poor plea at the great day, Luke xiii. 26.—We have eaten and drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets.

1ſt, The ſociety ye are viſible apparent members of, is the myſtical body of Chriſt, enriched with the higheſt ſpecial privileges of communion with the Holy Trinity to their eternal happineſs. It will be a ſad matter for you to cheat yourſelves with a ſhew and ſemblance only of partaking with them; with the empty name, while ye have nothing of the thing, Gal. vi. 3. For if a man think himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf.

2dly, Ye are not very far from the kingdom of God. Will ye loſe it for not going forward the other ſtep, the main ſtep? Ye have gone through the ſeveral gates of the outer court of religion, the door of the inner ſtands open to you. Will you not enter in there where the great glory of the houſe lies? 2 Tim. iii. 7. The form of godlineſs will carry you all the length ye have gone in theſe externals; but the power of it is neceſſary to evidence you a real member of that body.

3dly, Ye will loſe your good company ere long, if ye get not a ſurer holding than mere viſible memberſhip; if ye be not bound up with them by the Spirit of holineſs dwelling in you, as in them, the external bands of ſacraments will not do, John xv. 2. 'Every branch 'in me that beareth not fruit, he taketh away.' (1.) Ye may fall, 2 Tim. ii. 18. 19. out from among them, while you live, by apoſtacy, loſing your fair leaves of a profeſſion, as well as fruit, 1 John ii. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us. (2.) Ye will certainly be ſeparated from among them, at death, Pſal. cxxv. 5. and at judgment, Matth. xxv. 32.

4. Ye who are real ſaints, baptized with the Holy Ghoſt, and partakers of the inviſible bread, as well as of the viſible bread in the Lord's ſupper, and the outward baptiſm, happy are ye in the thorough relation ye have with the communion of the ſaints. Ye are members of it to all intents and purpoſes, true and real members of the myſtical body of Chriſt. Who can expreſs the happineſs of this privilege! I name only theſe.

1ſt, Ye have paſſed the gulph as to condemnation, Rom. viii. 1. Ye are ſet beyond the reach of the condemning law; the curſe is removed, and ye have got your Father's bleſſing, and ye ſhall be bleſſed for time and eternity.

2dly, Ye are moſt honourably related, of the blood-royal of Heaven, ſince ye are of the myſtical body of Chriſt. Chriſt's Father is your Father, John xx. 17.—'I aſcend unto my Father and your Father, to my God 'and your God.' Himſelf is your head, Eph. i. 22. 23. His Spirit is the bond of your myſtical union with him, Eph. iv. 4. The church is your mother, and ye are her true and genuine children, Gal. iv. 26. The glorified ſaints are your grown brethren, come to their full ſtature, and ye are the little ones of the ſame family, Eph. iii. 15. Ay, and the angels too are ſo, Rev. xix. 10. All theſe fall to you by that memberſhip.

3dly, Ye are infinitely enriched; for on that ſociety, whereof ye are members, all things are ſettled by the God of all, 1 Cor. iii. 21.——'All things are yours.' The purchaſe of the head belongs to the members, and they have a title to all, and poſſeſs all, in their head, Col. ii. 10. So ye are heirs of the world to come, heirs of glory, Rom. viii. 17. The covenant is your charter, the ſacraments are the ſeals of it.

(1.) Falling off. The tree-leg may fall off from the body, but the live-leg cannot: ſo hypocrites may fall away totally and finally; but the believer cannot, becauſe a living member of Chriſt's body, John x. 28. ——'I give unto them eternal life, and they ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any pluck them out of my 'hand.' A ſaint may fall down in a mire, he may fall back, but never fall off, nor fall away.

(2.) Cutting off. It is true, a child of God, as to his ſpiritual ſtate, may be ſick and ſore; he may be bruiſed, wounded, and broken at ſuch a rate; that he is of little or no uſe for the head, or for the body, but paining and bringing grief to both; and ſo think he is cut off, Pſal. lxxxviii. 16. 'Thy fierce wrath goeth over me, thy 'terrors have cut me off.' But no man will ever yield to the cutting off a member of his body, while it is in his power to cure it: and therefore, foraſmuch as no caſe of a ſaint is beyond the reach of the great Phyſician's ſkill, be their caſe what it will, they ſhall be [illegible] at length, but never cut off.

(3.) Dying off. Spiritual death can never overtake them again; the infinite Spirit, the bond of the union, will always preſerve the communication betwixt the head and members, John xiv. 19. And temporal death cannot diſſolve the union; though it ſeparate betwixt ſoul and body, each of them ſtill remains united to Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. All theſe things are ſealed by the ſacrament.

II. The ſacramental declaration is a matter of ſuch weight, as deſerves the deepeſt impreſſion on one's ſpirit, and the tendereſt regard in one's life, for all time thereafter. What that is ye have already heard, viz. a ſolemn declaration made by one's partaking, that he is of the communion of the ſaints, joined with them into one myſtical body of Chriſt. This is the declaration ye made by your act of partaking; and this is what, I ſay, deſerves the deepeſt impreſſion, &c. This will be clear, if ye conſider,

1. The ſubject-matter of that declaration, which is moſt important. It concerns the myſtical body of Chriſt and their joining themſelves unto it. Is it poſſible that one can have a weightier matter than that in hand? Does not eternity depend upon it? heaven or hell hang upon it to thy ſoul? Can any rational man think that to be a matter for one to play with, not to be in deepeſt earneſt about it?

2. The parties to whom it is made, God and all the ſaints. The Lord has erected the ſaints into a ſociety under Chriſt the alone head; they have their patent in heaven, and God has endowed them with the richeſt privileges. He ſends out the goſpel proclamation, inviting all to join them, and offering them admiſſion into it freely, withal making the partaking of the ſacraments to be their declaration of entering into it, 1 Cor. xii. 13. So it is evident the partaker, by his action, ſays unto God, Iſa. xliv. 5.—I am the Lord's,—and to all the ſaints, Zech viii. 23. We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you. If ye think light of making that declaration to them, do but conſider, the day when the Lord, and all his ſaints, ſhall judge the world, and call you to an account of the declaration made to themſelves.

3. The nature of that declaration. It is not indeed verbal, but real; not by words, but by an action, but that inſtituted by Chriſt, and ſo interpreted by him, as importing what it was deſigned to ſignify. As it is ſacramental, it is of the nature of an oath, wherein God is invocated as judge and witneſs of the ſincerity of your declaration. So that ye have in effect ſworn yourſelves of the communion of ſaints: and that is weighty.

4. The ſolemnity of it. It was not a buſineſs huddled up in ſecret, but done openly. The ſacraments are public actions of their own nature: and therefore our church has wreſtled againſt private baptiſm and private communion. Ye were, I ſuppoſe, baptized in preſence of the church, a leſſer or greater number preſent. Ye did communicate in the Lord's ſupper in the face of the ſun, and before many witneſſes in a ſolemn manner. It was a very ſolemn covenanting betwixt God and Abraham, Gen. xv. 9.——18. And your covenant declaration was over the broken body and ſhed blood of Chriſt, repreſented in the ſacrament. What greater ſolemnity could there be?

Laſtly, The amount of it. If ye do not ſincerely cleave to it, but in your practice caſt it behind your back, it will amount to a lie made to God himſelf, and to all his ſaints, in a matter of the utmoſt weight, with the greateſt ſolemnity, yea, to the guilt of perjury in effect. Ananias and Sapphira were ſtruck dead for a lie made in the matter of the price of their land: what will be the puniſhment of a lie made with ſuch ſolemnity to God, over the broken body of his Son? Matth. xxiv. 46. ‘ He ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him ‘ his portion with the hypocrites’—Compared with Jer. xxxiv. 18.—20.—‘ I will give the men that have tranſ‘ greſſed my covenant,—which they had made before ‘ me, when they cut the calf in twain, and paſſed be‘ tween the parts thereof.——I will even give them in‘ to the hands of their enemies, and into the hands of ‘ them that ſeek their life.'—Wherefore,

1. Reflect on, and ſeriouſly conſider what ye have avouched ſolemnly in partaking of the ſacraments. Think on the action deeply, and the import of it, and impreſs it on your ſpirits. Look back all of you to your baptiſm.

Conſider that in your baptiſm ye were given up to Chriſt to lay hold on him by faith, Acts xix. 4. That therein ye declared and avouched your putting on Chriſt, Gal. iii. 27. ‘ For as many of you as have been baptized ‘ into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt.' Your dying to ſin, and living to righteouſneſs, Rom. vi. 3. 4. ‘ Know ye ‘ not, that ſo many of us as were baptized into Jeſus ‘ Chriſt, were baptized into his death? Therefore we ‘ are buried with him by baptiſm into death: that like ‘ as Chriſt was raiſed up from the dead——even ſo we ‘ alſo ſhould walk in newneſs of life.' Your being of the myſtical body of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xii. 13. ‘ For by ‘ one Spirit we are all baptized into one body.——If people would ſeriouſly conſider the import of their baptiſm, they who think themſelves looſe by their not being communicants, would ſee they are bound already; and that they do but cheat themſelves in thinking, by the neglect of the ſupper, to keep off theſe bands, which they are already firmly under: the which if they regard not, they will hear of it afterwards to their coſt.

Look back, communicants, to your partaking. Conſider what ye have done. Ye have declared yourſelves well pleaſed with the device of ſalvation through a crucified Chriſt, your taking of him to be your head and ruler, your joining yourſelves to him by faith as lively members of his myſtical body: that you are no more henceforth to be of the communion of the world lying in wickedneſs, but for the Lord only, wholly and for ever; to take your part with the ſaints in the world, whatever your lot be, Pſal. xlv. 10. Ye have ſaid all this, and in effect ſworn it, over the broken body, and ſhed blood of Chriſt, before angels and men.

Ye would do well to take ſome time alone to reflect on this, and to revive the impreſſions. We find the ſaints making ſuch reflections and putting themſelves in mind of what they have done in ſuch a caſe, Pſal. xvi. 2. O my ſoul, thou haſt ſaid unto the Lord, Thou art my Lord. And Pſal. cxix. 57. 106. I have ſworn and I will perform it—that I will keep thy righteous Judgments.

2. Never forget it, Jer. l. 5. People uſe not to forget their marriage day, and the tranſactions of it. But alas! the declared marriage conſent to Chriſt is often forgotten, notwithſtanding of the ſolemnity at it, Jer. ii. 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? Yet my people have forgotten me days without number. They are men of proſtituted conſciences, who forget their oaths, and have wrought themſelves clean of the impreſſions of them. But, alas! there are many, who ſometimes made this ſolemn declaration, who ſeem to have quite forgot it, and the impreſſions are razed. But have ye forgot it? God hath ſworn he will never forget it, Amos viii. 7. ‘ The Lord hath ſworn by the ‘ excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of ‘ their works.' See Jer. ii. 2.

3. Remember it afreſh on particular occaſions, and awe your ſpirits with it, when temptations offer to cauſe you to go againſt it. Remember it as Jephthah did his vow, Judges xi. 35. I have opened my mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back.

(1.) When your old luſts come back, and fawn on you. No doubt they will come, but deny them, 1 Pet. i. 14. As obedient children, not faſhioning yourſelves according to the former luſts, in your ignorance. Remember ye have ſolemnly declared againſt them of your own accord, and to go back to them muſt be to go over the belly of God's bands on you.

(2.) When your old companions in ſin would draw you aſide with them, then ſay, as Joſeph, Gen. xxxix. 9.—‘ How can I do this great wickedneſs, and ſin ‘ againſt God?' Remember ye are not of their communion, but have ſolemnly renounced it, and have embodied with the ſaints. Is it not a very good reaſon not to ſerve the devil with men, becauſe ye are not of the communion of his ſervants and ſociety?

4. Do not retract it. It is too ſolemn and weighty a buſineſs to eat it in again, Prov. xx. 25. It is a ſnare to the man to devour that which is holy, and after vows to make enquiry. Eccleſ. v. 5. Better is it that thou ſhouldſt not vow, than that thou ſhouldſt vow and not pay. Some poor wretches expreſsly retract and renounce their ſacramental vows, giving themſelves to Satan. Many practically retract their ſacramental declaration, particularly, (1.) By ſlighting the renewing of it, when the Lord puts an occaſion of it in their hands. Thus many baptized perſons never ſet themſelves to partake of the Lord's table: ſome that have partaked of it ſome time leave it off again. Does not this plainly ſay, that if they had that to do which is done in that matter, it ſhould not be done for them now? And is it not that retracting practically? Luke ix. 62.——‘ No man having ‘ put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit ‘ for the kingdom of God.' Lot's wife's rueful looking back was dear to her. (2.) By living a looſe and licentious life, as if one had never come under bonds to be the Lord's, Tit. i. 16. The language of the converſation of many is, ‘ Let us break their bands,' &c. O that ſuch would conſider——Heb. x. 38.—If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him.

Laſtly, Beware of every thing unſuitable to it. Ye have declared yourſelves of the communion of the ſaints, do nothing unſuitable to that communion, and your own ſolemn declaration. Let not the way of God be evil-ſpoken of through your unſuitable walk, Rom. ii. 24. Always remember your character as profeſſed members of the communion of ſaints, and walk accordingly.

III. Separation from the men of the world lying in wickedneſs, and fixed ſtanding off from the communion of ſinners, is the neceſſary duty of all ſaints by profeſſion, and particularly of communicants, Numb. xxiii. 9.—‘ The people ſhall dwell alone, and ſhall not be rec‘ koned among the nations.' 2 Cor. vi. 14. 15.—17. ‘ Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: ‘ for what fellowſhip hath righteouſneſs with unrighte

‘ ouſneſs ? and what communion hath light with darkneſs ? and what concord hath Chriſt with Belial ? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel ?——Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord.’

Firſt, Whereto this holy ſeparation extends itſelf.

1. Negatively, It doth not extend,

(1.) To the caſting off the duties of natural affections, and relations to them, 1 Cor. vii. 12. 13.——If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and ſhe be pleaſed to dwell with him, let him not put her away, &c. Religion doth not weaken, but purify and ſtrengthen natural affection, Rom. ix. 3. And the nearer that ſinners ſtand related unto ſaints, they will have, and ought to have the greater concern for them, both for their ſpiritual and temporal good.

(2.) Not to the caſting off civil converſe with the men of the world, according as one has the call of providence thereto, 1 Cor. v. 9, 10. I wrote unto you—not to company with fornicators. Yet not altogether with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or with idolaters ; for then muſt ye needs go out of the world. The ſaints are not ſhut up in a corner of the world by themſelves, and therefore muſt needs have civil ſociety with the men of this world. Neither doth religion diveſt Chriſtians of humanity, or give them a liberty to be rude and indiſcreet to others ; but obliges them to live peaceably with all men,——Rom. xii. 18. to honour them, 1 Pet. ii. 17. to be courteous, Chap. iii. 8. 9.

(3.) Nor to the hindering of us to do them all the good we can. Nay, religion obligeth us to ſeek their good, 1 Tim. ii. 1. I exhort therefore, that—ſupplications, prayers, interceſſions, and giving of thanks be made for all men : and to do good to their ſouls and bodies, as we have opportunity, Gal. vi. 10. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good to all men.

(4.) Nor to the refuſing to ſerve God, and worſhip him with them according to his own inſtitution. This our Saviour himſelf did, Luke iv. 16. And he came to Nazareth, and, as his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath day, and ſtood up for to read. Thus did the apoſtles alſo with the Jews. Thus, in all congregations of ſaints in the world, there are readily found ſome who have no appearance of ſaintſhip, whom yet they do not ſo ſhun as to refuſe to worſhip God with them in his own way.

2. Poſitively, It extends to, and conſiſts in,

(1.) Shunning all unneceſſary ſociety and familiarity with them, Pſal. xxvi. 4. 5. I have not ſat with vain perſons, neither will I go with diſſemblers. I have hated the congregation of evil doers ; and will not ſit with the wicked. They are not to be choſen for our companions of converſe, or friendſhip, far leſs for our companions of life, where we can have a choice ; but we are to be companions of thoſe that fear the Lord. The company of ſinners has been fatal to many, Prov. xiii. 20. ‘ He that walketh with wiſe men ſhall be wiſe, but a companion of fools ſhall be deſtroyed.’ Men of the ſame employment, or that are going to one place, draw together ; and ſhould not Chriſtians draw to Chriſtians? It is ſad to make Chriſtian congregations and families, like Noah's ark, a receptacle for clean and unclean, 1 Cor. xv. 33. Be not deceived : evil communications corrupt good manners.

(2.) Non-conformity to the world, Rom. xii. 2. And be not conformed to this world : but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind.——Ye muſt have another manner of life and converſation than they, if ye be of the communion of ſaints. It is a diſgrace to religion, for the men of the world to have it to ſay of a ſaint by profeſſion, ‘ Behold, the man is as one of us.’ Make them not your rule, your example. nor do you think to ſtamp an offenſive way into a lawful one, by the authority of the multitude. For the multitude is in the way to deſtruction, Matth. vii. 13. ‘ Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leads to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat :’ and their principles are lax, and their practices licentious ; they look on tenderneſs as niceneſs and preciſeneſs, and wonder that you cannot take the ſame liberty they do, 1 Pet. iv. 4. Wherein they think it ſtrange that you run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you. But look you to God's word for your way, and ſee yourſelves obliged to ſeparate from them in your manner of life. See the general rule, Philip. iv. 8. ‘ Finally, brethren whatſoever things are true, whatſoever things are honeſt, whatſoever things are juſt, whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report ; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praiſe, think on theſe things.’

(3.) Refuſing communion with them in ſin, Prov. i. 10. ‘ My ſon, if ſinners entice thee, conſent thou not.’ Every man is for his own maſter's intereſt, and therefore they are for bringing you over into the ſervice of the devil their maſter, as you will be for bringing them to Chriſt, if you be real Chriſtians. Beware of fellowſhip with them in ſin, Eph. v. 11. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. Do not homologate their ſinful courſes by approving or conſenting any manner of way thereto, far leſs by actual joining with them in their ſin, Pſal. l. 18. It is an affront to Heaven, but a pleaſure to hell, to ſee Chriſt's ſheep and the devil's goats yoked together in one ſinful courſe. Nay, communicant, thou ſhouldſt be like the ermine, that will by no means paſs over the mud, that would ſtain its precious furr.

(4.) Refuſing communion with them in the worſhip of God, in a falſe way, or even in a right way upon ſinful terms. The ſaints muſt ſeparate from all falſe worſhip, that is, worſhip which is not inſtituted by God himſelf wholly, but is mixed with human inventions and ordinances, Rev. xviii. 4. Nay where the worſhip is pure, but ſome ſinful thing is impoſed upon you as a term of communion with the worſhippers, you muſt refuſe communion with them in worſhip on theſe terms, Rom. iii. 8. In theſe caſes ſeparation is not only lawful, but a neceſſary duty. And could I perceive either of theſe this day, in our caſe, in the communion of this church, I ſhould not only think it my duty to ſeparate, but alſo to preſs you to it. But though our mother has gone far back, ſhe has not gone that length yet.

Secondly, Reaſons of this ſeparation. Becauſe,

1. The communion of ſaints and the communion of ſinners are oppoſite ſocieties, 1 John v. 19. ‘ And we know that we are of God, and the world lieth in wickedneſs.’ So that joining to the one particularly infers ſeparation from the other. You may as well imagine to bring eaſt and weſt together, to make fire and water agree ; as to make God's family and the devil's to agree ; the ſeed of the woman and ſerpent. Wherefore having joined to the communion of ſaints, ye muſt needs ſeparate from the communion of ſinners, Matth vi. 24. No man can ſerve two maſters : for either he will hate the one and love the other : or elſe he will hold to the one and deſpiſe the other. Ye cannot ſerve God and mammon.

2. The communion of ſaints is gathered out of the world lying in wickedneſs ; ſo that ſeparation from the world is wrapt up in the very conſtitution of the ſociety of ſaints, 2 Cor. vi. 17. 18 ‘ Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing ; and I will receive you.’— The myſtical body of Chriſt is made up of thoſe that were ſometimes limbs of the devil : the branches ingrafted into the true vine were all broken off from our natural ſtock, the old Adam, that degenerate, dead, and killing ſtock : Chriſt's family of mankind is wholly made up of runaways from the devil's family, Pſal. xlv. So that if ye be ſaints at all, ye are ſeparatiſts.

3. The deſign of erecting a communion of ſaints is that they may be a ſeparate ſociety by themſelves, under Chriſt their head, to his honour, Numb. xxiii. 9. Eph.

v. 25.——27. They are a peculiar people, 1 Pet. ii. 9. How will they anſwer the deſign of their erection, and the honour of their head, if they be not thus a ſeparate people? Our Lord Chriſt has appointed badges of this communion, viz. the ſacraments to be external ſigns of diſtinction, betwixt his and the world; and can it be thought but they will diſtinguiſh themſelves by their practice?

4. The profeſſion of ſaintſhip is the profeſſion of this ſeparation, 1 Cor. xii. 13. Let baptized perſons and communicants be aſhamed to ſay they do not pretend to be ſaints. If ye pretend not to be ſaints, renounce your pretenſions to heaven, for none other can come there, Heb. xii. 14. Follow peace with all men, and holineſs, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord. If ye pretend not to be ſaints, ye muſt own yourſelves apoſtates, that have renounced and caſt off the communion of ſaints. And, communicants, if ye pretend not to be ſaints, how durſt you adventure to ſit down at the Lord's table? Well, in ſo far as ye were baptized, and communicated, ye profeſſed yourſelves members of Chriſt's body, ſaints, and ſo ſeparate from the world; therefore ye muſt live ſeparate from them.

Wherefore, I ſay, unto all ſaints by profeſſion, and particularly communicants,——'Save yourſelves from 'this untoward generation,' Acts ii. 40. 2 Cor. vi. 17. 18. Shun all unneceſſary ſociety with thoſe of the world lying in wickedneſs, conform not to their ways, have no communion with them in ſin, nor in the ſervice of God on ſinful terms. Remember ye have ſolemnly declared yourſelves of another communion than with them.

Motive 1. Conſider the authority of God that binds this upon you. Eph. v. 7, 8. 11. Be not ye therefore partakers with them. For ye were ſometimes darkneſs, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of the light. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them. The men and women of the world are ſeparated from God, Eph. ii. 12. They are walking contrary to him; and therefore he will have you to ſeparate from them, and be as a people dwelling alone, in the midſt of the world's throng, becauſe they are not of your communion.

2. The proof of the ſincerity of your pretenſions to ſaintſhip depends very much on it, Pſal. xvi. 2. 3.—My goodneſs extendeth not to thee; but to the ſaints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight. See alſo, Pſal. xxvi. 4. 5. and xv. 4. It is evident men will chuſe ſuch company as is moſt agreeable, in their opinion, to their own temper and diſpoſition.—And ſo one may very well gueſs at the diſpoſition of a perſon, by the company he chuſes and delights in. And if thou art inclined to be a companion of the graceleſs, rather than of the gracious, it is a ſhrewd ſign of a graceleſs heart.

3. The honour of God lies at ſtake here, Rom. ii. 24. If thou doſt wear Chriſt's badge, and yet will not ſeparate from the communion of ſinners, but go with them in their way, religion will be wounded through thy ſides, and expoſed to the mockery of profane men. And there are particularly three communions of ſinners I would warn you againſt, as ye would not ſtab religion to the heart.

(1.) The communion of drunkards. O how unlike is that to the communion of ſaints at the Lord's table! For the Lord's ſake, communicants, when ye have the temptation, remember that word, 1 Cor. x. 21. 22. Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils. Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table, and the table of devils. Do we provoke the Lord to jealouſy? are we ſtronger than he?

(2.) The communion of harlots. That is a communion of ſinners, in an eminent manner, moſt inconſiſtent with the communion of ſaints, from which the apoſtle argues againſt it, 1 Cor. vi. 15. 16. 17. 'Know 'ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt? 'Shall I then take the members of Chriſt, and make 'them the members of an harlot? God forbid. What, 'know ye not that he who is joined to an harlot is one 'body?—But he that is joined to the Lord is one ſpi'rit.'

(3.) The communion of unjuſt men, in ſinful diſhoneſt ways of getting gain. Solomon ſpeaks of this, Prov. i. 14. 15. It is dear bought that is got at the rate of God's diſpleaſure.

Laſtly, If ye ſeparate not from them, ye will periſh with them, Rev. xviii. 4. If ye partake of their ſins, ye muſt partake of their plagues.

IV. There are certain duties of the communion of ſaints lying on all the members of it, by virtue of their memberſhip: the which duties all ſaints by profeſſion, and eſpecially communicants, are ſolemnly engaged unto by their partaking of the ſacraments.

To clear the firſt part of this inference, conſider,

1. Every relation wherein one ſtands brings along with it a train of duties with reſpect to one's relatives. Relations are the joints of ſociety, whereby perſons are joined together for mutual uſefulneſs; and their union is the ground of this debt they owe to one another. This holds in all relations, natural relations, and voluntary ones too made by conſent. If one be a father of children, there are paternal duties lying on him by virtue of that relation; if he be a child of ſuch parents, he owes a duty to them. If one become a member of a family, a kingdom, or any corporation, his memberſhip lays him under ſuch and ſuch duties: wherefore it is not to be doubted, but, in as much as one is a member of the communion of ſaints, he is under obligations to the duties of that ſociety.

2. There is a certain connection between privilege beſtowed on a man, and duty required of him. If one be admitted to the privilege of any ſociety, he muſt with the honour receive the burden of duty belonging to it. If we receive the privilege of ſons of God, we muſt be obedient children; 'not faſhioning ourſelves according 'to the former luſts in our ignorance, 1 Pet. i. 14. If we are members of the holy ſociety whereof Chriſt is the head, we muſt be holy as he is, ver. 15, 16. 'But as he 'who hath called you is holy, ſo be ye holy in all man'ner of converſation. Becauſe it is written, Be ye holy, 'for I am holy.' If we be advanced to be of the communion of ſaints, we muſt carry as becomes ſaints.

3. The principle of ſelf-preſervation, natural to all men, evidences this. If one be taken with a pain in his foot, all the members of the body will do their beſt to recover it; for if one member ſuffer, all ſuffer by reaſon of the union among them; and the evil, if not removed, creeps from one to another. So the apoſtle will have the ſaints in Corinth to take heed to a corrupt member, and uſe the means to recover him, from this principle of ſelf preſervation, 1 Cor. v. 6. They who dwell together find themſelves obliged to take heed every one to his neighbour's houſe, leſt, when the neighbour's houſe is on fire, the flames alſo catch hold of their own: wherefore, whoſoever is a member of the communion of the ſaints, muſt ſee a duty lying on him as ſuch.

To clear the ſecond part of the inference, conſider,

1. By partaking of the ſacrament one declares himſelf to be of the communion of ſaints, and conſequently declares his being engaged to the duties of that communion, 1 John ii. 6. He voluntarily takes on the yoke, while he yokes himſelf with thoſe who bear it. If one pretends to the privilege, he cannot in reaſon ſhake himſelf looſe of the duty. 'And why call ye me Lord, 'Lord, and do not the things which I ſay? Luke vi. 46.

2. The ſacraments are the external bands of our union with Chriſt the head, and the members, 1 Cor. xii. 13. Thereby we are ſacramentally joined with the ſaints into one body, one bread. What is the partaking of them, then, leſs than ſolemnly, as it were, by oath, engaging ourſelves to the duties of the communion of ſaints?

Wherefore, all ye who are ſaints by profeſſion, particularly communicants, as ye are one viſible body of Chriſt, a viſible communion of ſaints, I would preſs on you the duties which lie upon you as ſuch. And they are of three ſorts.

Firſt, There are duties ye owe to the head. Chriſt is the head of this body, the communion of ſaints, Eph. i. 22. 23. Ye are the profeſſed members of Chriſt, and of his body; conſider and conſcientiouſly practiſe your duty to your head.

1. Acknowledge not, nor own any other for head of the church or communion of ſaints, but Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. v. 23. Men may diſtinguiſh as they will; but, as a body with more heads than one is a monſter in nature, the ſcripture is plain, the communion of ſaints, which is the church, is no ſuch monſter, Eph. iv. 5. 'One 'body, one Lord.' The Roman Antichriſt has long blaſphemouſly arrogate to himſelf the headſhip and ſupremacy, and, at the lame reformation of England, it was taken from the Pope there, but not reſtored to the royal Mediator, but made a part of their king's royal dignity. And in the days of Scotland's apoſtacy from their covenanted God, it was ſacrilegiouſly uſurped over this church by the powers then reigning, but contended againſt by the ſufferings of many of this church, the Lord having made the Mediator's alone headſhip and ſupremacy a peculiar piece of this church's teſtimony, for which, alas! the preſent generation has not been duly jealous, the which has helped to bring this church into the miſerable paſs ſhe is at this day. But why ſhould any pretend to be head of the body of Chriſt? to be her head, while they cannot communicate life or ſpirit to her? This is Chriſt's peculiar prerogative, communicable to no mortal.

2. Depend by faith on Jeſus Chriſt, as your head, for all. He is conſtitute the head of that ſociety whereof ye are members, and by virtue of his headſhip their life lies in him, the direction and care of them lies on him.

1ſt. Depend on him for vital influences, Col. ii. 19. ——'From which all the body by joints and bands, 'having nouriſhment miniſtered, and knit together, in'creaſeth with the increaſe of God.' The believer's life lies in him, Col. iii. 3. 'Your life is hid with Chriſt 'in God.' Therefore it cannot be loſt, John xiii. 9. Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo. The church is liable to great decay: ſhe may be under a ſpiritual conſumption, her pulſe may beat very low, yet the ſickneſs cannot be unto death, becauſe there is ſtill life in the head, which will be communicate more abundantly to the members. It is our buſineſs to live by faith, and draw virtue from him, and not to live on our inherent ſtock of life and grace, 1 Tim. ii. 1. Two things are here to be obſerved,

(1.) That there is a fulneſs lodged in Chriſt as the head of the body, to be communicated to all the members, Col. i. 19. A fulneſs of a fountain, which has not only enough for itſelf, but for thoſe that come to draw. There is a fulneſs of merit in him, for the life of pure pardon and comfort, and refreſhment for the ſoul ſlain with a ſenſe of guilt: a fulneſs of Spirit for the life of ſanctification; and ready acceſs to it for all the members, John i. 16. 'And of his fulneſs have all we re'ceived, and grace for grace.'

(2.) The promiſes are the conduit pipes, by which influences of grace run into us, and faith is the drawing grace by which they are brought into the ſoul, Gal. ii. 20. The ſettled method of the diſpenſation of grace is that, According to thy faith, ſo be it unto thee. Faith believes and applies the promiſes, and ſo life more abundantly is conveyed, Hoſ. xiv. 7.

2dly, Depend upon him for direction, Prov. iii. 5. 6. 'Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart: and lean 'not to thine own underſtanding. In all thy ways ac'knowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy ſteps.' The direction of the whole body belongs to the head, and the direction and guidance of all the members of Chriſt to him, by virtue of his headſhip. Therefore,

(1.) Take not the guiding of yourſelves upon yourſelves, truſt not to your own wit and ſkill. If ye do, it is an uſurping of Chriſt's prerogative, Iſa. lv. 5. and ye will not proſper in it, but ſtumble at noon-day. Where are the eyes but in the head? And therefore ſince Chriſt is the head of all the ſaints, he is appointed of the Father to be eyes to them in the wilderneſs. And the way of carnal wit has ay been ruining to churches, and particular members. The end of the way, pointed out by it, is always miſery.

(2.) Look to him, and truſt him for direction in all caſes, Prov. iii. 3. God brings his people into a thicket of perplexities, and they are at their wits end, that faith may begin, and wait for a way when they can ſee none, Iſa. xlii. 16. Then he leads them by his word, providence, and Spirit. He is the pilot of the ſhip bound to Emmanuel's land, with all the heirs of glory as paſſengers; their guide through the wayleſs wilderneſs, and they muſt keep their eye on him.

3dly, Depend on his care, 1 Pet. v. 7. 'Caſting 'all your care upon him, for he careth for you.' The care of the whole communion of ſaints lies on Chriſt as their head, 1 Pet. ii. 25. The Father has given them to him, devolved the care of them upon him, in ſuch ſort that he is to be anſwerable for them, that none of them be loſt, John vi. 39. 'And this is the Father's will 'which hath ſent me, that of all which he hath given 'me, I ſhould loſe nothing.'——Thus the hearts of his people may ſafely truſt in him.

(1.) For proviſion. He, as their head, ſees to the proviſion for their ſouls, providing them green paſtures, and ſtill waters, Pſalm xxiii. 2. He provides for their bodies, Iſ. xxxiii. 16. 'Bread ſhall be given him, his 'waters ſhall be ſure.' The faith of Chriſt's headſhip might ſtill all anxious thoughts about one's throughbearing in any caſe whatſoever; for, come what will come, ſurely the head will ay ſee to the proviſion of the members.

(2.) For protection, Eph. v. 23. The ſaints have many enemies without and within; but being ſettled under ſuch a head, they may be ſure of protection in all dangers. They will ay be ſafe, if not from trouble, yet in it, John xvi. 33. 'Theſe things have I ſpoken unto 'you, that in me ye might have peace. In the world 'ye ſhall have tribulation; be of good cheer, I have o'vercome the world.' From the ſting of it, that it ſhall do them no real harm, 1 Pet. iii. 13. 'And who is 'he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which 'is good?'

The ſaints are oft-times in a mighty ſtir, having great cares on their heads: but O how happy would they be, if they would lay their cares all on their myſtical head, and be at their duty, and leave them all on him! Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication—let your requeſts be made known unto God, Philip. iv. 6.

3. Subject yourſelves wholly to his government, as to your head, Eph. v. 22. 23. 24. The head muſt rule the body, and Chriſt muſt rule you, if you be his members. Coming into the communion of ſaints, ye reſign yourſelves to the head of that ſociety, for good and all, for ever.

(1.) Be obedient to his commands, Luke vi. 46. Our Lord Jeſus has freed the members of his myſtical body from the law as a covenant of works, but with his own hands he binds on them the yoke of obedience to the commands thereof as his own command, 1 Cor. ix. 21. Being not without law to God, but under the law to Chriſt. —What confuſion would there be in the natural body, for the head to be directing and pointing out one way, and the members going another? if Chriſt be your head, be ruled by him, renouncing your own will, and making his your law.

(2.) Reſign yourſelves to the diſpoſals of his providence, 1 Sam. iii. 18. 2 Sam. xv. 25. 26. The members of Chriſt have good reaſon for an abſolute reſignation of themſelves and all their concerns to the Lord. The ſovereignty of their head may ſilence them; the wiſdom and love of their head to his own members may ſatisfy them, that whatever he does with them is beſt done. Their intereſt is his own, as that of the members is the intereſt of the head.

4. Let the intereſts of Jeſus Chriſt, as your head, be your intereſt, his honour and glory be dear unto you, Pſal. lxix. 9. For the zeal of thine houſe hath eaten me up; and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me. All the members of the body are concerned for the head, as the head is for the members, and whoſo are not touched with the care of Chriſt's honour in the world, give ſhrewd evidences they are none of his members. Then,

(1.) Act for the honour of your head, in every capacity ſeeking to advance his glory, Pſal. xlv. 17. I will make thy name to be remembered in all generations.—— There is a party in the world oppoſite to Chriſt, and they act againſt him. He has been going among us, ſaying, Who is on my ſide? And ye, by profeſſing your ſubmiſſion to him, and declaring yourſelves ſacramentally to be of the communion of ſaints, have ſolemnly gone over to his ſide. Then act for him, his truths and ways; act for him in your families, in your neighbourhoods, wherever ye have acceſs, whoever they are that act againſt him.

(2.) Be ready to ſuffer for him, as he may call you. Remember the communion of which ye have declared yourſelves members, is, in this world, like a lily among thorns, which will be uneaſy to them; and ye were warned of what is expected of all the members, Luke xiv. 26. In ſuch a long time of peace, it is no wonder many limbs of the devil have got in among Chriſt's members, and many a hollow hearted ſinner is externally got into the communion of ſaints, and the ſaints by this time, are much the worſe of their company: and between fooliſh virgins, and ſleeping wiſe ones, the intereſt of Chriſt and religion is going to decay, So that the caſe of the church, in the common courſe of providence, ſeems to preſage ſuch a trying ſtroke as will awake living members, and make many dead lifeleſs members fly off. But if Chriſt be your head, ye will be ſo minded as to ſuffer for him in his ſtrength: ye know nothing is more natural, than, when a ſtroke is directed againſt one's head, to lift up one's arm to ward off the blow from the head. The rage of enemies is againſt Chriſt himſelf; and to quit Chriſt, and go over to their ſide, is the way many take in ſuch a day. But the real members of Chriſt's body take not that way, more than a man will put out his head to keep off a ſtroke deſigned againſt his arms, the head being that which all the members will take a ſpecial care of. In the mean time,

(3.) Suffer with him, Pſal. lxix. 9. If the members ſuffer, the head ſuffers with them; and if the head be pained, all the body ſuffers with it; ſuch is the ſympathy. If Chriſt's members ſuffer, he ſympathizeth with them, Acts ix. 4. And it is reaſonable that they who think to reign with Chriſt after, ſuffer with him now. This is a day wherein the glorious head of the myſtical body is ſuffering egregiouſly amongſt us, and wherein all his members are called to mourn as ſuffering with him, Pſal. cxix. 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes, becauſe they keep not thy law. Our head ſuffers from his open enemies, is wounded in the houſe of his friends, is ſuffering from profeſſors and profane, miniſters and people of all ranks. Happy they who ſhall be found mourning for the diſhonours done to his name, truths, ways, &c. They are like to be hid in the day he riſes up to reſent the affronts.

Laſtly, Take care of yourſelves for the ſake of your head. The follies of a wife reflect diſhonour on her huſband. Men will take care of their feet, for that, if, they catch cold in them, it will fly up to their head. O ſaints by profeſſion, communicants, remember that from the day you give up your names to Chriſt, and declare yourſelves of the communion of ſaints, the honour of Chriſt is concerned in your walk at another rate than ever before. Your ſins have a peculiar aggravation in them of diſhonour to your head, Rom. ii. 24. For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you.—Therefore, if ye have any reſpect to the honour of Chriſt, take heed that your converſation be as becometh the goſpel.

Secondly, There are duties ye owe to the body in general, the myſtical body of Chriſt, which is the church or communion of ſaints, Eph. i. 22. 23. Ye are profeſſed members of this body, whereof Chriſt is the head, and this body is not confined to one particular church, but is made up of all the churches of Chriſt, and particular ſaints through the world, united to Chriſt by his Spirit dwelling in them. Conſider, and practiſe the duties of this body, lying on you by virtue of your memberſhip.

1. Sympathize with the body, as being yourſelves of it, 1 Cor. xii. 26. 'And whether one member ſuf-'fer, all the members ſuffer with it.'—The concerns of the church of Chriſt through the world ſhould be the concern of every member. Diſtance of place, and differences in leſſer things among thoſe of the myſtical body of Chriſt ſhould not take away this concern. Whoſoever are allowed a place in Chriſt's myſtical body, ſhould have room allowed them in our hearts.

(1.) Mourn with the body under its affliction and evils. Such a kindly member was Nehemiah, chap. ii. 3. The diſtreſſes of foreign churches, as well as of our own, require our cordial ſympathy; and the ſaints are naturally led to it, as knit with them to one common head.

(2.) Rejoice with it in its proſperity, 1 Cor. xii. 26. 'And whether one member be honoured, all the mem-'bers rejoice with it.' The thriving of the kingdom of Chriſt, in any place through the world, ſhould be refreſhful to all the members of Chriſt, and fill their mouths with praiſes. To bear a part in the joys and moans of the church of Chriſt every where, is the natural duty of all the members.

2. Pray continually for the welfare of the body, Pſal. cxxii. 6. Pray for the peace of Jeruſalem: they ſhall proſper that love thee. Iſ. lxii. 6, 7. 'Ye that make 'mention of the Lord, keep not ſilence; and give him 'no reſt till he eſtabliſh, and till he make Jeruſalem a 'praiſe in the earth.' The apoſtle is expreſs for all ſaints, Eph. vi. 18. Praying always with all prayer and ſupplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perſeverance and ſupplication for all ſaints. Confine not your prayers to your own private caſe, but in all earneſtneſs extend them to the church of Chriſt in the land where you live, and through the world. Prayer is a duty wherein all the members of Chriſt on earth can have actual communion; they meet at the throne of grace who never ſaw one anothers face. It is the joint petition of all the ſaints, Thy kingdom come. Pray for the building up, increaſe, peace, and purity of the church univerſal.

3. Take your lot with the body in foul or fair weather. Ye have ſaid in effect, to this happy ſociety, as Ruth i. 16. Sometimes there is a ſtorm on the church of Chriſt, when the world lying in wickedneſs enjoys a calm. This occaſions many naughty members to change ſides, to deſert the communion of ſaints, and to fall in with the communion of ſinners, 2 Tim. iv. 10. Demas hath forſaken me, having loved this preſent world. Ye know not how ſoon ye may be tried in this point; but do ye reſolutely adhere to the myſtical body. To move you to which, conſider theſe three things.

(1.) It is ſafer to be with the ſaints in their loweſt condition, than with ſinners in the higheſt pinacle of proſperity: for the darkeſt night with the former will have a joyful morning, Pſal. xcvii. 11. while the faireſt day with the latter will iſſue in a black and fearful night, Eccleſ. vii. 5. 6.

(2.) The trial of ſincerity of members is one of the great ends of the Lord's bringing trouble on the body, to try who are wiſe and fooliſh builders. It is true, when the natural body being ſick is laid a-bed, the tree-leg is laid by, but all the living members of the body go with it. So, &c.

(3.) Backſliding is dangerous, and ſpeaks one not fit for the kingdom of God, Luke ix. 62.—No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God: it expoſes one to the fearful diſpleaſure of God, Heb. x. 38.—'But if any man draw 'back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him;' and makes their caſe worſe than if they had never ſet heavenward.

4. Strive in all lawful ways to maintain and advance the intereſts of the body; for the intereſt of the church is the intereſt of Chriſt, and dear therefore to every member. The truths of God are a ſacred truſt committed to the church, the pillar of truth; and they require our deep concern for the defence thereof, againſt the aſſaults of error, Jude 3.—Contend earneſtly for the faith which was once delivered unto the ſaints. Chriſt's ordinances and inſtitutions, and the ſeveral privileges thereof, which Satan and the world ſeek to deprive her of, and corrupt, they are Chriſt's purchaſe for his myſtical body, and therefore they are to be held faſt, and the purity of them contended for, refuſing to ſubject them or ourſelves to the luſts of men, Gal. v. 1. 1 Cor. vii. 23. This will always require doing of us, holding hand to the maintenance of the precious intereſts of the myſtical body, Pſal. xlv. 17. and ſometimes ſuffering, Heb. xii. 3. 4. It is a debt we owe to Chriſt, to the church, to poſterity, and to our own ſouls.

Laſtly, Be tender of the unity of the body, Eph. iv. 3. 4. Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, 1 Cor. xii. 24. Schiſms, rents, and diviſions in the church, are like wounds, cuts, and breaking of bones in the natural body, which exceedingly weaken it, and mar its beauty. They are the ſin and judgment of a church, bringing diſhonour to the Lord Jeſus, marring the ſucceſs of the goſpel, and ruining the church at length: they bring much grief to tender ſouls, and expoſe religion to the mockery of enemies. The renting of the body of Chriſt, has ſo much of horror about it, as may make it frightful to ſerious members. We muſt ſeparate from none farther than they ſeparate from Chriſt. We muſt not go into ſin with members of the myſtical body, more than with the world, under the pain of the diſpleaſure of the Head: but we may lawfully ſerve the Lord in his own ordinances with ſinful members; even as though when one foot is in a mire, the other muſt not go into the mire with it, yet there is no neceſſity of renting the one leg from the other, but the one may ſtill walk with the other on clean ground.

Thirdly, There are duties ye owe to the members in particular, as ye are fellow-members with them of the ſame body, 1 Cor. xii. 25. 'That there ſhould be no 'ſchiſm in the body; but that the members ſhould have 'the ſame care one for another.' It is not in your power to know certainly and infallibly who are real members of this body, as others cannot know the ſame concerning you: but the viſible body of Chriſt is made up of ſaints by profeſſion, not openly contradicted by their habitual practice, 1 Cor. i. 2. and as ſuch they are admitted to the Lord's table, upon their deſire.

So there is a particular viſible relation among all ſaints by profeſſion, and particularly among communicants, as viſible members of the ſame myſtical body of Chriſt. And therefore, though they owe a duty to all men, of love, good will and beneficence, yet they are in a particular manner engaged to dutifulneſs to one another, as members of the viſible communion of ſaints, ſeparate from the world.

Of this viſible body or communion there are two ſorts of members, official and ſimple ones; the former bearing office in the body, the other not ſo, but private perſons; both members of the one body.

Firſt, The official members are the office bearers in the church, which is the body, and thoſe are paſtors, teachers, ruling elders, and deacons. Theſe are in the myſtical body, as in man's natural body are the ſtomach, bearing the office of proviſor for the whole body, the legs of ſupporters, the eyes of lights to the whole body. And,

1. The duty of the official members to the reſt may be ſummed up in theſe two, as they are, Acts xx. 28. viz.

1ſt, That they take heed to themſelves. They muſt take heed to their feet, that they walk as becomes the goſpel, and their office and character: to their tongues, that their doctrine and inſtructions be ſound: and to their hearts, that theſe be upright, that ſo both word and walk may be holy. This I reckon a duty they owe to the reſt of the members, as well as to themſelves: becauſe their holy tender walk is an ordinance of Chriſt for edifying the body, as well as ſound doctrine, 1 Tim. iv. 12.—'Be thou an example of the believers, 'in word, in converſation, in charity, in ſpirit, in faith, 'in purity,' 1 Pet. v. 3. 'Neither as being lords over 'God's heritage, but being enſamples unto the flock.' And a ſcandalous untender practice, in a church-officer, wounds not only his own conſcience, but does a ſingular miſchief to the church; as a hurt in the eye does not only wrong it, but the whole body.

2dly, That they take heed to the reſt of the members over whom they are overſeers, conſcientiouſly following the duties of their reſpective offices in the body. It is not enough that they be good men in their private capacity; but that they be good miniſters, elders, &c. in their public capacity. If the ſtomach have never ſuch a good diſpoſition, yet if it keep all the nouriſhment to itſelf only, the body would go to ruin: ſo, if church-officers ply not their official duty, the church ſuffers by them; they are uſeleſs, and worſe than uſeleſs in the place they have in the body.

2. There is alſo a ſpecial duty that the reſt of the members owe to the official members in the body. And this alſo may be ſummed up in two things.

1ſt, A peculiar concern for them, Gal. iv. 15.—For I bear you record, that, if it had been poſſible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me. It is evident nature itſelf teacheth a peculiar concern for thoſe members which are of the moſt diffuſive uſefulneſs in the natural body, by virtue of their office. Who would not take many thruſts through the leg ere he received one through the heart? Who will put a toe in the balance with an eye? So, in the myſtical body, however ſelfiſh many are, yet tender conſidering Chriſtians will have peculiar concern for the official members.

(1.) This ſhould proceed from a reverential eſtimation of them for their works ſake, 1 Theſſ. v. 12. 13. And we beſeech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you; and to eſteem them very highly in love, for their works ſake.—Their work is great; if they have the honour, they have the burden with it. Their work is for the honour of the head, and the profit of the body; and many a time they are like the candle, which, giving light to others, waſtes itſelf. The Maſter has put an honour on them, and a reverend regard to them as his officers, is a duty acceptable to God in Chriſt; yet this reſpect to them is but civil reſpect, though the motive is ſacred.

(2.) It ſhould vent itſelf in theſe.

[1.] Praying for them ſeriouſly, 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. 'Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the 'Lord may have free courſe and be glorified.'—As their work is great, their needs, temptations, and trials are many. The better it fares with them, it is like to fare the better with you: on the contrary, the worſe it fares with them, the worſe it will fare with you. So much is your own caſe wrapt up in theirs. Pinch the ſtomach with hunger, the plump members of the body will ſoon fall; let the diſorders of it be cured, and the reſt of the body will ſoon feel the good of it. The devil ſtrikes at them, that in them he may ſtrike at the whole congregation. And miniſters get not only comforts, but afflictions from the hand of God, for the good of the people, 2 Cor. iv. 5. 6. Then even help them by your prayers that bear the burden.

[2.] Supporting of them cordially, 2 Tim. i. 16. 'The Lord give mercy to the houſe of Oneſiphorus, 'for he oft refreſhed me.' Encourage them in their work, which will be a lightning under a heavy burden. Ye ſhould ſupport their credit, and caſt a veil over their infirmities, Gal. iv. 14. And my temptation which was in my fleſh, ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected: but received me as an angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus; and not make molehills in them mountains, as many do, who delight to blacken thoſe of that character; unlike a kindly member of the body, which will not ſpread, but endeavour to cure the weakneſs of an official member. And by divine right the reſt owe them a competent maintenance according to their ability, 1 Cor. ix. 14. Even ſo hath the Lord ordained, that they who preach the goſpel ſhould live of the goſpel.

2*dly*, A ready compliance with them in the work of their office, as the body goes whither the eyes direct, and the legs carry. An implicit faith and blind obedience is due to no man; but the mind of the Lord, held out by official members to the reſt, is to be readily complied with, as they would not incur the diſpleaſure of the head, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. For this cauſe alſo thank we God without ceaſing, becauſe when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe.

(1.) Imitate them, and follow their ſteps ſo far as they follow Chriſt. 'Be ye followers of me, even as I alſo 'am of Chriſt,' 1 Cor. xi. 1. 'Brethren, be followers 'together of me, and mark them which walk ſo, as ye 'have us for an enſample,' Philip. iii. 17. It is a part of the work of their office, to be examples to the flock: and if that be a divine ordinance, for the edification of the church, ſurely the reſt of the members are obliged to follow the example; and if they do not, their practice, ſo far as it is holy, as well as their doctrine, will be a witneſs againſt them. This is a point but little regarded. Many will tell how church officers ſhould walk, that never once look on themſelves as obliged to follow their ſteps in the ways of holineſs: but the way of holineſs is but one to miniſters and people, although many are ready to make two of them, and take the broadeſt to themſelves.

(2.) Submit to their inſtructions, admonitions, exhortations, &c. Heb. xiii. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, and ſubmit yourſelves: for they watch for your ſouls, as they that muſt give account.—What confuſion would be in the natural body, if the members would not be guided by the light of the eye, or refuſe the nouriſhment prepared by the ſtomach? So unnatural is it for the members of the myſtical body, to be refractory to the official members in the diſcharge of their duty, to refuſe their wholeſome inſtructions, and to be ſatisfied without receiving benefit of ordinances diſpenſed by them.

O learn to look on miniſters, and other church officers, as ſtanding in this capacity and relation to the body, whereof ye are members. Conſider them as members of the ſame myſtical body with yourſelves, and as official members, in whoſe welfare, and regular diſcharge of their office, your own welfare is wrapt up. This would,

(1.) Make you modeſtly and Chriſtianly concerned that they may do their duty to the edification of the body, Pſal. cxxxii. 9. For people to treat their miniſters imperiouſly and diſreſpectfully, and ſupercilliouſly to dictate to them how to behave in the exerciſe of their office, as many do, and value themſelves upon it, is an argument of pride and emptineſs, of mens forgetting themſelves, and regardleſſneſs of that order which Chriſt the head has appointed in his myſtical body. But for people, in a modeſt, ſerious and Chriſtian way, to excite their miniſters to their duty, to inform and adviſe them of what may contribute to their carrying on the Lord's work moſt ſucceſsfully, as the Lord's word gives them warrant to do it, Col. iv. 17. and their own ſoul's intereſt in the matter gives them a right to it; ſo a godly miniſter would bleſs God for having ſuch an advantage. Are not all the members concerned for the eye, ſtomach, &c. in the natural body? But do they fall a beating of them, or overcharging them, that they may do their office? No, but with all tenderneſs to them they endeavour to enable them to do their reſpective offices.

(2.) It would put you on to a conſcientious performance of your duty to them, your own ſoul's intereſt engaging you thereto, 1 Theſſ. v. 12. The fable of the members conſpiring againſt the belly, to pinch it by withholding of food, and being forced to give it over by reaſon that they themſelves ſuffered by that means, may repreſent to us, as in an emblem, the folly of a people undutiful to their miniſters, to their own ſouls great loſs. The relation is ſo very near, that undutifulneſs on either hand muſt be hurtful to both.

Secondly, The ſimple members are ſuch as are not office-bearers in the body, but private Chriſtians. Theſe owe a duty one to another, as members of the ſame myſtical body. They are the viſible members of the body of Chriſt, and ſo obliged to a native care for one another. 1 Cor. xii. 25.----That the members ſhould have the ſame care one for another. This extends to all ſuch Chriſtians, through the world, as we have occaſion to do this duty towards; but in a ſpecial manner it is to be exerciſed towards thoſe with whom we live in actual church communion: and partakers of the Lord's ſupper together are in a ſpecial manner under this obligation. As ye are one bread and one body, ſo I would exhort you to make conſcience of the duties you owe to one another as ſuch.

Communicants are a ſeparated body from others, diſtinguiſhed from others, by the moſt ſolemn badge of the Chriſtian profeſſion: O if they would carry themſelves as a people ſeparated from the world to Jeſus Chriſt, and joined together for him in one body, then would we ſee the benefit of communions, to the honour of Chriſt, the ſucceſs of the goſpel, and the good of their own ſouls.

The church is a ſociety gathered out of the world, viſibly joined together by the uſe of the ſacraments; though they are in the world, they are not of it; and all the members of it ſhould be a people dwelling alone, though in the midſt of others, not reckoned among the nations. The truth is, there are many baptized in their infancy, who openly go over to the world's ſide; but all ye who are ſaints by profeſſion, and particularly communicants, as ye profeſs yourſelves to be of one body, and owe a Chriſtian duty to them that are without; ſo I would lay before you the duties ye owe to one another, by virtue of your being viſible members of one and the ſame body.

1. Love one another affectionately and ſincerely, John xv. 12. 'This is my commandment that ye love one 'another as I have loved you.' To walk rightly in Chriſtian communion, we muſt walk in love, Eph. v. 2. Ye ought to love all men, being ready to deſire their good, and do them all the good ye can; but ye owe brotherly love to all the viſible members of Chriſt's body, which is ſo often recommended to the followers of Chriſt, 1 Theſſ. iii. 12. And the Lord make you to increaſe and abound in love one towards another, and towards all men, even as we do towards you. Rom. xii. 10. Be kindly affectionate one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. O what an inconſiſtency is there in ſitting down at the Lord's table together, the table of love, and the hearts of the partakers never united in love!

Object. There are ſome ſo naughty in their way and manner of life, that it is hard to love them with brotherly love.

Anſ. The decay of love among the profeſſors of Chriſtianity is moſt viſible at this day; and I muſt ſay, I deſpair of ſeeing due love among church members reſtored, as long as the church among us is ſo mixed with, and ſo little ſeparated from the world, and until the church be more diſtinguiſhed from the nation, for as fond as we have been of a national church. God ſeparated them in the late times by the fire of perſecution, and then this love flamed amongſt them: peace being reſtored, the church even mixed again with the world lying in wickedneſs, and that love died out of courſe. And while all are acknowledged as church members, few, very few are loved as ſuch. The New Teſtament churches, though there were many hypocrites in them, yet they ſeem to have been conſtituted of viſible ſaints, ſaints by profeſſion, not viſibly contradicted by their practices, Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 2. 1 Theſſ. v. 5. But more directly to the objection,

It is plain that brotherly love is to be proportioned to the decrees of the divine image diſcernable in any. And therefore, (1.) where nothing of it appears, but people are openly wicked, we owe not this brotherly love to them: and every member of the church, private Chriſtians as well as church-officers, ſhould endeavour that they partake not of that one bread in the ſacrament. But, (2.) ſince the beſt are not free of evils hanging about them, even to the diſcerning of others, we ought not to refuſe brotherly love to any in whom any lineaments of God's image appears, though they have ſeveral things in their way altogether unlovely. It is the work of grace here to pick the pearl of grace out of a dunghill of ſinful qualities, and to love the perſons for it, drawing a veil over many ſins, 1 Pet. iv. 8. 'And 'above all things have fervent charity among yourſelves; 'for charity ſhall cover a multitude of ſins.' And not to aggravate the ills about them, ſo as to hide their good from our eyes. Wo unto us if God ſhould treat us ſo, yea, or the ſaints; wherefore love one another.

Motive (1.) It is the principle of the duties of church communion, therefore called the bond of perfectneſs in the church, Col. iii. 12, 13, 14. In the primitive church they were moſt dutiful one to another; ſee the ſource of it, Acts iv. 32. And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one ſoul.——Where it prevails, it will make every one concerned for the good of his fellow-Chriſtian, as for his own: where it is not, people, though in church-communion, will be ready to ſay, "Am I my brother's keeper?" So the want of it turns all looſe.

(2.) It is a badge of ſincerity. We know that we have paſſed from death unto life, becauſe we love the brethren, 1 John iii. 14. And without it we cannot prove ourſelves true Chriſtians, neither to ourſelves, nor to the world of onlookers, John xiii. 35. 'By this ſhall all 'men know that ye are my diſciples, if ye have love 'one to another.' For love to God will produce love to all thoſe who bear his image.

(3.) It is the moſt natural reſult of the love of Chriſt to us, John xiii. 34.——As I have loved you, that ye alſo love one another. Never was there ſuch love as that of Chriſt to his people in his dying for them: this ſhed abroad in the heart muſt needs make a loving diſpoſition to him, and all that belong to him, for his ſake.

Laſtly, The near relation in which the followers of Chriſt ſtand to one another, pleads for it. They are fellow-members of the ſame body, joined together under one head, are members of one heavenly family, ſhall dwell together for evermore in heaven, and are joint objects of the world's hatred.

2. Bear with one anothers weakneſſes, failures, and infirmities. This has many branches, ſee Col. iii. 12, 13. 'Put on therefore (as the elect of God holy and 'beloved) bowels of mercies, kindneſs, humbleneſs of 'mind, meekneſs, long ſuffering; forbearing one an'other, and forgiving one another, if any man has a 'quarrel againſt another: even as Chriſt forgave you, 'ſo alſo do ye.' Be of a meek, patient, forbearing and forgiving temper, as to all men, ſo particularly to the members of the body of Chriſt, your fellow-members, and that becauſe they are ſo. When we come to heaven we will have nothing to bear with; but till we come there, we will have occaſion to exerciſe this grace towards others, and others towards us, ſince every one has their own imperfections, and there is not one that can caſt a ſtone at another on this ſcore.

It is ſad to ſee how eaſily profeſſors are brought to caſt at one another, how they cannot bear the leaſt provocation, cannot forgive nor forget injuries; yea, many there are who rejoice in the failures of others, and are glad when they get an ill tale of them, or ſee ſome falſe ſtep made by them, which they improve to run them down, and to the judging of their ſtate. But conſider, I pray you,

(1.) How the Lord bears with you, Eph. iv. 32. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Chriſt's ſake hath forgiven you. O what would come of us, if God would bear no more with us than we can bear with our fellow-ſervants! Dreadful would the meaſure be, if God ſhould mete to us as we often do to our fellow-Chriſtians. Does the Spirit of the Lord ſuffer us long, and will not we learn long ſuffering? Are we forgiven talents, and will not forgive a few pence?

(2.) How the Lord bears with them. He over-looks many things in his people, though he does not approve of them. Shall not his example draw us to imitation?

(3.) Do not we ourſelves ſtand in need of forbearance and forgiveneſs from others? Ecc. vii. 21, 22. 'Alſo 'take no heed unto all words that are ſpoken, leſt thou 'hear thy ſervant curſe thee. For oftentimes alſo thine 'own heart knoweth that thou thyſelf likewiſe haſt cur'ſed others.' And are every day in hazard of being led aſide with temptation, Gal. iv. 1. 'Brethren, if a man 'be overtaken in a fault, ye who are ſpiritual reſtore 'ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, conſidering thy'ſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted.' Why ſhould we then ſo forget ourſelves, as not to allow others what we need from them?

Laſtly, Is not your intereſt in the matter, ſince you are of the body with them? When one hand labours under any ſore, does not the other tenderly dreſs it, and even 'thoſe members of the body, which we think 'leſs honourable, do not we beſtow abundant honour 'on them? 1 Cor. xii. 23. So ſhould we be ready to caſt a veil of love over the infirmities of our brethren.

3. Watch over one another, Heb. x. 24. And let us conſider one another, to provoke to love, and to good works. And xii. 15. Looking diligently, leſt any man fail of the grace of God: leſt any root of bitterneſs, ſpringing up, ſhould trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. This is one of the principal duties of church-communion, and if duly managed, would be of notable uſe for the honour of the head, and good of the body. It is true the Lord has appointed ſome watchmen, by office, in his church, among the members of the myſtical body; and the appointment of the head, makes alſo every one watchman over another.

I mean not to encourage men to a cenſorious prying into other mens matters, malicious ſearching into the hidden faults of others, to get ſomething whereupon to make them odious. There are abundance of theſe who are ſpies from the devil's camp, improving their diſcoveries, fancied or real, to the diſhonour of religion, and wounding the reputation of the brethren. But that with an eye of love, you would obſerve one another's walk, for your mutual advantage, to imitate what is lovely in one another, and endeavour to amend what is amiſs, or to prevent it. I take in under this theſe following things.

1ſt, Excite and ſtir up one another to a holy tender walk, in the ſeveral parts or duties of it, Heb. x. 24. Every member of the body ſhould be a ſpur to another, to quicken his pace in the way of duty: ſo far ſhould they be from being hindrances to, and clogs upon one another. All of us have a principle of ſloth in us, which diſpoſes us to flag and ſink in our endeavours after holineſs; and happy they who have a fellow-Chriſtian to quicken them by word and example, Prov. xxvii. 17. 'Iron ſharpeneth iron, ſo a man ſharpeneth the countenance of his friend.'

2dly, Warn one another of ſnares in your way, as fellow-travellers towards Zion, 1 Theſſ. v. 14. Now, we exhort you, brethren, warn them that are unruly.—One may ſee a ſnare before another, which he is not aware of that is in the greateſt hazard of it; and it is a piece of Chriſtian duty to warn one of it. This is to blow the trumpet as a watchman, the trumpet of private warning, the which if he does not, he is guilty of the ſin his brother falls into, as not preventing it.

3dly, Confirm the ſtaggering, and labour to bear up him who is ready to fall, 1 Theſſ. v. 14.——'Comfort 'the feeble-minded, ſupport the weak.'——O what a ſubſtantial kindneſs did Abigail to David, in preventing the ſin he was ſlipping into! An enemy is to be helped to raiſe up his aſs lying under a burden, Exod. xxiii. 5. that he may not loſe it: how much more, when one ſees his brother under a weight of temptation, is he to help him above it? like to be carried away with the ſtream, is he to catch hold of him, and do his beſt to draw him out?

Laſtly, Admoniſh and reprove one another, in a ſpirit of meekneſs, for what is amiſs, Rom. xv. 14. 2 Theſſ. iii. 15. Eph. v. 11. The infirmity cleaving to the beſt, with the variety of ſnares lying in our way, occaſions every one ſometimes to go wrong: and though it is eaſy to ſtep aſide, it is not ſo eaſy to recover, and come into the way again. This makes admonition neceſſary. There is a corrupt principle of ſelf-love in us, that we are apt to look on our own faults with an eye prejudged in favours of them; therefore God has appointed this ordinance of mutual reproof and admonition, that each one holding the glaſs to his neighbour's face, he may ſee his ſpots, and wipe them off.

There is an authoritative admonition and reproof administered by church-officers, in virtue of their office, not only to hearers promiſcuouſly, in the preaching of the word, but to perſons particularly by themſelves, in the way of diſcipline, 1 Tim. v. 20. 'Them that ſin 'rebuke before all, that others alſo may fear.' Or privately, as Nathan did to David. See 1 Theſſ. v. 12. And we beſeech you, brethren, to know them——which are over you in the Lord, and admoniſh you. The which, though privately adminiſtered, is public, in reſpect of the public perſon who giveth it. But of this we ſpeak not.

There is a charitable admonition and reproof belonging to private perſons, in virtue of the law of charity or love, which makes them monitors of, and reprovers to one another. This, in reſpect of the objects of it, is twofold.

1. General; common to all men within or without the church, whether viſible members of the myſtical body or not, [illegible] as the holy law carries love to our neighbour. We are not to confine our charitable admonitions and reproofs to ſaints by profeſſion, more than our love of benevolence and beneficence to them. We owe this duty, even to them of the world lying in wickedneſs, Eph. v. 11. And have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, but rather reprove them, compare with ver. 8. 12. and ought to do it, if ſo we may contribute to the plucking of the brands out of the burning.

It is true there are ſome arrived at ſuch a daring pitch of wickedneſs, that there is not the leaſt hope of doing them good by admonition or reproof: but, on the contrary, they are hazard of being the worſe of them. Concerning ſuch our rule is, Matth. vii. 6. 'Give not 'that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your 'pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their 'feet, and turn again and rent you.' But we ſhould take heed that we do not raſhly put men in this claſs: they may be the worſe of a reproof at one time, who may be bettered by it at another time. And beſides, a teſtimony againſt ſin may be neceſſary, even in the caſe of ſuch a one, in reſpect of others, witneſſes thereto. But neither is it of this ſort of admonition and reproof we ſpeak. But,

2. Fraternal or brotherly admonition and reproof, competent to the viſible members of the myſtical body among themſelves, 2 Theſſ. iii. 15. Though we owe this duty and kindneſs to all men, yet it is plain there are ſpecial obligations to it on ſaints by profeſſion towards one another, and eſpecially on communicants, who ſit at one table of the Lord together. They are one body; they owe more than a common, viz. a brotherly love to one another; therefore, as in the natural body, one hand waſhes the other by ſpecial duty: ſo let all communicants, and all ſaints by profeſſion, know that they are obliged in conſcience to mutual brotherly admonition and reproof, as they are one body, and members one of another, Rom. xii. 5. And the ſacraments, whether baptiſm or the Lord's ſupper, much more both, bind them thereto.

This ordinance and ſpecial duty of church-communion, which would be of exceeding uſefulneſs, if rightly managed, as it is, alas, very little in uſe in our degenerate age, is often ſo marred, when it is uſed, that matters are made worſe thereby, and the diſeaſe takes ſtrength from the remedy. Peoples minds are alienated one from another; grudges are raiſed betwixt the parties; and ſo it is an occaſion of evil. This ariſeth from two cauſes.

Firſt, The indiſcreet management of the reprover, who often miniſters his remedy in ſuch a manner as that it is apt to irritate the corruption of his brother, inſtead of exciting his grace or goodneſs, as it ought. To rectify this, and remove this grand hindrance of benefit by this duty, I lay before you theſe following things.

1. Look upon this duty of fraternal admonition and reproof as an ordinance of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt appointed by him, in his viſible myſtical body, for the ſpiritual good of the body. It is as really ſo, as preaching, prayer, ſacraments, &c. are, Matth. xviii. 15. Moreover, if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he ſhall hear thee, thou haſt gained thy brother. It has a bleſſing annexed to it, Prov. ix. 8.—'Rebuke a wiſe man, and 'he will love thee.' The conſideration of this might influence men to go about it with awful ſolemnity, and to fear its being marred in their hands.

2. Begin at home, in thy own life and converſation, to purge it, Matth. vii. 3. 5. And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, and conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye?——Firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye; and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to caſt out the mote out of thy brother's eye. A man, who attempts to reprove his brother, and is guilty in the ſame or the like offence, is like a profane miniſter reproving profanity, who cannot expect ſucceſs, but to have it caſt up to him, 'Phyſician cure thyſelf.' And this may let one ſee the miſchief that his untenderneſs does, not only involving him in perſonal guilt, but in the guilt of his neighbour's ſin too, whom he puts himſelf out of the capacity to do good to.

Queſt. Is one in ſuch a caſe free from this duty then? Anſw. No, by no means; one's own ſin can never free him from his natural duty. His buſineſs is to ſet about the work, removing the impediment of the ſucceſs by repentance before the Lord; and to accuſe himſelf, and profeſs reſolution to amend, in the firſt place, to his brother, and then to admoniſh him of his fault.

3. Be not precipitant and raſh in your reproofs, but proceed on knowledge of the offence, in which ſo much moral certainty is required, as one cannot be juſtly blamed for raſhneſs in thinking his brother to have offended ſo and ſo. The too ready crediting every thing that is ſpoken to our brother's diſadvantage, or judging a thing to be an offence, which may be is none; a readineſs to take other mens actions by the wrong handle, when there is a right one, and thereupon to reprove them, will more argue the want of that charity, 1 Cor. xiii. 7. than prudent zeal for God's honour and our brother's good; yet, in doubtful matters, it will often be found duty prudently to inſinuate that there is a ſuſpicion, and what way he ought to remove it, 1 Theſſ. v. 22. 'Abſtain from all appearance of evil.'

4. Let love to God's honour, and your brother's good, be the principle from which your admonition or reproof proceeds, and let it appear ſo, as much as may be, to his conviction, 2 Theſſ. iii. 15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admoniſh him as a brother. 2 Cor. ii. 4. For, out of much affliction and anguiſh of heart I wrote unto you with many tears, not that ye ſhould be grieved, but that ye might know the love which I have more abundantly unto you. So little of this appears in the reproofs of many, that they ſeem to the reproved rather reproaches than reproofs, and to ſhew more contempt of the offender than love to him; and ſo the benefit by them is marred.

5. Be ſure to found your admonitions or reproofs on the word of God, and convey them to your brother in a word of the holy ſcripture, the proper vehicle of a medicine for the ſoul or conſcience. Col. iii. 16. 'Let 'the word of Chriſt dwell in you richly, in all wiſdom, 'teaching and admoniſhing one another.' How elſe can you think to reach his conſcience? The word is the inſtrument wherewith the Spirit works, and upon which we have ground to expect the bleſſing. And happy is he in whom the word dwells richly for this end.

6. Let it be managed with meekneſs, Gal. vi. 1.— 'Reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs.' Zeal and meekneſs are very conſiſtent; they are the fruits of the ſame holy Spirit. Beware of mixing your own paſſions with this duty; that is to bring common fire to God's altar, which mars the acceptance of the ſacrifice with God, and is ready to mar the ſucceſs of it with your brother, James i. 20. 'For the wrath of man 'worketh not the righteouſneſs of God.' O it is hard to hold off ſplitting on this rock! Moſes daſhed on it, though the meekeſt man of earth, Numb. xx. 10. 'Ye 'rebels.—Which ſhould make us jealous of ourſelves upon ſuch an occaſion. Happy is that man who, when he declares God's wrath, can beſt hold down his own. In a ſpecial manner uſe mildneſs when the offence is a perſonal injury againſt yourſelves. Men who are like lions in their own cauſe, and lambs in the cauſe of God, are ſelfiſh naughty men. They who are like lions in their own cauſe, and in God's too, owe their pretended zeal to their own ſpirits, not to the Spirit of God; but they who are as lambs in their own cauſe, but as lions in God's cauſe, leave convictions, in the breaſts of others, that they are acted by God's Spirit.

7. Be patient and continue at the duty as occaſion offers, though the fruit do not ſoon appear, or though one and the ſame perſon may give frequent occaſion, 2 Pet. i. 13. 'Yea I think it meet, as long as I am in 'this tabernacle, to ſtir you up, by putting you in re'membrance.' Luke xvii. 3. 4.—'If thy brother treſpaſs 'againſt thee, rebuke him, and if he repent, forgive 'him: and if he treſpaſs againſt thee ſeven times a day, 'and ſeven times in a day turn again to thee, ſaying, 'I repent, thou ſhalt forgive him.' Thus the Lord deals with us with long-ſuffering: ſo ſhould we with our brethren. We ſhould hold on as long as there is any hope of doing good by it.

Queſt. What ſhould we do, when all we can do appears to be fruitleſs, and to no purpoſe? Anſw. Our Lord's directions are very plain in this caſe, though very little practiſed, Matth. xviii. 15. 16. 17. 'More'over if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and 'tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he 'ſhall hear thee, thou haſt gained thy brother: but if 'he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two 'more; in the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every 'word ſhall be eſtabliſhed: and if he ſhall neglect to 'hear them, tell it unto the church, but if he ne'glect to hear the church, let him be unto thee as an 'heathen man, and a publican.'

Laſtly, Be ſure to take the fitteſt ſeaſon for diſcharge of this duty. Every thing is beautiful in the ſeaſon thereof, and there is a ſeaſon for reproof, Eccleſ. iii. 7. The Spirit of the Lord takes notice of Abigail's obſerving it with her huſband, 1 Sam. xxv. 36. 37. And of the bleſſed man it is ſaid, he brings forth fruit in his ſeaſon, Pſal. i. 3. Unſeaſonable reproofs rarely do good, but often do much harm.—

Secondly, An undue entertainment of it by the reproved. God has preſcribed, in his word, how admonitions and reproofs are to be taken, as well as how to be given. They are to be received, (1.) with love and eſteem of the party that does us that good office, 1 Theſſ. v. 12. 13. As we eſteem the phyſician that would cure us of bodily blemiſhes, ſo him that endeavours to cure us of ſpiritual blemiſhes much more. (2.) With humbleneſs of mind, ſuffering ourſelves to be told of our faults, in order to our amendment, Heb. xiii. 22. And I beſeech you, brethren, ſuffer the word of exhortation. So David, Pſal. cxli. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, it ſhall be a kindneſs; and let him reprove me, it ſhall be an excellent oil, which ſhall not break my head. (3.) With a practical anſwering of the end of it. This our Lord calls hearing of our brother, Matth xviii. 15. Compare Prov. xv. 31. 32. The ear that heareth the reproof of life abideth among the wiſe.—He that heareth reproof getteth underſtanding.

But where are they to be found who thus entertain admonitions and reproofs? Nay, the moſt part cannot endure to be reproved or admoniſhed of any thing amiſs in their way. Inſtead of giving a Chriſtian entertainment to admonition or reproof, their proud hearts riſe in paſſion againſt him that dares tell them their fault; they will defend their deed, which in calm blood their own conſcience condemns; and if they can gather any dirt againſt the reprover, right or wrong, they will be ſure to fling it in his face on that occaſion. This deſerves to be lamented with tears of blood, if we could command them. To this I would ſay,

1. Admonition and reproof is an ordinance of Chriſt appointed by him in his church among the viſible members of his body, Matth. xviii. 15. and downwards, 1 Tim. v. 20. Why are ye angry at your brother for doing his duty he is obliged to do, under the pain of the Lord's diſpleaſure? Why will ye be reckoned members of Chriſt's family, and will not ſubmit to the ordinances and laws of his houſe? Is it fit the church of Chriſt ſhould be as when there was no king in Iſrael, every one doing that which is right in his own eyes?

2. It is that which thy brother has a ſpecial intereſt in, and a right to ſee to, as being a member of the body. Nothing more ordinary than, What are you concerned? The eye might as well queſtion the concern of the hand in drawing a mote out of it, or the face in wiping a ſpot off it. And the eye cannot ſay unto the hand, I have no need of thee,—1 Cor. xi. 21. His concern is plain, he is a viſible member, of the ſame body with you, and your faults which give offence, affect him and the body too. In a corporation of tradeſmen, every member has a right to quarrel what is done againſt the laws of the corporation. In a neighbourhood of huſbandmen, every one has a right to quarrel what is done againſt the laws of the neighbourhood. Yet, in a ſociety of Chriſtians by profeſſion, one may not be allowed to reprove another for what is done againſt the laws of Chriſtianity, ‘ Be aſtoniſhed, O ye heavens.’

3. It is thy own intereſt, and the advantage of thy ſoul, to be admoniſhed and reproved for thy faults, Prov. vi. 23.——‘ Reproofs of inſtruction are the ways of life.’ It is a real kindneſs done thee, Pſal. cxli. 5. Why wilt thou be angry with thy mercy? Many are ruined through the want of a faithful friend to admoniſh them of what is amiſs in their way. Men do not readily eſpy their own faults in full light; and when they have none to ſay it is ill they do, they are apt to flatter themſelves in their iniquity to their own ruin. But admonition and reproof is the way to repentance and reformation.

4. The trial of thy ſtate, whether thou art a real Chriſtian or not, depends more on the way of entertaining admonition and reproof than thou art aware of, Prov. ix. 8. Reprove not a ſcorner, leſt he hate thee: rebuke a wiſe man, and he will love thee. It is a good ſign of a gracious ſoul, to entertain it in a Chriſtian way, Prov. xv. 5.——‘ He that regardeth reproof is prudent.’ It ſpeaks a humble ſoul, one ready and willing to know his faults and amend them, to whom conſcience is dearer than credit, and the approbation of God than the applauſe of men. But, on the contrary, it is a very black mark in one not to be able to bear admonition and reproof, Prov. xii. 1. ‘ Whoſo loveth inſtruction, loveth knowledge: but he that hateth reproof is brutiſh;’ and chap. xv. 12. See how the Spirit of God deſcribes a wicked generation. Iſ. xxix. 21. That make a man an offender for a word, and lay a ſnare for him that reproveth in the gate—Amos v. 10. They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and abhor him that ſpeaketh uprightly. This temper of ſpirit ſpeaks a man to be unwilling to ſee his ſin, and therefore unwilling to part with it, to be a lover of darkneſs rather than light; a lover of his own credit more than God's honour; to be proud, ſelfiſh, without due regard either to God or his brother. It is true, a good man may, at a time, take juſt reproof very ill, as Aſa, 2 Chron. xvi. 10. but it is not the habitual diſpoſition of his ſpirit.

Laſtly, Not taking with admonition and reproof is a forerunner of ruin, Prov. xv. 10.——‘ He that hateth reproof ſhall die;’ and xxix. 1. ‘ He that being often reproved, hardeneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy.’ As it is a high pitch of ſin, and runs up the offence to a height, ſo it is a preſage of the approach of a heavy ſtroke—Let no man ſtrive, nor reprove another: for thy people are as they that ſtrive with the prieſt. Therefore ſhalt thou fall in the day, and the prophet ſhall fall with thee in the night, ——Hoſ. iv. 4. 5. They who will not take an admonition or reproof from their brethren, may expect God will reach them one from heaven, that they ſhall not get ſhifted. It is a terrible remark made on Eli's ſons their not taking with reproof, 1 Sam. ii. 25.——‘ They hearkened not to the voice of their father, becauſe the Lord would ſlay them.’ See Prov. v. 12. The ſum of what is ſaid, you may find, Prov. xxv. 12. As an ear-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold: ſo is a wiſe reprover upon an obedient ear. Let the reprover manage wiſely, and the reproved entertain it obediently, ſo ſhall it be profitable to both. The impediments thus removed, I would preſs this duty of brotherly admonition and reproof among all the viſible members of the myſtical body, all ſaints by profeſſion, and communicants particularly. Admoniſh and reprove one another, for what ye diſcern to be offenſive in one another's way. Make conſcience of this duty.

Mot. 1. For the ſake of the head, that is, for Chriſt's ſake. The ſins of profeſſors and communicants do, in a ſpecial manner, reflect diſhonour on Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Sam. xii. 14. And therefore, while we ſee the viſible members of that body diſhonouring their head, our hearts ſhould ſtir within us for that diſhonour. Here is a fair occaſion to vent our zeal for Chriſt, to declare our ſympathy with him, Pſal. lxix. 9.——‘ The reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.’ And, in ſuch a caſe, ye are upon your trials as to what regard ye have to his honour.

2. For the ſake of the body. The welfare of the myſtical body lies in the welfare of the members: it cannot be right while the members are wrong. Conſider the offending party as a member of the body, and thou wilt ſee the body of Chriſt is concerned in his not walking with a ſtraight foot, which may ſtir thee up to admoniſh him. Scandalous practices or offenſive ſteps in a member, reflect diſhonour on the whole body, Eccleſ. ix. 18. Yea, and the contagion, if not timely prevented, is apt to creep from one member to another, and ſo to annoy the whole body, Heb. xii. 15.——Leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up trouble you, and thereby many be defiled. For this cauſe Paul openly reproved Peter, Gal. ii. 14.

3. For the ſake of the offending member. It is one of the greateſt offices of love thou canſt do to his ſoul, to admoniſh him of his offence, James v. 19. 20. Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him, let him know that he which converteth the ſinner from the error of his way, ſhall ſave a ſoul from death, and ſhall hide a multitude of ſins. Thou wilt thereby do him a double kindneſs. (1.) Remove ſin from off him, which is a load ſo much the more dangerous, as he is not aware of it, Lev. xix. 17. It is hating of him, in God's account, not to rebuke him, as it would be not to draw him out of a mire, when he is ſticking in it. If he had disjointed a leg or arm, wouldſt thou not ſet it again if thou couldſt? Such harm do wrong ſteps in a Chriſtian's way to his ſoul; therefore——if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs.—Gal. vi. 1. (2.) Prevent his ſinning more in that way. One wrong ſtep, if not righted, makes way for another; and much guilt is contracted by one's not being told of his fault, being in that caſe, like a ſon left to himſelf, who brings his father to ſhame: whereas a faithful reproof might prevent the repeating of the ſame folly. And as it would thus be a kindneſs to him in reſpect of the putting away of ſin, ſo conſequently in preventing ſtrokes from the hand of the Lord.

4. For your own ſake. God has laid this duty upon you, under the pain of his diſpleaſure; ſo your own intereſt is engaged here. As ye would not partake of other mens ſins, make conſcience of this duty, without which the guilt will creep over on your own ſouls, and the puniſhment thereof with it, Eph. v. 11. And why ſhould one by the neglect of this duty, adopt other mens ſins, defile his own conſcience, and mar his peace with God? Better diſpleaſe all the world than make a breach betwixt God and our own ſouls.

5. For the ſake of the common badge of the viſible myſtical body of the Chriſtian profeſſion, the holy ſacraments, 1 Tim. vi. 1. Is it not cutting to hear men ſay, Take up your profeſſors, your communicants? O that profeſſors would conſider the Chriſtian profeſſion to be of that dignity, and ſo tender a point, that they might tremble to think of bringing a ſtain upon it by their looſe walking! O that communicants would remember, that though the partaking of the Lord's table is in itſelf a paſſing action, yet it is an abiding holy ſign, whereby they are externally diſtinguiſhed for Chriſt; and that they would beware of ſuch practices as may render their badge mean and deſpiſed in the eyes of the world. Or if ſome will be ſo untender as not duly to regard it, that others would be ſo tender thereof as to check them for their offenſive carriage, out of a regard to the holy badge of the Chriſtian profeſſion, the holy ſacraments.

Laſtly, For the ſake of thoſe who are not of the body, but of the world lying in wickedneſs. It is a piece of Chriſtian duty to regard theſe, Col. iv. 5. Walk in wiſdom toward them that are without.——God writes his impartiality in his judgments, in not paſſing by the offences of thoſe called by his own name, Iſa. xlii. 4. And it would much contribute to commend religion to thoſe who are ſtrangers to it, and impreſs them with honourable thoughts of the communion of ſaints, if the members of it were faithful to check every thing among themſelves, Acts v. 1. and downwards, compare with ver. 13. otherwiſe ſnares and ſtumbling-blocks are laid before the blind world.

4. Walk holily and tenderly, ſo as your converſation may be exemplary and edifying to one another, Matth. v. 16. Heb xii. 14. Rom. xiv. 19. The church, in ſcripture-language, is often called Heaven, and every member thereof ought to be as a ſhining light there, and not paſtors only, Phil. ii. 15. 16. That ye may be blameleſs and harmleſs, the ſons of God, without rebuke, in the midſt of a crooked and perverſe nation, among whom ye ſhine as lights in the world: holding forth the word of life.—This is the moſt effectual way of edifying one another, viz. by a holy example. And it is one great advantage of church-communion, whereby one's ſoul is edified, while the members labour ſo to walk. For underſtanding of this, two things are to be marked.

1*ſt*, There is a holineſs of heart, and a holineſs of converſation, Pſal. xxiv. 3. 4. The former is the ſpring of the latter; the former lies in the inner man, the latter lies in the outward. Holineſs of heart is a perſonal duty, which not the church, but God and one's own conſcience can take notice of directly; therefore I ſpeak not of it, while treating of the duties of the members of the body one to another. Holineſs of converſation is a relative duty, in ſo far as our fellow members ought to ſee it in us all, and may ſee it where it is to their own edification: and we owe it as an indiſpenſible duty to the body whereof we are members, viz. that our converſation be exemplarily holy and tender, Cant. i. 8. For we are not only to know Chriſt, and ſpeak of him, but to live unto him, Phil. i. 21. For me to live is Chriſt.—This is the holineſs and tenderneſs I ſpeak of.

2*dly*, Though it is great hypocriſy to do good works to be ſeen of men, that we may gain their applauſe; yet it is not only lawful, but a neceſſary duty of Chriſtianity, and particularly of church-communion, to walk ſo as your walk may be exemplary, and to have an eye to the edification of others, in walking tenderly before them, Matth. v. 16. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven. 2 Theſſ. iii. 9. Though our internal religion lies only betwixt God and us, yet our outward acts are apt to be copied by our brethren; therefore we ſhould endeavour to get the copy fair, chiefly to pleaſe God, and next to edify our brethren.

Now this exemplary, tender, holy walking, required of every viſible church-member, for edifying the fellow-members of the body, hath many branches, being as broad as the whole law of God on the outward man. I ſhall reduce them to theſe two general heads.

1. Be exemplarily holy and tender with reſpect to the doing part of religion and a holy life, Luke i. 6. The members of Chriſt are not to be idle, but active, dying to ſin, and living unto righteouſneſs. Be exemplarily holy and tender.

(1.) With reſpect to duty, Eccleſ. ix. 10. Whatſoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might. Let your converſation be filled up with the performance and conſcientious diſcharge of every duty required at your hands, that it may be uniform. 'Then ſhall I not be aſhamed 'when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments.' Pſal. cxix. 6. Let your duty to God be conſcientiouſly performed in all the parts of it; ſince he is your Creator and Redeemer, refuſe him no piece of required ſervice, for ye are wholly his, Acts xxvii. 23. Be conſcientious in your duty to man, for God's ſake, and ſo join in your practice what God has joined in the commandment, Acts xxiv. 16. Neglect not perſonal duty which lies betwixt you, Tit. ii. 12. and have a ſpecial regard to the duties of your ſtation, and the relation wherein ye ſtand, if ever ye would have your converſation edifying. God has ſet every one of us in ſome ſtation and relation, and the conſcientious practice of the duty of our reſpective ſtations makes a man or woman ſhine, however low a ſphere they move in, 1 Tim. vi. 1. 'Let as many ſervants as are under the yoke, 'count their own maſters worthy of all honour, that 'the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed,' 1 Pet. iii. 1. 2. There is no perſon who may not this way edify the body of Chriſt, and be an uſeful member for their own and others good.

(2.) With reſpect to ſin, Jude 23. O the miſchief done by the ſinful liberty church-members take to themſelves! They fearleſsly break down and go over the holy hedge, and others, ſeeing them before, do follow after, and ſo they prove ruining to themſelves and others too, Matth. xviii. 7. Think no ſin little, ſince it is an offence againſt a great God, and makes way for greater, not only in yourſelves, but in others too. For the ſake of the head, and the reſt of the members, abhor it as hell, Rom. xii. 9. 1 Theſſ. v. 22.

(3.) In the practice and uſe of indifferent things. There the apoſtle's rule ſhould take place, Rom. xv. 1. 2. We then that are ſtrong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to pleaſe ourſelves. Let every one of us pleaſe his neighbour for his good to edification. It is not enough that the thing is in itſelf lawful; ye are alſo, in reſpect of your brother, to conſider if it be expedient, 1 Cor. vi. 12. What is in itſelf indifferent, may in its circumſtances be rendered unlawful to you, in ſo far as ye cannot do it without the ſcandal of your brother, Rom. xiv. 20. The neglect of this is one of the crying ſins of this day. Men conſider their own ſelves, without regard to others, and hence fearleſsly lay ſtumbling blocks before others. The ſenſe of the duties of church communion is much loſt among all parties in this church this day; in the natural body a thing will be refuſed, though it be good for the ſtomach, if it be ill for the head, &c. But, in this degenerate generation, the members of the viſible myſtical body are grown ſo ſelfiſh, that to pleaſe themſelves they can drive over others, without any regard to their good or hurt.

2. Be exemplarily holy and tender in the ſuffering part of religion. And be ſo for the edification of the body. Others have been ſo for our good, Heb. xii. 1. ſo ſhould we be for the good of others. What croſſes and afflictions the Lord may be pleaſed to lay on you, bear Chriſtianly, with patience, ſubmiſſion, and reſignation, bringing forth the fruit of them, Rom. xii. 12. Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing inſtant in prayer. They are trials, and in them we ought to carry ſo, as God may be honoured, and our brethren edified, while we are by divine providence brought upon the ſtage to undergo our reſpective trials. Conſider here,

(1.) God, in laying afflictions on ſome of his people, has an eye to others good, as well as that of the afflicted party; even as blood is let out of the arm or foot, not for the good of the arm or foot only, but the good of the whole body; though it is only one member that gets the wound, yet the deſign is for the reſt of the members too, 2 Cor. i. 6. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the ſame ſufferings which we alſo ſuffer: or whether we be comforted it is for your conſolation and ſalvation. As when one is examined the reſt are inſtructed; when one of the children of a family is chaſtiſed, the reſt are thereby bettered; ſo our gracious God often teaches many at the expence of one only.

(2.) A Chriſtian behaviour under trouble is one of the moſt influential points of Chriſtian practice, likely to have the greateſt efficacy on others, ſpectators of it and witneſſes to it, or to whoſe knowledge it may come, Heb. xii. 1. 2. 3. Hence the blood of the martyrs was ſaid to be the ſeed of the church: and the cauſe of the goſpel never loſt by perſecution, while the perſecuted were honeſtly carried through. Doing well is ready to influence others, but ſuffering well is far more ſo. A croſs carried evenly and Chriſtianly has a certain force to draw others to imitation, as it is moſt admired.

(3.) Thoſe who, by reaſon of their afflictions, ſeem to themſelves to be laid by as uſeleſs, are miſtaken; they have a moſt precious opportunity put into their hand, to be ſerviceable to Chriſt and the members of his body, Col. i. 24. 'Who now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh, for his body's ſake.' God has brought them forth on the ſtage, to take trial of their ſuffering graces, for the inſtructing, exciting, ſtrengthening and edifying others. Job was a man who did much for God in his day; but the ſuffering part of his life has been of the greateſt uſe in all ages ſince, and will be to the end. The Pſalmiſt David complains, Pſal. xxxi. 12. that he was like a broken veſſel; but every ſherd of that broken pot has been of good uſe to the church of Chriſt ſince, and has helped to heal many.

(4.) Wherefore Chriſtians under their afflictions ought to conſider that they ſuffer as members of the body, bearing that part allotted for them of the ſufferings appointed for myſtical Chriſt; for the ſufferings of Chriſt perſonal are at an end, but the ſufferings of Chriſt myſtical are but yet a filling up, Col. i. 24. This would arm them with patience, as conſidering their particular trials to be, in ſome ſort, a common cauſe for the good of others, as well as their own; and may excite them, in the blackeſt lines of providence, to caſt ſuch a fair copy as others may write after.

To preſs this duty of church-communion, conſider.

1. The intereſt of God's name and honour in it, John xv. 8. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; ſo ſhall ye be my diſciples. The fruitfulneſs of thoſe who are planted in the houſe of the Lord, brings much glory to the maſter of the houſe; and their barreneſs brings much diſhonour to him before the world. And ſhould not the one be vigorouſly purſued, and the other guarded againſt, by all thoſe whom he has called into the fellowſhip of his Son.

2. The intereſt of your fellow-members in it. It is a dark world; they are the moſt uſeful in the communion of ſaints, who moſt ſhine as lights. Every action of yours, every piece of your carriage, being in church-communion, is apt to be copied. By your tender example you may do good to many; by your untenderneſs you may prove ſtumbling-blocks to others.

3. The intereſt of the goſpel in it, Tit. ii. 9. 10. Exhort ſervants to be obedient to their own maſters——not purloining, but ſhewing all good fidelity; that they may adorn the doctrine of our God and Saviour in all things. It is the glory of the goſpel, that the power thereof appears in the lives of the profeſſors thereof, ſtamping holineſs and tenderneſs upon every part of their own walk: and, on the other hand, it brings great ſcandal on the doctrine of Chriſt, that the profeſſors of it are unholy in their lives.

Laſtly, Your own intereſt is in it for time and eternity. As ye ſow ye will reap, both for kind and quantity.

5. Bear one anothers burdens, afflictions, croſſes, temptations and trials, Gal. vi. 2. 'Bear ye one another's burdens, and ſo fulfil the law of Chriſt.' Heb. xiii. 3. 'Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them: and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being yourſelves alſo in the body.' 1 Cor. xii. 26. 'and whether one member ſuffer, all the members ſuffer with it.' This is a natural duty of the members of one body. That part of the communion of ſaints, which is above, is got quite beyond theſe; but thoſe of them who are yet in the world, are in the place of trial, where the clouds return after the rain. But not being ſtanding each one by himſelf, but in the body with other fellow-members, bearing their part of the ſufferings allotted for the body, there is all reaſon that the afflicted's lot ſhould be looked on as a common cauſe, and each one ſhould help to bear the burden with them; their burden of ſimple affliction, or burden of temptation. And,

1. Have a cordial ſympathy with them, and hearty concern in their afflictions and temptations; and ſo expreſs it as they may know it, Rom. xii. 15. Let your hearts be touched with fellow-feeling of the diſtreſſes of your brethren; and therefore 'put on bowels of mercy,' &c. Col. iii. 12. and lay aſide ſelfiſhneſs and unconcernedneſs with the caſe of others. It is a mortified member that is not touched with the pain of other members of the body; and he who has no kindly ſympathy with the ſaints, in their troubles and temptations ſeems not to partake of the ſpirit of that communion, Amos vi. 1. 6. Wo to them that are at eaſe in Zion, ———that drink wine in bowls, and anoint themſelves with the chief ointments: but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph. And let them know it: for what comfort can it afford them, though your bowels yearn towards them, if they underſtand it not, if they ſee it not, it is all a caſe to them as if it were not.

2. Bear their burden as it affects them, and not always as it would affect yourſelves, Rom. xv. 1. Many weigh the afflictions and temptations of others in their own balance, ſo find them very light; and therefore paſs them as unworthy of their concern, Job xii. 5. 'He that is ready to ſlip with his feet, is as a lamp deſpiſed in the thought of him that is at eaſe.' But the true way of judging of the weight of theſe things is, as they are apt to affect the afflicted party, and with that weight we ſhould bear them, 2 Cor. xi. 29. Who is weak, and I am not weak? Who is offended, and I burn not? One mote will diſturb the eye, when a hundred of them lying on the hand will create no trouble, no hazard. Shall the hand then be unconcerned to pluck it out? That may make a heavy affliction and dangerous temptation to one, which would be a very light one, and perhaps none at all to another. And it may be a greater act of Chriſtian obedience in one to make his way through a temptation or affliction in itſelf ſmall, than in another through one ten times greater; as the widow's throwing in her mite was more than all the gifts of the rich men, Luke xxi. 1. 2. 3.

3. Let your mouths be open to enquire into their griefs, as far as Chriſtian prudence will allow, and your hearts open to receive their moans, Col. iv. 7, 8. All my ſtate ſhall Tychicus declare unto you—whom I have ſent unto you for the ſame purpoſe, that he might know your eſtate, and comfort your hearts. If any member of the natural body be ſore and wounded, how natural is it for the hand tenderly to uncover and open it up, the eye to pry with compaſſion on the ſeveral parts of the ſore, &c. even when they cannot remove the trouble? Such is the caſe of human nature in its preſent ſtate of weakneſs, that there is a kind of relief, though but a ſorry one, in venting of their grief into the boſom of one where it may be entertained with ſympathy. The want of which makes afflictions and temptations often like a fire ſhut up, prying on one's ſpirits, Pſal. xxxix. 3. and has made the beſt of men complain heavily, Mic. vii. 1. 5. and downwards.

4. Comfort, encourage, adviſe, and direct them ſuitable to their caſe, 1 Theſſ. iv. 18. This is all that is within the compaſs of one's power to do for their afflicted brethren, in ſome caſes, Matth. xxv. 36. And thus may one by a word fitly ſpoken, be a happy inſtrument to refreſh the bowels of the afflicted, and blunt the edge of a temptation, 2 Tim. i. 16. Job xvi. 5.—I would ſtrengthen you with my mouth, and the moving of my lips ſhould aſſuage your grief. And here a ſpecial tenderneſs is required; and, with a due regard to the circumſtances of the afflicted, all harſhneſs is to be evited, leſt one add affliction to the afflicted; which was the rock Job's friends ſplit upon, and cauſed him to make that affecting reſentment, Job xvi. 4. 5.

5. What can you in conſcience and reaſon ward off, or carry off of their burden, do it, for ye are members one of another, Rom. xli. 5. Philip. ii. 4. Look not every one on his own things, but every man alſo on the things of others. So ye are to give all your ſpiritual or temporal aſſiſtances to the leſſening or removing of their trial in a way of duty. This ſhould particularly appear in ſhielding one another's reputation, which is often blaſted by venomous tongues and open ears, which together lay a heavy burden on the ſuffering party, Prov. xxv. 23.

6. In troubles, and temptations from men, ſupport and ſtand by the oppreſſed for their deliverance, eſpecially in the cauſe of Chriſt and religion, 2 Tim. iv. 16. 'At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, but all men 'forſook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their 'charge.' And chap. i. 16. 17. The Lord give mercy unto the houſe of Oneſiphorus; for he often refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain; but, when he was in Rome, he ſought me out very diligently, and found me. We are not born for ourſelves, but for God's honour, and the good of our brethren. And the leaving of thoſe helpleſs, on whom, by the divine providence, the ſtorm of the trial or temptation falls, is a forſaking and being aſhamed of the cauſe of Chriſt in the world. Thus ought we to bear one another's burden, as members of the body of Chriſt. To ſtir you up to which neceſſary duty, conſider, Laſtly, Earneſt prayer is to be made to God for our brethren under their trials, that they may be ſupported, refreſhed, and delivered, according to the will of God; and this whether their trials be from the immediate hand of God or man, Acts xii. 5. 'Peter therefore 'was kept in priſon; but prayer was made without ceaſ-'ing of the church unto God for him.' 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. 2. 'Finally, brethren, pray for us—that we may be de-'livered from unreaſonable and wicked men.'——This is a ſpecial way of bearing one another's burdens, to bear them before the throne of grace, and to wreſtle with God for them there. This is one of the great advantages of the communion of ſaints, viz. a communion of prayers, that when any known weight lies upon a member, the reſt cry unto the head on behalf of it. And here I offer four things.

(1.) It is much to be wiſhed that Chriſtians praying together, when occaſionally meeting, were more in uſe. And particularly that thoſe who are in diſtreſs would not only require miniſters or elders to pray with them, but even fellow-Chriſtians viſiting them, and that ſuch ſhould readily comply with ſuch a deſire, both obſerving circumſtances ſo as to diſcern when and in what caſes it may be to edification. It is very agreeable to the communion of ſaints, and to that love and ſympathy which ought to be among the members of Chriſt.

(2.) As it is a commendable practice in the church, to require public prayers on behalf of the ſick or thoſe otherwiſe afflicted; and as the miniſter is the mouth of the congregation, ſo ye would conſider that ye ought affectionately to join in theſe prayers, as parties nearly concerned, and whoſe prayers for the afflicted are deſired, foraſmuch as the prayers deſired are the prayers of the congregation, and not the miniſter's only. The language of theſe prayers is, 'Brethren, pray for us.' And therefore, I beſeech you, let not this be a matter of mere form to you, in which you may only notice what is begged for them; but let your hearts go along with the words, even the length of the throne, for a brother or ſiſter in diſtreſs.

(3.) Carry home with you the caſe of thoſe to your family and ſecret prayers, and confine not your concern for them within the walls of the church. If the afflictions of others do touch your hearts as they ought, you may carry a copy of the paper home with you on your ſympathizing hearts, to mind you to put up petitions for them in your families and in ſecret. If ye have neglected this formerly, mind it in time to come, and, when ye have done it, know ye have done no more than what was your duty, Heb. xiii. 3. Remember them that are in bonds, as bound with them: and them which ſuffer adverſity, as being yourſelves alſo in the body.

(4.) Some caſes of others in affliction may require of you extraordinary prayer, by ſetting ſome time apart for that very end, either yourſelves alone, or in conjunction with fellow-Chriſtians. So David in the caſe of the child——'faſted and went in and lay all night on the 'earth,' 2 Sam xii. 16. And in the caſe of others too, Pſal. xxxv. 13. 14. And ſo in the caſe of Peter in priſon, Acts xii. 12.——Many were gathered together in the houſe of Mary, praying. The ſerious conſideration of the kind of the affliction, and of the perſon under it, with reſpect to the honour of God, the good of the church, and your own particular intereſt depending thereon, muſt determine theſe caſes.

I will add, by the by, that where prayers are deſired for thoſe in affliction, the affliction being removed, thankſgiving ſhould likewiſe be deſired. It is but the prevalency of an unallowable cuſtom, to give up notes for praying for the ſick, and yet to give none for thankſgiving for the recovery of the party when recovered. If the congregation weep with them, it is reaſonable they have occaſion to rejoice with them too; if to petition for the mercy, to give thanks for it too, Luke xvii. 17. 18.

Motive 1. Conſider it is the ſpecial command of your head, Gal. vi. 2. it is a 'fulfilling of the law of Chriſt,' viz. the law of love. Our Lord Jeſus loved his people ſo as to die for them, therefore he requires them particularly to love one another. His compaſſion to them was without a parallel, therefore he will have them full of bowels towards each other; he bare the burdens of the whole, the burden of guilt, and curſe due to them for ſin, therefore he will have them bear one another's burdens. Here is the ſpecial reaſon why it is called the law of Chriſt.

2. Ye have the example of the head for it, John xiii. 15. 'For I have given you an example that ye ſhould 'do as I have done to you.' He is touched with all their afflictions, Iſa. lxiii. 9. If any annoy them, he reckons himſelf perſecuted, Acts ix. 4. A moſt tender ſympathy he has with them—for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye, Zech. ii. 8. And as for their temptations, he is not unconcerned about them, Heb. iv. 15. Imitate your head, O members of the body: ſympathize with them whom Chriſt ſympathizes with, leſt ye pour contempt on thoſe whom Chriſt honours, and forget the afflictions of thoſe whom he tenderly remembers.

3. The trials and diſtreſſes of others are deſigned for your good as was ſaid before. Our merciful Father, in compaſſion to the reſt, teaches them at the expence of one. Does it not then require your ſympathy, that others are afflicted for your ſake? Col. i. 24. Should not ye anſwer the deſign of providence, in exerciſing of thoſe duties and graces which providence lays afflictions and temptations on others to bring forth into exerciſe on you? he lays the rod on your fellow-members, to bring you and many others to the throne of grace.

4. What is thy brother's caſe to day may be thine to morrow. Is he under affliction now? Thou mayſt be in the ſame hereafter, or in another as hard to bear as it is for him now to bear his. Is he under temptation? As faſt as thou ſeemeſt to ſtand now, thou mayeſt be as low under the ſame or a worſe, to-morrow, as he is to-day, Gal. vi. 1. 1 Cor. x. 12. Refuſe him not that help of thee, which thou mayeſt need of him ere long. There is no trouble, no temptation, which befals one member of the body, which another can certainly ſecure himſelf from.

Laſtly, It is neceſſary to evidence thy being of the body, 1 Cor. xii. 26. Col. iii. 12. How can it be accounted a live member, that has not ſympathy with the reſt in pain? but that Chriſtian ſympathy of bearing one another's burdens ſpeaks union with the members of the head. That hardneſs, ſelfiſhneſs, and careleſſneſs about the trials and temptations of others, which is found in many, cannot but darken the evidences of good people, ſo far as it prevails, and caſt them as naught in whom it reigns.

6. Edify one another by Chriſtian conference, Eph. iv. 29. Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the uſe of edifying, that it may miniſter grace unto the hearers, 1 Theſſ. v. 11. Wherefore comfort yourſelves together, and edify one another. In ſo far as the body is made up of ſeveral Chriſtians, they ought to have ſuitable conference, for the edification of one another as members, as they are brought together by divine providence. It is the duty of joint members of any lawful ſociety, to treat among themſelves of the intereſts of it and its concerns. Fellow-travellers to one place are to be uſeful this way to one another. Chriſtians are a ſociety by themſelves, the communion of ſaints, they are fellow-travellers towards Zion; Chriſtian conference is the native reſult of the relation. I ſhall branch out this in theſe things.

1. Thoſe who by providence are caſt together ordinarily, whether in a family or neighbourhood, ſo as they muſt ordinarily converſe together, ſhould labour to be uſeful to, and edify one another by their communication, Heb. iii. 13. But exhort one another daily while it is called to-day; leſt any of you be hardened through the deceitfulneſs of ſin. Religion ſhould be carried by us into all our relations, and however we be poſted in particular ſocieties, we ſhould always remember our general calling and relation, as viſible members of the myſtical body, that we converſe together as becometh ſaints.

2. Occaſional meetings of Chriſtians together ſhould be thus improven. There is a commandment 'to ſpeak of thoſe things while men walk by the way together,' Deut. vi. 7. We find the two diſciples going to Emmaus thus exerciſed, and a happy iſſue of their conference, Luke xxiv. 14. 15. Were mens ſpirits habitually heavenly, even occaſional encounters would produce ſomething of this ſort betwixt fellow Chriſtians.

3. Chriſtians meeting together on holy and ſpiritual ſacred occaſions ſhould, in a ſpecial manner be thus improven, as on Sabbath-days, and at ſermons. Then it is the day calls for it, and the Lord's word and ordinances miniſter matter of Chriſtian conference. Days have been, when people going to or coming from ordinances, have been ſweetly employed this way, Pſal. lv. 14. and, between ſermons, either went alone for prayer and meditation, or gathered together for Chriſtian conference. But alas! this is much decayed, and among none more perhaps than among us. I often ſee people ſtanding buſy ſpeaking together, after the public worſhip is begun, and with my eye or voice, muſt labour to break off the conference, the which if it were not worldly, would ſurely be broken off by the beginning of the public worſhip. The worldly diſcourſe in our church yard has been, and is an offence and ſtumbling-block to ſtrangers, and is like to turn the reproach of the place, whereby God is highly diſhonoured. This is a horrid profanation of the Lord's day, an open contempt of it and his ordinances, which ſpeaks the goſpel ſapleſs and taſteleſs to you, and is a preſage of a ſtroke, Neh. xiii. 18. Alas! how think ye one ſhould preach to people making ſuch preparation for hearing? How ſhall ye profit by preaching after ſuch communications? Iſ. lviii. 13, 14. How ſhall we pray for God's bleſſing on your labours and ſubſtance, or look to be heard, when ye ſacrilegiouſly rob God of his own day at this rate? I beſeech you, for the Lord's ſake, and your own ſouls ſake, and as you would not provoke the Lord to leave me as an idol-ſhepherd among you, who ſhall have no power to profit your ſouls, reform this practice, and either go by yourſelves for prayer and meditation, or converſe like Chriſtians.

4. Fellow Chriſtians ſhould communicate their caſes one to another, as far as Chriſtian prudence will allow and ſtrengthen, inſtruct, and edify one another, Pſal. lxvi. 16. The wiſe man obſerves, that two are better than one; for if the one fall, the other will lift him up, Eccleſ. iv. 10. And happy are they who thus have a friend in need. How many might have inſtruction in what they know not, the edge of temptations blunted, their hearts warmed, and their ſouls bettered, by a mutual communication of caſes, troubles, temptations, and experiences?

Laſtly, Appointed private meetings of ſeveral Chriſtians together, for prayer and Chriſtian conference for their mutual edification, provided it mar not family-worſhip, nor be improven to the prejudice of publick ordinances, as they are warranted by the word of God, ſo might be of good uſe (if rightly improven) to the advancement of religion, Acts xii. 12. Mal. iii. 16. Col. iii. 16. By this means Chriſtians might improve both in gifts and grace, in knowledge and love, and they have been bleſſed of God to theſe holy ends unto many: and ordinarily, in pariſhes where the goſpel begins to thrive, they are ſet up almoſt as naturally as the birds draw together in the ſpring: and, where the goſpel work is going back, they decay; owing their fall, either to coldriſeneſs in God's matters creeping in, or the fiery heat of diviſion.

Motive 1. The neceſſity and uſefulneſs of it is great. It is neceſſary and uſeful for the honour of God, 1 Pet. ii. 9. for the good of our brethren, Rom. xiv. 19. and for our own good, Prov. xi. 25. The tongue is called our glory, becauſe it is the inſtrument of glorifying God, and ſo doing good to others; and, without this, men are chargeable with laying up their talents in a napkin, hiding their light under a buſhel.

2. The thriving or decay of religion goes hand in hand with it. Look to the times wherein religion proſpered, and you will find that they who feared the Lord ſpoke often one to another; and as that wore away, ſo religion decayed. Neareſt the heart neareſt the mouth. Where the fire is burning on the hearth, the ſmoke is going forth of the chimney. Where religion is lively in the heart, it will appear in mens converſe.

Laſtly, Times of abounding ſin and approaching wrath is a ſpecial ſeaſon for it, and calls the fearers of God to ſet about it, Mal. iii. 16. Such is the day in which we live, 'wherein iniquity abounds, and the love of many waxeth cold.' God is removing the pillars, and his judgments are abroad in the world, and leſſer ſtrokes are ſent as forerunners of greater.

7. and laſtly, Be ready to aſſiſt the needy members, and to communicate of your worldly goods to the poor in the body, 1 John iii. 17. 18. But whoſo hath this world's good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. Rom. xii. 13. Diſtributing to the neceſſity of ſaints, given to hoſpitality. It is much to be regretted, that many of the poor, eſpecially the vagrant ones, have no ſemblance of piety or memberſhip in the body of Chriſt. Yet even theſe have a right to ſupply from us, becauſe they are God's creatures. But the poor ſaints have a double right to it, not only as God's creatures, but as members of Chriſt, and therefore the church is bound particularly to ſee to them, Gal. vi. 10. 'As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith.'

The Lord in his wiſdom has ſeen it meet to make ſome of his members poor in the world, not only for their own trial, but the trial of their brethren, who are obliged to ſupply them, Deut. xv. 11. ‘For the poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land: therefore I command thee ſaying, Thou ſhalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in the land.’ Matth. xxvi. 11. This duty I branch out in five particulars.

1. Seaſonably act towards the relief of thoſe members who are fallen into decay in the world, as ye have opportunity, Lev. xxv. 35. And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fall in decay with thee, then thou ſhalt relieve him, yea, though he be a ſtranger or ſojourner, that he may live with thee. As the keeping of a man that is ſtumbling from quite falling down, is much alike with helping him up when he is fallen; ſo the relieving of a man at the brink of poverty, is much alike with relieving him in it. This duty I take to be aimed at, Luke vi. 35. ‘But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again.’——And if it were more exerciſed, there would be fewer poor than there are.

2. Abound in private diſtributions towards the poor members, at your houſes, or otherwiſe, as you have occaſion, Matth. vi. 3. Heb. xiii. 16. But, to do good, and to communicate, forget not, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed. Occaſions of this nature are ordinary, which try what ſort of ſtewards we are of the good things of this life which providence has put into our hand. It was Job's comfort in his poverty, that when he was wealthy, he communicated of what he had to the poor, Job xxxi. 19. and downward.

3. Conſcientiouſly give in to the Sabbath's collections, to be diſtributed by the church. God has appointed theſe, and the Lord Jeſus has appointed church officers for taking care of the poor in the church, Acts vi. 1, 3. And what they are to give out is to come into their hand by the church-collections, 2 Cor. xvi. 2. Upon the firſt day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in ſtore, as God hath proſpered him, that there be no gatherings when I come. So this matter of the Sabbath day's collections is not to be looked upon as a buſineſs of mere faſhion, but as a divine ordinance in the church which ſhould make people, out of conſcience towards God, to give into it, a ſuitable proportion to the ſubſtance God has put in their hands.

4. Grudge not extraordinary diſtributions, towards the relief not only of thoſe of other congregations, but of other churches, whom you never ſaw, nor will perhaps ſee in the face, Rom. xv. 26. ‘For it hath pleaſed them of Macedonia and Achaia, to make a certain contribution for the ſaints which are at Jeruſalem.’ This is a duty of the communion of ſaints; for all the churches and congregations of ſaints in the world make but one body of Chriſt, and they who are at the greateſt diſtance from you are your brethren. Why ſhould any then think themſelves unconcerned with their diſtreſs?

Laſtly, Be ready to give of your ſubſtance for pious uſes, towards the advancing of the good of the body, which is the church, Prov. iii. 9. There are ſeveral occaſions people have of laying out money for pious uſes, which want of due conſideration makes them to do grudgingly. But if thou haſt an occaſion put into thy hand, by this money to honour God, to bring about good for the ſouls of others, to contribute to the good of the church, thou art to look on it as a ſpecial duty of the communion of ſaints, and an occaſion of beſtowing it to a noble uſe.

As to what one is to give, every one muſt conſcientiouſly determine that for himſelf; but here is the general rule, viz. that people are to give in a proportion to the neceſſity of their brethren, and their own ability, Rom. xii. 13. 1 Cor. xvi. 2. One is to eye,

1. The neceſſity of their brethren: for that may be too little for ſome, which may be more than enough to others whoſe ſtraits are not ſo great. And withal, in weighing this their neceſſity, it is to be noticed, if the poor walk ſuitable to their condition; for neither religion nor reaſon requires us to foſter them in voluntary idleneſs, or in living beyond the bounds of their condition, 2 Theſſ iii. 10. 11.

2. Their own ability. What one gives muſt be his own, and not another's, for God hates robbery for burnt-offering. Thoſe to whom God has given much, of them much is required; thoſe who have little, the leſs is required. Our own ſtrait condition does not altogether excuſe from it. The widow's two mites were required and accepted; yea, people are bound to labour for that they may have what to give to the poor, Eph. iv. 28. Let him that ſtole ſteal no more; but rather let him labour, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. And whatever is in their power to do for them, they are obliged to do, Acts iii. 6.

Motive 1. Conſider our Lord Chriſt looks on what is given to his poor members as given to himſelf, and will make honourable mention of it at the great day, Matth. xxv. 35. 36. ‘For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink: I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was ſick, and ye viſited me: I was in priſon, and ye came unto me.’ Chriſt is in them, his image upon them, they and he are one, and ſhall not their fellow-members regard them as ſuch, in ſupplying of their neceſſities? We are to part with our all to him at his call. Sometimes he requires it by perſecutors, and then we are to give it up at his call for his ſake: ſometimes by his needy members; and then alſo it is given to him, Lent to the Lord.

2. We are not abſolute maſters of our ſubſtance, but ſtewards of it, accountable to the Lord for our management. The church is God's houſehold, and Chriſt has ſecured, by the covenant, neceſſaries for this life to all that are his, Iſa. xxxiii. 16.—Bread ſhall be given him, his waters ſhall be ſure. Only he has put the portion of the poor members in the hands of others, to give it out to them, according to their neceſſity, and what of it is in their hand, Luke xvi. 10. 11. 12. Therefore we ſhall be unfaithful ſtewards, if we diſtribute not to the neceſſities of the ſaints.

3. They are fellow-members of the ſame body with you, and fellow-heirs of the ſame inheritance, Gal. vi. 10. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſehold of faith. The ſpiritual relation that is betwixt us and them challengeth it as a debt of love. Have we not all one Father, one elder Brother, one Spirit knitting us to one Head, and one heritage for ever, to which men are admitted without reſpect of perſons? Suppoſe ſeveral men were travelling together into a far country to receive a common inheritance, would not thoſe who have abundance of ſpending money ſupply thoſe who are run ſhort in the way? So ſhould we do with the poor ſaints.

4. It tends much to the honour of God, and the credit of the goſpel and of the church. Every ſociety looks on themſelves as obliged to ſee to the ſupply of the wants of their members? and ſhould not the communion of ſaints be exemplary therein, conſidering the moſt ſtraits ties among them? By our Lord's own verdict, ‘Giving is a more bleſſed thing than receiving,’ Acts xx. 35. therein we do in a ſpecial manner appear in likeneſs to the Lord, Luke vi. 35. 36. And O ſhould we not honour with our ſubſtance him, who, for our ſakes, became poor, that we might be rich? 2 Cor. viii. 9.

Laſtly, It has a reward of grace annexed to it, being rightly performed. It is the beſt way to ſecure a through-bearing for us and ours, Prov. xxviii. 27. ‘He that giveth to the poor ſhall not have lack.’——What we have is liable to many accidents; but laying out for God is better ſecurity, than laying up what God calls for at our hand, Eccleſ. xi. 1. ‘Caſt thy bread upon the wa‘ ters : for thou ſhalt find it after many days.’ What is thus laid out brings in to the giver, Prov. iii. 9. 10. ‘ Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and with the firſt-fruits of all thine increaſe ; ſo ſhall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy preſſes ſhall burſt out with new wine.’ Solomon obſerves the accompliſhment of it, Prov. xi. 24. ‘ There is that ſcattereth, and yet increaſeth.’——And though our good works do not merit either the temporal or eternal reward of glory ; yet even the eternal reward will be according to our works, and that is an eternal truth, 2 Cor. ix. 6. But this I ſay, He which ſoweth ſparingly ſhall reap alſo ſparingly ; and he which ſoweth bountifully ſhall reap alſo bountifully.

V. Admiſſion to the Lord's table is a matter of the greateſt weight and concern, to be managed and gone about with all ſolemn ſerioufneſs and caution. Whoſo conſiders that, being one bread, we declare ourſelves thereby one body of Chriſt, muſt needs ſee this ; and that there is great need to take heed to our feet in entering on that holy ground. And, conſidering that the church is a communion of ſaints in profeſſion, whereof Chriſt is the head, there is need to look well who be admitted thereto as complete members of the viſible body. And here it is evident,

1. That there ought not to be a promiſcuous admiſſion to the Lord's table, which ſome have contended for. It is not only contrary to our Lord's expreſs command, Matth. vii. 6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, ——but contrary to the nature, uſe and ends of that ordinance. It is a diſtinguiſhing ſign, to put a viſible difference betwixt the communion of ſaints and communion of ſinners ; and therefore cannot be common to both. Shall the badge of the members of Chriſt be put upon thoſe who bear Satan's mark on their foreheads ? Shall they be declared of the body of Chriſt, who are, to the conviction of the church, of the world lying in wickedneſs ?

2. Admiſſion to the Lord's table is an act of church power and government : for, if the church be a body or ſociety by itſelf, and the Lord's table the ſpecial privilege of that body, whereby one is declared and allowed to be of that body, there can be no lawful admiſſion thereto, but in the way of church power and government. For what corporation is there, whereinto one may be admitted without an act of the governing part of it ? Our Lord has appointed governors in his church, 1 Cor. xii. 28. who have a power to admit to, and debar from the ſacrament, Matth. vii. 6. ; and this belongs not to the miniſter alone, but to the ſociety of ruling church-officers, that is, the miniſter and elders ; for the keys of government, to which admiſſion belongs, are not given to one, but to the unity of church-officers, 2 Cor. ii. 6.

3. There ought to be a due trial of thoſe who are admitted to the Lord's table, that it may be ſeen, whether or not thoſe who ſeek to be admitted are qualified according to the laws of the viſible kingdom of Chriſt, leſt ſuch be brought in as may bring a ſtain on the ſociety, and corrupt and defile them, inſtead of edifying them. This alſo flows from the nature of the church as a ſeparate ſociety, and a communion of ſaints. For, to bring in hand over head, without conſideration of the perſons, is much a caſe with throwing open the doors of the ſanctuary, that any who pleaſes may enter. It is true, ſince God only knows the heart, no doubt hypocrites and naughty perſons may be let in as honeſt-hearted Chriſtians ; the devil's goats may come in by their likeneſs to Chriſt's ſheep ; but if their out-ſide be promiſing, that is all the church can judge of, other things are left to God's judgment.

4. The whole matter is of the greateſt weight and deepeſt concern ; and that,

1ſt, To the admitters, who are, as it were, the porters of the Lord's houſe, and ſhould look well whom they admit to the Lord's table, that it be not profaned through their default. There are two things requiſite to give one a right, before the church, to the Lord's table. (1.) A competent meaſure of knowledge ; without this people cannot examine themſelves, nor rightly diſcern the Lord's body, 1 Cor. xi. 28. 29. and they are declared none of the Lord's people, Iſa. xxvii. 11.—It is a people of no underſtanding ; therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour. The miniſter, whoſe office it is to teach, is the moſt competent, tho' perhaps not the only judge in this point. (2.) A blameleſs life, not ſcandalous and profane, Matth. vii. 6. Theſe cannot be fit gueſts at the holy table, whoſe converſation is openly wicked. And miniſters and elders who are, by their office, overſeers of the manners of the people, are to enquire into this. And whoſo duly conſiders it, will find it a moſt weighty piece of work.

2dly, To the church, and every member thereof. Is it not the concern of every one in the ſociety, who be admitted as fellow-members of the body, to partake of the greateſt privileges of the church ? It is the duty of all to do what in them lies, that God's ordinance be not profaned, that the communion of ſaints, which is one bread, receive not harm by the bringing in thereto ſuch as will ſtain and defile it, and that they be not partakers of other mens ſins, 1 Cor. v. 6. 7. Your glorying is not good : know ye not that a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump ? Purge out therefore the old leaven, that ye may be a new lump, as ye are unleavened. For even Chriſt our paſſover is ſacrificed for us.

Queſt. What can and ought private Chriſtians to do in this caſe ? Anſw. If the caſe or offence of the party being ſuch as renders him unworthy to be admitted, cannot be removed by private admonition, either through the party's obſtinacy, or the publickneſs of it, in that caſe they ought to bring it to the church officers, in order to ſtop the admiſſion, Matth. xviii. 15. If they do not this, they partake of the guilt ; if they do, they have delivered their own ſouls, though the church officers do not their duty, and may partake with a good conſcience.

3dly, To the party himſelf. It is the taking on of the external public badge of the communion of ſaints, a ſolemn declaration of his being one body with the members of Chriſt, the which muſt needs be of great concern to any one who duly conſiders how ſolemn and awful an action this is. To go about this work ignorantly, indeliberately, and raſhly, without due preparation, is a taking of God's name in vain with a witneſs. Wherefore,

(1.) Let thoſe who have a hand in admiſſion to the Lord's table, be careful and conſcientious to approve themſelves to God in this weighty matter. (2.) Let the whole communicants be concerned to ſee to it as they have opportunity. (3.) Let perſons looking that way duly conſider the weight of the matter.

Thoſe who have been once orderly admitted, may at every occaſion thereafter claim their privilege in caſe they have kept free from public ſcandal. But as for thoſe who have not been yet orderly admitted, they ought to make it a matter of time, that there be no hurry in their admiſſion. I have often complained, that ſome never ſhew their deſire of admiſſion, till there be little time left either for themſelves or us to conſider of that weighty buſineſs. I have endeavoured to prevent that by giving intimation ſome weeks before, but almoſt ſtill in vain as to ſome. May we be helped to take ſome method hereafter that may effectually prevent it. Is it not highly reaſonable, that thoſe who by office are to ſee to this, be ſatisfied both as to the knowledge and converſation of thoſe they muſt admit ? And why ſhould people be ſo conceited of themſelves as not to allow a competent time for this ? Let all conſider,

1. The honour of Chriſt, how it is concerned in this matter, that that be not ſaid concerning us, Rom. ii. 24. ——‘ The name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you.’—The comely order of the Lord's houſe is for his ſake to be carefully obſerved.

2. The ordinance is in hazard of profanation, and all are in hazard of being guilty of it. The admitters bring guilt on themſelves when they are negligent in this matter, Ezek. xliv. 7. In that ye have brought into my ſanctuary ſtrangers uncircumciſed in heart, and uncircumciſed in fleſh, to be in my ſanctuary to pollute it, even my houſe, when ye offer my bread.—The whole church when they are not in their duty, Lev. v. 1. and the party, Ezek. xxiii. 39.

3. The church is in hazard of being defiled, Heb. xii. 15.—'Leſt any root of bitterneſs ſpringing up 'trouble you, and thereby many be defiled.' Some profane leaven brought in, may ſoon leaven the whole lump.

4. The party who comes unwarrantably runs a terrible riſque, 1 Cor. xi. 29. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lord's body.

Laſtly, The ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper is to be highly prized, and the partakers of it to walk worthy of their character and privilege.

1. Let all thoſe who are come to the years of diſcretion duly value this high privilege, and timeouſly prepare themſelves to partake of it. They muſt needs be under mighty prejudices, or very untender perſons, who without much ado, live without this ordinance time after time.

2. Let thoſe who are partakers remember their character, as declared viſible members of the body of Chriſt, and walk towards the Lord, and towards one another, as thoſe who are the Lord's by perſonal dedication, and live in church communion.

Thus have I ſhewn you what a ſociety profeſſors and communicants are, and what lies upon them by virtue of their being thus joined in church-communion.

AN

EXPLICATION

Of the firſt part of the

ASSEMBLY's SHORTER CATECHISM,

In continued diſcourſes on each queſtion.

QUEST. 1. WHAT is the chief end of man?

ANSW. Man's chief end is, to glorify God, and to enjoy him for ever.

EXPLICATION.

By man's chief end is meant, the end which man was chiefly made for, and which he ſhould chiefly ſeek to reach unto. It conſiſts of two parts, his chief duty, and his chief happineſs. Man's chief duty is to glorify God, 1 Cor. x. 31. Man glorifies God, by thinking, ſpeaking, and living, to his glory; and this is man's chief and laſt or fartheſt end. Man's chief happineſs is to enjoy God as his God, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. 26. 27. 28. and this is man's chief ſubordinate end. A ſinner can never glorify God, untill firſt he enjoy him as his God, Eph. ii. 12. Gen. xvi. 1. Exod. xx. 2. 3. Now he can attain to the enjoyment of God, only through Jeſus Chriſt, John xiv. 6. and one may get a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, by faith. Moreover, they who enjoy God as their God, are enabled to glorify him, by the Spirit of Chriſt dwelling in them as members of Chriſt, Rom. viii. 26. Wherefore, none that are out of Chriſt, reach the chief end of man; but they make themſelves their chief end. Howbeit, believers do reach it; and they reach it, in ſo far as they ſhall, from the firſt moment of their believing, for ever enjoy and glorify God, imperfectly indeed here, but perfectly in heaven.

QUEST. 2. What rule hath God given to direct us, how we may glorify and enjoy him?

ANSW. The word of God, which is contained in the ſcriptures of the Old and New Teſtament, is the only rule to direct us, how we may glorify and enjoy him.

The end wherefore the ſcriptures are given, is to be a rule to direct us, how we may glorify God, and come to the enjoyment of him as our God. And they are the only rule to direct us in theſe matters. Withal, they are a certain and infallible rule: and that, becauſe they are the word of God. It appears, that they are the word of God, by the holineſs and efficacy of their doctrine, and the miracles wrought to confirm it: and this, although for the moſt part they were written by men, becauſe, all ſcripture is given by inſpiration of God, 2 Tim. iii. 16. The word ſcriptures ſignifies writings; but the church had not always the written word, till about Moſes's time. Howbeit they were ſupplied while they wanted it, by extraordinary revelations; and it is the ſame doctrine, that was then ſo revealed, which we have now in the ſcripture. Nevertheleſs, the ſcripture is altogether neceſſary for the church now; and that, becauſe extraordinary revelation of doctrine is ceaſed, and God hath bound us to the ſcripture as the teſt or touchſtone of doctrine, Iſ. viii. 20. Neither will God ever give us another rule: for the ſcripture is a teſtamentary word of God. Now a teſtament is the laſt will of a dying perſon. So the ſcripture is Chriſt's teſtament, confirmed by his death: and as a teſtament, it declares the laſt will of God, concerning man's ſalvation and duty. Chriſt's teſtament is twofold: namely, the Old Teſtament, and the New Teſtament. The books beginning with Geneſis, and ending with Malachi, are Chriſt's Old Teſtament: theſe beginning with Matthew, and ending with the Revelation, are Chriſt's New Teſtament. Theſe two Teſtaments are one and the ſame for ſubſtance: for in both, Jeſus Chriſt is the Teſtator; eternal life is the legacy; ſinners of mankind are the legatees; and faith in Jeſus Chriſt is the way of claiming and obtaining the legacy, 1 John v. 11. 12. Prov. viii. 4. But they differ in circumſtances; the New being more clear and full, than the Old one. Howbeit, neither the one nor the other can be ſavingly underſtood, without an inward illumination of the mind by the Spirit of Chriſt, 1 Cor. ii. 10.

QUEST. 3. What do the ſcriptures principally teach?

ANSW. The ſcriptures principally teach, what man is to believe concerning God, and what duty God requires of man.

Principally to teach, is chiefly to teach. The things that the ſcriptures teach chiefly, are theſe two, faith and obedience, 2 Tim. i. 13. The faith which the ſcriptures teach, is, what man is to believe concerning God: the obedience, which the ſcriptures teach, is what duty God requires of man. Nothing can be an article of faith neceſſary to be believed, nor a duty neceſſary to be done, but what is taught in the ſcriptures. Howbeit, not or-ly what is found in ſcripture, in expreſs words, but alſo what ariſeth therefrom, by neceſſary conſequence, is to be reckoned taught therein, Matth. xxii. 32.

QUEST. 4. What is God?

ANSW. God is a Spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable, in his being, wiſdom, power, holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, and truth.

No creature can fully comprehend what God is, Job ii. 7. But he has revealed ſo much of himſelf in the ſcriptures, as is neceſſary for us to know. For his ſort of being, he is a Spirit; and a ſpirit is an immaterial ſubſtance, without fleſh or bones: he hath not then a body, nor any bodily parts, John iv. 24. Luke xxiv. 39. Then eyes, ears, and ſuch like bodily parts aſcribed to him in ſcripture, are not to be underſtood properly; but by them we are to underſtand an infinite perfection of theſe powers, which thoſe members ſerve for in us. So the eyes of God ſignify his infinite power of diſcerning objects, as by the eyes: his ears ſignify his infinite power of diſcerning voices, as by the ear. Moreover God cannot be ſeen with bodily eyes; no not with the eyes of glorified bodies in heaven, 1 Tim. i. 17. and vi. 16. but with the eyes of the mind, enlightened with the light of grace here, and the light of glory in heaven, Eph. 17. 18. Finally, there is nothing which God is like unto, Iſ. xl. 18. So we may not form any imagination of him in our minds, as we can do of an abſent man. Now there are other ſpirits beſides God: and theſe are angels and the ſouls of men. But the difference betwixt God and them, lies here, that God is an infinite, eternal, and unchangeable Spirit, and they are not ſo. The attributes of God, or perfections of the divine nature, are of two ſorts, incommunicable, and communicable. His incommunicable attributes, whereof there is no veſtige in the creature, are his infinity, eternity, and unchangeableneſs. God is infinite, in that he is, without any bounds or meaſure, Job ii. 7. He is eternal, in that he is without beginning and without end, Pſal. xc. 2. He is unchangeable, in that he is, and cannot but be, always the ſame, without any alteration whatſoever, Jam. i. 17. He is then ſaid to repent, not in reſpect of the affection of repentance, but the effect of it, Numb. xxiii. 19. in that without any change of his own nature, mind, or will, he changeth his diſpenſations towards the creatures, and makes changes on them, Gen. vi. 7. His communicable attributes, whereof there are ſome ſcantlings in the creature, are his being, wiſdom, power, holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs, and truth. The difference between theſe perfections, as they are in God, and as they are in the creature, lies here, that they are all infinite, eternal, and unchangeable in God, but in the creature not ſo, the being of God is that perfection whereby he is, and is what he is, Exod. iii. 14. His wiſdom is that whereby he knows himſelf, and all things elſe, with the way how to diſpoſe of them to the beſt, Pſal. cxlvii. 5. His power is that whereby he can do all things not inconſiſtent with his nature, Jer. xxxii. 17. His holineſs is the perfect purity of his nature, whereby he delights in his own purity, and in the reſemblance of it in the creature, Hab. i. 13. His juſtice is the perfect rectitude of his nature, whereby he is juſt in himſelf, and in all his ways towards the creature, Deut. xxxii. 4. It is not conſiſtent with his nature, to let ſin paſs unpuniſhed, 2 Theſ. i. 6. with Gen. xviii. 25. His goodneſs is that whereby he is good in himſelf, and the author of all good to be found in or about the creature, Matth. xix. 17. His goodneſs is conſiſtent with his ſeverity againſt the wicked, in that it is the property of goodneſs, to hate and puniſh ſin, Exod. xxxiii. 19. with chap. xxxiv. 7.; and with the afflictions laid on his own people, in that they flow from his goodneſs, Job. xii. 6. and tend to their good, Pſal. cxix. 71. His truth is that whereby he is perfectly faithful and free from all falſehood, Tit. i. 2.

QUEST. 5. Are there more Gods than one?

ANSW. There is but one only, the living and true God.

God is called the living God, to diſtinguiſh him from dead idols: and the true God, to diſtinguiſh him from all falſe gods, 1 Theſſ. i. 9. He is the living God, in that all life is in him, and from him, 1 Tim. vi. 13. To be true God, is to be God truly and really, and not in name only, or in the opinion of men. Now there is but one true God, 1 Cor. viii. 4. And reaſon teaches, that there can be no more than one, in that there can be but one moſt perfect Being. So the gods many, mentioned 1 Cor. viii. 5. are gods in name only, or in the opinion of their blinded worſhippers.

QUEST. 6. How many perſons are there in the Godhead?

ANSW. There are three perſons in the Godhead; the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt: and theſe three are one God, the ſame in ſubſtance, equal in power and glory.

By the Godhead is meant the divine nature. A perſon in the God is the Godhead diſtinguiſhed by perſonal properties. The Godhead is one only in number: but the perſons in the Godhead are three; and they are the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, 1 John v 7. Jeſus Chriſt is the ſecond of theſe perſons, namely, the Son. And the Father is true God: the Son is true God: and the Holy Ghoſt is true God. Yet they are not three Gods, but one God, 1 John v. 7. Howbeit, the Godhead neither is, nor can be divided into parts: but each of the three perſons hath the one whole indiviſible Godhead. They are not then of a like ſubſtance only, but the very ſame in ſubſtance. But they are diſtinguiſhed by their perſonal properties: and it is the perſonal property of the Father, to beget the Son, Heb. i. 5.; and of the Son, to be begotten of the Father, John i. 14.; and of the Holy Ghoſt, to proceed from the Father and the Son, John xv. 26. Gal. iv. 6. The Son and the Holy Ghoſt are not below the Father, but equal with him: they are equally powerful and glorious. So the perſonal properties make no inequality among them; foraſmuch as theſe properties are not temporary and accidental, but eternal and neceſſary, and could not but be: and every one of the three perſons is the eternal, the ſupreme, the Moſt High God. This appears, in that to the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, as well as to the Father, is aſcribed the peculiar name of the true God, the Moſt High, Iſa. vi. 3. John xii. 41. Acts xxviii. 25. 26. Pſal. lxxxiii. 18. together with his attributes, Rev. i. 8. Pſal. cxxxix. 7. his works, John i. 3. Matth. xii. 28. and his worſhip, Heb. i. 8. Matth. xxviii. 19.

QUEST. 7. What are the decrees of God?

ANSW. The decrees of God are his eternal purpoſe, according to the counſel of his will, whereby, for his own glory, he hath fore-ordained whatſoever comes to paſs.

By the decrees of God is meant his purpoſe fore-ordaining what ſhould come to paſs. God hath foreordained in his decrees, whatſoever comes to paſs, Eph. i. 11. Even the moſt free acts of the creature, and the moſt caſual things are foreordained of God, Prov. xxi. 1. and xvi. 33. Yea, evil actions, as well as good ones, fall within the compaſs of his decree, Acts ii. 23.: but with this difference, that he decreed his effecting of good, and his permitting of ill. Now, whatſoever God hath foreordained, infallibly comes to paſs: and his decrees are unchangeable, Iſa. xlv. 10. Yet men have no excuſe from their ſin, from the decree of God, Acts ii. 23.; for they ſin out of free choice, without the leaſt knowledge of, or force upon them from the decree, Acts xiii. 27 The deſign and end of God's decrees is his own glory, Rom. ii. 36. : and therefore, he will certainly get glory of whatſoever comes to paſs, Iſa. xlvi. 10. As to ſinful actions, he will get either the glory of his mercy in pardoning of them, or elſe the glory of his juſtice in puniſhing of them. For the date of God's decrees, they are all eternal ; and he makes no new decrees in time, Acts xv. 18. The way he decreed all things, is according to the counſel of his own will, Eph. i. 11. His decrees are ſaid to be according to his own counſel, as being all laid in the depth of wiſdom, which, among men, is the reſult of counſel, Rom. xii. 33. But taking counſel even in himſelf, is not competent to God in a proper ſenſe : becauſe his infinite underſtanding comprehends all things perfectly at once. They are ſaid to be according to the counſel of his will, as depending on nothing without himſelf, Rom. ii. 34.

Queſt. 8. How doth God execute his decrees?

Anſw. God executeth his decrees in the works of creation and providence.

God's executing his decrees, means his bringing to paſs what he hath decreed : and he does that, in the works of creation and providence. And nothing falls out in either of them, but what was decreed ; nor otherwiſe than as it was decreed, Eph. i. 11. Zech. vi. 1.

Queſt. 9. What is the work of creation?

Anſw. The work of creation is, God's making all things of nothing, by the word of his power, in the ſpace of ſix days, and all very good.

The world was not eternal, but had a beginning, Gen. i. 1. It will alſo have an end : and it will end by fire, being burnt up, 2 Pet. iii. 10. ; and that, in virtue of the curſe lying on it for man's ſin, Gen. iii. 17. God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt made the world, 1 Cor. viii. 6. John i. 3. Pſal. xxxiii. 6. He made it in the beginning of time, but a few thouſand years ago, Gen. i. 1. He then made all things : and there was no perſon, nor thing, before that, but God himſelf, Col. i. 16. So he made them of nothing ; and that by the word of his power, commanding them to be, Heb. ii. 3. Now all things were made in the ſpace of ſix days, Exod. xx. 11. And the works of the firſt day were, the higheſt heavens, Gen. i. 1. with the angels, the inhabitants thereof, Job. xxxviii. 4. 7. the ſhapeleſs maſs of earth and water, and the light. The works of the ſecond day were, the firmament, and the dividing thereby betwixt the upper and lower waters. The works of the third day were, the ſeas, and the dry land, herbs, and trees. The works of the fourth day were, the ſun, moon, and ſtars. The works of the fifth day were, fiſh, and fowl. The works of the ſixth day were, firſt the beaſts of the earth, and then laſt of all, man, male and female : Gen. i. throughout. The goodneſs of God ſhines forth in this order of the creation, in that the places were prepared before the dwellers, the food before the eaters, and all neceſſary for the uſe of man before man himſelf. As for the caſe all things were made in, they were made all very good, Gen. i. 31. ; that is to ſay, very fit for the ends and uſes for which they were made. Wherefore, the angels were all made holy and happy. And ſome of them did continue in that ſtate, 1 Tim. v. 21. but others of them ſinned, and fell, and became devils, Jude 6. 2 Pet. ii. 4.

Queſt. 10. How did God create man?

Anſw. God created man male and female, after his own image, in knowledge, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, with dominion over the creatures.

By male and female is meant man and woman. The man was firſt made, and then the woman, 1 Tim. ii. 13. And the woman was made to be a help to the man, Gen. ii. 18. Adam and Eve were the firſt man and woman : and from them all mankind is deſcended, Acts xvii. 26. The parts whereof man conſiſts are a ſoul and a body. The body of the man was made of the duſt of the ground, Gen. ii. 7. Which conſideration may be of uſe to us, to be a curb to our pride, a memorial of our death, and an emblem of our reſurrection. The woman's body was made of rib and fleſh taken out of the man's ſide, Gen. ii. 23. and that to the end they might be one fleſh, verſe 24. The ſoul is of a ſpiritual and immortal nature, Eccleſ. xii. 7. Their ſouls were made within them, of nothing, Gen. ii. 7. Zech. xii. 1. But Moſes gives no ſeparate account of the making of their ſouls, as of the making of their bodies, becauſe their ſouls were not of a different make, but only their bodies. Neither are the ſouls of men ſince that time, generated by the parents, but created of God within their formed bodies in the womb, Heb. xii. 9. Now man was created in a holy and happy ſtate ; which appears, in that he was made ſo far like God, that he was after his very image, Gen. i. 26. And this was not peculiar to the man only, but common to the man and the woman, verſ. 27. The image of God, wherein man was made like him, conſiſted in knowledge, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, and dominion over the creatures, Col. iii. 10. Eph. iv. 24. Gen. i. 26. The parts of the image of God, impreſſed on his ſoul, were knowledge on his mind, righteouſneſs on his will, and holineſs on his affections. His knowledge was a ſufficient underſtanding of what was neceſſary to make him completely happy, Gen. i. 26. with Col. iii. 10. His righteouſneſs was a perfect conformity of his will to the will of God ; and his holineſs was the perfect purity of all his affections, Eccleſ. vii. 29. That part of the image of God impreſſed on the whole man, was dominion over the creatures. The creatures he had dominion over, were the beaſts of the earth, the fowls of the air, and the fiſhes of the ſea, Gen. i. 26. The dominion he had over them, was a right and power ſoberly to uſe them for God's glory and his own comfort. His charter for this right to the creatures, was the covenant of works, Gen. ii. 16. 17. with chap. i. 28. And in theſe things man bore the image of God, as in them he faintly reſembled God himſelf, who is infinitely knowing, righteous, and holy, and ſupreme Lord of the creatures. Now Adam bore this image, as a public perſon, to propagate it to his poſterity, Eccl. vii. 29. but it was loſt to himſelf and all mankind, by his fall, 1 Cor. xv. 22. and that even to the forfeiting of the dominion over the creatures ; an evidence of which is, beaſts proving unruly and hurtful to man. The only way to recover the image of God, is to unite with Jeſus Chriſt by faith, 1 Cor. xv. 22. For he is the image of the inviſible God, and to him as a ſecond Adam is the dominion over the creatures reſtored, Col. i. 15. Pſal. viii. 6. 7. 8. with Heb. ii. 7. 8. 9. And he repairs it on all that believe on him. The reparation of the loſt image of God in their ſouls, is begun in their ſanctification in him, and perfected in their glorification, Col. iii. 10. Heb. xii. 23. The reparation of the loſt dominion over the creatures, is begun in their getting a new right to them in their union with him, and perfected in their being put in full poſſeſſion of the dominion at the laſt day, Rom. iv. 13. Heb. xxi. 7. Pſal. xlix. 14. Their charter for this new right to the creatures, is the covenant of grace, Rom. iv. 13. But they that are out of Chriſt, have no covenant right to the creatures, but only a providential right : and that is ſuch a right, as a condemned man hath to his food, untill his execution. The management that men now have over the beaſts, is far ſhort of the original dominion over them, Gen iii. 19. But ſuch as it is, it is owing to a new grant made after the fall, for the neceſſities of human life; which new grant is found recorded, Gen. ix. 2.

QUEST. 11. What are God's works of providence?

ANSW. God's works of providence are, his moſt holy, wiſe, and powerful preſerving and governing all his creatures, and all their actions.

There is a divine providence about the creatures. That appears from their entire dependence on God as their firſt cauſe, and from the exact accompliſhment of ſcripture prophecies, Acts xvii. 25. 28. Iſa. xlvi. 9.

The object which providence is employed about, is all the creatures and all their actions, Pſal. ciii. 19. Even devils, and wicked men, are under the providence of God, Matth. viii. 31. And evil actions, as well as good, are within the verge of it, Gen. xlv. 7. Yea, there is not any thing whatſoever, be it ever ſo ſmall or caſual, that falls out without the providence of God, Matth. x. 29. 30.

The works of providence about the creatures, are the preſerving of them, and the governing of them and their actions. Providence preſerves the creatures, ſuſtaining them in being, and providing for their ſupport, Heb. i. 3. Pſal. cxlv. 15. 16. No creature whatſoever could keep itſelf in being one moment; but, upon God's withdrawing the upholding hand of his providence, it would immediately return to nothing, Heb. i. 3. Providence governs the creatures and their actions, diſpoſing of them according to the divine purpoſe, Prov. xxi. 1. Eph. i. 11. Providence governs ſinful actions, permitting them, bounding them, and over-ruling them to good, Acts xiv. 16. Pſal. lxxvi. 10. Gen. l. 20.

The properties of the works of providence are theſe. They are moſt holy, wiſe, and powerful, Pſal. cxlv. 17. and civ. 24. Dan. iv. 35. Wherefore, God is not the author of ſin, no more than he who rides a crooked horſe is the cauſe of his halting, Jam. i. 13. All diſpenſations of providence are wiſely ordered, Deut. xxxii. 4. And providence cannot miſs of its deſigns, and ends, Iſa. xlvi. 10.

The rule of the works of providence, is the decree of God; whereof they and the works of creation, are an exact accompliſhment, Eph. i. 11.

QUEST. 12. What ſpecial act of providence did God exerciſe towards man in the eſtate wherein he was created?

ANSW When God had created man, he entered into a covenant of life with him, upon condition of perfect obedience; forbidding him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, upon the pain of death.

The ſpecial act of providence towards man newly created was God's making a covenant of life and happineſs with him. There are two covenants for life and happineſs to man: and they are the covenant of works, and the covenant of grace, Gal. iv. 24.

The firſt covenant was the covenant of works. It was made in paradiſe; and before the fall. The parties contracting in it, were God and Adam, Gen. ii. 17. But Adam repreſented all mankind, as the parties contracted for, Gen. ii. 17. with Rom. v. 12. There was no mediator of this covenant; for as yet there was no breach by ſin betwixt God and man.

The condition of the covenant of works, was perfect obedience, Gal. iii. 12. And it was to be perfect, in reſpect of parts, degrees, and continuance, Gal. iii. 10. Matth. xxii. 37. So the leaſt failing in any part, or degree of obedience, or for never ſo ſmall a time, would have broken this covenant. The law that was the rule of this obedience, was the law of the ten commands, and the law forbidding to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, Gal. iii. 10. Gen. ii. 17. That tree grew in paradiſe, Gen. ii. 9. There was no virtue in it to improve men in knowledge, Gen. iii. 5. with John viii. 44. But that name was put upon it, to intimate, that by eating of it, man would know to his ſad experience, the vaſt difference between good and ill: wherefore that tree with that name was of uſe, to be a warning-piece to man, to beware of evil. Now Adam knew the law of the ten commands, as they were impreſſed on his heart, in his creation, Rom. ii. 15. He knew the law of the forbidden tree, by revelation, Gen. ii. 17. And he had ſufficient ability for the perfect obedience required, Eccleſ. vii. 29.

The promiſe of the covenant of works was a promiſe of life, Gen. ii. 17. The life promiſed was twofold; namely, one to be afforded him, during the courſe of his probationary obedience; another to be afforded him at the perfecting of it. The life to have been afforded to man, during the courſe of his probationary obedience, was natural life continued in vigour and comfort, and ſpiritual life continued in favour and fellowſhip with God, Gen. ii. 17. This was the reward of obedience, in hand. The life to have been afforded him, at the perfecting of his courſe, was eternal life in conſummate happineſs, Matth. xix. 16. 17. And this was the reward of obedience, in hope. Adam, if he had continued obedient, could have claimed that life, upon his obedience: yet not in the way of proper merit; becauſe his perfect obedience was no more than what was due from him by the law of his creation, before he entered into that covenant, Luke xvii. 9. 10. The only way he could have claimed it, was by compact, namely, in virtue of the covenant-promiſe made to his work.

The penalty of the covenant of works was death, Gen. ii. 17. The death threatened was alſo two-fold; namely, one accompanying ſin at its firſt entrance; another following after as its full reward. The death accompanying ſin at its firſt entrance, was temporal death in the loſs of the vigour and comfort of natural life; and ſpiritual death in the loſs of the image of God, with his favour and fellowſhip: and Adam died this death, according to the threatening, that very day he ſinned, Gen. iii. 7. 8. 9. 10. The death following after as the full reward of ſin, was the natural death of the body with the ſting in it, and eternal death in the conſummate miſery of ſoul and body for ever, 1 Cor. xv. 55. Matth. xxv. 41. And this was comprehended in the expreſs threatening of death to accompany ſin, inaſmuch as the one was a ſure pledge of the other, natively iſſuing therein.

QUEST. 13. Did our firſt parents continue in the eſtate wherein they were created?

ANSW. Our firſt parents, being left to the freedom of their own will, fell from the eſtate wherein they were created, by ſinning againſt God.

Our firſt parents were Adam and Eve. The ſtate wherein they were created, was a holy and happy ſtate: but they fell from it; and that, by their ſinning againſt God, Gen. iii. 6. 7. 8. 10. The firſt that ſinned was the woman, 1 Tim. ii. 14. And it was the devil that enſnared her, Gen. iii. 13. The woman having ſinned, enſnared Adam, ver. 6. But their being tempted to ſin did not excuſe them; becauſe, it was not of their own free will that they ſinned. Freedom of will is a power in the will, whereby it doth of its own accord, without force upon it, chooſe or refuſe what is propoſed to it by the underſtanding. And man hath this freedom of will in whatever ſtate he be. But this power of the will is not of the ſame extent in all ſtates. In the ſtate of innocence, it extended both to good and evil; that is to ſay, man had a freedom of will, whereby he could wholly turn, either to the one ſide or the other, to good or evil, propoſed by his underſtanding: and that man was created thus mutable, was ſuitable to the ſtate of trial. Now the ſpecial act of providence about the fall of our firſt parents, was, that God left them to the freedom of their own will: and the uſe they made of that, was, that they went freely of their own accord, to the ſide of ſin. But in the ſtate of corrupt nature, the power of the will extends only to evil, Gen. vi. 5. In the ſtate of grace, it extends partly to good and partly to evil, Rom. vii. 23. And in the ſtate of glory, it extends only to good, Heb. xii. 23.

QUEST. 14. What is ſin?

ANSW. Sin is any want of conformity unto, or tranſgreſſion of the law of God.

By ſin is meant tranſgreſſion of the law of God: and therefore nothing can be ſin, but what one way or other is a tranſgreſſion of ſome law of God, 1 John iii. 4. Tranſgreſſion of the law of God, is any want of conformity to it whatſoever, 1 John iii. 4. firſt part of the ver. So the leaſt coming ſhort of the perfection required by the law, is ſin; becauſe, ſo far there is a want of conformity to the law, Matth. v. ult. with 1 John iii. 4. Now the law of God requires a twofold conformity to it, in the reaſonable creatures: namely, a conformity of their natures to it, and a conformity of their lives to it, Pſal. xxiv. 3. 4. Hence there are two general kinds of ſin; namely, original ſin, and actual ſin: and each of them is a want of conformity to the law of God. Original ſin is a want of conformity of our natures to the law of God. Actual ſin is a want of conformity of our lives to the law of God, whether by omiſſion or commiſſion. The chief evil of ſin lies in the filthineſs of it. The filthineſs of ſin is its being the quite contrary of God's holineſs expreſſed in his law; whence it is in the ſight of God, the object of his greateſt loathing and abhorrence, Jer. xliv. 4.

QUEST. 15. What was the ſin whereby our firſt parents fell from the eſtate wherein they were created?

ANSW. The ſin whereby our firſt parents fell from the eſtate wherein they were created, was their eating the forbidden fruit.

The ſin whereby man fell, was the eating of the forbidden fruit, Gen. iii. 7. There was no evil in the fruit itſelf, for which it was forbidden, Gen. i. ult. The evil of the matter lay, in man's eating it againſt the expreſs command of God. God forbade it to be eaten, for the trial of man's obedience. And the fitneſs of taking trial of man by that mean, appears in that ſo it was taken in an external thing, in itſelf indifferent, wherein man's obedience behoved to turn preciſely upon the point of the will of God. This ſin was then in effect, man's practical declaration that he would not be ruled by God's will, but by his own: and therefore, it was not a little ſin, but a breaking of the whole law at once, Jam. ii. 10. 11.

QUEST. 16. Did all mankind fall in Adam's firſt tranſgreſſion?

ANSW. The covenant being made with Adam, not only for himſelf, but for his poſterity, all mankind deſcending from him by ordinary generation, ſinned in him, and fell with him, in his firſt tranſgreſſion.

Adam did not fall alone in his tranſgreſſion; but all mankind deſcending from him by ordinary generation, were involved with him in the ruins of his fall: and theſe are all his poſterity, except the man Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 22. Chriſt as man did indeed deſcend from Adam, Luke iii. 23. with laſt verſe, but not by ordinary but extraordinary generation. That which was extraordinary in Chriſt's generation, was, that he was born of a virgin, Matth. i. 18.

All the reſt of Adam's poſterity fell with him: they fell with him, from the ſtate of holineſs and happineſs, both which they had in hand, and which they had in hope from the promiſe of the covenant of works; and ſo fell by his firſt tranſgreſſion, Rom. v. 18. 19. His firſt tranſgreſſion was his eating of the forbidden fruit. His eating of that fruit, is called his firſt tranſgreſſion, becauſe by it, his ſin and apoſtacy begun in his heart, was completed, Gen. iii. 6. Now that tranſgreſſion caſt him and them down, from theſe ſtates of holineſs and happineſs, inaſmuch as by it the covenant of works was broken, Gen. ii. 17. with chap. iii. 10. 11. 12. The reaſon why they fell with him by that tranſgreſſion, was, that in it they ſinned in him: ſo that ſin whereby the covenant was broken, was our ſin as well as his, Rom. v. 12. 19.

It came to be our ſin, becauſe he was our covenant-head and repreſentative in the covenant of works; that is to ſay, The covenant was made with him, not only for himſelf, but for his poſterity, 1 Cor. xv. 45. The man Chriſt was not included in that repreſentation, which Adam made as head of the covenant of works, 1 Cor. xv. 22. 45. and that, becauſe Chriſt came not in virtue of the bleſſing of fruitfulneſs, given while the covenant of works ſtood entire, but in virtue of a ſpecial promiſe made after it was broken, Gen. i. 28. and iii. 15. Adam's ſin could not be imputed to the man Chriſt, ſince Adam did not repreſent him in the covenant. But Adam repreſented all the reſt of mankind in it, Rom. v. 12. It is true, we did not chooſe him for our repreſentative, but God chooſed him for us: and he was the moſt fit choice for that end, Eccleſ. iii. 14. in regard he was the natural head of mankind, endowed with ſufficient ability, Acts xvi. 26. Eccleſ. vii. 29.

Now, man did not become free from the covenant of works, upon his breaking of it; for his breaking of it could never free him, and the honour of the law barred his diſcharge, till the breach of it ſhould be made up, Iſa. xliii 21. Matth. v. 18. And man himſelf was utterly unable to make up that breach, Rom. v. 6. All men then by nature are under the broken covenant of works, Rom. iii. 19.

QUEST. 17. Into what eſtate did the fall bring mankind?

ANSW. The fall brought mankind into an eſtate of ſin and miſery.

The natural ſtate of mankind now, under the covenant of works, is a ſtate of ſin and miſery; and we were brought into it by the fall, Rom. v. 12. We were all born or conceived in that ſtate, Pſal. li. 5. Eph. ii. 3. There is no true holineſs attainable in that our natural ſtate; for it is a ſtate of ſin. There is no ſalvation from wrath attainable in it; for it is a ſtate of miſery. The ſtate we muſt be brought into, out of our natural ſtate under the covenant of works, if we would be ſaved, is the ſtate of grace, in the covenant of grace, Rom. vi. 14. Theſe that are brought out of their natural ſtate, from under the covenant of works, into the ſtate of grace are all that are in Chriſt, converted perſons, Rom. viii. 1. Theſe that are ſtill in their natural ſtate, under the covenant of works, are all that are out of Chriſt, unconverted, Eph. ii. 12. The power that the covenant of works hath over ſuch perſons, is a commanding, curſing, and condemning power. It commands them perfect obedience under pain of the curſe: it curſeth and condemneth them for every the leaſt failure, Gal. iii. 10. Rom. iii. 19.

Quest. 18. Wherein conſiſts the ſinfulneſs of that eſtate whereinto man fell?

Answ. The ſinfulneſs of that eſtate whereinto man fell, conſiſts in the guilt of Adam's firſt ſin, the want of original righteouſneſs, and the corruption of his whole nature, which is commonly called original ſin, together with all actual tranſgreſſions which proceed from it.

The ſtate whereinto man fell is our natural ſtate: and that is both a ſinful and a miſerable ſtate. Our natural ſtate is a ſinful ſtate in reſpect of original ſin, and in reſpect of actual tranſgreſſions.

Original ſin, in its full extent, is the guilt of Adam's firſt ſin, the want of original righteouſneſs, and the corruption of the whole nature. All and every one of Adam's natural race are born or conceived in it, Rom. v. 12. Pſal. li. 5. It is derived to us from Adam, the origin of mankind, and it is conveyed to us by natural generation, Job xiv. 4. Pſal. li. 5. Even holy parents convey it to their children; becauſe they procreate their children after their own natural image, Gen. v. 3. Now, our natural ſtate is a ſinful ſtate in reſpect of original ſin, inaſmuch as original ſin, being a fountain of ſin, remains entire in its guilt, filth, and power, on every man, as long as he is in that ſtate. Original ſin conſiſts of three parts.

The firſt part of original ſin, is the guilt of Adam's firſt ſin. Adam's firſt ſin was his eating of the forbidden fruit, whereby the covenant of works was broken. The guilt of that ſin is an obligation to puniſhment for it. And that guilt lies on all men by nature, Rom. v. 18. Now this guilt of Adam's firſt ſin, is original ſin imputed. The only remedy for it is in Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 22. and that from his blood, which removes it in juſtification, Eph. i. 7. Rom. iii. 24.

The ſecond part of original ſin, is the want of original righteouſneſs. Original righteouſneſs is that righteouſneſs wherein man was created in the image of God. And all men by nature are under the want of that, Rom. iii. 23. The want of original righteouſneſs, includes the want of that knowledge in the underſtanding, that righteouſneſs in the will, together with that holineſs in the affections, wherewith man was endowed at his creation, and all men by nature are under theſe wants, Job ii. 12. Eccleſ. vii. 29. Rom. vii, 18. Now, the want of original righteouſneſs is a ſin; foraſmuch as it is a want of conformity to the law of God, Matth. v. ult. with 1 John iii. 4. It can be our ſin, who never had that righteouſneſs in our own perſons, becauſe we had it and loſt it in Adam, ſinning in him: and we are juſtly left under the want of it, for our guilt of Adam's firſt ſin, Eccleſ. vii. 29. Rom. v. 12.

The third part of original ſin, is the corruption of the whole nature; and this is what is commonly called original ſin, as being the worſt part of it. The corruption of nature is that vitious quality inbred in us, whereby our nature is utterly diſabled for, and oppoſite to, all ſpiritual good, and prone to the contrary evils continually, Rom. v. 6. and viii 7. Gen. vi. 5. And one may know his own nature to be corrupt, by the backwardneſs to do good, and forwardneſs to do evil, he may find in himſelf. Now, man's nature, in his natural ſtate, is not corrupted in part only, but wholly corrupted in every part, Eph. ii. 1. 2. 3. Tit. i. 15. For the caſe the underſtanding is in, it is utterly darkened in point of ſpiritual diſcerning, 1 Cor. ii. 4. The will, it is quite oppoſite to the will of God. Rom. viii. 7. The affections, they are wholly carnal, Rom. vii. 14. and viii. 5. The body, and its members, they are inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs, and ſervants to iniquity, Rom. vi. 12. 19.

The want of original righteouſneſs, and the corruption of the whole nature, are original ſin inherent, which the ſcripture expreſſeth both in negative and poſitive terms, Eph. iv. 18. Rom. viii. 7. The only remedy for original ſin inherent, is in Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 22.; and that from his Spirit, who begins the removal of it in regeneration, or quickening of the dead ſoul, carries it on in ſanctification, and perfects it in glorification, John vi. 63. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Rom. viii. 23.

Actual tranſgreſſions are breaches of God's law, by omiſſion or commiſſion, in thoughts, words, or deeds. The fountain which they all proceed from in us, is the corruption of our nature, Matth. xv. 19. Our natural ſtate is a ſinful ſtate, in reſpect of actual tranſgreſſions, inaſmuch as all the actions of a natural man are actual tranſgreſſions; and the guilt and filth of them all, and of all his omiſſions of duty, bide faſt on him, as long as he is in that ſtate, Gen. vi. 5. Eph. ii. 1. A man in his natural ſtate cannot do any thing truly good, becauſe his nature is wholly corrupt, Matth. vii. 18. His natural actions, ſuch as eating and drinking, are ſin, Zech. vii. 6. His civil actions, ſuch as ploughing and ſowing, are ſin, Prov. xxi. 4. And his religious actions are ſin, Prov. xv. 8.

Quest. 19. What is the miſery of that eſtate whereinto man fell?

Answ. All mankind, by their fall, loſt communion with God, are under his wrath and curſe, and ſo made liable to all miſeries in this life, to death itſelf, and to the pains of hell for ever.

Our natural ſtate is a miſerable ſtate too. And all mankind is in that miſerable ſtate by nature. That comes to paſs, by their fall in Adam, Rom. v. 12. Our natural ſtate is a miſerable ſtate, in reſpect of what loſs man ſuſtains, what he lies under, and what he is liable to, in it.

The loſs which man ſuſtains in his natural ſtate, is the loſs of communion with God. Communion with God is a friendly intercourſe between God and a ſoul, ariſing from a peculiar intereſt in one another, Cant. ii. 16. Man had ſuch communion with God before the fall; and that, without a Mediator, Gal. iii. 20. But he loſt it, by the fall, Gen. iii. 8. And none attain to it again, as long as they are in their natural ſtate, whatever duties of worſhip they go about, Eph. ii. 12. It is recovered only in the way of union with Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 13.

What man lies under in his natural ſtate, is God's wrath and curſe. The wrath of God he lies under is revenging wrath: and all men in their natural ſtate are under that wrath, Eph. ii. 3. John iii. ult. The curſe he lies under, is the ſentence of the broken law, binding over the ſinner to revenging wrath, to the full: and all men in their natural ſtate are under it, Gal. iii. 10.

What man is liable to in his natural ſtate, is, all miſeries in this life, death itſelf, and the pains of hell for ever, in virtue of the curſe. The miſeries in this life the natural man is liable to, are all inward and outward miſeries of life, laid on in virtue of the curſe, Lam. iii. 39. The inward miſeries of life he is ſo made liable to, are ſpiritual plagues, ſuch as, blindneſs of mind, hardneſs of heart, vileneſs of affections, horror of conſcience, and the like, Eph. iv. 18. Rom. ii. 5. and i. 26. Iſa. xxxiii. 14.

The outward miſeries of life he is ſo made liable to, are ſuch as befal the outward man, as ſickneſs, poverty, diſgrace, and the like, Deut. xxviii. 15. to the end. The death the natural man is liable to, is the diſſolution of the ſoul and the body, in virtue of the curſe, Rom. vi. 23. That kind of death, is ſtinged death, 1 Cor. xv. 56. It is true, believers in Chriſt alſo are liable to miſeries in this life, and to death itſelf: but they are not ſo made liable to them, not by the curſe, not with the ſting in them, 1 Cor. xv. 55. Howbeit, if man had not ſinned, he would never had died, Gen. ii. 17. The miſeries in this life, and death itſelf, are to believers in Chriſt, marks of God's diſpleaſure with the ſin in them, while yet he loves their perſons in Chriſt, Pſal. xcix. 8. Gen. iii. 15. 17. 18. 19.

The pains of hell that natural men are liable to, are the pain of loſs, and the pain of ſenſe. The pain of loſs in hell, is total and final ſeparation from God, Mat. xxv. 41. That ſeparation from God, is not a local ſeparation from him, as if God ſhould not be in the place where they ſhall be, Pſal. cxxxix. 8. But it is a relative ſeparation, in an eternal blocking up of all comfortable communication between God and them: and the effect of that will be, a total eclipſe of all light of comfort and eaſe whatſoever, of body and mind, in the damned, Matth. xxiii. 13. Hoſ. ix. 12. The pain of ſenſe in hell, is unſpeakable torment, both in ſoul and body, without intermiſſion, Matth. xxv. 41. Mark. ix. 43. 44. And theſe pains of hell will never have an end with them, Matth. xxv. 41.

QUEST. 20. Did God leave all mankind to periſh in the eſtate of ſin and miſery?

ANSW. God having out of his mere good pleaſure from all eternity, elected ſome to everlaſting life, did enter into a covenant of grace, to deliver them out of the eſtate of ſin and miſery, and to bring them into an eſtate of ſalvation by a Redeemer.

The ſtate of ſin and miſery, is a ſtate wherein all muſt periſh, who are left of God in it, Eph. ii. 12. becauſe it is beyond the reach of all created help, Iſ. lxiii. 5. But God doth not leave all makind to periſh in it. Theſe whom he doth not not leave to periſh in it, are the elect, Rom. viii. 13.

The elect are ſome certain perſons of mankind, whom God hath choſen to everlaſting life, paſſing by others, Acts xiii. 48. Jude verſe 4. This election or choice was made from eternity, Eph. i. 4. And it infallibly ſecures their eternal ſalvation, with all the means leading thereto, Rom. viii. 30. Nothing foreſeen in the creature, neither faith nor good works, was the cauſe of election; but only God's mere good pleaſure was the cauſe of it, Eph. i. 6.

Now the way that God provided the relief, was, that he entered into a ſecond covenant, the covenant of grace. The deſign of the covenant of grace, was, to deliver the elect out of the eſtate of ſin and miſery, and to bring them into an eſtate of ſalvation by a Redeemer.

The covenant of grace then was made with Jeſus Chriſt, as the ſecond Adam, Party contractor, Pſal. lxxxix. 3. with 1 Cor. xv. 45. Rom. v. 15. to the end Gal. iii. 16. And Chriſt, in this covenant, repreſented all the elect, as his ſpiritual ſeed, the parties contracted for, Gal. iii. 16. Iſa. liii. 10. 11. Then the covenant of redemption, and the covenant of grace, are not two diſtinct covenants, but two names of one covenant, under different conſiderations. That appears, in that the number of the covenants in ſcripture, is but two, whereof the covenant of works is one, Gal. iv. 24. By a covenant of redemption is meant a bargain of buying and ſelling; and the ſecond covenant was ſuch a covenant to Chriſt only, 1 Pet. i. 18. 19. By a covenant of grace is meant, a bargain whereby all is to be had freely; and it is ſuch a covenant to poor ſinners only, Iſ. lv. 1. The covenant of grace was made from eternity, Tit. i. 2. Yet is it the ſecond covenant, in reſpect of the order, and manifeſtation to the world, though it was firſt in being.

The condition of the covenant of grace, is Chriſt's fulfilling all righteouſneſs, Matth. iii. 15. That righteouſneſs was ſtated from the broken covenant of works, Rom. ii. 31. The righteouſneſs that the broken covenant of works inſiſts on as the neceſſary condition of eternal life to a ſinner, is perfect holineſs of nature, righteouſneſs of life, and ſatisfaction for ſin, Rev. xxi. ult. Matth. xix. 17. Heb. ix. 22. It juſtly ſo inſiſts for holineſs of nature, becauſe that was given to man at firſt, and by the condition of the covenant, he was obliged to keep it, Eccleſ. vii. 29. It juſtly ſo inſiſts for righteouſneſs of life, for that was the expreſs condition of it, Gal. iii. 12. And it juſtly ſo inſiſts for ſatisfaction, in virtue of the penalty incurred by the breaking of it, Gen. ii. 17. But neither Adam, nor any of his fallen offſpring, was able to perform that condition of life, Rom. v. 6. There is no ſalvation by the covenant of works, Rom. iii. 20. and viii. 3. But Jeſus Chriſt did accept of that condition, as the condition of the covenant of grace, Pſal. xl. 7. And it was made the condition of the covenant of grace, that his ſpiritual ſeed might be ſaved, and the covenant of works fully ſatisfied for them, Rom. viii. 3. 4. And Jeſus Chriſt did fully perform it, in that, as a public perſon, he was born perfectly holy, lived perfectly holy, and made complete ſatisfaction by his death, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Luke i. 35. Philip ii. 8.

The promiſe of the covenant of grace, is a promiſe of a glorious reward to Chriſt himſelf, and eternal life to his ſpiritual ſeed, Iſa. xlix. 4. to the 10th verſe. Tit. i. 2. The eternal life promiſed in the covenant of grace included in it all things neceſſary to make a ſinner happy, in ſoul and body, for time and eternity, Rom. x. 5. with Hab. ii. 4. Even the promiſe of eternal life to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed, was made to Chriſt himſelf immediately, and to them mediately in him, Tit. i. 2. Heb. viii. 10. 2 Tim i. 9. Gal. iii. 16.

It is neceſſary to the ſalvation of a ſinner, that he perſonally enter into the covenant of grace, Eph. ii. 12. Accordingly the adminiſtration of the covenant is committed unto Jeſus Chriſt the head of it, Iſ. xlix. 8. And all the benefits of the covenant are lodged in his hand, Col. i. 19. And he is impowered to adminiſter the covenant to ſinners of mankind indefinitely, John iii. 17. Prov. viii. 4. Iſa. lv. 2. 3. That can very well be, though he repreſented the elect only in it: for the Father is ſo well pleaſed with the performance of the condition thereof, that Chriſt crucified is made the ordinance of God for ſalvation to ſinners of mankind indefinitely, according to the promiſe of the covenant to him, he being in himſelf ſufficient thereto, John iii. 14. 15. 16. Matth. xxii. 4. 1 John iv. 14. with Iſa. xlix. 6. 8. Accordingly, Chriſt actually offers the covenant of grace to ſinners of mankind indefinitely; and that in the goſpel, Mark xvi. 15. 16. And a ſinner is perſonally and ſavingly inſtated in the covenant of grace, by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, Acts xvi. 31. The nature then of perſonal covenanting, in order to obtain ſalvation by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, lies in taking hold of God's covenant of grace, by believing in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Iſa. lvi. 4. and lv. 3. John x. 9. Eph. iii. 17. And believing in Chriſt enters us into the covenant of grace, to partake of all the benefits thereof, as it unites us to Chriſt the ſecond Adam, the head of the covenant, Eph. iii. 17. Rom. ii. 17.

One cannot, in reſpect of the ſtate of his ſoul before God, be under the covenant of works and the covenant of grace, at one and the ſame time, Rom. vi. 14. Therefore believers that moment they enter into the covenant of grace, are fully ſet free from the covenant of works, Rom. vi. 14. and vii. 4. And they are lawfully ſet free from it, foraſmuch as faith gives it full count and reckoning, pleading and counting up to it that righteouſneſs which Chriſt fulfilled, Rom. ii. 31. and viii. 3. 4.

The effects of perſonal entering into the covenant of grace, are, deliverance out of the eſtate of ſin and miſery, and being brought into a ſtate of ſalvation. The bands of ſin and miſery are looſed in the covenant of grace, through our being ſet free from the covenant of works, Rom. vii. 5. 6. 1 Cor. xv. 56. 57. And we are ſettled in a ſtate of ſalvation in the covenant of grace, through our being married to Chriſt, Rom. vii. 4. Col. ii. 9. 19.

Now, God thus brings his elect out of the eſtate of ſin and miſery, into a ſtate of ſalvation, by a Redeemer. A Redeemer, in ſcripture ſenſe, is one who delivers another by price or by power, Lev. xxv. 51. Exod. vi. 6. And ſuch a Redeemer was neceſſary for the elect, as ſhould redeem them, both by price and power. It was neceſſary that they ſhould be redeemed by price, becauſe they were debtors to juſtice, and criminals in law, Heb. ix. 22. It was neceſſary that they ſhould be redeemed by power, becauſe they were in bondage to ſin and Satan, Luke i. 74. And ſuch a Redeemer was provided for the elect, in the covenant of grace, Pſal. lxxxix. 19.

Quest. 21. Who is the Redeemer of God's elect?

Answ. The only Redeemer of God's elect is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who, being the eternal Son of God, became man, and ſo was, and continueth to be God and man, in two diſtinct natures, and one perſon, for ever.

The Redeemer of the elect is the head of the covenant of grace, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And there is no other Redeemer beſides him; he is the only Redeemer, Acts iv. 12. The firſt part of his name, to wit, the Lord, ſignifies Jehovah, the true God, the Moſt High, Iſa. xlvii. 4. and xlix. 17. 1 Cor. xii. 3. But the titles our Lord, one Lord, and the like, denote his dominion, Acts x. 36. The ſecond part of his name, to wit, Jeſus, ſignifies a Saviour. And he is ſo called, becauſe he ſaves his people from their ſins, and conſequently from wrath, Matth. i. 21. 1 Theſſ. i. 10. The third and laſt part of his name, to wit, Chriſt, ſignifies anointed. And he is ſo called, becauſe he was anointed by the Father with the Holy Ghoſt, Acts x. 38. That is to ſay, the Father ſolemnly deſigned him, and withal furniſhed him for his office, by the Holy Ghoſt remaining on and in him, John i. 33. and iii. 34. The true interpretation then of the name of our Redeemer, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is, Jehovah, the Saviour, the anointed One. He was the fit perſon to mediate between God and man, becauſe of his common relation to both, peculiar to himſelf. His relation to God was, that he was the eternal Son of God; and that, by eternal generation of Jehovah the Father, Heb. i. 5. His relation to us was, that he was our near Kinſman, Heb. ii. 11. He is then our Kinſman-redeemer, who redeems by right of kin, Job xix. 25. with Ruth iii. 12. Now, the eternal Son of God came to be our Kinſman, inaſmuch as he became man, Gal. iv. 4. By his becoming man, he was both God and man, Matth. i. 23. And he will continue to be God and man for ever, Heb. vii. 24, 25.

Our Redeemer then hath two natures, namely, the nature of God, and the nature of man, Rom. ix. 5. He was God from all eternity; but not man, till he came in the fleſh, about the four thouſandth year after the creation of the world, Mic. v. 2. Matth. i. 17. The divine and human natures were in no wiſe turned into one nature, in Chriſt becoming man; but they remain for ever two diſtinct natures, having each of them their own diſtinct properties, 1 Pet. iii. 18. Yet are they not divided neither; but they are united in his perſon. Jeſus Chriſt our Redeemer is not then two perſons, but one only, Eph. iv. 5. 1 Tim. ii. 5. It was neceſſary, that our Redeemer ſhould be man, that he might be capable to ſuffer death, in our nature who had ſinned, Heb. ii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 21. It was neceſſary he ſhould be God, that his ſufferings might be of infinite value, 1 John i. 7. It was neceſſary he ſhould be God and man in one perſon, that what of the work was done by either of the natures might be reckoned the deed of the perſon of our Redeemer, Acts xx. 28. John ii. ult.

Quest. 22. How did Chriſt, being the Son of God, become man?

Answ. Chriſt the Son of God became man, by taking to himſelf a true body and a reaſonable ſoul, being conceived by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, in the womb of the virgin Mary, and born of her, yet without ſin.

Chriſt had a being before he was man. He was the Son of God by eternal generation, Heb. i. 5. Prov. viii. 22, 23. His becoming man, was a voluntary action in him, wherein himſelf was willingly active, Pſal. xl. 6, 7. Heb. ii. 16. He became man, by taking to himſelf a true body, and a reaſonable ſoul. But he did not thereby take to himſelf a human perſon; for then ſhould he have been two perſons: but he did thereby take to himſelf an entire human nature; for a ſoul and a body are the two parts whereof it conſiſts.

Chriſt's body was not the appearance only of a body, but a real human body, of fleſh, blood, and bones, as our bodies are, Heb. ii. 14. Luke xxiv. 39. His divine nature was not inſtead of a ſoul to him; but he had alſo a human reaſonable ſoul; which was a created ſpirit, Matth. xxvi. 38. In Chriſt then there were two underſtandings, and two wills, namely, an infinite underſtanding and will as he was God, and a finite underſtanding and will as he was man, John xxi. 17. and x. 28, 29, 30. Mark xiii. 32. Luke xxii. 42.

He was without father, as he was man; he was without mother, as he was God, Heb. vii. 3. But the mother of Chriſt as man, was the virgin Mary, Matth. i. 18. 22, 23. She was a woman of the ſeed of Abraham, the tribe of Judah, and family of David, Luke iii. 23. 31. 33, 34. He was conceived in her womb, Luke i. 31. But his conception was altogether miraculous; and was effected by the power of the Holy Ghoſt: and the work of the Holy Ghoſt in that matter, was, that he formed the body of Chriſt in the womb of his mother, Luke i. 35. Not of any ſubſtance ſent down from heaven; but of her ſubſtance, Gal. iv. 4. Gen. iii. 15. Which was neceſſary, that he might be of the ſame human nature with us, who had ſinned, Heb. ii. 11. Now, the forming of the body of Chriſt of the ſubſtance of a virgin, was an act of creating power, Jer. xxxi. 22. with Gen. ii. 7. 22. and i. 27. He was born and brought forth of her, at the uſual time after conception, Luke ii. 6, 7. But yet he was conceived and born without ſin, Heb. iv. 15. and vii. 26. For though he was a ſon of Adam, by conception and birth, yet he came not of him in the way of natural generation.

Quest. 23. What offices doth Chriſt execute as our Redeemer?

Answ. Chriſt, as our Redeemer, executeth the offices of a Prophet, of a Prieſt, and of a King, both in his eſtate of humiliation and exaltation.

Chriſt redeems his people by price and by power, Hoſ. xiii. 14. He hath redeemed them by price, giving himſelf a ranſom for them, in his holy birth, righteous life, and bloody death, and other ſufferings, 1 Tim. ii. 6. Gal. iv. 4, 5. Philip ii. 7, 8. But that redemption by price is, in ſcripture, ſometimes attributed to his blood, as the completing part of the ranſom, including the reſt, even as one ſays, he has paid the utmoſt farthing, John xix. 30. He redeems them by power, reſcuing them by ſtrength of light, and by ſtrength of hand, out of the hands of their enemies, Luke i. 68. 71. 73, 74. That redemption by power is begun in their converſion, and perfected in their glorious reſurrection at the laſt day, Col. i. 14. Rom. viii. 23. 1 Cor. xv. 26.

To execute an office, is to do or perform what belongs to the office. And Chriſt as our Redeemer, hath and executeth three offices, namely, the office of a Prophet, of a Prieſt, and of a King, Acts iii. 22. Heb. i. 2. Pſal. ii. 6. The relation of thoſe offices of Chriſt, to the covenant of grace, is that, in his prieſtly office he performed the condition of the covenant, in his prophetical and kingly offices he adminiſters the covenant, Heb. vii. 22, 23. Mal. iii. 1: Iſa. lv. 3, 4. It is neceſſary for our redemption, that he ſhould execute all theſe offices: and it is neceſſary, in reſpect of the ignorance, guilt, and bondage in our caſe, 1 Cor. i. 30.

True juſtifying faith receives Chriſt in all his offices, 1 Cor. i. 30. with John i. 12. But as juſtifying, it eyes him particularly in his prieſtly office: for there only can a convinced ſinner ſee an atonement, a ranſom, and a righteouſneſs for his juſtification, Rom. iii. 25. and v. 11. And the life of faith lies in a daily uſe making of Chriſt in all his offices, Gal. ii. 20. with Col. ii. 6.

The ſtate of our Redeemer is twofold, namely, his ſtate of humiliation, and his ſtate of exaltation. Philip ii. 8, 9. He was in his ſtate of humiliation, when he was on the earth; he is in his ſtate of exaltation now, when he is in heaven. He did execute all theſe offices in his ſtate of humiliation on earth, Rom. xv. 8. Eph. v. 2. Matth. xxi. 5. And he doth ſtill execute them all now when he is heaven, Heb. xii. 25. and vii. 24, 25. Luke i. 33. Yea, he did execute them all under the Old Teſtament, before he came in the fleſh, 1 Pet. iii. 19. Zech. i. 12. Cant. i. 4.

QUEST. 24. How doth Chriſt execute the office of a Prophet?

ANSW. Chriſt executeth the office of a Prophet, in revealing to us, by his word and Spirit, the will of God for our ſalvation.

The office of Prophets was to reveal the will of God to men, Heb. i. 1. And the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as our Redeemer, is a Prophet, Acts iii. 22. The difference betwixt him and the other prophets, lay here, that Chriſt was the fountain-head of prophecy, revealing by his own Spirit: whereas they were but inſtruments by whom he ſpake, through his Spirit coming on them at times, 1 Pet. i. 11.

The office of a prophet belongs to our Redeemer, as a Redeemer by power, Pſal. cx. 2. with Iſ. ii. 4. And in it he redeems or reſcues by ſtrength of light. And he executes it, by revealing to us the will of God for our ſalvation. By the will of God for our ſalvation, which Chriſt reveals, is meant the whole will of God in all things concerning our edification and ſalvation, John xv. 15. Acts xx. 32. John xx. 31. We could never of ourſelves, have diſcovered the will of God for our ſalvation, John i. 18. and iii. 13. But our Redeemer was fit to reveal it to us, in that, as he was God, he was from eternity privy to the whole counſel of God, and as he was man, the Spirit who ſearcheth the deep things of God, reſted upon him, John i. 18. Iſa. ii. 2. 1 Cor. ii. 10. He reveals to us the will of God for our ſalvation, externally by his word, and internally by his Spirit, John xx. 31. and xiv. 26. And by his ſo executing his prophetical office, he redeems or reſcues us from the power of ſpiritual darkneſs or ignorance, Col. i. 13. Acts xxvi. 18. So Chriſt hath redeemed none by power, but theſe who are reſcued from the power of their natural darkneſs, Matth. iv. 16. Eph. v. 8. His word is the ſcripture of the Old and New Teſtament, Col. iii. 16. And the ſcripture is his word, in that it was written by the inſpiration of his Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16. 1 Pet. i. 11. He reveals to us the will of God for our ſalvation, externally by the word, giving us the ſcripture, wherein we may ſee it, and the preaching of the word, wherein we may hear it, John v. 29. Rom. x. 18. We ought then to look upon our having of the Bible among us, and the preaching of the word to us by his ſervants, as Chriſt's executing his prophetical office among us, Heb. xii. 25. Col. iii. 16. Luke x. 16. But the external revelation of the will of God for our ſalvation, by the word, is not ſufficient to redeem or reſcue us from the power of our ſpiritual darkneſs, Deut. xxix. 4. 2 Cor. ii. 16. and iii. 6. becauſe when it is externally revealed, we cannot ſavingly know it, without an internal illumination, 1 Cor. ii. 14. 1 Acts xxvi. 18. Chriſt then doth redeem or reſcue us from the power of our ſpiritual darkneſs, by joining an internal revelation by his Spirit, with the external revelation by his word, 1 Cor. ii. 10. 12. 2 Cor. iii. 6. 17.

We are to receive Chriſt as our prophet, renouncing our own wiſdom, and wholly giving up ourſelves to him, to be taught in all things, by his word and Spirit, Mat. xvi. 24. Acts iii. 22. We are to make uſe of him, as our prophet, daily applying and truſting to him, for light, inſtruction, and direction, in all things, Pſal. cxix. 18. Prov. iii. 5, 6.

QUEST. 25. How doth Chriſt execute the office of a prieſt?

ANSW. Chriſt executeth the office of a prieſt, in his once offering up of himſelf a ſacrifice, to ſatisfy divine juſtice, and reconcile us to God; and in making continual interceſſion for us.

The office of prieſts was to offer ſacrifice, and pray for the people, Heb. v. 1. Numb. vi. 23.—26. with Mal. i. 9. And the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as our Redeemer, is truly and properly a prieſt, Heb. viii. 3. The difference betwixt him and the other prieſts, lay chiefly here, That they and their prieſthood were the types and ſhadows, whereof Chriſt and his prieſthood were the ſubſtance, really accompliſhing what they ſhadowed forth, Heb. x. 1. 9, 10. Eph. i. 3. Our Redeemer was qualified for ſuch an efficacious prieſthood, by the infinite dignity of his perſon, and his real untainted holineſs, Heb. iv. 14. and vii. 26. 28.

The office of a prieſt belongs to our Redeemer, as a Redeemer by price, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. And the parts of his prieſtly office are two; namely, his oblation, and interceſſion. Accordingly, he executes his prieſtly office, in his offering a ſacrifice for us, and making interceſſion for us.

The firſt part of Chriſt's prieſtly office, is his oblation. His oblation is his once offering up of himſelf a ſacrifice, to ſatisfy divine juſtice, and reconcile us to God. The ſacrifice he offered to God, was himſelf, Heb. ix. 14. And he himſelf was the ſacrifice, not in his divine nature, but in his human nature; for the divine nature was not capable of ſufferings properly ſo called, Mal. iii. 6. But his whole human nature, ſoul and body, was the ſacrifice, Heb. x. 10. Iſ. liii. 10. His divine nature was in that caſe, the altar that ſanctified the gift, to its neceſſary value and deſigned effect, Heb. ix. 14. with Mat. xxiii. 19. John xvii. 19. He offered up himſelf to God, a real ſacrifice in his human nature, willingly yielding himſelf without any ſpot of ſin, natural or accidental, to ſuffer for ſin to the utmoſt, Heb. ix. 14. He was without any natural ſpot of ſin, in that he was born perfectly holy; he was without any accidental ſpot of ſin, in that he lived perfectly holy; and he ſuffered for ſin to the utmoſt, Rom. viii. 32. and that, both in ſoul and body, Matth. xxvi. 38. and xxvii. 46. 50. He did ſo offer himſelf a ſacrifice, only once, Heb. ix. 28. And that once offering of himſelf a ſacrifice, was begun from his incarnation in the womb, continued through his whole life, and completed on the croſs, and in the grave, Heb. x. 5. 7. Iſ. liii. 2, 3. 2 Cor. v. 21. The holineſs then of his nature, and the righteouſneſs of his life, were parts of the price of our redemption, as well as his ſufferings, Gal. iv. 4, 5. And his ſufferings through his whole life, leſſer or greater, were parts of the price, as well as his ſufferings on the croſs, and his lying in the grave, 1 Pet. ii. 21. Chriſt offered himſelf a ſacrifice but once, becauſe by that once offering, the price of our redemption was fully paid out, Heb. x. 14. And thereby he redeemed or ranſomed us from guilt, and all evils following it, Heb. ix. 14.

The end wherefore Chriſt offered up himſelf a ſacrifice, was, to ſatisfy divine juſtice, and reconcile us to God, Heb. ix. 28. and ii. 17. There was need of reconciling us to God, becauſe by ſin we were ſet at enmity with God, Iſa. lix. 2. God had a legal enmity againſt us, ſuch as a juſt judge hath againſt a malefactor, whoſe perſon he may love notwithſtanding, Matth. v. 25. We have naturally a real enmity againſt God, inconſiſtent with love to him, Col. i. 21. And there could be no reconciliation between God and us, without a ſatisfaction to divine juſtice for our ſin, Heb. ix. 22, 23. We ourſelves could in no wiſe make that ſatisfaction, Rom. v. 6. for we could neither make ourſelves holy, nor bear the infinite puniſhment due to our ſin. But Jeſus Chriſt did, by offering up himſelf a ſacrifice, make that ſatisfaction truly and really, Matth. xx. 28. Heb. ix. 14. and that fully and completely, Heb. ix. 14. for, though Chriſt's ſufferings were not infinite in continuance, yet they were infinite in value. What made them ſo, was the dignity of his perſon, he being God, the Moſt High, Acts xx. 28. Philip ii. 6, 7, 8. The ſufferings then of believers in Chriſt, are not laid on them, to ſatisfy God's juſtice for their ſins, in whole or in part. Pſal. ii. ult. but they are laid on them for their trial and correction, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. Heb. xii. 5. Now the ſtate of the buſineſs of our reconciliation with God, as ſoon as Chriſt's offering up himſelf was over, was, that then it was purchaſed, the price of it fully paid, John xix. 30. Col. i. 20. Actual reconciliation between God and us is made, as ſoon as we are juſtified by faith, Rom. v. 1. And we are not actually reconciled to God, untill we believe in Chriſt, becauſe till then we do not receive the atonement, Rom. v. 11. with John i. 12.

Now our Lord Jeſus Chriſt cannot fall ſhort of his deſign and end in offering up himſelf a ſacrifice, Iſa. liii. 11. John vi. 37. Wherefore Chriſt hath not redeemed any by price, who are not, ſooner or later, actually reconciled to God, Rev. v. 9, 10. John xvii. 12. And theſe are all the elect, and they only, Acts xiii. 48. John x. 15. 26, 27, 28.

The ſecond part of Chriſt's prieſtly office, is his interceſſion, Rom. viii. 34. By his making interceſſion for us, is meant, his pleading our cauſe in the court of heaven. And none making interceſſion for us there, but Chriſt only, John xiv. 6. Rom. viii. 34. The Spirit makes interceſſion for us in our own hearts; and that, helping us to pray for ourſelves, Rom. viii. 26. The difference then between Chriſt's interceſſion, and the Spirit's interceſſion, is ſuch as is between one that draws a poor man's petition, and another that preſents it to the king, and gets it granted to him: the firſt of theſe the Spirit does for us; the laſt is done by Chriſt only.

Now Chriſt intercedes for us, not as a ſupplicant on mere mercy, but as an advocate pleading law and right, 1 John ii. 1. John xvii. 24. The ground in law, upon which he pleads for us, is his fulfilling the condition of the covenant of grace, by offering up himſelf a ſacrifice for us, John xvii. 4. Therefore, he intercedes for theſe only, for whom he offered up himſelf a ſacrifice, John xvii. 9. 20. 42. His interceſſion is always effectual, John ii. 24. And he will continue in it for ever, Heb. vii. 25. Accordingly, he is called a prieſt after the order of Melchizedeck, becauſe he is and will be a prieſt for ever, Pſal. cx. 4.; not a ſacrificing prieſt for ever, but an interceeding prieſt for ever, Heb. vii. 24, 25. He will be an interceeding prieſt, even after the reſurrection, for ever, eternally willing the continuance of the perfect happineſs of the ſaints, on the ground of the eternal redemption obtained for them, by ſacrifice of himſelf, Heb. ix. 12. John xvii. 24. 1 Theſſ. iv. 17.

We are to receive Chriſt as our prieſt, renouncing our own righteouſneſs, and wholly truſting in him, to be ſaved by his ſacrifice of himſelf, and interceſſion, Philip. ii. 3. Heb. x. 21, 22. And we are to make uſe of him as our prieſt, daily applying to him, and truſting in his alone merit and interceſſion, for the removal of our guilt, and the ſupply of all our needs ſpiritual and temporal, 1 Cor. i. 30. Gal. ii. 20.

QUEST. 26. How doth Chriſt execute the office of a king?

ANSW. Chriſt executeth the office of a king, in ſubduing us to himſelf, in ruling and defending us, and in reſtraining and conquering all his and our enemies.

Chriſt hath a twofold kingdom; namely, an eſſential kingdom, as he is God, and a mediatory kingdom, as he is our Redeemer. His eſſential kingdom is the whole creation, Col. i. 15, 16. His mediatory kingdom is the church, Col. i. 18. Zech. ix. 9. Now it is his mediatory kingdom, that his kingly office relates to.

The office of kings, whom God anointed and ſet over his ancient people, was to ſave them by ſtrength of hand from their enemies, and to rule them as their head, 2 Sam. iii. 17, 18. 1 Chron. ii. 2. And Chriſt, as our Redeemer, is ſuch a king, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. Zech. vi. 13. The difference betwixt him, and theſe other kings, lay here, that their kingdom was but a temporal kingdom, for the temporal ſafety of their people, Chriſt's kingdom is a ſpiritual and eternal kingdom, for the eternal ſalvation of his, John xviii. 36. Luke i. 33. Iſa. xlv. 17. Our Redeemer was qualified for ſuch a kingdom, by his infinite wiſdom and power, and the Father's committing the kingdom of providence, throughout the whole world, into his hand, Iſa. ix. 6. Eph. i. 22. 1 Cor. ii. 3. Matth. xxviii. 18. with 19. John v. 22, 23. with Iſa. xliii. 14, 15. compare 2 Sam. viii. 1. 6. 14, 15. and Pſal. xviii. 43. He had a right to his mediatory kingdom, by his own purchaſe, and his Father's grant, Acts xx. 28. Pſal. lii. 16.

The office of a king belongs to our Redeemer, as a Redeemer by power, Pſal. xlv. 1. 3. And in it he redeems or reſcues, by ſtrength of hand, Iſa. xl. 10. Pſal. xxiv. 8. Theſe whom he redeems or reſcues by ſtrength of hand, are they whom he hath redeemed by the price of his blood, Zech. ix. 11. He redeems or reſcues them, from all his and their enemies, Luke i. 69. 71. His and our enemies are ſin, death, the devil, and the world, Heb. xii. 4. 1 Cor. xv. 26. Matth. xii. 39. Jam. iv. 4. Theſe are Chriſt's enemies, in that they are oppoſite to his kingdom, though they can hurt him no more. They are our enemies, in that they tend to our deſtruction.

He begins our reſcue from them, reſcuing us from their bondage and dominion, Col. i. 13. We are, by nature, under the bondage and dominion of ſin, death, the devil, and the world, Rom. v. 21. 27. Acts xxvi. 18. 1 John v. 4, 5. He reſcues us from their bondage and dominion, by ſubduing us to himſelf, Acts xv. 14. Pſal. cx. 3. There is need of his ſubduing us by ſtrength of hand, becauſe by nature we are utterly averſe from coming away from them, and ſubmitting to him, Luke xix. 14. Prov. viii. ult. He ſubdues us to himſelf, by the ſword of his word in the hand of his Spirit, Rev. i. 16. Eph. vi. 17. The word ſo managed by the Spirit, operates as a ſword, piercing the ſoul, and conquering our obſtinacy, and making us willing to yield, Heb. iv. 12. Pſal. cv. 3. He opens the houſe of our bondage, and breaks their yoke from off our neck, by his Spirit applying to us his ſatisfaction, Zech. ix. 11. The applying of Chriſt's ſatisfaction to us, hath that effect, inaſmuch as thereby the law hath full ſatisfaction, as to us; and the law being ſatisfied, the ſtrength of ſin is broken; the ſtrength of ſin being broken, the ſting of death is taken away; the ſting of death being taken away, the devil loſeth his power over us; and his power over us being loſt, the preſent evil world, his kingdom, loſeth its power over us too, 1 Cor. xv. 56, 57. Heb. ii. 14, 15. 2 Cor. iv. 4. The ſtate then, that all whom Chriſt hath redeemed by power are in, with reſpect to ſin, death, the devil, and the world, is that they are reſcued from the bondage and dominion of them all, Rom. vi. 14. John v. 24. Acts xxvi. 18. Gal. i. 4. with 1 John v. 19.

He ſecures us from going back of our own accord, to their bondage and dominion, by ruling us, Mic. v. 2. 4. He ſo rules us in the capacity of Head of the church, Eph. v. 23. Hoſ. i. ult. The church is the ſociety of us whom he hath called unto himſelf, out of the world wherein ſin, death, and the devil reign, Acts xv. 14. And the ſupremacy and headſhip over the church, is competent to no man nor angel, but Chriſt himſelf alone, Col. i. 18. Eph. iv. 5. 1 Cor. viii. He rules us, as he is head of the church, both externally and internally. He rules us, as head of the church, externally, giving us laws and ordinances, and officers to ſee to our obſerving of them. His laws are the laws of the ten commands, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. with Exod. xx. 2, 3.——17. His ordinances are the ordinances of worſhip, and of diſcipline and government, 1 Cor. ii. 2. 23. Matth xviii. 17, 18. 1 Cor. xii. 28. His officers are paſtors, teachers, ruling-elders, and deacons, Eph. iv. 11. 1 Tim. v. 17. and iii. 10. He rules us, as head of the church, internally, by his Spirit within us, writing his laws in our hearts, and making us obedient, Ezek. xxv. 27. Heb. viii. 10. He carries on his rule over us, in this life, graciouſly rewarding our obedience with his royal favours, and correcting us for our ſins, Pſal. xix. 11. Rev. iii. 19. He conſummates his rule over us, in the life to come by making us perfectly holy and happy, 2 Tim. iv. 8.

He ſecures us from being carried back, by the force of his and our enemies, to their bondage and dominion again, by defending us, and reſtraining them, Pſalm lxxxix. 18. and lxxvi. 10. We need his defence, becauſe they war againſt us continually, and we are unable to defend ourſelves againſt them, 1 Pet. v. 8. 2 Cor. iii. 5. Chriſt's defence againſt them, is extended to the whole church, and to every particular believer. He defends the church againſt them, ſo far that they ſhall never prevail ſo, but there ſhall be a church, while the world ſtands, Matth. xvi. 18. and xxviii. ult. He defends every particular believer againſt them, ſo far that not one of them ſhall ever periſh, John x. 28. He defends the church, and every particular believer, by the communication of his grace to them, and the working of his providence for them, 2 Cor. xii. 9. Zech. iii. 9. He reſtrains all his and our enemies, bounding them by his power, as to the kinds, degrees, and continuance of their attacks on us, Job. ii. 6. 1 Cor. x. 13. Rev. ii. 10.

He completes our reſcue, by conquering all his and our enemies, 1 Cor. xv. 25. They will be fully conquered at the laſt day, Rev. xx. 14. The enemy, that will longeſt keep the field againſt us, is death, 1 Cor. xv. 26. For, when the ſoul is in heaven, free from ſin, the devil, and the world, the body lies in the grave under death. But our King will fully reſcue us from death too, by the glorious reſurrection at the laſt day, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. 1 Cor. xv. 52.

We are to receive Chriſt as our king, renouncing the dominion of ſin, death, the devil, and the world, and wholly giving up ourſelves to him, to be ruled by him as our head, Iſa. xxvi. 13. Pſal. ii. ult. We are to make uſe of him, as our king, daily applying and truſting to him, for life, ſtrength, and defence, and victory over our enemies, 2 Tim. ii. 1. 2 Cor. i. 10.

QUEST. 27. Wherein did Chriſt's humiliation conſiſt?

ANSW. Chriſt's humiliation conſiſted in his being born, and that in a low condition, made under the law, undergoing the miſeries of this life, the wrath of God, and the curſed death of the croſs; in being buried, and continuing under the power of death for a time.

Chriſt's humiliation belonged to the condition of the covenant of grace, performed by himſelf; and it was then a voluntary thing in him, Philip. ii. 7, 8. He humbled himſelf, that he might execute his offices, eſpecially his prieſtly office, Luke xxiv. 26. And he humbled himſelf, putting himſelf in a ſtate of humiliation, and humbling himſelf in that ſtate.

Chriſt God-man put himſelf in a ſtate of humiliation, emptying himſelf of his glory, and taking upon him the form of a ſervant, Philip ii. 7. The form of a ſervant he took upon him, was the form of a bond-ſervant, Pſal. xl. 6. marg. with Exod. xxi. 6. He took upon him the form of a bond-ſervant, being made under the law, Gal. iv. 4, 5. He was made under the law, as a bond-ſervant, to redeem us that were under the law as bond-ſervants, Gal. iv. 4, 5. 7. He did then transfer our ſtate of ſervitude under the law upon himſelf, Iſa. xlix. 3. And what lay upon him as ſo made under the law, was, to to give it that perfect obedience in holineſs of nature and life, that it required of us for life, and under the curſe of it to bear our puniſhment, Matth. iii. 15. Gal. iii. 13. His obedience then, as well as his ſuffering, was a part of his humiliation, Philip. ii. 8. foraſmuch as he gave it in the form of a bond-ſervant. But his ſtate of humiliation is now over, and at an end; and it ended at his reſurrection, Rom. xiv. 9.

Chriſt humbled himſelf in that ſtate, performing the obedience, and bearing the puniſhment, that it required. He humbled himſelf, performing the obedience which that ſtate required, inaſmuch as, in the form of a bond-ſervant, he was conceived and born of a woman, perfectly holy, and lived perfectly righteous, Pſal. xl. 6. marg. with Heb. x. 5. Gal. iv. 4. Philip. ii. 7, 8. His very being conceived and born of a woman, was a notable piece of humiliation in him; and that becauſe he was the Son of God, Gal. iv. 4. Philip. ii. 7. He humbled himſelf, bearing the puniſhment which that ſtate required, inaſmuch as, all along from his conception to the grave, he ſubmitted to the effects of the curſe transferred from us on him, Gal. iii. 13.

He ſo humbled himſelf in his conception, being conceived of a woman of a mean and low ſtate, Luke i. 48. An evidence of the mean and low ſtate of the mother of our Lord, is her being eſpouſed to a carpenter, Matth. i. 18. with chap. xiii. 55.

He ſo humbled himſelf in his birth, being born in a low condition. The low condition he was born in, was, that he was born in the ſmall town of Bethlehem, in the ſtable of an inn, and laid in a manger inſtead of a cradle, becauſe there was no room for them in the inn, Mic. v. 2. Luke ii. 7.

He ſo humbled himſelf in the courſe of his life, undergoing the miſeries of this life. The kind of life that Chriſt had in the world, was a poor, ſorrowful, deſpiſed, tempted, and toiled life, in which he felt wearineſs, hunger, and thirſt, 2 Cor. viii. 9. with Matth. viii. 20. Iſa. liii. 3. Pſal. xxi. 6. Luke iv. 3. Acts xi 38. with Mark iii. 20. John iv. 6. Matth. iv. 2. with chap. xxi. 18.

He ſo humbled himſelf to an extremity, in reſpect of his ſoul and his ſpiritual life, undergoing the wrath of God, Iſa. liii. 10. Pſal. lxix. 1. and xviii. 5. The wrath of God did operate on his ſoul, filling it with trouble, ſore amazement, heavineſs, and exceeding ſorrow, and caſting him into an agony, even to his ſweating great drops of blood, and at length bringing over it a total eclipſe of comfort, and as it were melting it within him, John xii. 27. Mark xiv. 33, 34. Luke xxii. 44. Matth.

xxvii. 46. Pſal. xxii. 14. That was a ſpiritual death, ſuch as a holy ſoul was capable of. Now the wrath of God could juſtly fall upon Chriſt, a perſon perfectly innocent, inaſmuch as he ſtood ſurety for ſinners, Heb. vii. 22. with Prov. v. 1, 2. 2 Cor. v. ult.

He humbled himſelf to an extremity, in reſpect of his body and his natural life, undergoing the curſed death of the croſs, Philip. ii. 8. He did really die, and not ſeem to die only, Mark xv. 44, 45. His death was real, in that his ſoul was ſeparated from his body, Luke xxiii. 43. 46. Yet neither was his ſoul nor his body ſeparated from his divine nature, in his death, Luke xxiii. 43. John xx. 13. The death he died, was the death of the croſs, Philip. ii. 8. The death of the croſs was a painful, ſhameful, lingering, and curſed death. Chriſt's death on the croſs was a painful death, in that his body was fixed to the tree, by nails driven through his hands and his feet, Luke xxiii. 33. Pſal. xxi. 16. It was a ſhameful death, in that he hung on the croſs ſtript of his cloathing, Matth. xxiii. 35. Heb. xii. 2. What that ſhameful hanging on a tree had a particular eye to, was our naked firſt parents ſinning, by eating the fruit of a tree. It was a lingering death, in that the wounds being in the extreme part of his body, he was alive on the croſs from the third hour to the ninth hour, Mark xv. 25. 34. It was a curſed death, inaſmuch as it was written in the law, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree, Gal. iii. 13. with Deut. xxi. 23. The curſe denounced in the law, on theſe hanged on a tree, was a ceremonial curſe, not hindering the ſalvation of penitents, Luke xxiii. 33. 43. But the curſe that lay on Chriſt in his humiliation, was a real and ſubſtantial one, whereof the tree of the croſs was but the ſign and badge, Gal. iii. 13. The inſtruments of the cruel death, Chriſt was put to, were the Jews and Romans, Acts iv. 27. But every point of it was determined before, in the eternal counſel between the Father and the Son, for the ſalvation of ſinners, verſe 28. with Zech. vi. 13. Howbeit, the wicked inſtruments had no eye to that, in what they did, Acts xiii. 27. Neither did it excuſe them, from the guilt of moſt horrid murder, in their crucifying the Lord of glory, Acts ii. 23. and vii. 52.

He ſo humbled himſelf after his death, in reſpect of his body, being buried, 1 Cor. xv. 3, 4. He was buried in a garden, John xxi. 41, 42. What his being buried in a garden had a particular eye to, was man's firſt ſinning in a garden.

He ſo humbled himſelf after his death, in reſpect of both ſoul and body, continuing under the power of death for a time, Rom. vi. 9. He continued under the power of death for a time, in ſo far as for a time, he continued in the ſtate of the dead, his ſoul and his body remaining ſeparate, Acts ii. 31. That is expreſſed in the Creed, in theſe words, He deſcended into hell. The place where his ſoul was, during its ſeparate ſtate, was paradiſe, Luke xxiii. 43. The time he continued under the power of death, was three days, Matth. xii. 40. Yet not three days complete, Matth. xvi. 21. with John ii. 19. but only a part of the firſt day, the whole ſecond, and a part of the third, Luke xxiii. 54. 56. and xxiv. 1. 6.

The hardeſt and ſharpeſt of all theſe ſteps of Chriſt's humiliation, was his undergoing the wrath of God in his ſoul, Prov. xviii. 14. The loweſt of them was his continuing for a time, under the power of death, in the ſtate of the dead, Pſal. xxii. 15.

QUEST. 28. Wherein conſiſteth Chriſt's exaltation?

ANSW. Chriſt's exaltation conſiſteth in his riſing again from the dead on the third day, in aſcending up into heaven, in ſitting at the right hand of God the Father, and in coming to judge the world at the laſt day.

Chriſt's exaltation belongs to the promiſe of the covenant of grace to be performed to him by the Father, Iſa. lii. 13, 14. Philip. ii. 8, 9. Chriſt's exaltation was neceſſary, that he might fully execute his offices, eſpecially his kingly office, Luke xxiv. 26. Philip. ii. 9, 10, 11.

The firſt ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation was his riſing again from the dead, 1 Cor. xv. 4. That Chriſt roſe again from the dead, appears from the ſcripture propheces of it, and the teſtimony of hundreds, who ſaw him with their eyes accordingly riſen again, 1 Cor. xv. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. The raiſing of Chriſt from the dead, is in the ſcripture aſcribed to the Father, to himſelf, and to the holy Spirit, Eph. i. 20. John ii. 19. Rom. viii. 11. It is aſcribed to the Father, as the Judge diſcharging him from priſon, as having fully paid the debt he was laid up for, Acts ii. 24. 1 Tim. iii. 16. A legal evidence of his being by the authority of heaven, diſcharged from the priſon of the grave, was, an angel's deſcending from heaven, and opening the priſon door, by rolling away the ſtone, Matth. xxviii. 2. It is aſcribed to Chriſt himſelf, foraſmuch as he, by his own divine power, calling back his ſoul into his body, took his own life again, and came forth of the grave, John x. 18. with chap. ii. 17. Mark xvi. 6. It is aſcribed to the holy Spirit, inaſmuch as by him Chriſt's ſoul and body were re-united, 1 Pet. iii. 18. He roſe the third day after his death, 1 Cor. xv. 4. That day was the firſt day of the week, and he roſe about the dawning of the day, Matth. xxviii. 1, 2. He roſe in the very ſame body he laid down in the grave, Luke xxiv. 39. John xx. 27. And it had not been corrupted there, in the leaſt, Acts xiii. 37. The change made on Chriſt's body in its reſurrection, was, that it roſe immortal and glorious, Rom. vi. 6. 1 Cor. 20. 43.

The ſecond ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, was, his aſcending up into heaven, Eph. iv. 8. 10. The time of his aſcenſion was forty days after his reſurrection, Acts i. 3. He tarried ſo long on earth, after his riſing from the dead, to aſcertain the truth of his reſurrection; he aſcertained it in that time, by his frequent appearing to, and converſing with his apoſtles, during that time; and in theſe converſations with them, he taught them the things concerning his own kingdom, Acts i. 3. It was in his human nature, that Chriſt aſcended, from earth into heaven; not in his divine nature, becauſe it is always every where preſent. The place of earth from which he aſcended, was the mount of Olives, Acts i. 11, 12. It is obſervable concerning that place, that there Chriſt's humiliation began to come to an extremity, Luke xxii. 39. The heaven he aſcended into was the higheſt heaven, Eph. iv. 10. Chriſt's ſoul and body then are now no more on earth, but in the higheſt heaven, Acts iii. 21. with Eph. iv. 10. He aſcended in a viſible and triumphant manner as a conqueror, Acts i. 9. Pſal. xlvi. 5. The action of the Father, in that ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, was the receiving him up into heaven, Mark xvi. 19.

The third ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, is his ſitting at the right hand of God the Father, Mark xvi. 19. God the Father hath neither right nor left hand properly ſo called, as men have; for he is a moſt pure Spirit, without body or bodily parts. But by Chriſt's ſitting at the right hand of God the Father, is meant, his being, as Mediator, God man, exalted on the higheſt dignity and power, over all creatures, in fulneſs of joy and glory, Philip. ii. 9, 10. 1 Pet. iii. 22. Acts ii. 28. with Pſal. xiv. ult. John xvii. 5. And that his ſitting at the right hand of God will endure for ever, Heb. x. 12. The action of the Father, in this ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, was, his ſetting him at his own right hand, Eph. i. 20.

Now, Chriſt roſe from the dead, aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth at the right hand of God, in a public character, as our head and repreſentative, the ſame in which he died, was buried, and continued under the power of death for a time, Eph. ii. 6. Heb. vi. 20. Eph.

iv. 20. Theſe ſteps then of Chriſt's exaltation are, for his people, ſure pledges of their ſpiritual and bodily reſurrection, their aſcenſion into heaven, and ſitting for ever with him in heavenly places, 1 Cor. xv. 22. Eph. ii. 6.

The laſt ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation will be, his coming to judge the world at the laſt day, Acts i. 11. with chap. xvii. 31. Chriſt will come again, a ſecond time, Heb. ix. ult. He will come the ſecond time, in the character of Judge of the world, Acts xvii. 31. John v. 22. 27. That coming of Chriſt will be at the laſt day, 2 Pet. iii. 10. He will come, in the full manifeſtation of his own and his Father's glory, Luke ix. 26. His attendants will be all the holy angels, Matth. xxv. 31. The awful ſound he will deſcend from heaven with, will be a ſhout, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. Chriſt's coming to judge the world, will not diſcontinue or interrupt his ſitting at the right hand of God, but will manifeſt it to all, Matth. xxvi. 64. And that his coming will be a part of his exaltation, inaſmuch as he will then appear and act in the fulneſs of his kingly power, Matth. xxv. 34. The action of the Father in this ſtep of Chriſt's exaltation, will be, his ſending him again, in fulneſs of glory, clothed with his authority, to judge the world, Acts iii. 20. Luke ix. 26. John x. 27.

Quest. 29. How are we made partakers of the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt?

Answ. We are made partakers of the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, by the effectual application of it to us by his Holy Spirit.

The redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, is deliverance from ſin, death, the devil, and the world, into a ſtate of holineſs and happineſs for ever, Tit. ii. 14. Hoſ. xiii. 14. Heb. ii. 14, 15. Gal. i. 4. Heb. ix. 12. To be made partakers of that redemption, is, to be made ſharers of it in our own perſons, John xiii. 8. Acts xxvi. 18. And till we are in our own perſons made ſharers of it, we are ſtill in a ſtate of bondage, under ſin, death, the devil, and the world, though it may be purchaſed for us, Eph. ii. 12. We are made ſharers of it in our perſons, by the effectual application of it to us in particular: and the application of it to us, that is effectual, is the applying it to us, unto the actual delivering of us, as priſoners out of the pit, Zech. ix. 11.

The effectual application of Chriſt's purchaſe to ſinners, in their own perſons, belongs to the promiſe of the covenant of grace, made to Chriſt for the elect, Iſa. liii. 10, 11. And it is begun here, and perfected hereafter, Eph. i. 7. 14. and iv. 30. As the purchaſing of redemption was the work of Chriſt; ſo the effectual application of it to us, is the work of his holy Spirit, Tit. iii. 5, 6. And the cloſeſt application of it made to any, in the goſpel offer, without the applying work of the Spirit, will be an ineffectual application of it; that is to ſay, the priſoners will ſtill remain in the pit, undelivered, John i. 11, 12.

Now, the Spirit applies the redemption to all theſe for whom Chriſt hath purchaſed it, Eph. i. 13, 14. John vi. 37. 39. And the purchaſe and application of redemption are of the very ſame extent, John x. 15. 27, 28.

Quest. 30. How doth the Spirit apply to us the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt?

Answ. The Spirit applieth to us the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, by working faith in us, and thereby uniting us to Chriſt, in our effectual calling.

The applying of Chriſt's purchaſe to us is not the work of the Spirit without us, but the work of the Spirit within us, Ezek. xxxv. 27. Rom. viii. 9. We are made partakers of the Spirit himſelf, by the communication of him to us by Jeſus Chriſt, John xx. 22. Acts ii. 33. We come to be made partakers of ſo great a benefit as the Spirit himſelf, for applying Chriſt's purchaſe to us, becauſe the Spirit is a part, and the leading part of Chriſt's purchaſe, as well as the applier of it, Luke xxiv. 39. Acts ii. 33.

The Spirit entering within us, applies Chriſt's purchaſe to us, by uniting us to Chriſt, 1 Cor. xxi. 13. with Eph. v. 23. The union we have with Jeſus Chriſt by his Spirit in us, is that whereby being joined to Chriſt as our head, we are made one with him ſpiritually, 1 Cor. vi. 17. Eph. v. 23. That union is not a metaphorical, nor mere relative union, but a moſt real and proper union, Eph. v. 30. 32. with Col. i. 27. John vi. 56. and xvii. 21. And being once made, it can never be diſſolved, Jer. xxxii. 40. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. It extends ſo far, in reſpect of the parties united to Chriſt, that the whole man, body as well as ſoul, is united to whole Chriſt in his divine and human nature, 1 Cor. vi. 15. Col. i. 27. Eph. v. 30. Chriſt's purchaſe comes by that means to be applied to us, becauſe in union with Chriſt, we have communion with him in his purchaſe, Philip. iii. 9. Col. iii. 9, 10. And there is no effectual application of his purchaſe to us, without union with himſelf, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Now, our union with Chriſt is by the Spirit, inaſmuch as it is made by the communication of the Spirit to us when dead in ſin, and by the agency of the Spirit in us, when quickened by that communication.

The communication of the Spirit to us when dead in ſin, is the Spirit from Chriſt the head, his entering into us dead ſinners, as a Spirit of life, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Rom. viii. 2. We are united to Chriſt by that communication of the Spirit from him, inaſmuch as Chriſt thereby apprehends us, and knits with us, Philip. iii. 12. 1 John iii. 24. Gal. ii. 20. We neceſſarily become one with Chriſt, by means of that communication of the Spirit from him, becauſe ſo the man Chriſt and we do both live ſpiritually by the ſelf-ſame Spirit indwelling in both, Rom. viii. 2. Col. iii. 3, 4. And the diſtance between Chriſt the head, in heaven, and us on earth, hinders not the indwelling of the ſame Spirit in both, and our union thereby, in regard the Spirit is an infinite Spirit.

The agency of the Spirit in us, when quickened by that communication, is his working faith in us, and thereby uniting us to Chriſt, Col. ii. 12. with 2 Cor. iv. 13. Eph. ii. 17. It is not the habit of faith, but actual believing, by which the Spirit unites us to Chriſt, Gen. xv. 6. John i. 12. The Spirit worketh in us that actual believing, producing it in us immediately out of the ſpiritual life given us by that communication of himſelf to us, Philip. ii. 13, John v. 25. with chap. i. 12, 13. And by that actual believing alſo we are united to Chriſt, inaſmuch as thereby we apprehend Chriſt, and knit with him, Philip. iii. 12. John i. 12. Eph. iii. 17. But as for elect infants, idiots, and others, through want of the exerciſe of their reaſon, incapable of actual believing, what comes of them in that caſe, is, that they are united to Chriſt by the communication of the Spirit to them, and Chriſt's purchaſe is effectually applied to them thereupon, Luke i. 15. with 1 Cor. xii. 13.

The bonds then of the ſpiritual union, betwixt Chriſt and actual believers, are the Spirit on Chriſt's part, and faith on their part, 1 John iii. 24. Eph. iii. 17. And that work of God about us, in which the Spirit works faith in us, and unites us to Chriſt, is our effectual calling.

Quest. 31. What is effectual calling?

Answ. Effectual calling is the work of God's Spirit, whereby, convincing us of our ſin and miſery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Chriſt, and renewing our wills, he doth perſuade and enable us to embrace Jeſus Chriſt, freely offered to us in the goſpel.

An effectual calling in the general is, when the party called comes upon the call. The call whereby ſinners are invited to partake of the redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, is the call of the goſpel, 2 Theſſ. ii. 14. Even the goſpel-call itſelf is not given to all and every one in the world, Rom. x. 14, 15. but it is given to all to whom the word of God comes, whether written or preached, John v. 39. Rom. x. 17.

Sinners are, by the goſpel-call, called to come out from the world lying in wickedneſs, 1 John v. 19. with 2 Cor. vi. 17. And they are called to come to Jeſus Chriſt, in union and communion with him, Matth. xi. 28. and xxii. 4. By that coming to Jeſus Chriſt, is meant, embracing him freely offered to us in the goſpel. Chriſt offered in the goſpel is embraced by believing on him, John i. 12. There is need of calling us to come to Chriſt, in union and communion with him, becauſe by nature we are far from God, and faſt aſleep in ſin, Eph. ii. 13. with Jam. iv. 8. Eph. v. 14.

The goſpel-call, to whatever ſinner of mankind it comes, is accompanied with a ſufficient warrant for his coming to Chriſt, in union and communion with him. That warrant is the free offer of Chriſt to us in the goſpel, Prov. viii. 4. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Chriſt is offered in the goſpel freely to us mankind ſinners, in that any of us may, though none but truly ſenſible ſinners will, come to him, and unite with him, John iii. 16. Rev. xxii. 17. and iii. 16.

The calling of ſinners by the goſpel, is ineffectual on many. It is ineffectual on them, in that they come not to Chriſt, upon the call, Prov. i. 24. But it is effectual on the elect, Rom. viii. 30. Acts xiii. 48. It is effectual on them, in that, ſooner or latter, they certainly come to Chriſt upon the call, John vi. 37.

Our effectual calling is the work of God's Spirit, 1 Theſſ. i. 4, 5. John vi. 63. And thereby he doth perſuade and enable us, to embrace Jeſus Chriſt freely offered to us in the goſpel. The Spirit renders the goſpel-call effectual on us, powerfully determining us, and putting us in a capacity, to anſwer the call by embracing Chriſt. He determines us to anſwer the goſpel-call, by perſuading us effectually to embrace Chriſt, Gen. ix. 27. John vi. 44, 45. Philip. ii. 13. He puts us in a capacity to anſwer the goſpel-call, by enabling us to embrace Chriſt, John vi. 44, 45. Philip. ii. 13. There is need of the Spirit's calling us effectually, by perſuading and enabling us to come to Chriſt, in union and communion with him, becauſe, being in ourſelves dead in ſin, we are neither willing nor able to come, John v. 25. with Pſal. cx. 3. Philip. ii. 13. John vi. 44.

The Spirit perſuades and enables us to embrace Jeſus Chriſt freely offered to us in the goſpel, by convincing us of our ſin and miſery, enlightening our minds in the knowledge of Chriſt, and renewing our wills. The work of the Spirit for perſuading and enabling us to embrace Chriſt, is threefold; namely, conviction, ſaving illumination, and the renewing of the will. But conviction is not a work of the Spirit of the ſame kind with the other two.

Conviction is a work of the Spirit acting as a Spirit of bondage upon us, Rom. viii. 54. The Spirit, acting as a Spirit of bondage, convinceth us of our ſin, and miſery, John xvi. 8. Acts ii. 37. The effect of the Spirit's work of conviction upon us, is, ſight of our ſins as heinous in the ſight of God, and of his wrath due to us for them, filling us with remorſe, terror, and anxiety, John xvi. 8. Acts ii. 37. and xvi. 29. He convinceth us of our ſin by it, bringing home on our conſciences the commands of the law, as of divine authority, and binding on us in particular, Rom. vii. 7. with Exod. xx. 1. He convinceth us of our miſery, by it, bringing home on our conſciences the curſe of the law, as the curſe of the Lord himſelf, binding on us in particular, Gal. iii. 10. with Rom. iii. 19. Mal. iii. 9. That law-work doth not iſſue in faith and converſion, in all whom it is wrought upon, Matth. xxvii. 3, 4, 5. Acts xxiv. 25. Neither is it of the ſame meaſure, in all that are converted Luke xix. 6. with Acts ix. 9. But ſo much of it is neceſſary, as brings the ſoul to ſee an abſolute need of Chriſt, and to deſpair of relief by any other way, Gal. iii. 24. Luke v. 48. The part of this law-work of the Spirit hath in the perſuading and enabling us to embrace Jeſus Chriſt, is, that it begins the perſuaſion, urging us with our loſt and undone ſtate, and our need of a Saviour, Gal. iii. 23. Exod. xx. 18, 19. But it neither perfects the perſuaſion, nor enables us to embrace Chriſt, Rom. viii. 3. Heb. vii. 19.

Saving illumination, and the renewing of the will, are the works of the Spirit acting as a Spirit of life within us, 2 Cor. iv. 6. with John viii. 12. Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27. The Spirit of life from Chriſt the head, is conveyed into us, in the word, John vi. 63. Not in the word of the law, but in the word of the goſpel, Gal. iii. 2. 2 Cor. iii. 7, 8. The goſpel is the word of the glad tidings of ſalvation to ſinners, through Jeſus Chriſt, Acts xiii. 26. Luke ii. 10, 11.

The work of the Spirit, in effectual calling, acting as a Spirit of life within us, is a quickening work, giving life to the dead ſoul, Eph. ii. 5. with John vi. 63. In his ſaving operation then, on the mind and will, bringing ſinners to Chriſt, he acts irreſiſtibly, yet without the leaſt violence done to their will, Jer. xxxi. 18. Cant. i. 4. Now that quickening work is the ſame with regeneration, taken ſtrictly for the beginning of the new creature, John i. 12, 13. with chap. iii. 6.

The quickening or regenerating work of the Spirit on our minds, is ſaving illumination, or enlightening, John i. 4. and viii. 12. Eph. v. 14. Saving illumination is a quickening work of the Spirit, inaſmuch as it is a renewing of our minds, by nature under the darkneſs of death, in point of true ſaving knowledge, Rom. xii. 2. 1 John v. 20. Matth. iv. 16. Eph. iv. 18. 1 Cor. ii. 14. The effect of ſaving illumination on us is the knowledge of Chriſt, by way of ſpiritual ſight, Eph. i. 17, 18. John vi. 40. The ſight we get of Chriſt, by ſaving illumination, is a ſight of him, in the tranſcendent glory of his perſon and offices, offered to us in particular, 2 Cor. iv. 6. John i. 14. 1 Theſſ. i. 5. It is in the word of the goſpel, that Chriſt is ſo ſeen ſpiritually, 2 Cor. iii. 18. with Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. We come ſo to ſee Chriſt in the goſpel, in the work of ſaving illumination, becauſe in it the Spirit clears and demonſtrates the goſpel to us, for a ground of our believing in particular, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. The Spirit clears and demonſtrates unto us the goſpel to be the infallible word of God, and his word to us in particular, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. and i. 5. And that is an internal atteſtation of the word of the goſpel unto us, diſtinct from the cleareſt external or miniſterial atteſtation of it, John xv. 26, 27.

The quickening or regenerating work of the Spirit on our wills, is the renewing of them, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. The effect of the Spirit's renewing our wills, is their being made pliable to the goſpel-call, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. Pſal. cx. 3. That is a quickening work of the Spirit, inaſmuch as our will is, by nature under the bands of death, ſo as it hath no power to comply with the call of the goſpel, John v. 25. and vi. 44. Eph. ii. 1, 5.

The part that ſaving illumination, and the renewing of our wills, have in the perſuading and enabling us to embrace Jeſus Chriſt, is, that thereby the perſuaſion is perfected, and we are enabled to embrace him accordingly, John vi. 45. and i. 12, 13. And thereby the Spirit infallibly produceth in us actual coming to Chriſt, and embracing him by faith, John vi. 45. Philip. ii. 13.

And that our coming to Chriſt by faith, infallibly iſſues in converſion, 1 Pet. iii. 18. Converſion is a ſinner's turning again unto God, from whom he turned away in Adam, Acts xxvi. 20. It is brought about, through our coming to Chriſt by faith, in that we come unto God by Chriſt, and by him only, Heb. vii. 25. John xiv. 6.

QUEST. 32. What benefits do they that are effectually called partake of in this life?

ANSW. They that are effectually called, do, in this life, partake of juſtification, adoption, ſanctification, and the ſeveral benefits which in this life do either accompany or flow from them.

They that are effectually called into union and communion with Chriſt, do, in communion with him, partake of the reſt of the benefits of his purchaſe, Eph. i. 3. Howbeit, theſe benefits are not communicate to them in their own perſons, all at once; but they get ſome of them in this life, more at death, and the whole at the reſurrection. But the root benefit, from which they all ſpring unto them, and on which they all depend, is their union with Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 30. Rev. xiv 13. 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. with Col. i. 27. The chief of theſe benefits, which the effectually called do, in communion with Chriſt, partake of, in this life, are juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, Rom. viii. 30. Eph. i. 5. 1 Cor. i. 30. And there are ſeveral other benefits, which, even in this life, do either accompany theſe chief ones, or flow from them: and they partake of them alſo accordingly, in this life, 1 Cor. i. 30. Eph. i. 30.

QUEST. 33. What is juſtification?

ANSW. Juſtification is an act of God's free grace, wherein he pardoneth all our ſins, and accepteth us as righteous in his ſight, only for the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to us, and received by faith alone.

All who are effectually called, are juſtified, Rom. viii. 30. The juſtifying of a perſon doth never, in the ſcripture-ſenſe of the word, ſignify, to make one righteous with inherent righteouſneſs or holineſs; but commonly and ordinarily it ſignifies, to declare one righteous, Exod. xxiii. 7. with Rom. iv. 5. Prov. xvii. 15. Iſa. v. 23. And ſometimes to ſhew one righteous, Job xxxiii. 32. and xxxii. 2. Gen. xliv. 16. Luke xvi. 15. Rev. xxii. 11. Now, ſince God's juſtifying a ſinner cannot be a ſhowing him righteous in his ſight, it muſt be a declaring him righteous in his ſight. Wherefore our juſtification is not a change of our nature, but of our ſtate.

The ſtate a ſinner is brought out of, in his juſtification, is the ſtate of condemnation, Rom. viii. 33, 34. with ver. 1. All men, before they are juſtified, are in a ſtate of condemnation, John iii. 18. with Rom. v. 1. And they are ſo, in virtue of the curſe of the law ſtill lying on them, Gal. iii. 10. with Rom. iii. 1. 9. But ſinners are in their juſtification, delivered from the curſe, Gal. iii. 13. with Rom. viii. 33, 34. And it never returns upon them thereafter, Rom. viii. 1. Iſa. liv. 9.

Juſtification is not a work carried on by degrees, but an act perfected in an inſtant, John v. 24. with Rom. i. 17. A ſinner is juſtified, in the firſt inſtant of his believing on Chriſt; and not before, Rom. v. 1. and iii. 28. John iii. 18.

Juſtification is the act of God himſelf; and in it he acts in the character of a Judge, Rom. viii. 33, 34. with Deut. xxv. 1. The throne of judgment, on which God juſtifies a ſinner, is his throne of grace, Heb. iv. 16. And he is to be found on that throne, only in Chriſt, 2 Cor. v. 19. The ſinner is brought, for juſtification, unto the throne of grace, by the Spirit in effectual calling, 1 Cor. vi. 11. The poor ſinner comes unto the throne of grace, on that occaſion, a guilty, ſelf-condemned, and law-condemned creature, Ezra ix. 15. Rom. iii. 19. 23, 24. A law-condemned ſinner can be juſtified by a holy God there, by an act of free grace.

Our juſtification is an act of God's free grace: and by God's free grace is meant, his free favour and good-will. Howbeit, it is an act of free grace, not in reſpect of Chriſt, but in reſpect of us, Rom. iii. 23, 24. It is purely an act of free grace to us, inſomuch that we are juſtified, before we have done any good work at all, Rom. iv. 5.

The parts of the act of our juſtification, paſſed by God the righteous Judge, are two; namely, his pardoning all our ſins, and his accepting us as righteous in his ſight.

Pardon of ſin is the freeing of the ſinner from the guilt of his ſin, Matth. vi. 12. The guilt of ſin, that lies upon us, till ſuch time as we are juſtified, is the guilt of revenging wrath, John iii. 18. 36. The pardon, then, given to a ſinner in juſtification, is the freeing him from the guilt of the revenging wrath of God, formerly lying on him, Job xxxiii. 22. 24. John v. 24. And the ſinner once juſtified, can never fall under the guilt of revenging wrath again, Rom. viii. 1. 33, 34. John v. 24. Iſa. liv. 9. Now in our juſtification, God pardons us all our ſins, paſt and preſent, Mic. vii. 19. Col. ii. 13. Rom. iv. 7. And the ſtate we are put into, with reſpect to after-ſins, is, that God will not impute them, as to the guilt of revenging wrath, Rom. iv. 6. 8. The procuring cauſe of the direct pardon of the one, and of the not-imputing of the other, is, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon us, Rom. iii. 22. with Gal. iii. 13. The guilt, which the juſtified do incur, by their after-ſins, is, the guilt of fatherly anger, Pſal. lxxxix. 30, 31, 32, 33.

Acceptance with God in juſtification, is not the acceptance of our works, but of our perſons, Eph. i. 6. with Rom. iii. 28. No work of ours can ever be accepted of God, in point of juſtification, Gal. ii. 16. Nor can any work of ours be accepted in any caſe, till once we are juſtified, Heb. xi. 6. Gen. iv. 4, 5. with Heb. xi. 4. God's acceptance of our perſons, in juſtification, is his accepting us unto eternal life, adjudging it to us, Rom. v. 17, 18. Tit. iii. 7. Hab. ii. 4. He accepts us unto eternal life, as perſons righteous in his ſight, Rom. v. 17, 18, 19. 21. Gal. iii. 19. with ver. 11. By the righteous in God's ſight, is meant, perſons truly righteous in law, in the view of his piercing eye, Gen. vii. 1. 2 Cor. v. 22. And, they are perſons truly righteous in law, who have a righteouſneſs fully anſwering the demands of the law for righteouſneſs, Philip. iii. 9. Rom. viii. 3, 4.

As to what we are juſtified for, we are juſtified only for the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to us, and received by faith alone. One coming unto the throne of grace, a law-condemned ſinner, is capable of being juſtified there, pardoned and accepted, as truly righteous, inaſmuch as uniting with Chriſt there, Chriſt's righteouſneſs is his, and upon him that moment, Philip. iii. 9. Rom. iii. 22.

That for which God juſtifies us, is not any thing wrought in us, or done by us, Tit. iii. 5. Eph. i. 7. But it is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to us, Philip. iii. 9. with Rom. iv. 6. And it is his righteouſneſs only, without any mixture of righteouſneſs inherent in us, Rom. v. 18, 19. The righteouſneſs of Chriſt for which we are juſtified, is not his eſſential righteouſneſs, which he had from eternity, but his mediatory righteouſneſs, which he fulfilled in his ſtate of humiliation, Mat. iii. 15. The parts, whereof that righteouſneſs of Chriſt conſiſts, are the complete holineſs of nature, righteouſneſs of his life, and ſatisfaction of his ſufferings, Heb. vii. 26. Rom. v. 19. Philip. ii. 7, 8. And, in our juſtification, it is imputed to us, in all the parts thereof, Rom. viii. 3, 4. with chap. iv. 6.

The party imputing Chriſt's righteouſneſs to us, is God the Judge, Rom. iv. 6. God's imputing it to us, is, his reckoning it ours, Rom. iv. 10, 11. and v. 19. Jer. xxiii. 6. God cannot reckon Chriſt's righteouſ-not ours, becauſe it is ours, before he reckon it ſo, Rom. ii. 2.

The righteouſneſs of Chriſt becomes ours, through faith, Philip. iii. 9. Rom. iii. 22. It is ours through faith, by right of free gift, and right of communion with Chriſt himſelf. The believer poſſeſſeth it as his by right of free gift, inaſmuch as Chriſt's righteouſneſs being made over, in the goſpel, as heaven's free gift to ſinners, he hath received it by faith, Rom. i. 17. and v. 17. He poſſeſſeth it as his by right of communion with Chriſt himſelf, inaſmuch as, being united to Chriſt, he hath a common intereſt or communion with him, in his righteouſneſs, Eph. iii. 17. 1 Cor. i. 9. Philip. iii. 9. Chriſt's righteouſneſs, then, is not therefore ours, becauſe it is imputed to us; but therefore it is imputed to us, becauſe it is ours, Rom. ii. 2. and iv. 24.

The righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to a law-condemned ſinner, is a good ground for his juſtification, pardon and acceptance, as a perſon truly righteous, inaſmuch as thereby the commanding and condemning law is judicially found, at the throne of grace, to be fully ſatisfied in all its demands for righteouſneſs, that it had upon him, Rom. iii. 31. and viii. 3, 4. and x. 4. and vii. 4. with chap. viii. 1.

As to what we are juſtified by, we are juſtified by faith alone, Gal. ii. 16. To be juſtified by faith alone, is to be juſtified by faith, and not by works, in whole, nor in part, Rom. iii. 28. Paul's doctrine, That we are juſtified by faith alone: and the doctrine of James, That we are juſtified by works, and not by faith only, Jam. ii. 24. do not diſagree, 2 Pet. i. 21. and that, inaſmuch as they ſpeak of very different ſubjects. What Paul ſpeaks of, is God's juſtifying us by an act of his, declaring us to be righteous, Rom. iv. 6, 7, 8. What James ſpeaks of, is but our juſtifying ourſelves, by a courſe of life, ſhewing us to be righteous, Jam. ii. 18. 21. Now a man juſtifies or ſhews himſelf righteous, by faith in the ſight of God, by good works, Jam. ii. 21. 25. John xv. 14. Rom. vi. 14. For though we are juſtified of God by faith alone, yet faith is not alone, without good works in the juſtified, Jam. ii. 17. 26. Rom. viii. 1. Nevertheleſs faith is alone, without good works in juſtification, Rom. iv. 5. That appears inaſmuch as no man can do a good work, till once he is juſtified by faith, 1 Tim. i. 5. Luke vii. 47. Rom. vii. 4. And that, becauſe till then he is under the curſe of the law, Rom. vii. 5, 6. The act of believing, whereby we are juſtified, cannot be reckoned a good work done by us, before we are juſtified, foraſmuch as it is the effect of a quickening or creating act of God in us, by which we paſs, from under the curſe, into a ſtate of juſtification, Eph. i. 19, 20. John v. 24.

We are not juſtified by faith, as the righteouſneſs itſelf for which we are juſtified, Rom. v. 18, 19. But it is, according to the ſtile of the ſcripture, ſaid to be counted to us for righteouſneſs, (Gen. xv. 6. Rom. iv. 3.) Not that God judgeth it to be our righteouſneſs, but becauſe he treats it as if it were ſo; Job xix. 15. and xiii. 24. and xxxiii. 10. with chap. x. 7. God treats faith as if it were our righteouſneſs in his ſight, in that immediately upon our act of believing, he juſtifies us. But we are juſtified by faith, as the alone inſtrument or mean of our juſtification, John i. 12. Rom. iii. 28. and v. 1. Faith juſtifies us inſtrumentally, as it receives the gift of righteouſneſs, and unites us with Chriſt whoſe righteouſneſs it is, Rom. v. 17. Philip. iii. 9.

It is in juſtification, that we obtain reconciliation with God, 2 Cor. v. 19. James ii. 23. The ſtate we are brought out of in our reconciliation, is the ſtate of wrath, Rom. v. 9, 10. The ſtate we are brought into, is a ſtate of peace and friendſhip with God through Chriſt, Rom. v. 1. Iſa. xxxii. 17. Jam. ii. 23.

QUEST. 34. What is adoption?

ANSW. Adoption is an act of God's free grace, whereby we are received into the number, and have a right to all the privileges of the ſons of God.

All who are effectually called, are adopted into the family of God, 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. Adoption in the general, is a legal act, whereby one doth, to all intents and purpoſes in law, become wholly the child of another than him whoſe child he was by nature. Adoption then, is not a change of our nature, but of our ſtate. Neither is it a work carried on by degrees, but an act perfected in an inſtant, 1 John iii. 2. But the full enjoyment of the benefits coming thereby unto us, will not be, till the laſt day, Rom. viii. 23. We are adopted into the family of God, in that inſtant, wherein, believing in Chriſt, we are juſtified and reconciled to God, John i. 12. Gal. iv. 4, 5. Eph. ii. 16. 19.

Our natural father, out of whoſe family we come, is the devil, John viii. 44. Matth. xiii. 38. and xxiii. 15. The devil's family is the world lying in wickedneſs, 1 John v. 19. with 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. Pſal. xlv. 10. The Father who adopts us into his family, is God himſelf, 2 Cor. vi. 18. The perſon of the glorious Trinity, whoſe act in a peculiar manner our adoption is, is the firſt perſon, the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, Eph. i. 3. 5. and iii. 14, 15. 1 John iii. 1. His act of adopting us into his family, is an act of free grace, 1 John iii. 1. It is an act of free grace, in that there is nothing in us moving him thereto, Eph. i. 5, 6. But it is conſiſtent with the honour of God, to adopt into his family, us who are by nature children of the devil, in that he adopts us in Chriſt, as being in him, Eph. i. 5, 6. Gal. iii. 26, 27. Heb. ii. 11. It is conſiſtent with his juſtice, in that he adopts us for Chriſt, as redeemed by him, Gal. iv. 4, 5.

We are dignified by adoption, in that we are thereby received into the number of the ſons of God, Jer. iii. 19. John i. 12. The dignity then which we are by it advanced to, is ſonſhip to God, Eph. i. 5. 2 Cor. vi. 18. Theſe that make up that number, into which we are received by adoption, are our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, the holy angels, and the ſaints in heaven and earth, Heb. ii. 11. and xii. 22, 23. Eph. iii. 15. All theſe are the ſons of God. Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God, by eternal generation, Pſal. ii. 7. John i. 14. The holy angels are the ſons of God, by creation in his image, which is confirmed on them, Job xxxviii. 7. with Eph. i. 10. The ſaints are the ſons and daughters of God, by ſpiritual marriage with Chriſt, by adoption, and by regeneration, Pſal. xlv. 10. Eph. i. 5. 1 John iii. 9, 10. And by adoption we are made ſons of God too, Eph. i. 5. Gal. iv. 4, 5.

The peculiar dignity of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, among that number is, that he is the firſt-born, the eldeſt brother, Rom. viii. 29. Col. i. 18. The pre-eminence he has among his brethren, as he is the firſt-born, is that his is the dominion and headſhip of the family, the prieſthood, the bleſſing, and the double portion, Heb. iii. 6. and ii. 17. Pſal. xlv. 2, 7. The bleſſing is peculiarly his, though all his brethren are bleſſed too, inaſmuch as he is the prime receptacle of the bleſſing, from whence it is conveyed unto his brethren, who are all bleſſed only in him, Gen. xii. 2, 3. with Gal. iii. 8. Eph. i. 3. Philip. ii. 9, 10. with Eph. i. 10.

The advantage we have, by the dignity of ſonſhip to God, is, that thereby we have a right to all the privileges of the ſons of God, Rom. viii. 17. The privileges of the ſons of God, are, acceſs to him as a Father, his fatherly pity, protection, proviſion, and correction, and the eternal inheritance, Eph. iii. 12. with Matth. vi. 9. Pſal. ciii. 13. Prov. xiv. 26. Matth. vi. 30. 32. Heb. xii. 6. Rom. viii. 17. Our right to theſe privileges by adoption, is not our only right to them: we have another right to them alſo, by our juſtification, Hab. ii. 4. Tit. iii. 7. Rom. v. 1, 2. The difference between theſe two rights to theſe privileges, lies here, that our right to them by juſtification is our fundamental right, our right to them by adoption is an honorary right of inheritance ſupperadded thereto, Rom. v. 18, 19. John i. 12.

The earneſt of the eternal inheritance, which God gives to his adopted children, till they come to the full poſſeſſion of it, is the Spirit of adoption, Rom. viii. 15. with Eph. i. 13, 14. The Spirit of adoption is, the Spirit of his Son, ſealing them with the Son's image, and working in them a ſonlike diſpoſition and affection towards God, Gal. iv. 6. with Eph. i. 13, 14. and 2 Cor. iii. 18. And that is done, on and in them, in their ſanctification, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. and iii. 3, 18.

QUEST. 35. What is ſanctification?

ANSW. Sanctification is the work of God's free grace, whereby we are renewed in the whole man after the image of God, and are enabled more and more to die unto ſin, and live unto righteouſneſs.

All who are effectually called are ſanctified: and the effect of their ſanctification on them, is real holineſs in their own perſons, 1 Theſſ. v. 23, 24. Sanctification then is not a mere change of our ſtate, but a change of our nature, 2 Cor. iii. 18. and v. 17.

It is not an act done in an inſtant, but a work carried on by degrees, 2 Cor. iv. 16. And it is never perfected in this life, 1 John i. 10. Philip. iii. 12. Sanctification then doth differ from regeneration taken ſtrictly for the beginning of the new creature: for regeneration ſo taken, being the quickening of the dead ſoul, is done in an inſtant, Eph. ii. 5. with John v. 24. But it differeth not from, but is the ſame with regeneration, taken largely for the forming and advancing of the new creature in all its parts, Tit. iii. 5, 6. with Eph. v. 26. 2 Cor. v. 17.

No man, without real holineſs in his own perſon, ſhall ever ſee the Lord, Heb. xii. 14. Howbeit, no unſanctified perſon can, by any endeavours of his, work his own ſanctification, or make himſelf holy, Jer. xiii. 23. John xv. 5, 6. Tit. i. 15, 16. Our ſanctification then is the work of God only, 1 Theſſ. v. 23.

It is a work of God's free grace, Eph. i. 4. And it is ſuch a work, in that there is no perſonal worth in us, moving him thereto, Tit. iii. 5. Wherefore the worſt and vileſt of ſinners may be ſanctified, 1 Cor. vi. 11.

The perſon of the glorious Trinity, whoſe work, in a peculiar manner, our Sanctification is, is the holy Spirit, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. Tit. iii. 5.

They whom the Spirit ſanctifies, are, believers united to Chriſt, juſtified, reconciled, and adopted into the family of God. Our ſanctification depends on our faith, in that it is by faith, as the inſtrumental cauſe, that we are ſanctified, Acts xxvi. 18. and xv. 9. It depends on our union with Chriſt, in that it is in Chriſt we are ſanctified, as members of his body, 1 Cor. i. 2. Eph. ii. 10. It depends on our juſtification, in that we are ſanctified immediately, through the efficacy of the blood of Chriſt ſprinkled on our conſciences, Heb. ix. 14. 1 Pet. i. 2. with 1 John i. 7. The blood of Chriſt ſprinkled on our conſciences hath a ſanctifying efficacy on us, inaſmuch as removing the curſe of the law, and the guilt of ſin, it breaks the ſtrength of ſin, and the dominion of it, 1 Cor. xv. 56. with Rom. vi. 14. John xix. 34. with Heb. x. 22. Gal. iii. 13, 14. It depends on our reconciliation, inaſmuch as the ſanctifying virtue of the blood of Chriſt, ſprings from its atoning virtue, Heb. ix. 14. 1 Theſſ. v. 23. Rom. v. 10, 11. with Matth. i. 21. It depends on our adoption, in that being adopted into the family of God, we receive the Spirit of his Son conforming us to his image as our elder brother, and ſo ſanctifying us, Rom. viii. 29. with Gal. iv. 6. and 2 Cor. iii. 18.

The work of ſanctification is twofold; namely, habitual ſanctification, producing in us habitual holineſs, and actual ſanctification, producing in us the acts and duties of holineſs.

Habitual ſanctification is the work of the Spirit, whereby we are renewed in the whole man, after the image of God. Sanctification is not a bare amending of our life; but it is alſo a renewing of our nature, Eph. iv. 23, 24. In ſanctification, we are renewed in the whole man; that is to ſay, in our whole perſon, ſoul and body, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. The ſoul is renewed, not in reſpect of its ſubſtance, but in reſpect of its qualities of the mind, will, and affections, Eph. iv. 23, 24. The body is renewed, in communion with the renewed ſoul, whereby its members become inſtruments of righteouſneſs, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. with Rom. vi. 13. The reſult of that renewing in the whole man, is the new creature; or new man of grace on us, 2 Cor. v. 17. Eph. ii. 10. and iv. 24.

The new creature is formed after the image of God. And the image of God reſtored in ſanctification, conſiſts in the new qualities of knowledge in the mind, righteouſneſs in the will, and holineſs in the affections, Col. iii. 10. Eph. iv. 24. But that reſtored image is expreſſed on us immediately, from Jeſus Chriſt the ſecond Adam, who is the image of the inviſible God, Gal. iv. 19. 1 Cor. xv. 49. with Col. i. 15. compare 1 Cor. xi. 7. with Gen. i. 26, 27.

The difference between the renewing in effectual calling and the renewing in ſanctification, lies here, that in the former new vital powers, in the latter new qualities and habits of grace, are infuſed into us, John v. 25. with 2 Cor. v. 6. Heb. viii. 10, 11, 12. Theſe new qualities and habits of grace, are the ſeeds of repentance unto life, and of all other ſaving graces, making an entire new creature, or new man, 1 John iii. 9. Acts xi. 28. 2 Cor. v. 17. Eph. iv. 24. They are derived to us from the all-fulneſs of grace in the man Chriſt, Col. i. 19. with John i. 16. And they are communicate from Chriſt unto us, by his Spirit, John xvi. 14, 15. The effect of that communication is, that we are ſealed with the image of Chriſt, receiving grace for grace in Chriſt, as the wax doth point for point in the ſeal, Eph. i. 13. with 2 Cor. iii. 18. and John i. 16. Gal. iv. 19. And by that means, our union with Chriſt iſſues in our being one ſpirit with Chriſt, as really as Eve was one fleſh with Adam, being formed of him, 1 Cor. vi. 17. with Eph. v. 30, 31, 32. Now, to be one ſpirit with Chriſt, is to be of one and the ſame ſpiritual nature with him, as his ſpiritual ſeed, Heb. ii. 11. with John iii. 6. and Iſa. liii. 10.

But though in ſanctification, we are renewed in the whole man, yet we are not wholly renewed in any part: but there are remains of corruption ſtill indwelling in every part, Rom. vii. 18, 23, 24. Eph. iv. 22. That is to ſay, there are remains of corruption ſtill in the mind, will, and affections, and in the body by way of communion with the unrenewed part, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. Gal. v. 17. Rom. vii. 14. Philip. iii. 21.

What enſues on theſe two contrary principles of grace and corruption, being together in every part of the renewed man, is, the continual combat between the fleſh and the Spirit, Gal. v. 17. The difference betwixt that combat, and the ſtruggle againſt ſin, ſometime found in the unregenerate, lies here, that in the former, the conflict is between the fleſh and the Spirit in one and the ſame part; in the latter, it is between the fleſh in one part luſting, and the fleſh in another part fearing, Rom. vii. 15, 16. 2 Pet. ii. 15. with Numb. xxii. 18. The immediate iſſue of the combat between the fleſh and the Spirit, is, that neither the one principle, nor the other, carries the action to the perfection it tends unto, Gal. v. 17. And in that combat, the remaining corruption may prevail much for a time, Rom. vii. 23. But the renewed part overcomes, Rom. xvi. 14. 1 John v. 4.

The ſtate we are in, with reſpect to ſin and righte ouſneſs, by means of the renewing in ſanctification, is, a ſtate of death unto ſin, and of life unto righteouſneſs.

The ſtate of death unto ſin, for the kind of it, is ſuch a ſtate of death as a crucified man is in, who being nailed to the croſs, ſhall never come down till he breathe out his laſt, Rom. vi. 6. Gal. vi. 14. And we are, by the renewing in ſanctification, put into ſuch a ſtate of death unto ſin, inaſmuch as thereby the dominion or reigning power of the whole body of ſin is deſtroyed, and the pollution or defilement of ſin is purged away from off the whole man, though not perfectly in any part, Romans vi. 6, 14. Titus iii. 5. with John xiii. 10. The dominion, or reigning power of ſin, is deſtroyed in us, by means of the renewing in ſanctification, in that a contrary reigning principle of grace is thereby ſet in us, Romans vi. 14. 1 John iii. 9. The pollution or defilement of ſin is purged away by the ſame means, inaſmuch as the reſtored image of God in us, makes us really pure and clean in the ſight of God, as far as it goes, Titus iii. 5. with Coloſſians iii. 10. And we are in that ſtate of death unto ſin, in reſpect of our renewed part. Galatians vi. 14. with Romans vi. 6.

The ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs, for the kind of it, is ſuch as a man is in, who, being not only quickened, but riſen and come forth of the grave, is in an immediate diſpoſition for the common actions of life, Rom. vi. 4. Col. iii. 1. with Matth. xxviii. 6. John xi. 44. And we are, by the renewing in ſanctification, put into ſuch a ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs, inaſmuch as thereby we are endued with infuſed habits of grace, the immediate principles of gracious actions, Deut. xxx. 6. Heb. viii. 10. 2 Pet. i. 4. We are in that ſtate of life unto righteouſneſs, in reſpect of our renewed part, Gal. ii. 20. with Rom. vii. 17.

Actual ſanctification is the work of the Spirit, whereby we are enabled more and more to die unto ſin, and live unto righteouſneſs. Actual holineſs, proceeding from that ſtate of death and life, conſiſts, in more and more dying unto ſin, and living unto righteouſneſs, Gal. vi. 14. Rom. vi. 4. 6. with Prov. iv. 18.

Dying unto ſin more and more, lies in our mortifying of ſin, untill it die out, Rom. viii. 13. Col. iii. 5. The ſins which true mortification is aimed againſt, are, the whole body of the ſins of the fleſh, Col. ii. 11. Gal. v. 24. We mortify them, by refuſing compliance with them, and acting the contrary graces, Gal. v. 16, 17. Tit. ii. 12. They are mortified that way, becauſe in that way, they are ſtarved, and grace is ſtrengthened, Rom. xiii. 14. Heb. v. 14.

Living unto righteouſneſs more and more, lies in our practiſing of acts of holy obedience, or good works, untill we arrive at perfection therein, 1 Pet. iv. 2. Prov. iv. 18. Philip. iii. 12. 14. And that practice of obedience extends to the whole known will of God, Acts xiii. 22. Col. iv. 12. and i. 10.

A good work, or act of holy obedience, is any thought, word, or deed, agreeable to the will of God, and pleaſing in his ſight, Philip. iv. 8. Heb. xiii. 21. And ſuch works are theſe which are commanded in God's word, done in faith, and directed to his glory, Matth. xv. 9. Rom. xiv. 23. with Heb. xi. 6. 1 Cor. x. 31. Wherefore, no works whatſoever, of an unſanctified man, are truly good or pleaſing in the ſight of God, John xv. 5. Tit. i. 5. Rom. viii. 7. And that, becauſe though the matter of them may be good, yet they are not done in a right manner, nor to a right end, 1 Cor. xiii. 3. Matth. vi. 2. Zech. vii. 5, 6. The good works of ſanctified perſons are, none of them, perfectly good, or free from ſinful mixture, Iſa. lxiv. 6. Gal. v. 17. Howbeit they are accepted of God, for the ſake of Chriſt, being fruits of the branches in him, 1 Pet. ii. 5. Gen. iv. 4. with Heb. xi. 4. 1 Cor. ii. 15. There is a difference then between the two covenants, in the point of acceptance with God. The method of acceptance with God in the covenant of works, is, that firſt the work be accepted for its own perfection, and then the perſon for his work's ſake, Gal. iii. 12. The method of acceptance in the covenant of grace, is, that firſt the perſon be accepted for Chriſt's ſake in juſtification, and then his work, for Chriſt's ſake too, in point of ſanctification, Eph. i. 6. Heb. xi. 4. Rev. vii. 14. Wherefore God's accepting the will for the deed, or any work that is not perfect, is the peculiar privilege of thoſe who are in the covenant of grace by true faith, 2 Cor. viii. 12. with verſe 7. And God will accept of no work, at the hand of an unbeliever, and that becauſe he is under the covenant of works, and his work is not perfect, Galatians iii. 10. with Romans iii. 19.

Our ability for acts of mortification and obedience, wherein we die unto ſin, and live unto righteouſneſs, is not at all of ourſelves, John xv. 4. When we are put in a ſtate of death unto ſin, and life unto righteouſneſs, through the habits of grace infuſed into us by the Spirit, even then we are not able of ourſelves, for acts of mortification or obedience, 2 Cor. iii. 4, 5. Even of our gracious ſelves we can do nothing, or bring forth no fruit of grace, John xv. 4, 5. But we are enabled to the ſeveral acts of mortification and obedience, by the Spirit, Romans viii. 13. Philip. ii. 13. The Spirit enables us to them, by exciting, encreaſing, and ſtrengthening our inherent graces thereto, Canticles i. 4. Col. i. 10. Eph. iii. 16. The Spirit excites, increaſeth, and ſtrengtheneth our inherent graces to acts of mortification and obedience, by communicating new ſupplies of grace to us from Chriſt our head, Coloſſians ii. 19. 2 Cor. xii. 9. Philippians i. 18, 11. with John xv. 4, 5. Wherefore every gracious act, or good work, done by us, is a fruit of the Spirit, produced by him in us, Gal. v. 22, 23. Epheſians v. 9. Gal. v. 17. with verſe 16. 18. and Romans viii. 26. And the way how we derive ſupplies of grace from Chriſt, through the Spirit, is by faith truſting on him, in the word of promiſe, Galatians ii. 20. Jer. xvii. 7, 8. Pſalm xxviii. 7. 2 Peter i. 4.

The ſpring of all grace to us, from Chriſt, for our ſanctification, habitual and actual, is our communion with Chriſt in his death and reſurrection, by virtue of our union with him, Coloſſians ii. 11, 12. Romans vi. 4, 5, 6. There is a power or virtue, in the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, for ſanctifying of his members, applied to them by the Spirit, Galatians vi. 14. Philippians iii. 10. with John xvi. 15. That power or virtue, is, a power or virtue whereby his members are made conformable to him, in his death and reſurrection, to the ſanctifying of them effectually, Philippians iii. 10. with Romans vi. 5, 6. We are made conformable to him in his death, dying unto ſin, as Chriſt died for ſin, a violent death, lingering and painful, yet voluntary, Galatians vi. 14. with chap. v. 24. We are made conformable to him, in his reſurrection, riſing from our ſins to a new manner of life, continued during our abode in the world, and perfected in glory, as Chriſt roſe from the dead, to a new manner of life, continued till his aſcenſion, Romans vi. 4. 2 Corinthians v. 17. Now, in applying of that power and virtue of Chriſt's death and reſurrection unto us, there muſt be a communication of habitual and actual grace from him unto us; and that, becauſe without it we cannot be ſo conformed to him in his death and reſurrection, John xv. 4, 5. The death and reſurrection of Chriſt come to have ſuch a conforming virtue and power on his members, inaſmuch as he died and roſe again as a public perſon, their head, and merited this their conformation to his image, Rom. vi. 4. to ver. 12. Wherefore, as there is in Adam's ſin and death, a virtue conforming his natural offſpring unto him therein, to their defilement; ſo there is in Chriſt's death and reſurrection, a virtue conforming his members unto him in them, to their ſanctification, 1 Corinthians xv. 22. 47, 48, 49. Gal. ii. 20.

QUEST. 36. What are the benefits which in this life do accompany or flow from juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification?

Answ. The benefits which in this life do accompany or flow from juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, are, aſſurance of God's love, peace of conſcience, joy in the Holy Ghoſt, increaſe of grace, and perſeverance therein to the end.

These benefits accompany or flow from juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, with this difference, that ſome of them may proceed on the mere reality of grace, others of them require alſo the evidence of grace.

Theſe of them that require the evidence of grace, are aſſurance of God's love, peace of conſcience, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt.

The aſſurance of God's love, that accompanies or flows from juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, is, that whereby a true believer is certainly aſſured of God's love of complacency in him, and that he is in the ſtate of grace, and ſhall perſevere therein, Romans v. 1, 2. 5. 1 John iii. 14. and v. 13. A believer may attain unto this aſſurance, in the uſe of ordinary means, without extraordinary revelation, 2 Peter i. 10. Hebrews vi. 11. And the ſpecial means for that end, are cloſe walking with God, ſelf-examination, and the right uſe of the holy ſacraments, John xiv. 21. 2 Corinthians xiii. 5. Romans iv. 11. with Acts viii. 39. and 1 Corinthians x. 16. The grounds from whence a believer may raiſe this aſſurance, are the infallible truth of the word of grace to him, in the ſcriptures, and the evidence of grace in his own heart, 1 John v. 13. and iii. 14. 18, 19. And he is enabled to diſcern theſe grounds of aſſurance, ſo as to be aſſured upon them, by the Spirit's ſhining in his heart on the word of grace, and on the work of grace there, Luke xxiv. 45. 1 Corinthians ii. 12. For ſo the Spirit atteſts, and he ſees, the one to be the Spirit's own infallible word to him, and the other his gracious work in him, Romans viii. 16. with John ii. 22. and 1 Cor. ii. 12. True aſſurance diſtinguiſhes itſelf from preſumption, by its humbling the ſoul, making the conſcience tender, and the heart heavenly, Galatians ii. 20. Canticles ii. 7. Galatians vi. 14. And it is a neceſſary duty to ſeek it, 2 Pet. i. 10. The excellency of it in the Chriſtian life, is, that it fits men to live moſt uſefully for God, and moſt comfortably for themſelves, Pſalm cxix. 32. and iv. 6, 7. But there may be true faith, juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, without this aſſurance, 1 John v. 13. Iſaiah l. 10.

Howbeit, there is ſome aſſurance in juſtifying faith itſelf, 1 Theſſalonians i. 5. Hebrews x. 22. Jeremiah iii. 19. Hoſea ii. 23. Romans iv. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. The aſſurance which is in juſtifying faith itſelf, is that whereby, in believing on Chriſt for ſalvation, the party is perſuaded, in greater or leſſer meaſure, of God's love of good-will to him, and that Chriſt will ſave him from ſin and wrath, 1 John iv. 14. 16. and v. 10, 11. John iii. 16, 17. with 1 Theſſalonians i. 5. Acts xv. 11. Jam. i. 6, 7. The ground from whence this aſſurance is raiſed, is the word of the goſpel allenarly, demonſtrated by the Spirit in the work of ſaving illumination, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. There may be doubting of God's good-will and of ſalvation, where this aſſurance of them hath place, Matth xiv. 31. And that may be, inaſmuch as they are contraries, capable of various degrees, the one weakened as the other gathers ſtrength, Mark ix. 24. 1 Theſſ. i. 5. Matthew xiv. 31. But where doubts are reigning to the barring of any aſſurance of theſe things at all, true faith is barred too, James i. 6, 7. Iſaiah l. 10. Hebrews vi. 11. 1 John v. 10, 11.

True peace of conſcience is, the calm that enſues in the conſcience purged from guilt by the blood of Chriſt, Iſaiah xxxiii. ult. Hebrews x. 2. and ix. 14. The ground of it is peace with God, Romans v. 1. with Coloſſians iii. 15. It is diſcerned from falſe peace, in that it is ſtrengthened by the light of the word, and not maintained without warring againſt ſin, John iii. 20, 21. Pſalm cxix. 165. with Galatians v. 17.

By joy in the Holy Ghoſt is meant ſpiritual joy, whereof the Holy Ghoſt is the author, Romans xiv. 17. with Galatians v. 22. Pſalm xlv. 7. with John iii. 34. The ſpring of it is, ſenſe of grace received, and hope of glory, Iſaiah lxi. 10. Romans v. 2. It is diſcerned from the deluſive joy of hypocrites, in that victory over ſin, felt and hoped for, is a chief ſpring of it; ſpirituality and vigour in duties of obedience are the effects of it, 1 Pet. i. 8, 9. 1 Corinthians xv. 55, 56, 57. with Revelation v. 9, 10. Philip. iii. 3. Neh. viii. 10. with Pſal. cxix. 32.

None can have true peace of conſcience, nor joy in the Holy Ghoſt, but true believers, Iſaiah lvii. ult. And when they have attained them, they may loſe them again, Pſal. li. 8. But the ſeed of them, from whence they may be revived, cannot be loſt, but abide with believers in all caſes, Pſalm xcvii. 11. with 1 John iii. 19. The abiding ſeed of peace of conſcience in believers, is their ſtate of peace with God, Jeremiah xxxii. 40. The abiding ſeed of joy in the Holy Ghoſt in them, is their ſaving intereſt in the fulneſs of Chriſt, 1 John i. 3, 4. And out of theſe they may recover their peace of conſcience, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, by the renewed actings of faith and repentance, Romans xv. 13. Matthew v. 4. with Pſalm cxxvi. 5. And they may maintain and preſerve them, by a holy tender walk, and the daily exerciſe of faith and repentance, Acts xxiv. 16. with 2 Corinthians i. 12. John xiii. 10. Pſalm xix. 12.

The benefits flowing from juſtification, adoption, and ſanctification, which may proceed on the mere reality of grace, without the evidence of it, are, increaſe of grace, and perſeverance therein to the end.

It is of the nature of grace, as of a ſeed, or the morning-light, to increaſe or grow, till it come to perfection, 1 John iii. 9. with Mark iv. 26, 27. Proverbs iv. 18. John iv. 14. Epheſians iv. 15. And it doth grow accordingly, Proverbs iv. 18. Nevertheleſs it doth not therefore grow at all times, but is liable to decays, Revelations ii. 4. The actual increaſe or growth of it, depends on ſupplies of grace from Chriſt the head, communicate to us by the Spirit, Hoſ. xiv. 5. with Iſa. xliv. 3, 4. John xv. 5. Howbeit, it is our duty to grow in grace, 2 Peter iii. 18. A Chriſtian ſhall grow in grace, by exerciſing it, and uſing the means of it diligently, Matthew xxv. 29. Pſalm xcii. 13. The graces, the exerciſe whereof doth eſpecially influence the growth of all the reſt, as well as their own, are, firſt faith, and then love, Galatians ii. 20. 2 Corinthians v. 14, 15. 1 Timothy i. 5. True ſpiritual growth is diſcerned from falſe growth, in that it is proportionable in all the parts of the new creature; and reſts at no pitch attained, till it come to perfection, Epheſians iv. 15. Philippians iii. 13, 14.

By perſeverance in grace to the end, is meant, a conſtant continuance in grace, all along till death, Coloſſians i. 23. Matthew x. 22. All who are once endued with true grace, ſhall infallibly perſevere in it to the end, notwithſtanding of Satan's temptations, the world's ſnares, and their own corruptions, John x. 28, 29. 1 Peter i. 5. 1 John iii. 19. and iii. 9. They may loſe the evidence, and much of the meaſure and exerciſe of their grace, Iſaiah l. 10. Revelations ii. 4, 5. Canticles v. 2, 3. But they can never fall away from grace finally, ſo as never to recover it, 1 Peter i. 5. John vi. 39. and viii. 35. Nor can they fall away from it totally, ſo as to loſe it altogether, for ſhorter or longer time, 1 John iii. 9. Jeremiah xxxii. 40. Theſe then who fall away totally and finally from the faith or holineſs of the goſpel they ſometimes ſeemed to have, are ſuch as never had true grace, 1 John ii. 19. This perſeverance of the ſaints doth not ariſe from the nature of grace itſelf implanted in them; for of itſelf it would wither away and die out, if it were not fed, Iſaiah xxvii. 3. John xv. 5, 6. But it ariſeth from their unſeparable union with Chriſt, the perpetual indwelling of his Spirit in them, the continual interceſſion of Chriſt for them, and the nature of the covenant of grace, and decree of election, 1 Cor. i. 8, 9. 2 Tim. ii. 19. The ground in law, on which this privilege of perſeverance is thus ſecured to them, is, that Chriſt the ſecond Adam hath perfectly fulfilled the condition of the covenant, Gal. iii. 13.

Quest. 37. What benefits do believers receive from Chriſt at death?

Answ. The ſouls of believers are, at their death, made perfect in holineſs, and do immediately paſs into glory; and their bodies, being ſtill united to Chriſt, do reſt in their graves till the reſurrection.

Death came into the world by ſin, Romans v. 12. They who, being out of Chriſt, die in their ſins, die in virtue of the curſe of the broken law or covenant of works, Gen. ii. 17. And the ſtate their ſouls are in, from death until the reſurrection, is that being caſt into hell, they remain there in torments and utter darkneſs, Luke xvi. 23, 24. The ſtate their bodies are in, in the grave, is, that they are kept there as in their priſon.

They that are effectually called into union and communion with Chriſt, do not die in virtue of the curſe of the broken law or covenant of works, Romans vii. 4. But they die, in conformity to Chriſt their head, that as death came in by ſin, ſin may go out by death, Rom. viii. 29. Death then doth not ſtop the courſe of their partaking of the benefits of Chriſt's purchaſe, but opens it further.

Both the ſouls and bodies of believers, or them that are effectually called, juſtified, adopted, and ſanctified in their life, do receive or partake of more benefits of Chriſt's purchaſe at their death.

The benefits of Chriſt's purchaſe, that their ſouls receive at death, are, that then they are made perfect in holineſs, and do immediately paſs into glory, Heb. xii. 23.

The begun work of ſanctification, in the ſouls of believers, is perfected at death; ſo that their ſouls are, upon their ſeparation from the body, made perfect in holineſs, Heb. xii. 23. Sanctification perfected in the ſouls of believers at death, is the work of God's free grace, whereby they are wholly renewed in every part, after the image of God, to the utter aboliſhing of the remains of ſin in them, and are enabled eternally to live unto righteouſneſs in perfection, Rev. vii. 14, 15. 1 Cor. xiii. 8, 9, 10. It is the ſame Spirit of Chriſt who begins and carries on their ſanctification in life, that perfects their ſanctification at death, Philip. i. 6. The Spirit wholly renews the ſouls of believers in every part, after the image of God, to the utter aboliſhing of the remains of ſin in them, by communicating to them from Chriſt their head, a fulneſs of grace for grace in Chriſt, to the perfecting of his image on them, Eph. iv. 13. The Spirit enables them eternally to live unto righteouſneſs in perfection, eternally communicating to them, from Chriſt their head, ſupplies of grace in full meaſure, Rev. vii. ult. It appears, that there ſhall be ſuch an eternal communication of ſupplies of grace, from Chriſt to the ſaints, by the Spirit, in that they continue for ever members of Chriſt; and members cannot act, but by continued communication of influences from their head, John xiv. 16, 17.

The glory that the ſouls of believers paſs into, at death, is, a glorious ſtate, a glorious place, and a glorious ſociety. The glorious ſtate they paſs into, is a ſtate of ſhining in the perfect purity of the divine image, 2 Cor. iii. 18. The glorious place they paſs into, is the higheſt heavens, Philip. i. 23. And they are carried into it by angels, Luke xvi. 22. The glory of that place they are carried into, is the glory of God, and of the man Chriſt, ſhining in it, Rev. xxi. 23. But they are made perfect in holineſs, before they enter there, not after they are entered, Rev. xxi. 27. The glorious ſociety they paſs into, is the ſociety of God and Chriſt there, and of the holy angels and glorified ſaints, 2 Cor. v. 8. And that their paſſing into glory, is immediately after death, Luke xvi. 22. and xxiii. 43. There is no middle ſtate then, between believers their dying in Chriſt, and their paſſing into glory, 2 Cor. v. 8.

The benefits of Chriſt's purchaſe, that the bodies of believers receive at death, is, that being ſtill united to Chriſt, they reſt in their graves till the reſurrection. The grave is a place of reſt to the bodies of believers; and they reſt in their graves, otherwiſe than the wicked do in theirs, in that they reſt in them, as in their beds, perfumed by Chriſt's lying in the grave, Iſaiah lvii. 2. That the grave is ſuch a reſting place to the bodies of believers, while it is a priſon to others, is from their being ſtill united to Chriſt, Iſ. lvii. 2. The diſſolving of their bodies into ſmalleſt duſt, ſcattered here and there, doth not diſſolve the union between Chriſt and their bodies in that caſe, 1 Theſſ. iv. 14. And that, becauſe the bond of their union with him, is his infinite Spirit every where preſent, Rom. viii. 11. And they are to reſt ſo in their graves, till the reſurrection, Job xix. 27.

The dead will riſe again, Acts xxiv. 15. And the reſurrection of the dead will be at the laſt day, when Chriſt comes again to judgment, 1 Theſſ. iv. 15, 16. Some will be then found alive, as at this day. And they ſhall not die and riſe again; but inſtead of dying and riſing again, they ſhall be changed, 1 Cor. xv. 51. They that ſhall riſe again, are, all the dead, ſmall and great, juſt and unjuſt, John v. 28. The dead will be raiſed by the power of God, 1 Cor. vi. 14. God will not make them new bodies, but they ſhall riſe again with the ſelf-ſame bodies that were laid in the grave, 1 Cor. xv. 53. The poſſibility of ſuch a reſurrection of the dead appears from the omniſcience and almighty power of God, Rev. iv. 8. The concern that the omniſcience of God hath in the reſurrection of the dead, is, to diſcern every one's duſt from another's, and from the common duſt of the earth. And that is all the odds, between the firſt forming of man's body, and the forming it anew at the reſurrection: for man's body was originally duſt, lying here and there on the ground. The concern that the almighty power of God hath in it, is, to bring together all the duſt of the ſame body, from it again into a body, and reunite the ſoul thereto. The certainty of ſuch a reſurrection appears from the truth and faithfulneſs of God, who has ſaid it, John v. 28. 29. Dan. xii. 2. The raiſing of the dead, and the changing of theſe then alive, will be done in a moment, at the ſound of the laſt trumpet, 1 Cor. xv. 52. with 1 Theſſ. iv. 16, 17. And the raiſed and the changed bodies will differ from what they were before, during this life, in their qualities, though not in their ſubſtance, 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53.

Quest. 38. What benefits do believers receive from Chriſt at the reſurrection?

Answ. At the reſurrection, believers being raiſed up in glory, ſhall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and made perfectly bleſſed in full enjoying of God to all eternity.

Believers, or they that are effectually called, juſtified, adopted, and ſanctified in their life, ſhall receive or partake of the whole benefits of Chriſt's purchaſe, at the reſurrection. And they ſhall then receive the whole by theſe degrees, to wit, ſome in the reſurrection itſelf, more in the judgment, and the completing benefit after the judgment.

The benefit of Chriſt's purchaſe, they ſhall receive in the reſurrection itſelf, is, that they ſhall be raiſed up in glory, 1 Cor. xv. 43. The way how they will be raiſed, is that Chriſt will raiſe them as his own members, by his Spirit dwelling in them, even as one walking draws his limbs to him, Rom. viii. 11. The likeneſs in which their bodies ſhall be faſhioned anew, in the reſurrection, is the likeneſs of the glorious body of the ſecond Adam, 1 Cor. xv. 49. They will be raiſed incorruptible, glorious, ſtrong, and ſpiritual bodies, 1 Cor. xv. 42, 43, 44.

But the wicked ſhall be raiſed in diſhonour: and the way how they will be raiſed, is by the power of Chriſt as an offended Judge, John v. 28.

Immediately after the reſurrection, will follow the general judgment, Rev. xx. 13.

There will be a day of general judgment, Acts xvii. 31. The man Chriſt will be the Judge, Acts xvii. 31. And he will be ſeen with the bodily eyes of all, Rev. i. 7. At his coming to judgment, the world will be going on in their ordinary courſe and buſineſs of life, Matth. xxiv. 40, 41. The parties that ſhall be judged, are men and devils, Jude 6. The ſummons will be given to the quick and the dead, by the ſound of the laſt trumpet, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16, 17. The effect of that will be, that the dead ſhall be raiſed, and theſe that are alive changed, 1 Cor. xv. 52. They will be gathered from all places unto the place of judgment, by the miniſtry of angels, Mark xiii. 27. The righteous will meet the Lord Chriſt the Judge, in the air, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. And he will ſeat himſelf for the judgment, on a glorious throne, Matth. xxv. 31. The parties will be placed before him, the righteous on his right hand in the air, the wicked on his left upon the earth, Matth. xxv. 33. What men muſt give an account of then, is their thoughts, words, deeds, done in the body, 1 Cor. iv. 5. And judgment will be given on men, according to their works, good or bad, Rev. xx. 12. Howbeit, the good works of the righteous will not be conſidered, in the judgment, as the ground of their right to heaven; but as the evidences of it, Eph. ii. 8, 9. But the ill works of the unrighteous will be conſidered in it, as the juſt grounds of their damnation, Gal. iii. 10. Sentence will be pronounced on the righteous firſt, Matth. xxv. 33, 34.

The benefit of Chriſt's purchaſe, they ſhall receive in the judgment, is, that they ſhall be openly acknowledged and acquitted. They will be acknowledged and acquitted by Jeſus Chriſt the Judge, Matth. x. 32. He will acknowledge them to be his faithful ſervants, and the perſons whoſe names are written in his book of life, for whom he died, Matth. xxv. 23. with iii. 5. And he will acquit them from the guilt of all their ſins, Acts iii. 19. They are really ſo acknowledged and acquitted by him already, John xvii. 9, 10. But they will be acknowledged and acquitted by him in that day openly; namely, before his Father, angels, and men: and he will do it, by a ſentence pronounced and publiſhed with his own mouth from the throne, Rev. iii. 5. Matth xxv. 31, 32. 34. Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world, Matth. xxv. 34. The ground on which they will be openly acquitted in the day of judgment, will be the very ſame on which they are acquitted now, to wit, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt upon them, Philip. iii. 9. He will ſo acknowledge and acquit them openly, to wipe off the aſperſions now caſt on them by the men of the world, Iſa. lxvi. 5. The honour to be put upon them, immediately after that acknowledgment and acquittance, is, that they ſhall join with Chriſt, as aſſeſſors, in judging devils and wicked men, 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3.

It will be the lot of the wicked in the judgment, to be openly diſowned and condemned by Jeſus Chriſt. And that will be done by ſentence pronounced and publiſhed with his own mouth from the throne, Matth. vii. 23. That ſentence will be, Depart from me ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels, Matth. xxv. 41. The grounds on which they will be condemned are their ſins and ungodlineſs, in their hearts, lips and lives, Jude 15. The evidence on which their condemnation ſhall proceed, will be clear evidence and full conviction of their own conſciences, Rom. ii. 15, 16.

The particular place and time of the general judgment are not known to men, 1 Theſſ. v. 1, 2. The time of it is kept ſecret, that men may watch, and be always ready, Matth. xxiv. 42. 44.

Immediately after the judgment, follows the full execution of the ſentences, and the end of the world by the general conflagration, Mat. xxv. ult. 1 Cor. xv. 24, 25. with 2 Pet. iii. 10. But God will make new heavens and new earth, 2 Pet. iii. 13. The party that ſhall go off firſt, from the place of the judgment, is the damned, the ſaints ſeeing all their enemies turn their backs, Mat. xxv. ult. The fearful ſentence will be put in execution againſt them, in their being caſt out from the favourable preſence of God, and the glorious fellowſhip of Chriſt, his ſaints and angels, into hell, Rev. xx. ult. with Mat. xxv. 41. and Luke xvi. 26. And they will be puniſhed there with unſpeakable torments both of body and ſoul, 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8, 9. Theſe torments will never have an end, Rev. xx. 10. And in that their miſerable ſtate, for eternity, they will have the ſociety of the devil and his angels, Matth. xxv. 41.

The completing benefit of Chriſt's purchaſe, believers ſhall receive after the judgment, is, that they ſhall be made perfectly bleſſed, in full enjoying of God, to all eternity. They will go away with Chriſt, after the judgment, into heaven, the ſeat of the Bleſſed, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17. And they will be there, in a ſtate of perfect bleſſedneſs, or complete happineſs, both in ſoul and body, Matth. xiii. 43. They will be made perfectly bleſſed, or completely happy, in their being for ever freed from all ſin and miſery, want and imperfection, and filled to the brim with all their ſouls can deſire, Eph. v. 27. What ſhall make them perfectly bleſſed, or completely happy, is full enjoying of God to all eternity, Pſalm xvi. ult. They will enjoy God in heaven, by ſight of the divine glory, to the complete ſatisfying of their underſtanding; and by the experience of the divine goodneſs, to the complete ſatisfying of their will, Matth. v. 8. The ſight they will have of the divine glory, is a full and clear knowledge of God, as by ſeeing face to face, Ex. xxxiii. 18. 20. The experience they will have of the divine goodneſs is an unreſtrained partaking of the all-fulneſs thereof, Pſal. xxxvi. 8, 9.

The creature's underſtanding and experience can never, in any caſe, reach all the glory and goodneſs that is in God; becauſe it is infinite, Job xi. 7. But the glorified ſaints will enjoy him fully, enjoying him to the utmoſt of their enlarged capacities, Pſal. xvi. ult. And they will enjoy him immediately, 1 John iii. 2. Not that they will ever enjoy him otherwiſe than through the Mediator Chriſt their head, John xvii. 2, 3. But they will enjoy him without the intervention of outward means, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. And that their full and immediate enjoyment of God, will laſte to all eternity, 1 Theſſ. iv. 17.

The end for which the ſaints ſhall be made completely happy, in full enjoying of God, is God's glory, Prov. xvi. 4. And they being made perfectly bleſſed, or completely happy, in full enjoying of God to all eternity, will anſwer that end, in glorifying God, by loving, praiſing, and ſerving him perfectly to all eternity, Pſal. lxxxvi. 12, 13.

SERMONS AND DISCOURSES ON Several Important Subjects in Divinity.

And by it he being dead, yet ſpeaketh, Heb. ix. 4.

ADVERTISEMENT prefixed to the Octavo edition.

THE diſcourſes and ſermons contained in this, and the following volume, are all printed from the manuſcripts of the worthy author, my father; whom I muſt love and honour in the grave. The Miſcellany Queſtions, and Paraphraſe on the Epiſtle to the Galatians, were written in his younger years, while he was miniſter of Simprin, for his own improvement, and not with any deſign of printing them: though it is hoped the publication of them now, may be for the edification of the church of Chriſt. The ſermons are alſo taken from his own notes, prepared for the pulpit only; and therefore they are not ſo full as doubtleſs they would have been, had he prepared them for the preſs. But though theſe volumes labour under the diſadvantages which commonly attend poſthumous works, there is ground to hope they may, through the divine bleſſing, be of ſingular uſe to the people of God.

They who had the happineſs to be acquainted with the author, and have heard him preach, eſpecially thoſe who lived under his miniſtry, will eaſily obſerve, in theſe diſcourſes, that clear and diſtinct method of opening up texts, and deducing points of doctrine from them, wherein he excelled; as alſo, the occaſional opening up the ſcriptures in the courſe of his ſermons; with the cloſe and warm application of the ſeveral ſubjects to the caſes both of ſaints and ſinners; in all which he ſhewed himſelf approved unto God, a workman that needed not to be aſhamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. He uſed to obſerve, that when he had continued for ſome time preaching on a ſubject, he ſtill got the clearer inſight into it, when he came to bring it home upon the conſciences of his hearers.

The ſermons on Rev. x. 6. 7. were the laſt which the author preached from the pulpit. But ſo great was his delight in his Maſter's work, and ſo earneſt his deſire to be occupied therein, when he ſhould be called hence, that he preached two or three Sabbaths from a window in the Manſe to the people ſitting without, after that he was no longer able to go to the kirk. And as the two Sabbaths, or three at moſt, in which he was, by his growing indiſpoſition, laid aſide from his public work, were heavy upon him; ſo his Maſter was pleaſed to call him home on the Saturday, May 20. 1732, to celebrate the eternal Sabbath in that place where the inhabitants ſhall not ſay any more, I am ſick.

The ſubjects here handled are of the laſt importance, both to ſaints and ſinners; and therefore juſtly claim their moſt attentive conſideration. The character of the author is long ſince eſtabliſhed; and any further commendation of him, as there is no need for it, ſo neither would it be ſo decent from the pen of ſuch a near friend as his Son.

MISCELLANY QUESTIONS.

QUEST. I.

Whether or not the ſins of believers, while unrepented of, make them liable to eternal puniſhment?

THERE are two things which the children of God ought diligently to ſtudy; what they are in themſelves; and what they are, and do enjoy, in Chriſt. The conſideration of the former will ſerve to keep them humble; and the knowledge of the latter will be a ſtorehouſe of comfort againſt diſcouragement, a magazine of armour, wherewith they may reſiſt the devil in his aſſaults, and will afford unto them great matter of thankfulneſs and praiſe, which well becometh Chriſtians. For, to exalt Chriſt, is the Chriſtian's great work; and no wonder, ſeeing it is the great deſign of the goſpel to exalt him, and the riches of free grace, as the apoſtle Paul almoſt every where teacheth. Wherefore we may ſafely lay it down for a certain concluſion, and rule of doctrine, That whatſoever doth moſt exalt Chriſt and free grace, ſo as it have a native tendency to a holy walk, is a goſpel-truth; which, if duly noticed, will readily lead us unto a true anſwer to the queſtion propoſed. Now, amongſt all the privileges which believers do in their own perſons enjoy, the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made them free, is not the leaſt; which, how far it extends itſelf with reſpect to the ſins of believers, is the ſubject of the preſent inquiry. In which, that we may the more happily proceed, I ſhall premiſe theſe few things to be conſidered.

1. Sin is a relative term, and connoteth ſomewhat to which it hath a relation; and that is a law; For where there is no law, (ſaith the apoſtle,) there is no tranſgreſſion; and ſin is a deviation from the law of God, to which the creature, in point of right, is ſubject; and therefore is called anomia, 1 John iii. 4. Now, there are two things in the law which are here to be taken notice of; the command, which is the rule of life; and the threatening, which is a denunciation of the puniſhment the guilty doth incur. Agreeably thereto, there are two things in ſin, (beſides the action itſelf, (in ſins of commiſſion,) which may be called the ſubſtratum, or the το materiale of ſin, which is metaphyſically good,) Firſt, The diſconformity of the action (in ſins of commiſſion,) and of the power and principle of action (in ſins of omiſſion,) to the law of God; which may be called the το formale of ſin, being that which conſtitutes the action, or the power, ſinful. Secondly, There is the guilt of it; which is an obligation to puniſhment; and this is a conſequent of ſin, flowing both ex natura rei, & ex inſtitutione Dei; from the nature of ſin in itſelf, and the ſanction of the divine law.

2. The guilt of ſin may be conſidered two ways. (1.) In actu primo. (2.) In actu ſecundo. As it is conſidered under the former notion, it denotes the intrinſic demerit of ſin, whereby the ſinner, in whatſoever ſtate he be, doth indeed deſerve the wrath and curſe of God for his ſin; and that ſo much the more as the ſin is aggravated by light, mercies received, and the like. And thus believers are more guilty than others. In this ſenſe, guilt cannot be ſeparated from ſin, no more than riſibility from a man, or heat from the fire. The guilt of ſin conſidered in actu ſecundo, denotes an actual obligation to undergo the penalty denounced in the law, whether a remiſſion be to follow or not. There is a vaſt difference betwixt theſe two, and therefore the diſtinction is carefully to be noticed in this queſtion. The difference betwixt them is as great, as betwixt a man's deſerving a ſentence of death to paſs upon him, and the actual paſſing of the ſentence. And although guilt, under the former notion, is inſeparable from ſin, yet in this ſenſe it is ſeparable therefrom; even as the three children in the fiery furnace were in actu primo, combuſtible, but not in actu ſecundo, the fire could have no power over them. The pardon of ſin takes away the guilt of it in the laſt ſenſe, though in the former it ſtill remains. And ſo Chriſt took on our guilt in the latter, but it remains with us in the former ſenſe. Turretine calls the one potential guilt, the other actual, the one, ſays he, reſpects condemnability, the other condemnation.

3. We muſt alſo diſtinguiſh betwixt actual guilt, or the actual binding over the ſinner to puniſhment; and the execution, or actual inflicting of the puniſhment. The former may be where the latter ſhall never follow: as the elect unconverted are lying under the condemnatory ſentence of the law, though it ſhall never be executed upon them. The confounding of theſe two cannot but lead men into miſtakes. All the three do clearly appear, if we compare the caſe of a ſinner with that of malefactors committing capital crimes. The malefactor by his deed firſt deſerves death, then he is adjudged thereto, and laſt of all the ſentence is executed. All theſe are not only to be diſtinguiſhed, but they may indeed be divided; which I need not ſtand to enlarge upon.

4. Puniſhment is taken either largely or ſtrictly. Largely, it is uſed for the afflictions, or mala triſtia, that come upon men, whether good or bad, for their ſin, Lev. xxvi. 41. Lam. iii. 39. So the ſcripture uſeth it, ſo orthodox divines uſe it ſometimes; and therefore we may make uſe of the word in the preſent inquiry, without any imputation of heterodoxy. Strictly ſo called it reſpects only thoſe evils that are inflicted for ſin upon men, by the Lord as a juſt Judge, without any mixture of fatherly love; and ſo it is termed judicial puniſhment, in oppoſition to the evils inflicted on the children of God, flowing from fatherly love. In reſpect of the end of puniſhment, it is either correctory or vindictive. The firſt is inflicted for the correction of the offender; the other for the ſatisfying of juſtice, without reſpect to the amendment of the party; which I underſtand of God's intention ſimply; for as to the vindictive puniſhments inflicted on the reprobates, on this ſide of time in hell, the amendment of the party may be juſtly looked on as the finis operis, though we cannot rationally ſuppoſe it to be the finis operantis, ſeeing it is not effected. In reſpect of its duration, it is either temporary or eternal. Correctory puniſhments are temporary, in regard the end of them is effected, therefore are they confined within the limits of time; but the other are eternal, and never have an end, in regard men are never able completely to ſatisfy the juſtice of God.

5. Laſtly, The ſins of believers are of two ſorts. Firſt, Some ſuch as they having fallen into, do lie in, at leaſt for a time, through the growing power of corruption, not having riſen therefrom by the renewed acts of grace. In this caſe was David, when Nathan came unto him, 2 Sam. xii. Secondly, Some they have fallen into, but, by the influences of the Spirit upon the principles of grace in their hearts, putting grace in exerciſe, they have recovered therefrom, having renewed their faith and repentance. In this caſe find we David, Pſal. li. Theſe things premiſed, we Aſſert. I. That the ſins of believers, whether repented of or not, in regard of their diſconformity to the law of God, make them liable in actu primo, not only to temporal, but to eternal puniſhment. This is ſo clear, that none who know what God is, or what ſin is, will deny it, but will chearfully ſubſcribe to the truth of it. Therefore David teſtifies, that no living can be juſtified in God's ſight, Pſal. cxliii. 2.; and when the worſt comes upon us here from our Father for ſin, we muſt ſtill ſay, That with us he hath not dealt as we ſinned, Pſal. ciii. 10. Therefore believers not only may, but ought to confeſs their ſins, mourn over them, condemn themſelves for them, &c. And the contrary practice is ſo far from a goſpel-ſpirit, regardleſs of the honour of God, and the purity of his law. Believers, ſo far as in them lies, by their ſins do caſt themſelves into the fiery furnace of eternal wrath, ſo that if one were not with them, like unto the Son of God, the fire ſhould actually faſten on them: wherefore they may look on themſelves, as indeed they are, brands plucked out of the fire; and ſing that ſong, Not unto us, Lord, not to us, &c. Pſal. cxv. 1. And the truth is, as one ſays well, in ſome reſpects the ſins of the godly are worſe than the ſins of others; for they grieve the Spirit more, they diſhonour Chriſt more, they grieve the ſaints more, they wound the name of God more, they are more againſt the love, and grace, and favour of God, than other mens ſins are.

Aſſert. II. The ſins of believers, while unrepented of, make them liable actually to the temporary ſtrokes of God's fatherly hand. So that a guilty conſcience in a believer, fearing a ſtroke from the hand of God, doth not fear where no fear is: for though God ſees no iniquity in Jacob, nor tranſgreſſion in Iſrael, ſo as to puniſh them in a way of vindictive juſtice, as he does the reprobate, though Papiſts would have it ſo, yet no doubt he ſees it in them, ſo as to puniſh them with the ſtroke of a fatherly hand; which is manifeſt (whatever Antinomians ſay to the contrary) from the many inſtances thereof recorded in ſcripture, as Moſes, Samſon, David, and many others, and from that plain ſcripture, Pſal. lxxxix. 30. 31, 32. 'If his children forſake my law ——'Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the 'rod,' &c. of which more anon.

Aſſert. III. The ſins of believers, even while unrepented of, do not make them liable, in actu ſecundo, to the ſtroke of vindictive juſtice, or make them not actually liable to eternal wrath. Take it in hypotheſi thus; David being a gracious man, even while he lay under the ſins of murder and adultery unrepented of, though he did lay himſelf open to the temporary ſtrokes of God's paternal anger, and deſerved eternal death thereby, yet he was not actually liable to eternal wrath.

Argument I. That promiſe, Pſal. lxxxix. 30, 31, 32, 33. ſeems to carry it ſo, 'If his children forſake my 'law——Then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with 'the rod, and their iniquity with ſtripes. Nevertheleſs, 'my loving-kindneſs will I not utterly take from him, 'nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail.' Where it is evident, that by the rod and ſtripes, he means only temporary ſtrokes of his fatherly anger. This is a repetition of that promiſe, 2 Sam. vii. 14, 15. Let us inquire to whom theſe ſcriptures do relate, that it may be ſeen how they favour our purpoſe. To exclude David and his ſon Solomon here, and the continuance of David's line and kingdom, were unaccountable, eſpecially conſidering that clauſe, 2 Sam. vii. 15. As I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee. But ſurely it looks farther than to David and his ſeed, even to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; as appears from 1 Chron. xxii. 10. He is the true Solomon, the builder of the Lord's houſe, whoſe kingdom is eſtabliſhed for ever indeed; and of him Solomon the king was a type. David himſelf teſtifieth this, while he ſhews, that theſe promiſes were to be fulfilled in him, 2 Sam. vii. 21. 'For thy Word's 'ſake, (ſays he) haſt thou done this,' compare 1 Chron. xvii. 19. 'For thy Servant's ſake haſt thou done all this.' Where it is obſerved by Witſius, and others before him, that whom he calls in the one place, the Lord's word, in the other place he calls the Lord's ſervant, meaning thereby the Meſſiah. But the apoſtle puts it beyond all doubt; when ſpeaking of Chriſt, he cites that ſcripture, and applies it to him, I will be to him a Father, and he ſhall be to me a Son, Heb. i. 5. From all which it ſeems to be plain, that the promiſe mentioned does belong to Chriſt's ſpiritual ſeed; that is, believers; 'who are 'born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of 'the will of man, but of God, John i. 12, 13. Here then is a promiſe of temporary puniſhments, which are to be merely correctory, to bring them in from extravagancies, into which, by temptation, they may fall. And I think I may call it a promiſe of the covenant; for it is much to be doubted, if the goſpel and covenant of grace knows any threatenings properly and ſtrictly ſo called. And truly this fatherly nurture is that which the children of God cannot want; yea, theſe rods and ſtripes are the peculiar privilege of thoſe who are his; and they have as good right to them by the covenant, as to any other benefit. Here we have a diſcovery of the Lord's way of dealing with his people as plainly laid down as any where elſe; yet not the leaſt hint of any actual liableneſs to eternal wrath. So that we may juſtly conclude, that their liableneſs to temporal ſtrokes, is their utmoſt hazard; which will more clearly appear, if we conſider, under what notion the Lord deals thus with them; even as they are Chriſt's ſeed, the fruit of his ſoul-travail under the pangs of death, Iſa. liii. 10, 11. in which he having taken on their guilt, they can be no more liable; only the rod of a reconciled God remains to them, called the rod of men, 2 Sam. vii. 14.

Arg. II. If the ſins of believers, even while unrepented of, do make them actually liable to eternal wrath, it muſt be by virtue of ſome law: wherefore there muſt be one found in this caſe, who may ſay of the believer, as the Jews ſaid of Chriſt, 'We have a law, and by our 'law he ought to die;' or, which is all one upon the matter, he muſt be liable to death by ſome covenant; for however God might have exacted obedience of man and threatened and inflicted puniſhment in caſe of diſobedience, merely upon the account of his ſovereignty, without making any covenant with him; yet, being pleaſed to enter into a covenant with man, he deals with him covenant-ways; which I think I need not ſtand to prove. But I ſay, there is no ſuch law, and no ſuch covenant, by virtue whereof the believer can be made actually liable to eternal wrath; for if there were any ſuch, it muſt either be the covenant of grace, or the covenant of works. I can ſcarcely think it will be ſaid, that it is the covenant of grace, by virtue whereof the believer, under ſin unrepented of, ought to die; for that were to bring in the law, with its curſing and condemning power, into the new covenant, and ſo utterly to overturn it, and make it a covenant of works. The tenor of the covenant of grace runs thus, 'Believe and thou 'ſhalt be ſaved,' but it needs not ſay, 'He that believeth not ſhall be damned,' for the covenant of works ſays that completely, and ſecures the deſtruction of thoſe that deſpiſe the covenant of grace, but Fruſtra fit per plura, &c. It muſt needs be ſaid then, that it is by virtue of the covenant of works, or by the law. But the ſcripture teacheth us, that believers being now under the covenant of grace, are no more under that of works; for a man cannot be under both; they are therein incompatable. We are plainly taught in God's word, that believers are 'dead to the law,' Rom. vii. 4. Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body, (i. e. the ſufferings of Chriſt in his body,) (Pars pro toto, Synec.) that ye ſhould be married to another, even to him who is raiſed from the dead; that is to Chriſt. It ſeems then, that the apoſtle is of opinion, that a man cannot be married to Chriſt, unleſs he be dead to the law, more than a wife can be married to two huſbands at once; that is plainly, one cannot be both under the covenant of works, and the covenant of grace, at one time; for if to be married to Chriſt ſignify the bringing of the man within the covenant of grace, which I think cannot be denied, with any colour of reaſon, by thoſe that acknowledge conſent of parties, neceſſary to the making up of the covenant; the being dead to the law, muſt be freedom from the covenant of works. Now, I pray you, what is it that makes the believer liable in any caſe, to eternal puniſhment? If there be any thing, it muſt needs be the law; but we hear he is dead to it; but if dead to it, how can it have any power over him? To be dead to the law, ſays Luther, is to have nothing at all to do with it; not to be held by the law, but to be free from it, and not to know it. And ſo the orthodox teach with one conſent, that believers are free from the law, as to its curſing and condemning power; for Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us, Gal. iii. 13. And indeed, according to the apoſtle's reaſoning in the forecited place, the law, as it is the covenant of works, and as to its condemning power, has no more to do with believers, or no more authority over them, than a man has over her, who alive was his wife, but is now dead: and therefore the believer needs no more fear the threats of the law, nor concern himſelf with them, as directed againſt him, than a dead wife with the threatnings of him who ſometime was her huſband; for what has the law to do with him now, when death hath diſſolved the relation? The apoſtle teacheth the ſame doctrine, Rom. vi. 14. where, ſpeaking to believers, he tells them, it is their privilege, that 'they are 'not under the law, but under grace.' The law and grace, have two diſtinct dominions: therefore a man under grace is not liable to anſwer at the court of the law, he being not under the juriſdiction of the law, or covenant of works. So that the law, with its condemning power, can no more reach the believer, than the laws of this kingdom, thoſe that dwell under the great Turk. From all which I may thus argue, he that is thus divorced from the law, that lives not under its dominion, but is as a dead man unto it, cannot be condemned by it, nor by virtue of it made liable to puniſhment; but ſuch is every believer. Ergo. And I doubt not, but if we were as much dead to the law in point of practice, as we are in point of privilege, we would more eaſily believe this. But the truth is, that, in reſpect of practice, believers are rather dying than actually dead to the law. And it is not eaſy for a man that is exerciſed, to quit living to the law; and therefore Luther ſpeaking of this privilege of believers, has that feeling expreſſion, “Theſe things (ſays he) are eaſily ſaid, but happy he who knows them well in the conflict of conſcience; that is, who, when ſin ruſhes on him, when the law accuſeth and terrifieth him, were able to ſay, What is that to me, that thou, O law, makes me guilty, and convinces me that I have committed many ſins? That is nothing to me. Now am I deaf, I hear thee not, becauſe I am dead to thee.” This will be yet more clear and convincing, if we conſider, that the law is dead to them, as well as they to it, Rom. vii. 1. ‘Know ye not, brethren, how that the law hath dominion over a man, as long as he liveth? So our tranſlation reads it; the words in the original are, eph' hoſon chronon ze: and may as well be rendered, as long as it liveth, referring the life to the law, not to the man. And I think the context does fairly carry it this way, for all along this diſcourſe, the apoſtle ſpeaketh of the law under the notion of an huſband, even the firſt huſband to elect ſinners; and it is clear, that in the two verſes immediately following, he ſpeaks of the life and death of the huſband: ‘The woman is bound to her huſband, ſo long as he liveth; but if the huſband be dead’—ver. 2. ‘If while her huſband liveth—but if her huſband be dead,’ ver. 3. So the connection of the fourth verſe with the former, plainly appears; for having premiſed, that the law is dead to the believer, he concludes, that therefore they are dead to it, and their relation to it is now ceaſed. And thus it is read and underſtood, by ſeveral judicious interpreters, both ancient and modern. The apoſtle more clearly aſſerts this, ver. 6. ‘That being dead wherein we were held,’ apothanontos en ho cateichometha. The context alſo cleareth this expoſition: for the apoſtle adds, ‘that we ſhould ſerve in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter;’ importing ſo much, as that wherein we are held, made us to ſerve God in oldneſs of the letter, viz. of the law: which cannot be properly ſaid of the fleſh, or of ſin, for that ſtirs up, even to ſin againſt the letter of the law; but may well be ſaid of the law, with its threatenings, which forcibly ſets on even the unregenerate to outward obedience. Whereunto well agrees the term uſed by the apoſtle, ſpeaking here of the law, ‘in which (he ſays) we are held;’ the word ſignifies forcibly holden, and is uſed of thoſe who are detained in priſon and cuſtody, which the apoſtle, Gal. iii. 23. doth plainly ſpeak of, the keeping under the law;—We are kept, ephrouroumetha, kept as in a priſon, and ſhut up, &c. And this word held ſeems plainly to anſwer to that, ver. 2. ‘The woman is bound to her huſband.’ Now, that huſband is dead, even the law wherein we were held. Thus ſaith Luther, “The law which bound me, and held me captive, is now bound and holden captive by grace.” The law then is dead to the believer, Chriſt by his death hath been the death of the law, in point of condemning power: the law, which was the ſtrength of ſin, that is, whereby ſin had a power of binding over the ſoul to eternal wrath, is now gone by the death of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 56. By his blood he hath ‘blotted out the handwriting, (Col. ii. 14.) nailing it to his croſs.’ For to the croſs two were nailed, the Son of God, and the law of God. The law nailed Chriſt to the croſs, and Chriſt would not die alone, but crucifies the law that crucified him; as Samſon at his death was the death of thoſe that were the cauſe of his death. Upon which conſideration, Luther brings in the believer inſulting over the law, with a kind of holy pride, and thus ſpeaking to the law: “I do nothing value thy terrors and threatenings, becauſe thou haſt crucified the Son of God. Therefore the ſin which thou haſt committed againſt him, is unpardonable; thou haſt loſt thy right; and now hereafter thou art not only to Chriſt conquered and ſtrangled, but alſo to me believing in him, to whom he hath gifted that victory.” Thus he. All which being conſidered, I think it will be very hard to ſhew, how a believer can be actually liable to eternal wrath.

Arg. III. Thoſe ſcriptures which declare the believer to be free from condemnation, plainly teach this doctrine which we now prove. John iii. 18. He that believeth, is not condemned; but he that believeth not, is condemned already. It is eaſy to ſee the meaning of this, which is ſaid of him that believeth, if we conſider the antitheſis in the text; He that believeth not, is condemned already; not that the ſentence is already executed upon, but that he is ſentenced by the law, and ſo liable, in actu ſecundo, to eternal wrath: ſo he that believeth is under no ſentence, or is not ſo liable as the other. So John v. 24. ‘He that believeth, ſhall not come into condemnation, but is paſſed from death to life;’ where it is plain, that the ſame thing is taught; for paſſing from a legal death, to a legal life, which is nothing elſe but the taking off of the ſentence of death, whereby the ſoul is made actually liable to eternal wrath, is oppoſed to coming into condemnation. The words in the original preſs this more ſtrongly; eis kriſin uk erchetai, alla metabebeken ek tu thanatu; cometh not (in the preſent time) into judgment, but hath paſſed, &c. the word kriſis here, and krinomai in the former, being ſimple words, do no doubt ſignify judgment, and to be judged, but tropically condemnation: only properly, I think the judgment or condemnation here ſpoken of, relates not only to the judgment and condemnation to come, but alſo to that which is in this life. But nothing can be more plain than what the apoſtle hath, Rom. viii. 1. ‘There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus.’ It is eaſy to ſubſume: but believers, even lying under unrepented-of ſin, are in Chriſt Jeſus; therefore there is no condemnation even to them. I ſhall not ſay with Jackſon, that the meaning is, there is no cauſe of a damnatory ſentence in them; but I ſhall ſay with judicious interpreters, that it holds forth freedom from guilt, whereby they might be bound over to eternal puniſhment; and am well content to hold by the argument from this place, which Wedelin ſays the orthodox uſe againſt the Papiſts, for the perfection of juſtification. The argument is this. “Where there is no condemnation, there is no puniſhment; but in the juſtified there is no condemnation: Ergo. In them there is no puniſhment: or, they are bound over to no penal ſatisfaction. The propoſition is proved, becauſe condemnation is an adjudging to puniſhment.” Thus he, how ſhall the force of this argument be invalidated? Will any ſay, that this privilege is reſtricted by the following clauſe, ‘that walk not after the fleſh, but after the Spirit;’ and ſo belongs not to thoſe who lie under unrepented-of guilt? This were to make two ſorts of perſons in Chriſt; ſome in Chriſt, that ‘walk after the Spirit;’ and others in him, that ‘walk after the fleſh;’ and if there be ſuch, let us no more aſk, what concord Chriſt can have with Belial, light with darkneſs? But the apoſtle plainly applies the not walking after the fleſh, but after the Spirit, to all believers, to all in whom the ‘righteouſneſs of the law is fulfilled,’ ver. 4. And the walkers after the fleſh, he makes the ſame with them that are in the fleſh, ver. 5. who cannot pleaſe God, ver. 8. have not the Spirit, and are none of Chriſt's, ver. 9. If any ſhall ſay, that the meaning is, there is no actual condemnation to them, though there want not ſomething condemnable in them; it is the truth, and the very thing we plead for, viz. that though by their ſins they deſerve to be damned, yet there is no ſentence paſſed againſt them, binding them over to eternal wrath, even though this ſentence ſhould never be put in execution. But this is not the meaning of thoſe that make this exception; but thus they underſtand it, as we commonly ſay, they ſhall never be damned; that is, the ſentence ſhall never be executed upon them; the wrath they are actually liable to by their ſins, ſhall be diverted; the antecedent being put for the conſequent, condemnation for the execution of it. But if ſo, I would fain learn of thoſe men, what the apoſtle hath done, in aſſerting this (ſeemingly at leaſt,) great privilege of believers beyond others? and why he adds this now to it, importing, as it would ſeem, ſomewhat which thoſe perſons had not before? Are there not thouſands out of Chriſt, that are as highly privileged as they? Are there not many that are yet enemies to Chriſt, walking after the fleſh, regardleſs of the Spirit, who ſhall never have the ſentence of condemnation executed upon them, but ſhall certainly be ſaved? Is it not as true of the elect unconverted, that the ſentence ſhall never be executed againſt them, as of believers? Yea ſurely. It muſt needs then be meant of this actual liableneſs to eternal wrath, the freedom from which is the peculiar privilege of believers.

Arg. IV. If believers under unrepented-of ſin, be actually liable to eternal wrath, or the ſtrokes of vindictive juſtice, then they are liable to pay a debt over again which hath been once already paid to the full; which is abſurd, and unworthy of the divine Majeſty, impeacheth his juſtice, as our divines ſay againſt the Papiſts, and reflects diſhonour on the merits of Chriſt's death. We believe, that by once offering Chriſt hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified, he hath fully paid the believer's debt, and ſatisfied for all his ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come: and ſhall the believer himſelf be yet liable to pay that debt? This argument Beza hath pithily holden forth in his confeſſion of faith, "Thou "wilt ſay then, (ſays he,) that there be infinite iniqui"ties in me, which deſerve eternal death. I do grant; "but I add more to it, which thou (Satan) haſt mali"ciouſly omitted; that is, that the iniquities which "be in me, were ſufficiently revenged and puniſhed in "Jeſus Chriſt, who hath borne the judgment of God "in my ſtead. So upon this I make my concluſion "contrary to thine; that is to ſay, foraſmuch as God "is righteous, and will not be paid double, and Jeſus "Chriſt, God and man, hath, by one infinite obedi"ence, made ſatisfaction to the infinite majeſty of "God; it followeth, that my iniquities can no more "fray nor trouble me, my accounts and debts being "aſſuredly raſed and wiped out by the precious blood "of Jeſus Chriſt, who was made accurſed for me." But here it will perhaps be ſaid, that if this prove any thing it proves too much, viz. that the elect unconverted are not actually liable to eternal wrath; for Chriſt hath ſatisfied for their ſins, as for the ſins of believers. In anſwer to this, it would be conſidered, that there is a vaſt difference betwixt a man's paying of his own debt in perſon, and another's paying it for him. When he pays it himſelf, he is ipſo facto diſcharged of it; but when another pays it for him, the debtor is not preſently diſcharged from the debt, in regard of the ſurety, but to be diſcharged when the ſurety pleaſeth. Now, our ſins were charged on Chriſt as our ſurety, and he did pay our debt; look therefore, when he pleaſeth, we are diſcharged from them, and that (ſaith he) is upon your believing, not before, Rom. v. 1. So Bridge. It is certain, the remiſſion of ſin, which takes away actual liableneſs to eternal wrath, is not communicated but to thoſe who believe; for as Pariſienſis ſaith, as the damnation of Adam doth not paſs, but by natural generation, upon thoſe that are carnally generate of him; ſo the grace of Chriſt, and remiſſion of ſin, doth not paſs, but by regeneration, to thoſe who are ſpiritually regenerated through him. Further it is to be conſidered, that although the payment be made by the ſurety, yet the debtor is ſtill liable in law, till it be inſtructed that the debt was paid for him in particular; the ground of which is the union betwixt the cautioner and the principal debtor. Now, it is certain, that the union betwixt Chriſt and a ſoul is made by faith only; that is, when the ſoul believes, and not till then. It is true, that from all eternity there was an union betwixt Chriſt and the elect, in the deſignation and decree of God; but as ſure it is, that decreta Dei nihil ponunt in actu. To this purpoſe ſpeaks Mr Durham, "It is not (ſays he) "the cautioner's payment ſimply, that is ſuſtained, as "a relevant defence in judgment, till that be inſtruc"ted, and except the defence be founded thereon; for "ſo the law provideth; ſo it is not Chriſt ſuffering "ſimply, but his ſatisfaction pleaded by faith, and fled "unto, that juſtifieth." And thus I think there remains nothing in this exception to invalidate the argument; for the elect unconverted are ſtill liable to eternal wrath, in regard the time ſet by the ſurety for their perſonal diſcharge is not yet come; they are not yet Chriſt's ſeed by regeneration; they are not yet united to Chriſt; nor have they by faith pleaded his ſatisfaction before the bar of the court of heaven. But believers being united to Chriſt by faith, even then when they lie under unrepented-of ſins, cannot be liable. And therefore the believer, even in this caſe, may look the law in the face, and ſay, It is God that juſtifieth, who is he that condemneth? I was crucified with Chriſt, in him I obeyed, in him I ſatisfied thee, O law, in whatſoever was demanded; I am therefore no more liable to thy condemnation: and with Luther, "O law, "thou haſt no power over me, in vain doſt thou ac"cuſe and condemn me; I believe in Chriſt, he has "poured out his life moſt largely for me, beſides him "I will hear and ſee nothing." This, I ſay, a believer may do de jure, though he cannot de facto, under thoſe ſins that waſte the conſcience, and darken his ſight of his intereſt in Chriſt.

If it be alledged, that there muſt ſtill be a freſh application of the merits of Chriſt's death, before the ſoul have the benefit of them for the particular ſin, and repentance muſt be renewed for the ſame end; this is a mere begging of the queſtion. But I truly wonder how repentance comes in here; for it can have no inſtrumentality here, conſiſtent with the nature of the new covenant; for it is a giving, not a taking grace; and therefore the Lord hath made it to be of faith, not of repentance, that it might be of grace, Rom. iv. 16. As for that of the neceſſity of faith, it is more tolerable, and there is no doubt but it is neceſſary, in order to the attaining of the comfort of the pardon of after-ſins, as repentance may likewiſe be. But I believe, that the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is a perfect righteouſneſs; and that at the firſt moment of believing, we put on the Lord Jeſus with his perfect righteouſneſs: that the Lord ſeeing us clothed therewith, declareth us perfectly juſt; and that we remain forever, without interruption, clothed with the ſame, and are thereby kept from all liableneſs to eternal wrath in actu ſecundo. So that there is no need of freſh application here for this end, the thing ſuppoſed being falſe. But I would gladly underſtand what they mean by a freſh application of the merits of Chriſt's death here: for either they are applied to them before that application, or not till then, or that righteouſneſs is theirs before the freſh application, or not till it be anew applied. If they ſay the latter, then the ſtate of juſtification is interrupted by the believer's after ſins; if the firſt, then they cannot be liable to eternal wrath. This muſt only be needful for the comfort of their privilege. And this leads us to another argument: which is,

Arg. V. Believers, even in their worſt caſe, have a perfect righteouſneſs, and ſo are perfectly righteous; therefore they can never be liable to eternal wrath. The reaſon is, becauſe to be perfectly righteous, is to be conform to the law; but to be perfectly conform to the law, and yet to be liable to the condemnation of the law, is a flat contradiction. It is true, that the righteouſneſs is not originally and inherently theirs; but it is derivatively theirs, and imputed to them; which with reſpect to Adam's ſin, was ſufficient to make us actually liable to eternal flames; and why ſhall not the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt be ſufficient to make us free from that actual liableneſs to the revenging wrath of God? Are they not perfectly righteous? Hath the law any more to require of them than what it has got? There were but two things it could demand, according to the ſtricteſt tenor of the firſt covenant: to do and to ſuffer perfectly; and they have in Chriſt their head both done, and ſuffered accordingly, Rom. viii. 3, 4.—'That the righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us,' Rom. vi. 10, 11. Gal. iv. 4, 5. "We learn (ſays Beza) to pay by him, who ſet himſelf debtor and payer for us, who hath put himſelf in our place, and hath paid our debt, as the principal debtor, even unto the uttermoſt penny, in ſuch wiſe that the rigour of the law, which did before fear us, now comforteth us in Jeſus Chriſt; foraſmuch as life eternal is due to thoſe who have fully obeyed the law, and Jeſus Chriſt hath fulfilled the ſame for us." Now, ſurely, what Chriſt hath done for us, is as good as if we had done it ourſelves; yea, for the honour of the law, it is a thouſand times better, becauſe of the incomparable dignity of the perſon. What then ſhould make them liable at any time to eternal wrath, being at all times clothed with this perfect righteouſneſs? It cannot be, that, falling aſleep, and faith not being in exerciſe, they let the grips of it go; and therefore they are thus made obnoxious to divine vengeance. But ſurely it is not ſo eaſily made ineffectual. If inherent grace remain ſo ſecurely under the grievous backſlidings of the regenerate, that they cannot become children of the devil; much more doth the imputed righteouſneſs remain, ſo that they cannot become children of wrath, that is, actually liable thereto, Eph. ii. 2. If they cannot keep the covenant, the covenant will keep them. If any ſhall ſay, that God will not impute it to us for the covering of that particular ſin or ſins we lie under for the time, till we do anew receive it by faith for that end; it is falſe; for if a perfect righteouſneſs be at all imputed, it covereth all ſins. The ground of this opinion ſeems to be a miſtake anent the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, as if the imputation of it were a making of it ours, and that this imputation were carried on by repeated acts, ſo as it is ſtill made anew as the ſoul ſtands in need of it falling into new ſins. That the firſt of theſe is a miſtake, appears from this, that Chriſt's righteouſneſs is ours before it be imputed, I mean not in order of time, but in order of nature. It is not ours, becauſe it is imputed; but it is imputed, becauſe it is ours. It is evident, that it is uſed in this matter forenſically, and is a judicial word and act; and is nothing elſe but a legal accounting of a thing to be ours. Now, we know, that the judgment of God is according to truth; and therefore he cannot count that to be ours which really is not ſo. And the word itſelf will import no other; for whether you underſtand the primary ſignification of it to be the caſting up of an account, and finding the total ſum, as arithmeticians do; or the concluding of a thing by reaſon and argument, as in logic; it ſtill imports the being of the thing ſo, before it be imputed; as two tens are twenty, before the arithmetician caſt up the number, and the logician finds the concluſion in the premiſſes, before he gather it out of them. So in this metaphorical ſenſe, we are ſinners in Adam, before Adam's ſin be imputed to us, or we be reckoned guilty of his ſin, and alſo righteous in Chriſt, before his righteouſneſs be imputed to us. Hence I cannot but judge, that the Weſtminſter Aſſembly, in their definition of juſtification, are much more accurate than ſeveral learned foreign divines, who make our juſtification formally conſiſt in the imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs; for indeed as they accurately give it, it is preſuppoſed to our juſtification, as the ground thereof. Now, the way how Chriſt's righteouſneſs becomes ours, is by faith, (as the aforeſaid Aſſembly teacheth,) and that as it doth make up an union betwixt Chriſt and the elect perſon; which I conceive to be the primary and immediate effect of faith. Hence iſſues a communion betwixt Chriſt and the believer; ſo that as all his ſins, wants, &c. become Chriſt's; the righteouſneſs, obedience, and death of Chriſt, becomes theirs; which ſo being, God accounts it, and judicially owns and acknowledgeth it to be theirs, as indeed it is; and therefore juſtifies them, that is, pardons their ſins, and accepts them as righteous upon the account of the righteouſneſs they appear before him clothed with. So Witſius teacheth. Now, what is it to be righteous, but to be conform to the law? and ſeeing no righteouſneſs can be ſuſtained at the tribunal of God but that which is perfect, it remains that believers, at their firſt believing, are reputed perfectly conform to the law of God; that is, to have perfectly obeyed and ſuffered; and this in regard of their union with Chriſt; and therefore, unleſs his ſtate be changed, which can never be till the union be diſſolved, which the ſcripture holds forth as conſtant and perpetual, he can never be liable to eternal wrath. Hence it follows, that the opinion of a repeated imputation is alſo a miſtake; for the imputation can no more be anew made, than the ſoul can be anew united to Chriſt Jeſus. And, as Durham ſaith, "Imputation being a judicial word and act, it ſupponeth an inſtant ſentencing of ſuch a righteouſneſs to belong to ſuch a perſon, as it were, and to be accepted for him; for if he hath not perfect right, there is no legal imputation, (to ſay ſo;) but if it be perfect, then it is an inſtantaneous act." I add, and if inſtantaneous, then it is not repeated; nor is it a continued act formally conſidered, though virtually it be; that is, the virtue of the imputation once made in the court of heaven never ceaſeth, but remains ſtill in force for all time to come.

Arg. VI. If the ſins of believers unrepented of make them actually liable to eternal wrath, the ſalvation of many of the regenerate is loſt; yea, I ſhall add, Who then can be ſaved? for believers may die under ſins unrepented of; and therefore, according to this principle, they muſt needs periſh, being actually bound over to the eternal wrath of God; unleſs you ſay, either that God ſaves them, and takes them into glory, while they lie under a ſentence of condemnation, or that he takes off the obligation after death: both which are abſurd. This argument is not ſo trivial as to be diſmiſſed as ſome would, with a, What if they die not in that caſe? But it is ſaid here, that although God, by his abſolute power, can cut off believers in this caſe, yet, by his ordinate power, he cannot; for he will not do it; he hath ſecured them in that point, that though they fall, yet they ſhall ariſe by repentance, ere they go off the world; they cannot die under ſin without repentance, becauſe they are kept by the power of God unto ſalvation, 1 Pet. i. 5. But this I refuſe, as what cannot be made out by the ſcriptures; and muſt needs do ſo, till I ſee a promiſe of it in God's word; for to expect a benefit not promiſed, were too great raſhneſs: but ſuch a promiſe I confeſs I have never, as I conceive, heard of, or ſeen in the word of God. The ſcripture alledged doth indeed prove, that the ſalvation of the godly is ſure, ſo that it cannot fail. That we deny not: only we judge, that the doctrine we impugn, is not the doctrine of the goſpel; becauſe it is not conſiſtent with this certainty of the ſalvation of the regenerate, which is here taught us by the ſcripture cited; but their ſalvation is ſufficiently ſure, without this renewing of the acts of repentance, though in ſome caſes at leaſt it is neceſſary to their comfort. I deny not, but there are promiſes of the influences of grace, for the renewing of repentance, made unto believers: but this I ſay, that they are no more to be extended to every time, than the promiſes of increaſe of grace; ſo that they are indefinite in reſpect of time. It is a command to grow in grace, and there is a promiſe thereof too, Pſal. xcii. 13, 14. as well as repentance is commanded and promiſed. And yet I ſuppoſe it will not be denied, but that the laſt days of ſome may be worſe than their firſt days, and that believers may die in a time of the decay of grace. But if we may judge of what God hath promiſed (as certainly we may) by the event, for his counſel ſhall ſtand, we ſhall ſoon find, that there is no ſuch thing. Let us conſider Eli ſitting by the way-ſide, and in an inſtant falling back, and breaking his neck, 1 Sam. iv. 18. Was it not his ſin, that the news of the ark of God being taken, did ſo affect him as to deſtroy nature? Though this argued much good in him, yet doubtleſs it was his ſin, ariſing from weakneſs of faith; which, if it had been duly exerciſed, would rather have ſet him on to wreſtle with God for the bringing of the ark back again; which faith could tell he was able enough to do. Yet Eli dies under this ſin unrepented of; but yet we have no reaſon to doubt his being in glory. Yea, unleſs we maintain a perfection of grace in this life, it is impoſſible to evite this: for ſuppoſe that the renewed acts of repentance were the actions of the laſt moments of our time, yet repentance itſelf is as filthy rags; there is ſtill ſin in it, when it is in the moſt lively exerciſe; ſo that either we muſt never die, or die under ſin unrepented of. It will not at all ſatisfy here to ſay, that the queſtion is not to be underſtood of ſins of infirmity, but of the more groſs ſins; that the latter is that which thus makes liable to eternal wrath. For, 1. The diſtinction is naught here, all the ſins of the godly being ſins of infirmity, Heb. iv. 15. Wherefore I cannot but differ from Mr Bridge, who, in his ſermon of the ſin of infirmity, tells us, that a great, groſs, foul, ſcandalous ſin, cannot be a ſin of infirmity. He gives the reaſon, becauſe it is a ſickneſs, not a weakneſs. If a man have ſome diſtemper in his body, and yet he bears up to meat and to his work, he is not ſick, but hath an infirmity. Thus he. Now, I think it will not be denied, but a godly man may fall into a great, groſs, and ſcandalous ſin; ſo then they fall into ſins that are not ſins of infirmity. Let none then that have fallen into groſs ſins, take any comfort of that, Heb. iv. 15. 'For we have not an high prieſt that can'not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; 'though he was in all points tempted like as they have 'been,' even to thoſe of the groſſeſt ſort, ſelf-murder, and worſhipping of the devil. This is ſtrange divinity. The reaſon is no leſs ſtrange; becauſe it is a ſickneſs, not a weakneſs. The learned gentleman Leigh tells us, that aſthereia, the word put for infirmities, ſignifies invaletudo, morbus often, and imbecillitas, debilitas, morbus: for which he cites Plato, Xenophon, and Thucydides. And the apoſtle, when he would ſhew what ſickneſs, or rather death, we were under by nature, he tells us, we were infirm, ſo far were we from bearing up to work, Rom. v. 6. onton hemon aſthenon. But not to ſtand on words; was not Peter's ſin in denying of his Maſter a ſin of infirmity? He was reſolved againſt it; and Chriſt prayed for him, that his faith ſhould not fail; he had a principle of reſiſtance within, by the weakneſs whereof the temper gained the day: ſo that it was a ſin of infirmity indeed, yet a groſs ſin. But the foreſaid author tells us, that properly and ſtrictly, an infirmity is a ſin which a man is taken captive by, againſt his will, Rom. vii. that is, againſt the general bent and frame of his heart, which he hath not preſent ſtrength to reſiſt. So Rom. xv. 1. Thus he. And this is the very truth which the ſcripture teacheth, Rom. vii. and elſewhere; and thus it was with David, Peter, and others, in their groſs ſins. But here is the myſtery of this diſtinction, according to him, that groſs ſins committed by a believer are not againſt his will, nor the general bent of his heart; that there is no reſiſtance at all made to the temptation by the will, but that it goes on with full ſwing. And ſo Rom. vii. hath no reſpect to groſs ſins; and that law whereby a godly man is brought into captivity, againſt his will, to the law of ſin that is in his members, hath no reſpect to adultery, fornication, &c.; the contrary whereof the apoſtle teacheth, Gal. v. 17. 19.; and John, while he tells us, that he that is born of God, doth not commit ſin, 1 John iii. 9., But enough of this. The learned Zanchius teacheth more orthodoxly, in anſwer to that queſtion, "But how do the ſaints make increaſe "when they ſin daily, and ſometimes moſt groſsly?" His anſwer is, "They ſin of infirmity, and according "to the fleſh; but their minds abide right with God." But, 2. Thoſe ſins which are quotidianæ incurſiones, as ſome term them, and the more groſs ſins, are alike as to the point in hand; in regard it is not ſin as it is leſſer or greater, more or leſs evitable, but ſin as contrary to the law of God, that makes men liable to God's wrath, or eternal puniſhment in actu primo; and ſin as it is unrepented of (ad hominem,) that makes them liable in actu ſecundo; for a qua tali ad omne valet conſequentia.

Further, I urge, that a believer may die even under groſs ſins unrepented of; as we ſee in the patriarchs and others, their polygamy and inceſtuous marriages; which I hope will readily be reckoned groſs ſins; yet it is generally ſaid by divines, that they repented not of theſe ſins expreſsly, but virtually. Which is no doubt a firm truth. But if any ſhall make uſe of it here for an evaſion, it will be ſo far from helping them, that it is a manifeſt yielding of the cauſe; for what is virtual repentance, but actual repentance in virtute ſuæ cauſæ? So that the meaning is, that although they did not expreſsly and actually repent, yet they had a principle or habit of repentance in them, which, poſitis ad agendum requiſitis, would have broke forth into action with reſpect to that particular. But the queſtion is not of this virtual and habitual repentance; for a believer, in the caſe ſuppoſed, hath ſtill the habit of repentance, and the act is in the virtue of the cauſe, power, or habit, but it is of actual repentance, or elſe there is nothing ſaid at all. If any ſhall ſay, that this is not the virtual repentance they mean, but that it is when a man is heartily affected with ſuch a particular ſin or ſins as he knows, and for the corrupt inclination that is in him that is the ſeed of all: though there may be ſome particular which either he knows not, or is not actually in his mind; yet ſo he may be ſaid virtually to repent of the ſame; becauſe he repents of one ſin upon the account which is common to all: I anſwer, that when it comes to the arguments for it, taken from the neceſſity of confeſſion, forſaking, &c. more than all this ſeems to be pleaded for. But however, the neceſſity of actual repentance is pleaded for in the caſe of ſins known, and minded, but not in the caſe of ſins unknown or out of mind. But where find they this difference? Pſal. xix. 12. Cleanſe thou me from ſecret ſin, will not ground it; for that is a prayer for repentance, not repentance itſelf, otherwiſe than was ſaid before; unleſs it be ſaid, as is indeed alledged, that the actual turning from one ſin unto God is a virtual turning from all, ſufficient to bring the ſoul from under the liableneſs to eternal wrath for the, ſin, unminded and unknown: which I ſuppoſe they ſhall not eaſily prove: and, if I miſtake not, it will be found inconſiſtent with their own principles; for they will readily alledge for their cauſe, I mean the neceſſity of repentance in believers, in order to their pardon, David's caſe, ſuppoſing him to be liable to eternal puniſhment ay and untill he renewed his repentance, when Nathan came unto him; and yet I think it will be very hard to ſay, that David, all that three quarters of a year and more, never exerciſed one act of repentance for any one ſin all that time. So Joſeph's brethren remind their ſin in ſelling Joſeph, when they ſay, We are verily guilty concerning our brother: which our adverſaries underſtand of actual liableneſs to eternal wrath. But who can ſuppoſe, that they did not forſake one ſin by repentance all that time? But what more ordinary than for ſaints to commit ſins which they know not to be ſins for ſome time; or if they do, they ſlip out of their minds not repented of; yet ere they know that particular action to have been ſinful, or before the other come back into their minds, it may be a long time, and they may both have and loſe a tender frame, and a repenting heart, in the interval. I ſay then, in this caſe, when the ſin is known, and minded firſt before actual repentance for the ſame, the man is either actually liable to eternal puniſhment for it, or not. If it be, then the virtual repentance now pleaded for, is not ſufficient to free the ſoul from actual liableneſs to eternal puniſhment, as is alledged; if not, then actual repentance is not neceſſary for the taking off the obligation to eternal wrath by known ſin; the contrary whereof is here pleaded. Whence it appears, that this is a mere ſhifting of the thing that is in queſtion.

Moreover, it were ſurely worth their pains who ſtand ſo much for believers liableneſs to eternal wrath by their ſins, while unrepented of, ſeriouſly to conſider, whether or not all thoſe that die by their own hands, are ſet beyond a poſſibility of ſalvation; and whether or not it may be, that ſome truly godly under unrepented-of ſin, may be ſtruck with madneſs, or taken with a raging fever, and die in that caſe? and whether or not good men in a carnally ſecure frame may be killed while aſleep, and ſurpriſed with ſudden death? It may be rationally ſuppoſed that many ſuch caſes fall out in the world.

Arg. VII. Juſtification is an inſtantaneous act, and immediately perfect upon our believing, as is generally maintained by the orthodox: for, as Mr Durham ſays, "If juſtification be not immediately perfect, it muſt either be upon one's not believing in Chriſt, or becauſe of ſome defect of the righteouſneſs that faith preſenteth, and ſo faith were not a ſufficient ſhield: or it muſt be becauſe the word doth not pronounce him juſt upon the ground of that righteouſneſs; which were alſo abſurd." I ſhall not ſtand more upon the proof of this. But from thence it follows, that the after ſins of the juſtified do not make them actually liable to eternal puniſhment: which I prove thus. The ſtate of perfect juſtification is either interrupted by the after ſins of believers, or not. If ye ſay it is, then, 1. The gifts and calling of God are not without repentance. 2. A believer is ſometimes under grace, ſometimes under the law. 3. There is condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus: or, the after ſins of believers diſſolve the union. I ſhall ſay no more of this at the time. If ye ſay, it is not interrupted by their after ſins, then they do not make them liable to eternal wrath; for an uninterrupted ſtate of juſtification, and being actually liable to eternal wrath, are utterly inconſiſtent. And I prove the aſſertion thus.

1. To be juſtified, is to be abſolved from guilt in actu ſecundo. To be liable actually to eternal puniſhment, is not to be abſolved from guilt in actu ſecundo; which is a flat contradiction: the man is abſolved, and not abſolved; abſolved, becauſe juſtified; not abſolved, becauſe he is liable to eternal puniſhment. I know it will be ſaid, for ſolving the matter, that it is in different reſpects that the man is abſolved, and not abſolved; abſolved in reſpect of ſins repented of; not abſolved in reſpect of ſins unrepented of; he is juſtified in reſpect of his ſtate, but in reſpect of that particular ſin or ſins, he is liable to eternal wrath. But I anſwer, that this is meant either of the man's paſt ſtate, whereof he hath no benefit now, or of his preſent ſtate. If you ſay the former, then the ſtate of juſtification is interrupted, in ſuch ſort that the man muſt begin anew again, as at the firſt moment of believing: and ſo the believer, under unrepented of ſin, is in no better caſe, in reſpect of juſtification before God, than he was when unconverted; and if ſo, why is it urged here? If it be meant of his preſent ſtate, the diſtinction is not to be admitted: for the man hath no benefit of that ſtate, more than what flows from former experience of God's goodneſs, and readineſs to forgive; and ſo his ſtate is not indeed a ſtate of juſtification (call it as you will,) but of condemnation; for bonum non niſi ex integra cauſa, malum ex quolibet defectu; which, according to the law, is applicable here; for the curſe is pronounced on him, that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them, Gal. iii. 10.; and the Spirit of the Lord expreſly tells us, that 'whoſoever offends in one point is guilty of 'all,' James ii. 10; and when 'the righteous turneth 'from his righteouſneſs, and committeth iniquity, all 'the righteouſneſs that he hath done ſhall not be mentioned,' Ezek. xviii. 24. I confeſs, theſe ſcriptures hold forth the Lord's way of dealing with men according to the covenant of works, not according to the covenant of grace; which knows nothing of condemning or adjudging to eternal wrath, as was ſaid before. But if men will needs be dealt with according to the law, it is reaſonable they take their hazard of all it ſays. Should the foreſaid diſtinction be uſed (as it might be on the ſame grounds) for the comfort of a man, who having been frequently accuſed of treaſon, yet was ſtill abſolved; but now one treaſonable act being proven againſt him, and he for the ſame condemned to die; would he not think you miſerable comforters; and conclude himſelf to be in a ſtate of condemnation?

2. The apoſtle Paul makes them inconſiſtent, Rom. viii. 33, 34. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? viz. thoſe of them that believe. Symec generis. The interrogation is a ſtrong denial. Q. d. None ſhall lay any thing to their charge. The word encaleo here uſed, ſignifies to enter action or ſuit againſt a man in ſome open court. Now, if there be none to lay any thing to their charge, yea, none ſo much as to enter action or ſuit againſt them, de jure, then there can no ſentence paſs upon them, making them actually liable to eternal wrath. So ſaith Luther, "Every one that believeth on him, is righteous; the law cannot accuſe "him," &c. The apoſtle goes on in his holy boaſting, 'It is God that juſtifieth; who is he that condemneth?' ſays he. Not Chriſt, he is our Advocate, not ſin, for Chriſt was made ſin for us; not the law, for Chriſt hath fulfilled the law for us; not Satan, for God is his judge; and if he have acquitted us, what can the jailor do? We ſee the ground of the apoſtle's boaſting is juſtification before God. Q. d. God juſtifies us; Ergo, None can condemn us. Now, where lies the ſtrength of this argument, if to juſtify and condemn be not inconſiſtent; or, which is all one, to be juſtified, and to be liable actually to eternal wrath? If believers may be ſo liable notwithſtanding that they are juſtified, or in a ſtate of juſtification, when the apoſtle ſays, Who is he that condemneth? He may have an anſwer to his queſtion. Yea, may the law ſay, I condemn him, for he lies under unrepented-of ſin, though he be a believer. Who ſhall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Yea, ſays Satan, I have unrepented-of ſin to lay to his charge. But who is he that condemneth? Why? here is the charge, his own conſcience cannot deny it. The law then muſt condemn him, yea, hath condemned already; for he is actually liable to eternal puniſhment, ſo that there remains nothing but the execution of the ſentence. If any ſhall ſay, that the apoſtle's meaning is that, howſoever the godly be condemned, reproached, &c. by the world, yet they have no ground to be diſcouraged, ſeeing God juſtifies them; I ſhall not quarrel it, ſo that it juſtle not out the other: which cannot rightly be done, as the context makes evident. See the golden chain, ver. 29, 30. what knits the links together, ver. 32. and how he goes on in that holy exultation, particularly in the two laſt verſes of the chapter. The ground of non-condemnation here alledged, which is the death, and reſurrection, and interceſſion of Chriſt, plainly teacheth the ſame. And indeed it had been ſmall ground of boaſting, if a man were ſtill in hazard of the judgment of God, though he needed not ſear the world's condemning him. In fine, the words are general; and it were too much boldneſs to reſtrict them. But what if God himſelf condemn them, or declare them actually liable to eternal wrath? then, I ſay, the apoſtle hath an anſwer to his queſtion. And there is not ſo great cauſe of boaſting of the privileges of believers; for if a man were freed from all hazard of angels, devils, and men, but yet liable to God's wrath, it is too great boldneſs to boaſt till that be over. But one would think, that the apoſtle had ſufficiently ſecured us againſt ſuſpicion with reſpect to God, while he tells us, ver. 31. 'If God be 'for us;' that is, ſeeing God is for us, as appears from the context, and ſo it is that God is for them; therefore they need not fear he will turn againſt them to condemn them.

If it be ſaid, Why may not the ſtate of juſtification conſiſt with a believer's being actually liable to eternal puniſhment upon the account of ſome particular ſin unrepented of, as well as a ſtate of ſanctification with the prevailing of ſome particular luſt, or as well as health and ſickneſs in the ſame body? I anſwer, the reaſon is plain: Becauſe juſtification is a legal and judicial act, makes only a relative change, is perfected in an inſtant, and admits not of degrees; but ſanctification is a phyſical or hyperphyſical work, makes a real change on a man's nature, is imperfect, and carried on by degrees. If a man be not perfectly juſtified, he is not juſtified at all; if the leaſt unpardoned ſin remain, the law condemns him for it, Gal. iii. 10. But a man may be holy, though not perfect; and in health, though not perfectly. Suppoſe a murderer to be lying in priſon, dangerouſly wounded with the ſame ſword wherewith he killed others. The libel is drawn up againſt him, conſiſting of ſeveral articles. The man hath both the phyſician and the advocate to employ. The phyſician ſets to work, and by his medicine ſo prevails, that he cures his wounds, though not perfectly as yet; but he tells him, and that truly, he is in a ſtate of health, though he goes halting, and that there is no fear of death. The advocate doth his part, and of twenty articles diſproves nineteen; but as to the twentieth article, though he ſaid much againſt it, yet he could not invalidate the proof of it; but thereupon he is condemned. He cannot ſay now to him, as the phyſician, that there is no fear of death. And the reaſon is obvious.

Object. 1. The command to repent, with reſpect to believers lying under unrepented of guilt, is prefixed to the promiſe of pardon, as is manifeſt in the church of Epheſus, Rev. ii. 4, 5. and the ground is general, Rev. iii. 19. Whom I love I rebuke and chaſten: be zealous therefore, and repent; where repentance is put in as a neceſſary mids for removing of God's rebuke and quarrel, even from thoſe whom he loveth. John keeps the ſame method, writing to believers, 1 John i. 9. If we confeſs our ſins, he is juſt to forgive. This is confirmed by the experience of the godly. Witneſs David, Pſalm xxxii. 3, 4, 5. 'I acknowledge my ſin—and thou for'gaveſt', &c. Ergo. Anſw. 1. That there is a neceſſary connection betwixt the pardon of ſin and repentance, I grant; ſo that there is no pardoned ſinner, but he is alſo a penitent; ſo that, ſooner or later, virtually or expreſsly, whatever way ſin be forgiven, it is alſo repented of. But will the objectors ſcrew up this ſo high, as that no ſin can be forgiven, unleſs it be expreſsly repented of? they cannot, ſurely, as long as that remains true, Who can underſtand his errors? Pſal. xix. 12. And ſo we muſt admit of virtual repentance in the firſt ſcripture, and virtual confeſſion in the two laſt. Which I ſay ſtill is beſide the queſtion. And therefore, if they mind to prove any thing here by theſe ſcriptures cited, they will prove too much, viz. That expreſs repentance is neceſſary to pardon; which is contrary to the ſcripture cited before. For if a ſin be not known, it cannot be expreſsly repented of. And yet no doubt they muſt ſay, that a ſin unknown may be pardoned. E. g. Jacob lives in polygamy, and that with two ſiſters: he could not expreſsly repent of it, not knowing it to be a ſin, as is commonly ſaid: yet this ſin was no doubt pardoned, and Jacob ſaved. Then virtual repentance was ſufficient, which Jacob never wanted, unleſs he loſt the habits of grace; which I hope our adverſaries will not ſay. As for the prefixing of the command to repent unto the promiſe of pardon, it can of itſelf have little weight, in regard the order of words is not always the order of the things themſelves. So Mark i. 15. repentance is prefixed to faith: though it is evident, that in order of nature, it follows the ſame, if it be underſtood of goſpel-repentance. See 2 Cor. vii. 10, 11. But of this perhaps more afterwards. But, 2. I deny the conſequence of this argument; which I conceive may be, and muſt be thus framed categorically. Repentance muſt go before pardon: but pardon is the removal of the obligation to eternal wrath: ergo. Now, the minor, if underſtood of the elect entering into a ſtate of juſtification, is true; but ſo it hits not the point in hand. But if underſtood of thoſe that are already juſtified, or in a juſtified ſtate, it is falſe; pardon to them being nothing elſe but either the ſenſe of pardon, or the taking off of temporal ſtrokes, or relaxation of temporary puniſhment or chaſtiſements. Which interpretation the inſtances adduced do very fairly accept of. In the church of Epheſus there were ſome under a decay of their love. What were they liable to upon the account of it? Not to hell fire, but to a famine of the word, a removing of the candleſtick; that being pinched with want, they may learn not to lothe the heavenly manna; which God threatens actually to accompliſh, unleſs they repent, and that according to the tenor of the covenant, Pſal. lxxxix. 31, 32. And what elſe mean theſe words in the objection, Whom I love?—where repentance is put in as a neceſſary mids for removing of God's rebuke and quarrel, and his taking off the obligation to eternal wrath; unleſs it be, that God cannot rebuke but as a judge. In that ſcripture it is plain the exhortation is to repentance: and the argument uſed to enforce it, is very plain to our purpoſe, viz. "As many as I love, I "rebuke and chaſten, unleſs they repent; but ye are "they whom I love; therefore unleſs you repent, be "ſure I will rebuke and chaſten you." As to that, 1 John i. 9. that he writes to believers, is plain, as we ſhall hear more afterwards; and it receives the ſame anſwer, viz. that they are to confeſs in order to the removal of temporary wrath.

It is evident that David's caſe, Pſal. xxxii. is thus to be underſtood, of the removal of temporary ſtrokes or chaſtiſement. The words are, NaSATHa GNaVoN CHaTTATHI. The word NaSA properly ſignifies levavit, to take off, or eaſe people of burdens; and ſo David ſays, ver. 4. Thy hand was heavy on me. The lifting off that heavy hand, which was but the hand of a father, is then the forgiving of ſin, or lifting it off. GNaVoN is rendered iniquity, according to the proper ſignification of the word; for it denotes the crookedneſs and vitioſity of the action; but it muſt be expounded of puniſhment, metonymically, as it is frequently uſed. So the old tranſlation reads it, Thou forgaveſt the puniſhment, &c. Ameſius reads it, Suſtuliſti pœnam peccati mei. And ſo it muſt needs be underſtood, whatever way it be tranſlated: for God never takes away the crookedneſs or vitioſity of ſin, for that were to make it no ſin; but he takes away the puniſhment. Now, this we heard before was God's hand that was heavy on him; yet the hand of a father, not of a judge. Compare Pſal. xxv. 18. 'Look upon mine affliction, and 'my pain, and forgive all my ſins.' Then, ſays Mr Rutherford, ſin here is pardoned only according to the preſent pain and grief of body and ſoul that was on David.

Object. 2. Nathan tells David, upon his confeſſion, and taking with guilt, that his ſin was pardoned, or put away, 2 Sam. xii. 13. ‘The Lord alſo hath put away thy ſin; and yet, ver. 9. 11, 12. 14. he threatens him with temporal ſtrokes. Now, this putting away of ſin, muſt be either as to obligation to eternal or to temporal wrath. It cannot be the latter, becauſe we ſee plainly he lies under the ſame: therefore the firſt muſt be ſaid. Now, let it be marked, when it is ſaid to be put away, even after his confeſſion, and taking with the guilt; therefore he was actually liable to eternal wrath before his confeſſion; and ſo believers lying under unrepented of ſin, are actually liable to eternal puniſhment. Anſ. In the firſt place, It cannot be denied, but that theſe words are the words of Nathan, declaring by the Spirit what God had done for David; and ſo they are not a formal pardon, but an intimation of pardon. Now, there is a difference betwixt theſe two. But if the concluſion be valid, it muſt be drawn from the formal forgiveneſs of ſin after confeſſion, which doth not at all appear here; and not from the intimation of it at that time: for a man may be freed in foro Dei from guilt, and yet not have it intimated to him, till ſome time after, and particularly till he be in the exerciſe of repentance; yet is he not therefore liable to eternal wrath before the Lord till that time. In the next place, it comes to be conſidered, in what ſenſe David's ſin is ſaid to be put away. In reſpect ſimply of the actual obligation to eternal wrath, ſay the objectors. Giving, though not granting it be ſo, it remains ſtill that here is the intimation of pardon only. And truly David's conſcience being now awake, and accuſing him of theſe groſs abominations of murder and adultery, it was no wonder if he loſt his ſight of his intereſt in Chriſt, and his juſtification. This being ſuppoſed, ſuch an intimation of pardon was moſt ſeaſonable, that he might have ſomewhat to keep him from deſponding. And this intimation made by the miniſtry of Nathan, with ſome meaſure of the Spirit's light illuſtrating this, though but, as it were, with a dawning light, and ſome ſecret underpropping, was ſufficient for this; though a greater influence of the Spirit was neceſſary in order to the full eſtabliſhment of his heart in this truth which the prophet told him. This then being ſuppoſed, we may thence judge his ſin to have been pardoned before. So Luke vii. 48. Chriſt ſaith to the woman, ‘Thy ſins are forgiven.’ Of this woman it is ſaid, that ‘ſhe waſhed Chriſt's feet with her tears, and wiped them with the hair of her head.’ After this, Chriſt tells her, that ‘her ſins are forgiven.’ But there is nothing elſe than an intimation of the pardon granted before her waſhing Chriſt's feet with her tears, &c. as is evident from verſ. 47. But of this more afterwards. Hemmingius ſpeaking of David in this caſe, tells us, there were in him horrible terrors, and extreme fears; for he did fear everlaſting puniſhment; but hearing this voice of the prophet by the commandment of God, Thou ſhalt not die, the Lord hath put away thy ſin, he turneth again unto the Lord, and repenteth; he hateth his ſin, he fleeth unto mercy by faith. Ye ſee in what order the learned man placeth David's pardon and repentance; and how he ſuppoſeth him under fear of everlaſting puniſhment. But if I miſtake not, acute Beza will not grant ſo much: for, ſays he, “When David and Peter fell ſo beaſtly, yet there is no doubt but they lamented and ſorrowed, till they felt the working of their regeneration and ſanctification; but being in their temptation, they ſtayed themſelves upon the anchor of the teſtimony which the Spirit of God brought into their conſcience; which cauſed them not to doubt, (notwithſtanding their fall,) but that they were the children of God, and that their fault was forgiven them.” Thirdly, But why muſt it needs be underſtood of putting away his ſin, touching the obligation to eternal wrath, and not with reſpect to temporary and fatherly diſpleaſure and chaſtiſements? Becauſe, ſay they, he ſtill lies under temporary wrath. Let us hear holy and learned Mr Rutherfoord's judgment in this caſe. Having laid down this aſſertion, Sins of youth already pardoned as touching the obligation to eternal wrath, may ſo riſe againſt the child of God, as he hath need to aſk forgiveneſs of them, as touching the removing of preſent wrath, ſenſe of the want of God's preſence, of the influence of his love, the cloud of ſadneſs and deadneſs, &c. he adds, enlarging on the ſame, “We may well ſay, that God pardoneth ſin, when he removeth temporary wrath. So 2 Sam. xii. 13. Nathan ſaith to David, The Lord alſo hath put away thy ſin. Why? Thou ſhalt not die. This is meant of temporal death eſpecially, as the context cleareth, ver. 10. The ſword ſhall not depart from thine houſe: and verſ. 14. The child born unto thee ſhall ſurely die. Then the Lord's putting away of David's ſin, was in looſing him from the ſword, in his own perſon, not in his houſe and children.” And herein do I chearfully acquieſce. We ſay then, that this putting away of David's ſin reſpects temporary wrath, though David be yet threatened with it. Now, in that temporary wrath which believers lay themſelves open to by their ſins, there are ſeveral particular ſtrokes, but none of them any way for the ſatisfying of juſtice, but for correcting the offender, the terror of others, &c. And therefore the executive pardon here is capable of degrees, and may be remitted or intended, as the Lord ſees meet. So that the alleviating of the chaſtiſement, or relaxation of the fatherly puniſhment due to David, for his murder and adultery, is that which is holden forth in theſe words, The Lord alſo hath put away thy ſin; not excluding, but rather including the other. And thus David's caſe herein was as of a man who by the law is puniſhable by death, but is only actually puniſhed with baniſhment. To this purpoſe the worthy author juſt now named explains it, and I think has proven it. I add, that it further appears, if we conſider and compare verſe 5. with the text. While the thing is kept in theſi, David himſelf pronounceth the ſentence on the guilty perſon, not knowing as yet on whoſe head it would alight: The man that hath done this, ſhall ſurely die. Now, when Nathan tells him flatly, that he was the man, he found, that by his own ſentence he was condemned to death; and he knowing that ſentence to be according to the law of God, in the caſe of the murderer and adulterer, it may well be ſuppoſed, that he concluded, that if men would not execute the ſentence, God himſelf would do it. Wherefore it anſwers aptly to the ſentence paſſed againſt himſelf by him, and exalts the mercy of God towards him: ‘He ſhall die,’ ſaid he, ‘Thou ſhalt not die,’ ſays Nathan. Conſider alſo the antitheſis, verſ. 13, 14. ‘Thou ſhalt not die. Howbeit——the child ſhall die:’ not an eternal, but a temporal death. There was great reaſon for both. The text tells us expreſsly the reaſon why the child ſhould die; even becauſe David by that deed had given great occaſion to the enemy to blaſpheme. Wherefore the Lord, (to ſpeak ſo) behoved to vindicate the glory of his holy name, ſhewing that ſin was diſpleaſing to him in whomſoever it be found. The other is not without great reaſon likewiſe; for God had promiſed to him, 2 Sam. vii. 12. that his ſeed, viz. Solomon, who was not yet begotten, ſhould ſit in his throne, and build the Lord's houſe: therefore he muſt not die; it was inconſiſtent with the faithfulneſs of God. That the Lord's putting away of ſin, ſhould be thus expounded of the relaxation of temporal puniſhment, needs not ſeem ſtrange; for ſo it is uſed elſewhere in the ſcriptures, Neh. ix. 17, 18, 19. ‘But thou art (or waſt) a God ready to pardon.——How? Thou forſookeſt them not in the wilderneſs.’ Yet who knows not what ſtrokes thoſe people met with in the wilderneſs? But herein was pardoning mercy; the Lord forſook them not, he did not caſt off his care of them, as a people peculiar to himſelf. We may ſee this yet more plainly, Numb. xiv. where let it be conſidered, what the Lord threatens that people with. It is death in the wilderneſs, ‘ I will ſmite them with the peſtilence,’ &c. verſ. 12. ‘ If thou ſhalt kill all this people as one man,’ ſays Moſes, verſ. 15. Moſes in his prayer aſks forgiveneſs for them; ‘ Pardon, I beſeech thee, the iniquity of this ‘ people,’ verſ. 19. he prevails, ‘ And the Lord ſaid, ‘ I have pardoned according to thy word.’ But mark what follows: Becauſe——they have tempted me theſe ten times,—ſurely they ſhall not ſee the land which I ſware unto their fathers. Now, what is their pardon they get, but the relaxation we ſpeak of? They are freed from death, but are kept out of the land of Canaan, for their ſin ſo pardoned. And David himſelf tells us of this way of the Lord's dealing with him, Pſal. cxviii. 18. The Lord hath chaſtened me ſore, but he hath not given me over unto death. The ſame way is that to be underſtood, Pſal. xcix. 8. Thou waſt a God that forgaveſt them, though thou tookeſt vengeance on their inventions. Compare Pſal. cvi. 43. 44. They are brought low for their iniquity: nevertheleſs he regarded their affliction, &c.

Object. 3. If believers lying under unrepented-of ſin be not liable actually to eternal wrath, what need is there of Chriſt's interceſſion? Yet John 1 epiſt. ii. 1. when he is directing believers what courſe to take for the pardon of their ſin, he tells them of an Advocate with the Father whom they are to employ; but what needs he an advocate, who is not liable to the laſh of the law? To this I anſwer, 1. The object of Chriſt's interceſſion is confined within too narrow limits, if it be ſuppoſed only to be employed for the obtaining of the pardon of ſin. Chriſt prayed for Peter, that his faith might not fail. See John xvii. per totum. He intercedes always for his people, in whatever caſe they be; and I think it will not be denied, but that the benefits we enjoy, moſt of them come by Chriſt's interceſſion. 2. The pardon of ſin, as it denotes the taking away of an actual obligation to temporary wrath, either in a total removal of the ſame, or a relaxation thereof, is not ſuch a ſmall thing as to be ſo overlooked. God's deſerting of the ſoul, ſhooting his arrows againſt them, are not eaſy to the godly; and that they have Chriſt to employ for the removal of theſe, is no ſmall ground of comfort. 3. There is a great fallacy in that which is ſaid, that a man not liable to eternal wrath needs not an advocate. If it be meant of liableneſs thereto in actu primo, it is true. But who denies that they are ſo liable? If they mean it of liableneſs thereto in actu ſecundo, it is falſe; for advocates uſe not to be employed for reverſing of a ſentence of death, but to hinder it from paſſing. And upon this ground I ſay, that this doctrine is very far from invalidating the neceſſity of Chriſt's interceſſion; yea, it is indeed founded on the interceſſion of Chriſt: Rom. viii. 34. ‘ Who is he that condemneth? it is ‘ Chriſt that died;——who alſo maketh interceſſion ‘ for us.’ And, if I miſtake not, this ſcripture uſed againſt us, affords us a ſolid argument againſt the doctrine of our adverſaries in this point. Which ye may take thus: Thoſe who have always an Advocate at the right hand of the Father, who hath undertaken their defence, and never fails to gain his point, their cauſe cannot go wrong in heaven; but whenever an accuſation comes in againſt them, he will undertake their cauſe, ſo that it cannot come to a ſentence againſt them; which is the only thing that can make them actually liable to wrath: but if believers ſin, they have ſuch an Advocate: Ergo. And it is worthy of our conſideration, that our Advocate is called Jeſus Chriſt the righteous. “ But “ he is not (ſays Zanchius) a juſt advocate who defends “ an unjuſt cauſe: but Chriſt defends our cauſe, becauſe “ he is our Advocate, and he is a juſt Advocate. John “ therefore teaches, that our cauſe which Chriſt de“ fends, is juſt.’ So he. Now, where lies the juſtice of the cauſe? In our repentance? No, in that Chriſt became liable for us, and hath paid the debt, and ſatisfied juſtice; and we are now one with him. And if our cauſe be juſt, how can it go to a ſentence againſt us, though it never be executed? A juſt judge will no more paſs a ſentence againſt one that has a juſt cauſe, than he will execute it. And truly it ſeems, that thoſe who will have ſuch a ſentence to paſs againſt a believer in the court of heaven, though they believe it will never be executed, do not deeply conſider Chriſt's ſitting continually at the Father's right hand, and exhibiting the merits of his death and ſufferings: for if this be, how can any accuſation that comes in againſt them proceed ſo far? For, as one ſays well, he interrupts the accuſation, and ſtrikes in for us, Heb. vii. 25. becauſe he hath not only died for us, and riſen for us, but he follows the buſineſs to the utmoſt. If he does not thus effectually ſtop ſentence paſſing againſt us, it muſt either be becauſe he cannot, or becauſe he will not. The firſt is more than abſurd; if the latter be ſaid, it is like it will be alledged, that it is becauſe we do not employ him, and ſo the oil muſt come from earth to anoint the wheels of his compaſſion towards thoſe perſons, for whom he poured out his blood while they were yet enemies. And if his interceſſion in this caſe depends upon our motion, why not in other caſes alſo? And ſo we ſhall never exerciſe faith nor repentance more: for theſe are undeniably the fruits of his interceſſion, as well as freedom from condemnation; for we cannot employ him but by faith. If any ſhall ſay, that if Chriſt's interceſſion do ſtop the ſentence of eternal wrath's paſſing, why does it not hinder the believer's actual liableneſs to temporary ſtrokes? I anſwer, The reaſon is obvious; becauſe temporary ſtrokes to believers are merely correctory, and according to God's diſpenſation, cannot be wanted, Iſa. xxvii. 6.; but eternal wrath is not ſo. And I think it is no ſolæciſm to ſay, that as the taking off of temporal ſtrokes in due time, ſo the laying them on in due ſeaſon, is a fruit of Chriſt's interceſſion.

Object. ult. This doctrine opens a gap to licentiouſneſs and carnal ſecurity, and therefore cannot be of God. Anſw. I take notice, that the apoſtle hath the ſame objected to him againſt this doctrine, Rom. vi. 15.; and therefore I ſay, with him, God forbid, &c. But, 1. In ſuch ſins as ſo waſte the conſcience, that they blind men as to their ſtate, there is no place for this objection; for then the man looks on himſelf de facto as liable to eternal wrath; but de jure he cannot ſo look on himſelf. And why ſhould this ſeem ſtrange? for will a man ſpeak wickedly for God? 2. Is not the ſame objection to be retorted on the adverſaries who ſide not with Arminians, &c.? Does not their doctrine upon the ſame ground lie open to this calumny? for, according to them, the puniſhment ſhall never be executed. If a man had the privilege that he ſhould never be actually liable to capital puniſhment, then you will ſay, that man may do what he pleaſeth without controul. I ſay, on the other hand, if a man be ſo privileged, as that although ten thouſand ſentences of death paſs upon him, yet they ſhall never be executed, upon the ſame ground he may do what he pleaſeth: for, at moſt, there is but magis & minus betwixt them, quæ non variant ſpeciem: and ſo they ſhall both be licentious doctrines, though the one more than the other. 3. I ſuppoſe it can ſcarcely be denied, but that temporal ſtrokes, or the fear of them, may be curbs to our licentious humours ſuo quodam modo; though, without reſtraining grace, the fear of ten thouſand hells will not be ſufficient to hold in a man from the purſuit of his luſts. But why may not fear of death help to keep the church from murmuring at croſs diſpenſations in life, Lam. iii. 39. and the fear of a whale's belly the ſecond time make Jonah to go to Nineveh? That which truly ſeems to be the ground of this objection, is, the not conſidering what is the extent and power of God's fatherly diſpleaſure to which believers are made actually liable by their ſins. The pondering of this aright would ſilence ſuch objectors. Temporal ſtrokes, the effects of God's fatherly diſpleaſure, are not confined to ſtrokes upon our bodies, or croſſes in our outward eſtate; though indeed ſickneſſes of ſeveral ſorts, poverty, loſſes, &c. yea, and death, are not very light things, but ſuch, as the proſpect of them may make a ſtout heart to ſtagger. But theſe ſtrokes reach the ſoul likewiſe; and ſtrokes upon the ſoul are very heavy. They may all come under the general name of deſertion, which ſpreads itſelf into innumerable branches, ſuch as, want of communion with God, a wounded ſpirit, yea, the arrows of the Almighty driven into the ſoul, and their poiſon drinking up the ſpirit, &c. I add, the Lord's ſuffering men to fall into one ſin, and that ſometimes a very groſs ſin, or ſins, for a correction of them becauſe of former miſcarriages; as David's ſecurity was puniſhed with his being ſuffered to fall into murder and adultery; Peter's ſelf-confidence, with denying his maſter. All theſe the godly make themſelves actually liable to by unrepented-of ſin. And it is well worth our noticing, that here is ſomething in the obligation to temporary wrath, that is more to be feared than hell, if ſo be that ſin be the greateſt evil; which I hope no ſerious ſoul will deny. I thus think, and thus will ever preach. It is more bitter to ſin againſt Chriſt, than to ſuffer the torments of hell, ſaid Chryſoſtome. Anſelm ſaid, that if on the one ſide were preſented unto him the evil of ſin, and on the other ſide the torments of hell, he would rather chuſe to fall into hell, than to fall into ſin. Now, I refer it to the judgment of any godly, if, theſe and the like things conſidered, the doctrine we maintain be chargeable juſtly with opening a gap to licentiouſneſs? I ſhall not diſpute here, whether or not the temporary wrath which is inflicted on the godly, be the ſame eſſentially with that which is poured out upon the damned. But ſure I am, David calls theſe ſtrokes that had been upon him, the pains of hell, Pſal. cxvi. 3. Job ſpeaks very terribly of them, Job vi. 4. For the arrows of the Almighty are within me, &c. Heman gives the ſame name to what was upon him, that the Pſalmiſt gives to what comes on reprobates, Pſalm lxxxviii. 16. compared with Pſalm lviii. 9. The word in both places is CHaRON; only the godly man Heman hath it in the plural number. Laſtly, We ſay, this doctrine gives true goſpel-liberty; which perhaps the contrary doth not, and it is our duty to 'ſtand faſt in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made 'us free;' which, if we will hear Zacharias in his ſong, Luke i. 74. is, 'that we being delivered from all our 'enemies, might ſerve him without fear.' And if we would know what enemies we are delivered from, the apoſtle Paul tells us, the law is one of them, as it curſeth and condemneth the ſinner, Gal. iii. 13. And as we anſwer Arminians, Papiſts, and other enemies of Chriſtian aſſurance, when they object, that it is a pillow of ſecurity; ſo I poſitively affirm, that this doctrine is ſo far from being juſtly chargeable therewith, that it is a moſt ſtrong inducement to goſpel obedience and a ſtrict walk with God; I mean, to a goſpel-ſpirit. So that I fear not to ſay, with Dr Preſton, He that hath the ſtrongeſt faith, he that believeth in the greateſt degree the promiſe of pardon and remiſſion of ſins, hath the holieſt heart and the holieſt life. And I think it is worthy of our obſervation, that Paul never groaned more deeply under the body of death, than in the midſt of a diſcourſe of the believer's being dead to the law, and freed from condemnation, Rom. vii. 2. 4. compared with chapter vi. 1. and viii. 1. The ſcripture is very plain in teaching us, that it was Chriſt's deſign in bringing his people from under the law, that they might be employed in new obedience, Rom. vii. 4. 6. And ſurely it doth not fail. Nothing hath greater influence on goſpel obedience than love; love is a ſtrong cord to draw ſouls to a holy walk, 2 Cor. v. 14. For the love of Chriſt (whether ye underſtand it ſubjectively or objectively, it is all one to the purpoſe) conſtraineth us, becauſe we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; i. e. legally dead, as is clear from the antitheſis. Yet it cannot be meant of the actual execution of the ſentence upon us: therefore only of this actual liableneſs to death. And indeed this is the very force of the apoſtle's argument, How can that love but conſtrain us, ſeeing by him we have been freed from the obligation to eternal wrath, in which reſpect we were dead? dead juridically, ſays Mr. Pool. We were all as dead condemned perſons, becauſe he died in our ſtead. But more of this afterwards. I ſhall conclude with that ſaying of Mr Merriton, in his ſermon of Chriſt's humiliation, "Sin is done away by this blood of Chriſt, as it "binds over to wrath and puniſhment. Sin may re"main, but it ſhall not condemn. If the channel of "Chriſt's blood runs through thy ſoul, thou haſt ſhut "the guilt as to condemnation."

QUEST. II.

Whether or not all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, are pardoned together and at once?

THIS queſtion hath much affinity with the former; and what is already ſaid, may contribute to clear our way in anſwer to this. I mind not here to conſider the doctrine of the deluded Antinomians, who aſſert, that men are juſtified and actually pardoned from all eternity; and ſo not only before they believe, but before they are born; not diſtinguiſhing between active and paſſive juſtification. The former, being an immanent act in God, and a conſtant will to pardon ſuch perſons as he hath choſen to everlaſting life, is no doubt from eternity, and complete from that date. But the latter a tranſient act, exerciſed not only about, but terminated on the creature living and believing, whereby he is actually pardoned, and judicially declared righteous, while he ſtands trembling before the tribunal of God; and ſo cannot be from eternity.

Their doctrine in this is flatly oppoſite to the ſcriptures; which declare all men once and by nature to be children of wrath, and under condemnation, and unpardoned; and truly overturns both law and goſpel at one blow; the law, in that the caſe being ſo as they pretend, there is no need of it to accuſe, convince, condemn, and to ſtop every mouth, and to make all the world guilty before God. And no better friends are they to the goſpel, which proclaims ſalvation to loſt ſinners. Yet none greater pretenders to the purity of the goſpel than they; none ſeem to cry up free grace more, which neverthеleſs in very deed they labour to hide, while they ſet off the law altogether, without which a man ſhall never have a right taſte of the grace of God. They cry down the law and a legal walk; which is no doubt the bane of many profeſſors: but plucking up the law out of the conſcience in the matter of juſtification, and a ſinner's acceptance with God, they root it out of the heart in the matter of ſanctification. So true is it, Dum vitant ſtulti vitia, in contraria currunt.

But had more care been taken of preſerving pure and entire the doctrine of free grace, it would no doubt have prevented the deluſion of many ſimple and well-meaning people, and cut off the occaſion of crying down good works, and the ſtudy of holineſs, under pretence of ſacrificing all to free grace, from others led merely by their own licentious humours. And therefore, if I miſtake not, the greateſt noiſe that Antinomianiſm hath made in the church in theſe latter centuries, hath been after a deluge of ſuperſtition; formality, and ignorance of the doctrine of the goſpel, had overwhelmed the church, and ſermons ſounded rather like Seneca's morals, than Paul's doctrine of Chriſt crucified, and the riches of God's grace. So was it in the time of the reformation from Popery; ſo in the time of Britain's ſtruggling with and wading out from Prelacy and Arminianiſm, &c. How dangerous is it to ſet up morality inſtead of the power of godlineſs, and life of faith? to turn the covenant of grace into a baſtard covenant of works; and to mix the law with the goſpel, which is indeed accounted by the Spirit of God another goſpel, the preacher whereof is devoted to a curſe? Gal. i. 6, 8.

And indeed nothing is more incident to men than this: for it is as natural to them to ſeek to go to heaven by the covenant of works, as it is for fiſhes to ſwim, or birds to fly; we being naturally diſpoſed to apprehend God as a great lord and maſter, and ourſelves as his ſervants, who muſt work for wages. And ſo it comes to paſs, they conſider God abſolutely, forgetting Chriſt the way to the Father; and this, while their conſciences remain in darkneſs, without any illumination; for indeed, if the conſcience were awakened, the ſight of Majeſty would dazzle our eyes. Wherefore Luther on Pſal. cxxx. ſaith, "Often and willingly do I inculcate "this, that you ſhould ſhut your eyes and your ears, "and ſay, You know no God out of Chriſt." On the other hand, until the conſcience is indeed enlightened, and the ſoul ſees what a holy God it hath do with, how hard is it to attain ſuitable apprehenſions of the riches of his grace? And therefore the woful remains of corruption, whereby we are inclined to meaſure God's ways by our own, ſtart that queſtion, concerning the privileges of the ſaints, How can theſe things be? and, with Peter in a fit, cry out, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man. But to the queſtion.

In this point the orthodox themſelves do not agree; which is the more to be lamented, and the rather to be conſidered and ſeriouſly weighed, that it is not a mere ſpeculation, but a very practical point, and cannot but have great influence on the frame of the ſpirit, whatſoever way the judgment goes. This may be abſolutely ſaid of the wrong ſide of this controverſy, but not without ſome qualification concerning the right; ſeeing experience teſtifieth, that although the truth, in its own nature, is apt to have influence on the heart for a holy walk, yet it hath not that actually at all times; truth known, without the blowings of the Spirit, being as wild-fire, giving light but not heat. It is, to which part of the controverſy this aptitude to influence the heart to the love of Chriſt, and the ſtudy of a holy walk, does belong? The determination thereof were to determine the doubt; which we leave to its proper place.

In thoſe points which are the moſt weighty in the matter of the pardon of ſin, the orthodox do agree; as 1. That God firmly purpoſing from all eternity to pardon the ſins of the elect, laid them wholly on Jeſus Chriſt. 2. That the Lord Jeſus hath fully ſatisfied the juſtice of God for all the ſins of all his elect, ſo as he hath left nothing of the price to be paid by them. 3. That, upon theſe grounds, all the ſins of believers are virtually pardoned. 4. That no believer ſhall ever be damned, that is, ſent unto the place of torment, for any ſin; but ſhall certainly and infallibly be ſaved. 5. laſtly, That, upon the ſoul's union with Chriſt by faith, when God pardons one ſin, he pardons all ſins actually which are committed, commonly called all ſins paſt and preſent. Only they differ in their ſentiments touching the pardon of ſin not yet committed.

The queſtion then is this, Whether or not all the ſins of a believer, paſt, preſent, and to come, are actually pardoned upon the ſoul's firſt believing on Chriſt? or, Whether their ſins to come are only virtually pardoned, and not actually till ſuch time as they renew their faith and repentance in order to the pardon thereof? Some ſimply aſſert the former; others the latter.

According to what hath been ſaid upon the former queſtion, I aſſert, that all the ſins of an elect ſoul, paſt, preſent, and to come, are together and at once pardoned, touching the actual obligation to eternal wrath, upon his firſt believing in the Lord Jeſus, and juſtification before God; ſo that in no moment of time thereafter, he can be ſuppoſed to be actually liable to eternal wrath. And in this ſenſe I embrace the opinion of thoſe that ſtand for pardon of all ſins ſimul & ſemel. I think I need not inſiſt much in proving this aſſertion, ſo long as the arguments before adduced ſtand in force; for if the ſins of believers, even while unrepented of, do not make them actually liable to eternal puniſhment, this poſition ſtands good; unleſs there be any found to ſay, that they are pardoned always as ſoon as committed; or, with the Antinomians, that they are pardoned from all eternity. But I ſhall adduce theſe following arguments for proof of what is aſſerted.

Arg. I. The Lord promiſeth not to remember his people's ſins, Iſ. xliii. 25. 'I am he that blotteth out thy 'tranſgreſſions for my own ſake, and will not remember 'thy ſins.' Now, how are they not remembered, if they be at any time, after they are brought within the covenant, and the poor ſouls laid under a ſentence of eternal death for them? If this be not to remember ſins, nothing is. It is certain that remembering cannot be properly attributed to God; but God is then ſaid to remember ſins, when he does that which men do, when they remember the faults of others. And who will not ſay that a judge remembers a malefactor's crime, when he hath paſſed the ſentence of death on him; or a bankrupt's debt, when he obligeth him to pay the ſame by a judicial ſentence? Say not, that in regard remembering of ſin is ſometimes put for puniſhing of it, therefore it muſt be ſo underſtood in this matter: for though I will not deny but it is ſo taken in the ſcripture; yet to faſten that upon the promiſes of pardon, touching the obligation to eternal wrath, is dangerous, in regard that then ye muſt aſſert, that what evil is inflicted on the elect unconverted, is laid on them by way of vindictive juſtice, and for ſatisfaction; which is too much poſitively to determine. It clearly follows, in regard the not remembering of ſin is a privilege which is new, and ſuppoſeth that God remembered their ſin before; not only does he promiſe not to remember them, but to remember them no more, Jer. xxxi. 34. Heb. viii. 12. Which confirms what was before ſaid of the Lord's remembering the ſins of the elect unconverted; and further plainly lets us ſee, that God will alter his former courſe and way of dealing with them in reſpect of their ſins. So much does that no more import evidently: as Job xxxiv. 32. 'If I have done iniquity, I will do no 'more.' Ezek. xxi. ult. 'Thou ſhalt be no more re-'membered.' Now, what was God's way of dealing with them before they were brought into covenant? It was not to ſend them to hell for their ſins; but it was not to pardon them, but to let them lie under the ſentence of eternal wrath, ay and untill they made application to Chriſt by faith, and repented them of their ſins likewiſe, as ſome ſay; on what grounds we ſhall ſee afterwards. And where is there any alteration of the Lord's way of dealing with them, if their ſins remain ſtill unpardoned as to the obligation to eternal wrath, till they again believe and repent? It is ſtill I hope, the ſame faith and the ſame repentance. There is no doubt, but there is a vaſt difference betwixt the Lord's way of dealing with the elect unconverted and converted, conſidered in bulk, even by this way of our adverſaries. But as to the preciſe point of the pardon of ſins, of which alone we now ſpeak, there is no difference at all left. Yet this promiſe holds out a quite contrary courſe, as is declared. Further the ſcripture ſpeaking of the pardon of ſin, extends it to all ſins, without diſtinction, Ezek. xxxvi. 25.—'Ye ſhall be clean from all your filthineſs, and from all your idols will I cleanſe you.' That this is a promiſe of juſtification, and pardon of ſin, in the removal of the guilt of it, is plain, as the following promiſe is of ſanctification. And ſo Sedgwick, no friend to this doctrine, underſtands it. And indeed, if that be not a promiſe of pardon, there is none there. It will perhaps be ſaid, that this promiſe ſecures the believer of the pardon of all his ſins ſooner or later, but not together and at once. But pray let it be conſidered, that the text tells us expreſsly, it ſhall be then when he 'ſprinkles clean water on them, gives them a new heart, takes away the ſtony heart,' &c. which is undeniably then when they are firſt brought into Chriſt. If you ſay, it reſpects only the ſins that are committed; I anſwer, Non diſtinguendum ubi lex non diſtinguit. But then future ſins are not comprehended here; and what have they then to lippen to for the pardon of theſe ſins? It muſt ſurely be a great ſtrait that will drive men to exclude hence the pardon of future ſins: and if they will ſuffer them to be included, I ſay again, the text tells us when this cleanſing ſhall be. The apoſtle Paul delivers the ſame doctrine, Col. ii. 13.—'quickened together with him, having forgiven you all treſpaſſes,' where we ſee all treſpaſſes ſimply were forgiven them when they were quickened with Chriſt. Upon this text, ſaith a judicious commentator, But that we are quickened to eternal life, is evident from this, that all ſins are forgiven on which our eternal death did depend. Now, I ſay, it is as evident that our death depended on all our ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come; for it was all theſe that were the cauſe of Chriſt's death. And this the ſubſequent verſe doth confirm. I ſhall only add that ſcripture, Numb. xxiii. 21. He beholdeth not iniquity in Jacob, neither does he ſee perverſeneſs in Iſrael; thus read and cited by Ameſius upon this head. Upon which he ſaith, "Becauſe juſtification hath left no place to condemnation:" and tell us, that future ſins are pardoned in the ſubject, or perſon ſinning. It is true, he calls this pardon of future ſins but a virtual pardon; but if I miſtake not, it is the very ſame thing that we aſſert.

Arg. II. Let us take a view of the ſacrament, and ſee how they favour this full remiſſion at once. The pardon of ſin is at leaſt among the firſt of the benefits of the covenant, ſealed by the ſacraments; and ſurely, if the ſacraments ſeal the pardon of all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, they are all pardoned; for God ſets not his ſeal but to a truth. Again, a ſeal preſuppoſeth a deed done; for a thing muſt be before the being of it can be confirmed. This is ſo evident, that I cannot think how it can be denied with any colour of reaſon. The ſtreſs of the argument lies then in the proof of that, that the ſacraments ſeal the pardon of ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come. That they ſeal the pardon of ſin, I mean, in the lawful uſe of them, or when they are conferred on believers, I think none will deny among the orthodox; they who acknowledge them at all to be the ſeals, will acknowledge this likewiſe. That they ſeal the pardon of all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, the ſcripture teacheth us, 1 Pet. iii. 21. Baptiſm now ſaveth us. There are many opinions about the efficacy of the ſacraments, and how baptiſm is ſaid to ſave us, which I ſhall not now meddle with; but take for granted, what is proven by the learned among Proteſtant divines, that the efficacy of the ſacraments doth conſiſt in effectual obſignation and application. So then baptiſm ſaveth us from ſin, in ſo far as it ſeals our ſalvation therefrom: but if we be for one moment under the guilt of it, where is our ſalvation from it? for one ſin is damning as well as a thouſand. Therefore all muſt be pardoned at once. And learned Rutherford doubts not to ſay, that Chriſt communicates to believers at firſt, ſuch a remiſſion as he hath obtained; but he hath, ſaid he, obtained the remiſſion of all ſin: therefore ſuch a remiſſion doth he communicate to us; and addeth, that there is no reaſon why he ſhould communicate to us the purchaſed remiſſion by halves. Further. Mark tells us, chap. i. 4. that John baptized for the remiſſion of ſins; and Peter calls thoſe pricked at the heart to be baptized for the remiſſion of ſins, Acts ii. 38. But will any exclude from this future ſins? Surely ſo their comfort would have been exceeding lame; knowing that immediately after they would run into a new ſcore, and then they are juſt where they were before; their baptiſm having not ſealed the remiſſion of theſe, but only of ſins committed before or in baptiſm. And ſo this ſacrament ſhould rather be adminiſtered to the party when a-dying, than when new born. But if future ſins be included here, as certainly they are, then the remiſſion of them is ſealed, and conſequently is before; for they are not called to be baptized in order to obtain a remiſſion, (the ſcripture knoweth no ſuch doctrine;) but in order to their getting the remiſſion obtained, ſealed, in teſtimony of the remiſſion of ſins, as Piſcator expounds it. The ſame may be ſaid of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper. So then baptiſm ſeals unto worthy receivers (as alſo does the other ſacrament) full freedom from eternal puniſhments, in the pardon of all ſin, in that reſpect, together and at once. And ſo Urſin, after he hath ſhewed, that the outward baptiſm is a ſeal of the inward, tells us, that ſo is ſin aboliſhed in baptiſm that we are freed from the guilt of God's wrath, and eternal puniſhments. To the ſame purpoſe ſays Zanchius, Sin indwelling actually remains, but is taken away as to the guilt. And baptiſm is ordained for that end, that we may be freed from all guilt of puniſhment due to ſin. The thing ſignified, ſays Beza, and verily repreſented, is the aſperſion or ſprinkling of the death and paſſion of Jeſus, in the remiſſion of all our ſins.

If it be ſaid, that the ſacraments do indeed ſeal the pardon of future ſins, but that is only conditionally; whereas the remiſſion of ſins committed is ſealed abſolutely: I anſwer, this diſtinction is to be rejected. For a ſeal, as a ſeal, doth abſolutely confirm the thing ſealed, eſpecially where the benefit made over is a free gift, as the pardon of ſin is. Were there a thouſand conditions in a bargain, the ſeal confirms the ſame abſolutely.

So, if we will make any thing of conditional ſealing, it muſt be the ſealing of ſome conditional promiſe of the pardon of ſin, and that to a believer, touching the obligation to eternal wrath: which is a mere begging of the queſtion; for we know of no ſuch promiſe in the Bible. But this is not the ſealing of a remiſſion. When a king pardons a traitor, and formally gives it under his hand and ſeal, the pardon is then ſealed; but not when he writes an obligation, and ſeals it, wherein he obligeth himſelf to pardon him for whatſoever he may afterwards do treaſonably, upon condition he do ſo and ſo. Here the obligation, which is conditional, is only ſealed: not a remiſſion. But we have heard, that the ſcripture holds forth baptiſm as a ſeal of the remiſſion of ſin; of remiſſion actually conferred, not merely promiſed, as a thing to come. So teacheth Wendelin, in anſwer to the Popiſh objection, "Infants are baptized for the remiſſion of ſins;" Ergo. "Sins are pardoned by baptiſm in the Popiſh ſenſe." He anſwers, "I deny the conſequence. The reaſon is, Becauſe to be baptiſed for the remiſſion of ſins, is by baptiſm to be confirmed of the remiſſion of ſin. So of old, adult perſons were baptized by the apoſtles for the remiſſion of ſins, which by faith they had received before baptiſm. So John preached the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, Mark i. 4. who nevertheleſs baptized none but thoſe who had before profeſſed repentance, and believed the goſpel." It is in vain to talk of the conditional ſealing of the remiſſion of ſin: for the ſacraments are ſeals of the covenant, but the covenant muſt be made ere it be ſealed; unleſs we will ſay, that God ſets his ſeal to a blank, which no wiſe man will do. Now, faith is that which enters the ſoul into covenant; and then, and not till then, do the ſacraments, though before received, ſeal the covenant. So that, although an elect infant be baptized, or an adult perſon partake of the ſacrament of the ſupper, being unregenerate, the ſacraments ſeal no ſaving benefit to them any manner of way; unleſs you either ſay, that the unregenerate, and ſuch as have no ſaving good from God, are in covenant with God, or that God ſets his ſeal to a blank; both which are moſt abſurd. We ſpeak not now of an external federal relation; for no ſaving benefits depend thereon. And what elſe is the meaning of that ſo frequently inculcated by the generality of Proteſtant divines, for ought I can learn, that the efficacy of baptiſm is not tied to the time of its adminiſtration? We heard before wherein the efficacy of it doth conſiſt. It ſeems then it doth not always effectually ſeal any ſaving benefit at that time; and what is the reaſon of that, but that the party hath nothing of that nature to be ſealed? The Lord does indeed call all men that hear the goſpel, to believe; and tells them, that if they will believe, they ſhall be juſtified, pardoned, &c. But this is an offer of the covenant, and not the covenant itſelf, to which the ſeals are appended; otherwiſe every one to whom the goſpel-offer comes, ought not to be debarred from, but invited, encouraged, and preſſed to receive the ſacraments, as ſeals appointed of God to confirm them in the belief of the Lord's willingneſs to help them; that, being ſo perſuaded, they might embrace the goſpel-offer, and ſo the heavenly pearls ſhould be caſt before dogs and ſwine. But the ſacraments are confirming, not converting ordinances; appointed for friends, not for foes. Moreover, as in civil contracts, ſome things are ipſo facto diſponed and given over by the one party to the other, and ſome things are promiſed to be given at ſuch or ſuch times, one ſeal ſerves for both; yet this ſeal confirms the former, as actually made over to the party for the preſent time; the latter, as to be given him at ſuch a time: ſo it is in the covenant of grace. There are ſome things actually made over in præſenti to the believer, ſuch as, juſtification, reconciliation, adoption, ſanctification begun; there are other things promiſed to be given at ſuch times as God ſees meet afterwards, ſuch as, progreſſive ſanctification, final victory over ſin, &c. Of the former kind is the pardon of ſin, as hath been already ſaid. And there is no promiſe in the Bible for the remiſſion of ſin in the ſenſe pleaded for, made to a juſtified perſon; no more than there is of formal juſtification, reconciliation with God, and adoption. So that there muſt needs be a difference betwixt a ſealing the pardon of ſin, and a ſealing of the promiſes of the covenant; though one ſeal ſerves for both. From all which it appears, that there is no conditional ſealing of the pardon of ſin, either before or after the ſoul is brought to Chriſt; but ſeeing, upon our firſt believing in Chriſt, the ſacraments ſeal to us remiſſion of all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, abſolutely, all are together and at once pardoned. And ſo Calvin teacheth. “Baptiſm “(ſays he) bringeth three things to our faith. This is “the firſt which the Lord ſetteth out unto us, that it “ſhould be a token and proof of our cleanſing; or (to “expreſs my mind better) it is like to a certain ſealed “charter, whereby he confirmeth unto us, that all our “ſins are ſo defaced, cancelled, and blotted out, that “they may never come in his ſight, nor be rehearſed, “nor be imputed. For he willeth, that all they that “believe, ſhould be baptized into forgiveneſs of ſins.” And again, a little after. “Neither is it to be thought, “that baptiſm is applied only to the time paſt.——But “thus we ought to think, that at what time ſoever we “be baptized, we are at once waſhed and cleanſed for “all our life. Therefore, ſo oft as we fall, we muſt go “back to the remembrance of baptiſm; and therewith “we muſt arm our mind that it may be alway certain “and aſſured of the forgiveneſs of ſins.”

Arg. III. If a believer, at his firſt entrance into covenant with God, and union with Jeſus Chriſt, be reputed in law to have fully ſatisfied the law, for all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come; then he is actually abſolved from the guilt of the ſame. The connection is evident: for if the law be ſatisfied, it can demand no more; when the payment and ſatisfaction is made, and ſuſtained in law, before the bar of God, as the payment, and ſatisfaction of ſuch a perſon, what can hinder the abſolution, or the getting up of the diſcharge? But ſo it is, that an elect perſon, upon his union with Jeſus Chriſt by faith, is reputed, in the court of heaven, to have actually, though not perſonally, ſatisfied the law for all his ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come; Ergo. Then they are all together and at once diſcharged. The aſſumption appears true; becauſe Chriſt and the believer are but one perſon in law, as the cautioner and principal debtor, the advocate and his client, the huſband and wife; yea, much more than any of theſe, in ſo far as our union with Chriſt is a more ſtrait union than any of thoſe among men. So the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, having fully ſatisfied for all ſins, and the believer being one with him, it is true, that they have ſuffered and ſatisfied in him; and the judgment of God, being according to truth, doth ſurely go this way. “In virtue of this conjunc-“tion, (ſays Beza,) and ſpiritual marriage by faith, he “taketh all our miſeries upon himſelf, and we do re-“ceive all his treaſures of him.” So teacheth Zanchius: “For, (ſays he,) by our incorporation with “Chriſt, his whole paſſion becomes ours, becauſe we “are made one fleſh and one blood; and by the paſ-“ſion of Chriſt, all puniſhment due to ſin is taken a-“way.” Luther delivers the ſame, in theſe words: “Thus he (to wit, Chriſt) happily making an exchange “with us, took on our ſinful perſon, and gifted to us “his innocent and victorious perſon. Herewith we “being arrayed and clothed, are freed from the curſe “of the law, becauſe Chriſt himſelf willingly became a “curſe for us.” And truly the ſcripture ſpeaks of Chriſt, and Adam, as if there had never been any other men in the world but they, they being the two publick perſons, in which are all mankind, 1 Cor. xv. 45, 46, 47. Now, as Jeſus the ſecond Adam entered into the ſame covenant that the firſt Adam did, (for Chriſt purchaſed heaven and glory for his people, according to the ſtricteſt terms of the covenant of works); ſo by him was done for the elect whatſoever the firſt Adam had undone for all mankind. Wherefore the caſe ſtands thus: That likeas whatſoever the firſt Adam did, or befel him, is reckoned as done by, and to have befallen all mankind: ſo whatſoever the ſecond Adam did, or befel him, as head of his people, is reckoned on their account. So then, as in Adam they ſinned, eating of the tree, ſo in Chriſt they ſuffered, hanging on the tree; as in the firſt Adam they broke the law, in the ſecond Adam they repaired the breach thereof. And as it is then, and not till then, that we become the children of Adam by natural generation, we are reputed to have ſinned in him; ſo it is then, and not till then, that we become the children of Chriſt by faith and regeneration, we are reputed to have ſuffered in him. Mr. Gibbons, in his ſermon, intitled, The nature of juſtification opened, (it ſhould have been ſaid overturned) is much piqued at this doctrine; and tells us, it is the fundamental miſtake of the Antinomians, to think, that a believer is righteous in the ſight of God, with the ſelf ſame active and paſſive righteouſneſs, wherewith Chriſt was righteous; as though believers ſuffered in Chriſt, and obeyed in Chriſt, and were as righteous in God's eſteem as Chriſt himſelf, having his perſonal righteouſneſs made perſonally theirs by imputation. But we need not wonder to hear this from one who tells us that the covenant of works is not fully executed; that it is not abrogated, but is in part executed on believers, yet diſpenſed with by ſuperinducing a new covenant of grace over it; and that the threatenings of the law are no more predictions of the event, than thou ſhalt and thou ſhalt not in the command, that the terms on which ſinners are juſtified, are, firſt, faith. People would expect a ſecondly here; but that were too barefaced. Therefore ſays he, Then this faith hath two daughters that inſeparably attend her, 1. Repentance. 2. Newneſs of life. Sure he underſtands this in the matter of juſtification, not of ſanctification; for we ſuppoſe he ſpeaks ſenſe, and to the purpoſe in hand. Further, that God accepteth from, imputeth unto ſinners faith in Jeſus Chriſt as their righteouſneſs: which faith juſtifies formaliter & ratione ſui, as it is covenant-keeping, &c. Surely this learned man knew other adverſaries to him of better credit than Antinomians; but he ſeems to diſſemble it, to make his doctrine take place the more eaſily. It is well known that is the doctrine taught by the body of Proteſtant divines. That the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt, is our righteouſneſs before God; and that faith doth no way juſtify us but inſtrumentally, or correlatively; that all our righteouſneſs for juſtification is without us. And till their arguments againſt the Arminian way of juſtification by faith be overturned, his doctrine cannot have place. He invidiouſly talks of Chriſt's perſonal righteouſneſs made perſonally theirs, and believers being as righteous in God's eſteem as Chriſt himſelf. We diſclaim all pretences to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt as the ſecond perſon in the glorious Trinity, commonly called his eſſential righteouſneſs; but we know no righteouſneſs elſe upon which we can venture our ſouls, but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt as our Redeemer, reſulting from his perfect active and paſſive obedience: and fear not to ſay with the apoſtle, 1 John iii. 7. that he that doth righteouſneſs, is righteous, even as he is righteous: not in regard of quantity, but verity; there being a finite application of an infinite righteouſneſs, not in reſpect of the full value of it, but in ſo far as our neceſſity craves it. Righteouſneſs conſidered formally with reſpect to the rule of righteouſneſs ſimply, is not capable of degrees, though it be in reſpect of the ſubject of it; one righteous perſon being infinitely more noble than another: the excellency of the agent or patient giving value to the obedience active or paſſive. But it is evident, that Chriſt's righteouſneſs is imputed to us merely under the former notion, as it denotes a conformity to the rule of righteouſneſs. Now, I pray you, conſider what the law, which is the rule of righteouſneſs, doth require; even to love the Lord with all the heart, and with all the ſoul. But there is no poſſibility of going beyond that; and if the perſon come not up to it, he is not at all righteous; and it is nothing elſe but conformity to the law that denominates a perſon under a law righteous. Wherefore degrees of compariſon here are unreaſonable. But we need not marvel to hear them ſpeak of degrees of righteouſneſs, or conformity to the law, who bring forth a new rule of righteouſneſs, beſides that which was given at firſt, as this learned man does. I had always thought, that as there is but one God, and he unchangeable, ſo there had been but one rule of righteouſneſs, and that unchangeable; and that had been fully expreſſed in the firſt covenant, its commands contained in the decalogue. But now we are taught otherwiſe: Righteouſneſs (ſays he) is a conformity to the law; he that fulfils the law, is righteous in the eye of the law. Now, the law of the covenant runs thus, 'He that believeth ſhall not 'periſh;' ſo that a believer keeps and fulfills this law, and therefore faith is imputed to him for righteouſneſs. This a new ſort of a law indeed, where there is no commandment at all. But I think it is God that fulfils this law, and not the believer; for the accompliſhment or fulfilling of it is in the ſalvation of the believer, which the ſcripture tells us is not of ourſelves, but is the work of God alone. But let us conſider it in form of a law, thus, Believe and thou ſhalt be ſaved; and let us ſuppoſe the rule of righteouſneſs to be here found. I ſay, that this requires either perfect believing, or not. If it require perfect faith, then the judgment of God is not according to truth, in pronouncing men righteous according to this law; for no man in this life is perfect in faith; if it require not perfect faith, then all the unbelief and doubtings in a man's heart, where there is any thing of faith, are no ſins againſt this law of grace; which is abſurd: yea, and ſo they are no ſins at all; for, as hath been already proven, believers are dead to the law of works. Moreover, believing, or faith, being in ſeveral degrees in ſeveral perſons, one is more righteous than another, or more conform to the law than another: and the leaſt meaſure of true faith being a fulfilling of this law, any further degree of it muſt be a work of ſupererogation, the law being more than fulfilled; all which are abſurd. In fine, this doctrine makes the goſpel to overturn the law, and maketh Chriſt the end of the law, for deſtruction, not for conſummation, for righteouſneſs, to every one that believeth; becauſe the righteouſneſs of the law muſt be put out of doors, before this new righteouſneſs can be brought in. But Chriſt hath plainly told us, that heaven and earth ſhall ſooner paſs away than one jot or tittle of the law. And how does it reflect upon the juſtice, purity, and holineſs of God, to accept us as righteous in his ſight formally on the account of a righteouſneſs which is as filthy rags? for ſuch is our faith formaliter & ratione ſui.

I think, indeed, this author, does rationally yoke theſe two together, viz. a believer's being righteous in the ſight of God with the ſelf-ſame righteouſneſs wherewith Chriſt (as Redeemer, head, and repreſentative of his) is righteous; and a believer's ſuffering and obeying in Chriſt; for theſe indeed ſe mutuo ponunt & tollunt; and this obligeth thoſe that acknowledge the immediate imputation of Chriſt's righteouſneſs to us, to acknowledge alſo our being reputed, upon our union with him, to have ſuffered in him for all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come; which being granted, they muſt needs yield the pardon of the ſame, in the ſenſe pleaded for. But why ſhould a believer ſuffering in Chriſt be thought ſuch a groſs point of Antinomianiſm? That we ſinned in Adam, I ſuppoſe he will not deny; and if ſo in the firſt Adam, why may we not be ſaid to have ſuffered in Chriſt the ſecond Adam, who was no leſs a publick perſon in his ſuffering, than the firſt in his ſinning. The apoſtle, Eph. ii. 6. tells us, that believers were raiſed up in him; which muſt needs ſuppoſe, that they died in him. But he is very plain in this point, Gal. ii. 20. I am crucified with Chriſt. Hereby he proves, that he was dead to the law through the law, for the law had crucified him with Chriſt: wherefore it had no more to require of him, than the law of a land of a malefactor hanged for his crime. The ſcripture hath led Luther into that fundamental miſtake of the Antinomians: "For (ſays "he) I am crucified and dead with Chriſt through faith." And that none may miſtake his meaning, he tells us, that the apoſtle doth not ſpeak here of concrucifixion of imitation or example, but of that ſublime concrucifixion, where Chriſt alone doth all, but the believer is crucified with him through faith. Fergusson tells us, that the threatening of death, Gen. ii. 17. is fulfilled in the elect; ſo that they die, and yet their lives are ſpared; for they are reckoned in law to have died, when Chriſt their ſurety died for them. Zanchius favours this doctrine much: for he ſays, that whatſoever was done to our head Chriſt, that is partly done to his whole body, and ſo to each member already; and partly is to be done. Beza is in this point Antinomian in grain; "Although "thou (ſays he) haſt ſatisfied for the pain of thy ſins "in the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, and that thou art alſo "clothed with his righteouſneſs," &c. And Rutherford, though a great adverſary to the Antinomians, as is well known by his learned writings againſt them, hath yet fallen into this fundamental miſtake of theirs:

“ For (ſays he) Chriſt's dying and ſatisfying, is ours; “ he dying in our ſtead and place, and we dying in him “ legally, (not phyſically;) and ſo are we not only by “ his ſatisfaction, which is made ours, and by faith ap“plied to us, negatively freed from hell; but poſitively “ righteous.” The apoſtle teacheth believers ſo to think of themſelves, Rom. vi. 10, 11. For in that he died, he died unto ſin (i. e. for ſin) once; but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewiſe reckon ye alſo yourſelves to be dead indeed unto ſin; but alive unto God in Chriſt, en Chriſto, &c. Where we ſee plainly, that believers are called to reckon or conclude themſelves to be dead unto ſin, that is, for ſin, as is plain from the 10th verſe, otherwiſe they do not reckon concerning themſelves as they do concerning Chriſt. The apoſtle taketh it for granted, that believers have all laid down this concluſion, or have made this reckoning, That Chriſt died to ſin, that is, ſuffered for it; here is another concluſion he would have them to make, Likewiſe reckon ye alſo, viz. that ye are dead to ſin, and this by way of ſyllogiſtical deduction from the former, Houto kai humeis logizeſthe; where the medium is our union with Chriſt, ſealed in baptiſm, ver. 4. ‘ For if Chriſt died to ſin, then ‘ we being one with him,’ died to it alſo, viz. in his perſon, as the text hath it, in Chriſt. Whereas indeed our dying to ſin in point of ſanctification, is in our own perſon, not in the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt, as is manifeſt. From what is ſaid it appears, that a believer is reputed to have ſatisfied for all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, at his union with Chriſt by faith; and conſequently that all his ſins are then pardoned ſimul & ſemel.

If any ſhall ſay, That although we be reputed thus to have ſatisfied the law for all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come; yet it no more follows, that we have the pardon of them in our own perſons, than that we are glorified in our own perſons at our firſt believing in Chriſt; for both are fruits of the ſame purchaſe: I anſwer, That this is to confound our abſolute and relative ſtate, and to make them go on alike by degrees; which is abſurd. But I pray you let it be conſidered, that there are two things in Chriſt's obedience to the law as the repreſentative of his people; firſt, The payment of a debt: ſecondly, A purchaſe of ſome poſitive benefits. The debt being paid, and the payment of it for ſuch a perſon being ſuſtained in law, the diſcharge cannot be kept up; but juſtice itſelf ipſo facto, looſeth the man from the obligation, as is manifeſt. But as to theſe other bleſſings, there is no ſuch neceſſity of their being made immediately forthcoming unto them; only they have immediately a right to them all given them; and this eſpecially when the payer or purchaſer conſents to the delay of giving up theſe things to thoſe for whom they are purchaſed; as it is in this caſe. This we ſee plainly in the way of human contracts. As when a man pays his debt to the creditor, and moreover purchaſeth a piece of ground from him; the very paying of the money in juſtice looſeth him from his former bond or obligation, and gives him a right to the land; but does not put him actually in poſſeſſion thereof at that very time.

Arg. IV. The ſcripture plainly holds out unto us, that the Lord, in dealing with believers, conſidereth them as in Chriſt Jeſus, and not as they are in themſelves; and it cannot be otherwiſe, ſeeing the union made up betwixt Chriſt and a ſoul by faith, is a laſting, even an everlaſting union; ſo that after their union with Chriſt, at the firſt moment of believing, they never more ſtand before God on their own bottom, otherwiſe God ſhould be to them, even as to others, a conſuming fire. But if we account a believer to lie one moment under unpardoned ſin, he muſt be conſidered abſtractedly from Chriſt, and dealt with judicially as he is in himſelf; or if otherwiſe, it reflects no ſmall diſhonour on the Mediator, the perſon who is one with him, being condemned by the law. And the truth is, that a perſon being once united to Chriſt by faith, whatever is chargeable on that perſon muſt be laid to the charge of Chriſt, and he is anſwerable for it; and the ſame may be exacted of him, as the debt contracted by the wife is chargeable on the huſband; but by once offering up of himſelf, he hath perfected for ever them that are ſanctified. To this purpoſe ſpeaks holy John Careleſs, in his letter to William Thymes; “ He hath clothed us in all “ his merits, and taken to himſelf all our ſin, ſo that if “ any ſhould be now condemned for the ſame, it muſt “ needs be Jeſus Chriſt, who hath taken them upon “ him. But indeed he hath made ſatisfaction for them “ to the uttermoſt; ſo that, for his ſake, they ſhall never be imputed to us, if they were a thouſand times “ more than they be.” Thus he; and that moſt truly, becauſe the elect perſon being once united to Chriſt, the Lord Jeſus is reputed to have taken on all his ſins in particular, whether paſt, preſent, or to come; ſo that now, if any perſon be reputed guilty, or actually liable to eternal wrath, it muſt be Chriſt himſelf, who is legally the ſinner in point of guilt, though the fault was never transferred on him: therefore, if the ſin be unpardoned for the leaſt moment, it muſt be to him and not to us; for though they be ours by commiſſion, yet he hath undertaken and bound himſelf to anſwer for them. Among men there are two ſorts of ſureties. Some become ſureties for others, ſo as the creditor hath ſtill a right to crave the principal debtor, who, notwithſtanding of the ſuretyſhip, remains ſtill liable; in which caſe, if the principal party fails to pay, after diligence uſed for the ſame, the creditor falls on the ſurety. Some do ſo become ſureties for others, that the principal debtor is eo ipſo relieved and diſcharged; there being no hopes at all of payment from the principal. This laſt way Chriſt is ſurety for his people, and not the firſt way: for the Lord knowing that it was utterly impoſſible for man to ſatisfy by himſelf, muſt needs be ſuppoſed to make no other bargain; but laying help upon one that is mighty, he ſimply paſſeth the ſinner in his own perſon, and takes Chriſt for all; who ſays to the Father, ‘ If ‘ you take me let theſe go their way.’ And ſo, as it is ſaid, Iſ. liii. 7. NiGGAS VeHU NaGNaNeH, He (to wit the Father) exacted, and he (to wit Chriſt) anſwered; or he was anſwered, viz. by Chriſt. So Rabbi David judgeth the word in Niphil ſhould be expounded. A godly writer tells us, that God laid all on him, that he might be ſure of ſatisfaction: proteſting that he would not deal with us, nor ſo much as expect any payment from us. Wherefore in law Chriſt is the ſinner, and the believer goes free; and if ſo, then the ſin, if it be at all unpardoned, it muſt be to him, and not to us. None will ſtumble at this, who conſider matters duly. Luther doubts not to ſay, Chriſt was a ſinner, and that there was none a greater ſinner than he; and, that whatſoever ſins we do commit, or ſhall in time to come commit, they are as proper to Chriſt, as if he himſelf had committed them. “ In ſum (ſays he) ſin muſt be“come Chriſt's proper ſin, or we periſh.” Rivet defends Illyricus againſt Bellarmine, in that he ſays, Chriſt might moſt truly be called the ſinner. Bellarmine (ſays he) contends that Chriſt may attribute our ſins unto himſelf; and that truly, as I believe, for he cannot lye, therefore he might alſo truly call himſelf the ſinner, while he ſuſtained our perſon; who nevertheleſs was in himſelf innocent. What blaſphemy and impiety is here? The ſame is taught by Hemmingius, Taunovius, Witſius, Rutherford, and Bridge. The apoſtle puts it out of doubt, that it is Chriſt who ſpeaks to the Father, Pſal. xl. ſee Heb. x. and in the 12th verſe of that Pſalm he calls the ſins, the burden whereof he bears, his iniquities. And it cannot be denied, but that he was made ſin; which is more than to be a ſinner, in ſo far as the abſtract ſignifies ſomewhat more exquiſite than the concrete, if we will believe the learned Rivet, loco ſupra citato. From all which I conclude, that ſeeing Chriſt is made the ſinner in law, and the Lord paſſeth the man thus, upon Chriſt's undertaking the charge, all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, are together and at once pardoned, viz. aſſoon as the ſoul is one with Chriſt by faith.

Arg. V. The love of God, called the love of complacency, is, as God himſelf, unchangeable: ‘for whom he once loves he loves to the end,’ John xiii. and ‘nothing can ſeparate them from it,’ Rom. viii. Though the emanations of it towards believers may be ſtopt for a time in great meaſure, yet that love, as it is in God, ſtill remains, quoad affectum, as they ſay, though not quoad effectum. The due conſideration of this, which is not controverted amongſt the orthodox, and is plainly proven by them againſt the patrons of the ſaints falling away, will neceſſitate the aſſerting of the pardon of all ſins ſimul & ſemel; ſo as the believer is never after his union with Chriſt, by any ſin, for one moment, actually liable to eternal wrath. For that liableneſs to God's wrath, and the unchangeableneſs of God's love, are incompatible. Which I prove thus. For a ſinner to be liable in actu ſecundo to eternal death, is nothing elſe but to be under a ſentence of eternal death as a ſinner; that is to ſay, the law condemns him as ſuch, though the ſentence never be executed. Now, what is the law of God, but a tranſcript of the holy nature of God? ſo that God himſelf is ſurely ſet againſt thoſe whom the law is againſt; otherwiſe God is changeable, or the law is not a true copy of his nature; both which are more than abſurd. It comes in effect to this, that God approves whom the law diſapproves; that is, God hates the man, hath no delight in him at all; ſeeing he that is guilty of one, is guilty of all: and yet at the ſame time he loves him, and delights in him; which is a flat contradiction. If any ſhall ſay, that the ſinner may be hated of God as he is in himſelf, yet beloved as united to Chriſt, it is granted; but it makes nothing to the purpoſe, for while we ſpeak of a believer as he is in himſelf, it is merely a notion of our minds by preciſion; but really and indeed he is ever in Chriſt, and the Lord's judgment is according to truth; ſo he never deals with a believer, but as he is indeed in Chriſt, as was ſaid before. And if to adjudge a perſon to eternal wrath be not to hate him, I confeſs I underſtand not what can be made of God's hatred againſt a perſon; for it is certain it is no paſſion in him, as it is in us. Rutherford tells us, that there is no reaſon why God ſhould communicate the purchaſed remiſſion by halves, (per partes,) unleſs he loved and hated alſo the ſelf-ſame perſon from eternity; which is inconſiſtent. So ſaith Piſcator, God hates them whoſe ſins he hath not pardoned; and this, while he teacheth, that, by the forgiveneſs of ſin, which we ſeek in the Lord's prayer, is meant the ſenſe of pardon. There is one thing, I foreſee, will readily be ſaid againſt this, to invalidate the argument; that is, that the Lord Jeſus Chriſt was condemned by the law, yet ſtill beloved of God; and therefore they are not inconſiſtent. To this I anſwer, There is in ſin the fault, and the guilt ariſing therefrom: the latter, not the former, was transferred on Chriſt: but an unpardoned ſinner lies under both. Hence ariſeth a vaſt difference betwixt the law's condemning of Chriſt, and its condemning us. While the law condemns a ſinner, who is formally ſuch and in himſelf, it declares him to be ſinful, and oppoſite to God; which is the formal notion under which he is hated of God; and therefore it adjudgeth him to eternal wrath. But here Chriſt is innocent, only the puniſhment is exacted of him, ſeeing he came in the room of condemned ſinners, and undertook voluntarily to ſatisfy for them: wherefore God cannot but delight in him, ſeeing there was no ſinful evil in him, only a penal evil is inflicted on him. But the law finding one ſin in the ſinner uncovered with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, leaves him in no other caſe than it did Adam guilty of the firſt, viz. condemned, and one whom God had no delight in.

Arg. VI. If all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, be not pardoned at once, when the ſoul is united to Chriſt by faith; then a believer at one and the ſame time is adjudged to eternal life and to eternal death. That he is adjudged to eternal life, in ſo far as he is a believer, the ſcripture plainly teacheth; ‘for he that believeth, ‘hath everlaſting life;’ and that he is adjudged to eternal death upon the account of ſins not yet pardoned, though committed, is no leſs evident: ſeeing, according to this doctrine, ſin is not pardoned in reſpect of the obligation to eternal wrath, till he renew the acts of faith and repentance; which is nothing elſe than that he is actually bound over thereto. And ſo the man is legally dead and legally alive at one and the ſame time. Whoſo ſhall reconcile theſe, erit mihi magnus Apollo. But I ſhall ſtand no more on this; but conclude with the following argument.

Arg. VII. ult. This doctrine, teaching the pardon of all ſins together and at once, upon the ſoul's believing at firſt on Chriſt, hath the advantage of the other in two reſpects.

I. In that it is moſt adapted to the grand deſign of the goſpel; which is, to exalt the riches of the free grace of God in Jeſus Chriſt. For, firſt, Who ſees not the grace of God far more exalted in giving out a full and complete remiſſion of all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, together and at once; than in giving out remiſſion by halves; as the giving up of a bond wholly and at once, ſpeaks out more favour than now and then particular receipts and diſcharges. Let none ſay, that it is too much boldneſs for us, thus to lay down methods and rules for God's exalting of his grace; and if this were true, then he ſhould ſanctify us wholly at our union with Chriſt, as well as pardon all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come: we ſay that we cannot take upon us to lay down or propoſe rules that way; but underſtanding the exalting of grace to be the great deſign of the goſpel, we may well be allowed to conſider what doth moſt contribute thereto. And whatever other way the Lord might, in his boundleſs wiſdom, have fallen upon, for bringing about that end, I confidently aver, that none in the world can deviſe a way how grace might have been more exalted, than it is by this way laid down in the goſpel. And with the ſame confidence I ſay, that the gradual ſanctification of believers doth more exalt the riches of grace, than if God had made believers perfectly holy at the firſt moment of believing, as I ſhall afterwards make appear; ſo ſweetly doth the perfect pardon of ſin, and the imperfect ſanctification of believers, contribute to the grand deſign of the goſpel. Secondly, It doth alſo exalt the grace of God more, that the ſinner being once united to Chriſt by faith, hath a free and full remiſſion of all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, than that the pardon of future ſins ſhould be ſuſpended on the acts of our believing and repenting.

II. It is moſt adapted to excite believers to the ſerious practice of godlineſs, to a holy and ſtrict goſpel-walk. Which appears, firſt, In that it doth natively fill the heart with love to God, the main ſpring of goſpel-obedience, and the moſt powerful incentive to a tender walk. It is true, the man who apprehends ſins paſt and preſent forgiven, cannot but love much; but he who apprehends ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, to be forgiven, muſt love more. Here then are two debtors to the grace of God; I think I may well propoſe our Lord's queſtion, Luke vii. 42. Which of them will love him moſt? and will acquieſce in Simon's anſwer, ſeeing Chriſt approved it, I ſuppoſe that he to whom he forgave moſt, ver. 43. Secondly, As this doctrine furniſhes the children of God beſt, with love to conſtrain them, and cords of a man to draw them; ſo it doth remove the fear of eternal wrath, which keeps the ſoul in bondage, Rom. viii. 15. 1 John iv. 18. fills the heart with confuſion, daſhes and mars us in our acceſs to God, and looks like ſlavery rather than the glorious liberty of ſons. But the doctrine of the pardon of future ſins only upon after repentance, &c. cheriſheth this fear; ſo as men muſt be continually under it, in regard they are continually ſinning; and though a man be in this moment perfectly freed from an actual obligation to eternal wrath, yet the very next moment he is again brought under it; ſo that in very deed it is a perfect rack to the conſcience, and would effectually prove ſo, were it as firmly believed as is pretended. It is needleſs to diſtinguiſh here betwixt the greater and leſſer ſins: for ſin as ſin lays the ſoul under God's wrath, where it is in a capacity of actual obligation thereto, as was ſaid before. Whatever influence the ſoul's apprehenſion of its liableneſs to eternal wrath, under ſin till it be repented of, may be ſuppoſed to have, I think it is plain, that one great end of Chriſt's death was, to deliver us, that we might ſerve him without fear of what the law or vindictive juſtice of God may do to us, Luke i. 74, 75. Luther who was a man very much exerciſed with conflicts of conſcience, is very plain this way; "Wherefore, (ſays he,) if ſin torment thee, if death terrify thee, think it is but a vain ſpectre and an illuſion of the devil, as certainly it is. For in very deed there is no more ſin, no more curſe, no more death, no devil; becauſe Chriſt hath overcome and aboliſhed all theſe. There is no defect in the thing, but in our belief; for it is difficult to reaſon to believe theſe ſo ineſtimable benefits." And elſewhere: "Hence (ſays he) it follows, that in reſpect of the conſcience, we are altogether free from the law: therefore that ſchoolmaſter ought not to be troubleſome to it with his terrors, threats, and captivity." And again, "We ought, without the conſcience, to make a God of it, (the law,) but within the conſcience, it is a devil," &c. And a little after, "Let him (Chriſt) alone reign in his righteouſneſs, ſecurity, joy, and life; that the conſcience being glad, may ſleep in Chriſt, without any ſenſe of law, ſin, and death." Theſe expreſſions are ſomewhat unuſual; but the matter is heavenly and ſublime, and the very marrow of the life of faith, and ſavours much of Paul's elevated ſpirit, while treating of the doctrine of free grace, or rather, of the Spirit of Chriſt. Agreeably to this doth Calvin teach: "The law (ſays he) hath no place in the conſciences of the faithful before the judgment-ſeat of God. The ſecond part of (Chriſtian liberty) is, that conſcience obey the law, not as compelled by the neceſſity of the law, but being free from the yoke of the law itſelf, of their own accord they obey the will of God. For becauſe they abide in perpetual terrors, ſo long as they be under the dominion of the law, they ſhall never be, with chearful readineſs, framed to the obedience of God, unleſs they firſt have this liberty given them. On the other ſide, if being delivered from this ſevere exacting of the law, they hear that they be called with fatherly gentleneſs, they will with great chearfulneſs anſwer his call." So Beza: "Foraſmuch (ſays he) as Jeſus Chriſt hath, by one infinite obedience, made ſatisfaction to the infinite Majeſty of God, it followeth, that my iniquities can no more fray nor trouble me; my accounts being aſſuredly razed by the precious blood of Chriſt.

Now, I ſhall conſider the objections againſt this doctrine; and ſhall handle them in the ſame order as Sedgwick hath them gathered together. That learned man delivereth them not as his; but tells us, after all, that his own judgment inclines to that opinion, that all the ſins paſt of a believer are (at once) forgiven, and all his future ſins are remitted unto him upon renewed acts of believing and repenting, for Chriſt's ſake.

Object. 1. Heb. viii. 12. 'Their iniquities will I remember no more.' Not to remember iniquity any more, doth in common ſenſe ſuppoſe, that that iniquity was before; for if it never was, it cannot be ſaid to be remembered at all. So that paſſage, Jer. xxxi. 34. 'I will forgive their iniquity;' and Jer. xxxiii. 8. 'I will pardon all their iniquities,' do ſuppoſe an iniquity or offence committed: for if it be not yet committed, how can it properly be ſaid to be forgiven? So Iſ. xliii. 25. 'I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions;' but debts which were never as yet made, may not be entered into the book, and therefore cannot be ſaid to be blotted out.

Anſw. I have already ſhown, in what ſenſe the Lord ſaith, 'he will remember their ſins no more;' which is no way infringed by this objection, and doth very well agree with the ſcripture-dialect. But as for that criticiſm upon the word remember, that in common ſenſe it ſuppoſeth that the thing was before; I ſay it is weak, to ſay no worſe of it; for the moſt ſenſible mere man that ever was in the world ſince the fall, and inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt too, uſeth the word of that which only was to be, Eccleſ. xi. 8. 'Let him remember the days of darkneſs, for they ſhall be many.' And what will ye ſay to find it uſed of a thing that never ſo much as was to be? So David uſeth it concerning Judas, Pſal. cix. 16. 'Becauſe he remembered not to ſhew mercy.' A learned critic tells us, that in the holy language to remember, does not neceſſarily preſuppoſe any precedent knowledge which was forgot, and afterwards comes into mind; but as we ſee ſays he, it is taken ſimply for the knowledge of any thing, and ſpeaking of the thing known. Now, when it is applied to God, it is certain the exiſtence of the thing, and his knowledge of it, cannot be ſeparated, for the leaſt moment. The learned gentleman Leigh tells us, that the Hebrew word ſignifies to make mention of a thing. And I think it is to be obſerved, that the apoſtle, in tranſlating of it, uſeth not a compound, but a ſimple word, ou me mneſtheſo etis which may very well be ſo tranſlated, as well as the verbal is in almoſt all the places of the New Teſtament, In the Greek, mnemoneuo which ſignifies to remember, memini, recorder, 2 Tim. ii. 8. Rev. xviii. 5. Luke xvii. 32. So the Septuagint uſeth it, Exod. xiii. 3. And one tells us, it anſwers to the Hebrew word ZACHAR; and yet we find it uſed of a thing, that was to come, to wit, the departure out of Egypt, which was long after Joſeph's death; but by faith Joſeph remembered it, emn moneuſe, Heb. xi. 22. But why ſhould men go ſo ſtrictly to work about the notation of the word? for if ſo it be, it is certain God can no more be ſaid properly to remember a thing than to forget it. And as unhappy are the adverſaries in their criticiſm on the words pardoning and forgiving their importing the actual commiſſion of ſin.

The apoſtle tells us, 1 Tim. iii. 16. that Chriſt was juſtified in the Spirit, viz. abſolved from the guilt of the elects ſins, which he had voluntarily taken upon him, and ſatisfied for; yet ſome of theſe were not then committed, nor are they to this day, notwithſtanding he was juſtified in reſpect of them, 2 Kings v. 18. 'In this thing (ſays Naaman) the Lord pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon; when I bow down myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon,' &c. Upon this there is a queſtion propoſed, Whether or not Naaman deprecates and ſeeks that to be forgiven which he did before his converſion, or that which he was to do after his converſion? Wendelin tells us, that ſome modern interpreters embrace the firſt; but moſtly all others the latter; which he himſelf holds likewiſe. And of that judgment he ſays, are the Chaldee, Greek interpreters, Jerome, Pagnin, Luther, Vatablus, Munſter, Junius, and Tremellius; the French, Italian, and Spaniſh tranſlators. However it be, I remark, for the purpoſe in hand, that many learned men are not ſo fond upon the pretended import of the word pardon, but that ſometimes for their part, they will ſuffer it to reſpect ſin not yet committed. And I would challenge any man to give me a ſolid anſwer and reaſon, why ſin may not be forgiven before it be committed, as well as ſatisfied for at the deareſt rate, before the actors be in rerum natura. I think the firſt may at leaſt as eaſily be as the latter, of which no true Chriſtian will doubt; and I would leave it to the judgment of any unbiaſſed perſon, whether or not the exacting of ſatisfaction for ſins not only not yet committed, but even the actors of which are not yet in being, ſeems to be more liable to inconveniencies, than the pardon of ſins, though not yet committed, yet ſatiſfied for, the perſon now at the even time living and believing in him who died for the ungodly ? Wherefore it is ſtrange that Bp Downhame's gravity permits him to be ſo wanton on this point, as to tell us, that this cannot be, unleſs we make God like the pope, who aforehand forgave ſins to come. Will his lordſhip allow the pope to take money aforehand for ſins to come, and not allow him to give people what they have bought with their money ? But no more of this. If we did not too much meaſure God's ways by man's ways, perhaps there would be leſs difficulty in this matter. Only we know, that, as to him with whom we have to do, all is preſent before his eyes ; there is neither time paſt nor time to come with him. No better is that which they would make of the word blotting out. If the future ſins of believers were not in God's debt book, how came juſtice to exact payment of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt for them ? Scripture tells us, that ‘ in the volume of God's book ‘ it was written’ concerning Chriſt, that ‘ he came to do ‘ the will of the Father,’ Pſal. xl. 7. What was that will, but that he ſhould ‘ lay down his life for the ſheep,’ John x. 18. or die for the ſins of the elect ? If Chriſt's ſufferings were written in that book, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe the cauſe of them might be found there alſo. But if things muſt needs actually be before they be put in God's book, David has been in a great miſtake, while he tells us, that all his members were written in God's book, when as yet there was none of them.

Object. 2. Other ſcriptures purpoſely ſpeaking of the forgiveneſs of ſins have a reſtrainedneſs unto ſins committed, and look only at them, Jer. xxxiii. 8.——whereby they have ſinned,——have tranſgreſſed. Mark, have ſinned, and have tranſgreſſed, reſpecting the ſins paſt, not what they ſhall commit, Ezek. xviii. 22. ‘ All ‘ his tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, they ſhall ‘ not be mentioned unto him,’ 1 John ii. 1. If any man ſin ; as if ſin muſt be committed before he make interceſſion for the pardon of it. So in the Old Teſtament there was no ſacrifice for any future ſin.

Anſw. As for the firſt two ſcriptures, that they have a reſpect to paſt ſins, I do not deny ; but that they reſpect theſe only, is ſaid, not proven. If they be reſtrained to paſt ſins, what comes of preſent ſins, the ſecond member of this tripartite diviſion, very little, if at all, uſed, for any thing that I have learned, by any but thoſe of late ? others that went before, being content with the phraſe of pardon of ſin, ſimply, or all ſin, univerſally, as the ſcripture ſpeaks. “ It hath been “ (ſays Iſaac Ambroſe) commonly ſaid by ſome of our “ divines that juſtification is tranſacted in our firſt u- “ nion and incorporation into Chriſt ; at which time it “ is conceived, that the pardon of all ſin is ſealed to “ the believer at once.” If then it be reſtrained, I ſay, to paſt ſins, then this aſſertion is falſe, that all ſins, paſt, and preſent, are forgiven at once ; which the adverſaries themſelves do hold true. But theſe clauſes, have ſinned, and have tranſgreſſed, are plainly ſet down, not to diſtinguiſh their paſt and preſent, from their future ſins ; that would have been but ſmall comfort to a man with a deceitful heart, that is ever ſinning ; but to preſs the ſenſe of their ſins upon their conſciences, and to hold them before their eyes, that they might be the more affected therewith, and ſee the grace of God in Chriſt more. If we muſt conſider that, Ezek. xviii. 22. ‘ All ‘ his tranſgreſſions that he hath committed, they ſhall ‘ not be mentioned ;’ pray take in likewiſe the following clauſe, ‘ In the righteouſneſs that he hath done he ſhall ‘ live.’ Here are ſins that he hath committed ; and righteouſneſs that he hath done. If the ſins that he hath committed be excluſive, in point of remiſſion, of the ſins he ſhall commit : then his righteouſneſs that he hath done, which muſt be underſtood, in a goſpel-ſenſe, of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt received by faith, muſt, by virtue of the antitheſis, be excluſive of the righteouſneſs he ſhall do, in point of pardon, or legal life. And ſo the doctrine of obtaining the pardon of future ſins by the renewed acts of faith and repentance, falls to the ground ; their life being appropriated to the righteouſneſs they have done, as much as the not mentioning of their ſins is to thoſe they have committed. Let no man tell me here, that the Lord is ſpeaking to them in the tenor of the covenant of works, and according to the law. I acknowledge, that the phraſe of doing righteouſneſs, looks like the legal diſpenſation of the covenant of grace under the Old Teſtament. But the law ſtrictly ſo called, or the covenant of works, knows nothing of repentance and turning from ſin, nor of the pardon of ſin, here mentioned. Nay, though a man under the influence of the covenant of works could turn from ſin indeed, that covenant would not allow his former ſins not to be mentioned. As for that place, 1 John ii. 1. it makes nothing againſt us, in regard the apoſtle is there ſpeaking of believers who have an Advocate with the Father, and are actually pardoned as to the obligation to eternal wrath, but do fall under God's fatherly diſpleaſure by their after ſins, for removal of which they muſt employ the Advocate. But take it as ye will, there is no neceſſity of the actual commiſſion of ſin before interceſſion can be made anent it, no more than before ſatisfaction be made for it. But this was ſpoken to at large already. As to what is ſaid of the ſacrifices under the Old Teſtament, we are ſure of two things ; firſt, That they were types of the true ſacrifice, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, as ſuffering for ſinners ; ſecondly, That the ſacrifice of Chriſt was for all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come ; and therefore the believing Jews who were taught the myſtery of Chriſt, behoved to underſtand it ſo.

Object. 3. Thoſe qualifications which God himſelf makes with reſpect to the forgiveneſs of ſins do neceſſarily ſuppoſe a precedent commiſſion of them : 2 Chron. vii. 14. ‘ If my people——ſhall humble themſelves, ‘ and pray, and ſeek my face,’ &c. 1 John i. 9. ‘ If we ‘ confeſs,’ &c. Prov. xxviii. 13. ‘ He that confeſſeth ‘ and forſaketh, ſhall find mercy,’ Acts iii. 19. ‘ Re- ‘ pent ye,——that your ſins may be blotted out.’ Doth God put us to humble our hearts for, to pray for the pardon of ſins not yet committed ? Would he have us to confeſs and forſake thoſe ſins ? Wherefore, if theſe things be required for forgiveneſs, and yet reſpect only ſins that are paſt, as indeed they do, all are not pardoned at once.

Anſw. Somewhat of this nature I have met with before in the firſt objection againſt the firſt queſtion. I think it ſtrange, that men, when they hear the pardon of ſin ſpoken of in any place of ſcripture, do preſently fancy to themſelves, that it is the taking off the obligation to eternal wrath. As for that, 2 Chron. vii. 14. it relates to the taking off of temporary ſtrokes from the people, as is evident from the text, ‘ I will forgive their ‘ ſin.’ How ? ‘ I will heal their land.’ What is the diſeaſe ? The ſhutting up of heaven, that there is no rain, &c. So Rutherford expounds it. And that forgiveneſs they might have, and no doubt ſome had, and yet lie under God's wrath for ever. But ſuppoſe it did relate to the pardon of ſin in the ſenſe pleaded for, there are more conditional qualifications here, than the adverſaries themſelves will readily require as abſolutely neceſſary. There is prayer made in the temple, ver. 14, 15. which I hope they will not ſay was, even under the Old Teſtament, neceſſary ſimply for the pardon of ſin. The ſecond ſcripture alledged I have already ſpoken to, and may afterwards ſpeak to it further. The laſt of them will alſo be conſidered afterwards. Wherefore I leave them for the time. As for that, ‘ He that confeſſeth and ‘ forſaketh ſhall have mercy ;’ it ſeems to be that which hath moſt weight for that which is pleaded ; but yet the weakneſs of it, we hope, will appear. That the argument then may be the more cloſely anſwered, I ſhall reduce it into this form. The ſoul's humbling of itſelf, confeſſing, forſaking, and turning from ſin, reſpect only ſins paſt, and cannot be where ſin is not actually committed; but theſe qualifications mentioned, are neceſſarily required to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin: Ergo. No ſin can be pardoned till it be committed, and ſo all is not pardoned at once. I diſtinguiſh the major. The ſoul's humiliation, confeſſing, and forſaking, &c. conſidered and taken explicitly, reſpect only ſins paſt, and cannot be where ſin is not actually committed: I grant, conſidered virtually, they reſpect only ſins paſt, &c. I deny; for ſo they reach to future ſins alſo. Apply this diſtinction to the minor: Theſe qualifications are neceſſarily required to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin, if they be taken explicitly, I deny; and ſo will our antagoniſts, ſo long as that remains true, ‘ Who can ‘ underſtand his errors?’ That they are requiſite as conſidered virtually, tranſeat. But what can be made of that againſt us? Nothing at all in the point in hand: for this virtual humbling, confeſſing, &c. takes in future ſins as well as paſt ſins, and preſent, which we know not: for a man who is truly humbled for one ſin, is virtually humbled for all, paſt, preſent, and to come; ſeeing he is humbled for it, confeſſeth, forſaketh, and turns from it as ſin; for a qua tali ad omne valet conſequentia. Will our adverſaries deny, that a believer's future ſins are virtually pardoned upon his firſt entry into the ſtate of juſtification? If they be virtually pardoned, why not virtually confeſſed and forſaken, eſpecially ſeeing they make confeſſion, &c. ſo neceſſary antecedently to pardon? And truly this may as well be ſaid of future ſins, as of thoſe ſins which we neither know, nor yet ſhall ever after know in time; for as to us, De non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus eadem eſt ratio. Thus I think the weakneſs of this argument doth ſufficiently appear. I ſhall not further meddle with the aſſumption here; but in what ſenſe we underſtand repentance to relate to the pardon of ſin, will afterwards be declared.

Object. 4. If all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, are forgiven at once unto believers, then no believer is to pray unto God for the forgiveneſs of any ſin which he commits, after he is once brought into Chriſt; yet Jeſus Chriſt doth teach even believers to pray, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, Matth. vi. 12. Luke xi. 4. To this may be added for confirmation, that the children of God do accordingly pray daily for the pardon of ſin, as may be ſeen every where in the lives of the ſaints.

Anſw. 1. Our Lord here teacheth believers to pray for the ſenſe of pardon, and manifeſtation of the ſame to their own ſouls; and that prayer ſuits believers very well, though all their ſins paſt, preſent, and to come, are already pardoned before the Lord in the ſenſe pleaded for. And though it may be hard to find where pardon is uſed preciſely for the manifeſtation thereof, yet he is a great ſtranger in the ſcripture who knows not, that therein things are frequently ſaid to be, or be done, when the ſame only is manifeſted. We find the Apoſtle tells us, that Abraham was juſtified by works, James ii. 21. not formally; but manifeſtatively; his juſtification which he had long before, being then plainly evidenced. But as for thoſe who are of opinion, that there is no pardon mentioned in the ſcriptures, but what reſpects the obligation to eternal wrath, there needs to be no great difficulty in finding ſuch a place as may convince them, that pardon is uſed ſometimes for the ſenſe or manifeſtation of pardon preciſely and only; and which may rationally convince any man, that pardon is not always taken for the removal of the obligation to eternal wrath, formally conſidered: Matth. vi. 14. ‘ For if ye forgive ‘ men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo ‘ forgive you.’ Not unlike to this is that, Luke vi. 37. ‘ Forgive, and ye ſhall be forgiven.’ We may ſee plainly here, that our forgiveneſs is required as previous to God's forgiveneſs: and the following verſe tells us, that there can be no hope of forgiveneſs, ſo long as we do not forgive others. Mark, to whom he ſpeaks; even to believers, who may call God Father; yet, under a temptation, may be led away with a revengeful ſpirit againſt thoſe that have done them wrong; but till they lay it down, God will not forgive them. Now, will any man who is orthodox, ſuſpend our formal remiſſion of ſin at the hand of God, on our remiſſion of offences done to us, as previous to God's formal act of removing the obligation to eternal wrath? This the Papiſts would indeed have to eſtabliſh our juſtification by works. But the ſcripture teacheth us, that God's forgiving us formally conſidered, is the cauſe of our forgiving others; and ſo muſt go before it, as the cauſe before the effect.

A judicious interpreter tells us, that our remiſſion is poſterior to the divine remiſſion; as Chriſt teacheth in the parable of the king and ſervants, Matth. xviii. for the king forgave firſt, the ſervants behoved to forgive after: ‘ I forgave thee all that debt, ſhouldſt thou not alſo have ‘ [illegible] compaſſion on thy fellow ſervant?’ And a little after, purſuing the cauſe againſt the Papiſts, he will not ſo much as yield it to a cauſe of a remiſſion ſine qua non. Bayn ſpeaks very pithily to the ſame purpoſe: “ Our forgiving (ſays he) followeth and doth not go “ before forgiveneſs (divine:) for none can forgive his “ brother, that doth not love his brother, none can “ love his brother truly, that loveth not God; none “ can love God, but thoſe that are firſt loved of him, and “ have their ſins firſt covered. And this forgiveneſs “ of God, is an action of his ſimul & ſemel.” And afterwards he concludes; “ When the ſcripture bids us “ forgive that we may be forgiven, it meaneth of the ſenſe “ that we may feel ſealed to our ſpirits God's pardon.” Now, if it be not a formal remiſſion touching the obligation to eternal wrath, and yet all pardon have reſpect to that obligation, it muſt needs be underſtood of the manifeſtation of that pardon. Seeing then the ſcripture mentioned is an argument to enforce the duty injoined in the petition, it is very reaſonable, that we underſtand the petition the ſame way; as we ſaid before, that we are here taught to pray for the ſenſe of pardon, not for a formal pardon, as it reſpects eternal wrath. And we prove it by the argument uſed already, thus: The forgiveneſs mentioned in this petition is poſterior to our forgiving of others; but it is the manifeſtation of forgiveneſs, not the formal pardon, that is poſterior to our forgiveneſs: Ergo. The aſſumption is proven already. I prove the propoſition: Firſt, We ſeek this remiſſion as a benefit we yet want, but ſpeak of our remiſſion as a duty we in the preſent do. Secondly, How can we ſeek of God, that he would forgive us as we forgive others, if we have not done it, or are doing it? Surely that were to pray for the ſhutting up of God's bowels of mercy on us, rather than the opening of them; ‘ For if we forgive not men, God will not forgive us,’ verſ. 15. Thirdly, That theſe words, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us, are an argument, though not to move us to believe that God will forgive us, I think will not be denied by any ſober perſon. But if it be ſuch an argument, then the ſoul muſt feel itſelf endowed with this qualification, ere it can certainly determine that God will forgive its ſin; and the confidence of hearing cannot be in greater degree than the feeling of that qualification. Fourthly, That it is ſo to be underſtood, appears from the parallel place, Luke xi. 4. ‘ Forgive us— ‘ for we alſo forgive;’ kai gar hemeis aphiemen, Piſcator expounds forgiveneſs in the petition plainly of the manifeſtation of pardon. “ Chriſt (ſays he) by divine “ remiſſion in this place underſtands the ſenſe of it in “ our minds, which is the ſenſe of faith; ſignifying “ that it cannot be that we by faith can feel the divine “ remiſſion, unleſs we be conſcious to ourſelves of our “ remiſſion whereby we have forgiven others.” That we pray here for the ſenſe of pardon, is evident from what is ſaid; and ſo far I acquieſce in it: but I mean not to ſay, that pardon is taken here or elſewhere only for the manifeſtation of pardon. But it ſeems no leſs evident to me; that upon what is ſaid, they that underſtand it only of the manifeſtation of pardon may hold their ground againſt thoſe who acknowledge no pardon but what reſpects the obligation to eternal wrath. But in regard that a ſoul may have the ſenſe of pardon touching the obligation to eternal wrath continuing with him, and that he is ſtill obliged daily to pray, Forgive us our treſpaſſes, in reſpect of which he can only pray in ſuch a caſe for the continuance of it; and ſeeing the words are apt to beget in us a conception of a formal pardon, and that the ſcripture teaches us another ſort of a formal pardon than what reſpects God's eternal wrath: I do not judge, that the ſenſe of pardon is all that we are taught to pray for in this petition. Therefore,

2. I anſwer, We pray here alſo for a formal pardon. For underſtanding of which, let us remember the diſtinction formerly made betwixt the pardon of ſin as it relates to the obligation whereby the ſinner is bound over to eternal wrath, and that which reſpects the obligation whereby the ſoul is bound over to temporary ſtrokes. That pardon of ſin is in ſcripture uſed in the laſt ſenſe, hath been already proven, and it is very commonly ſo taken. I ſhall adduce ſome other inſtances, 2 Kings xxiv. 4. ‘And alſo for the innocent blood ‘which he ſhed, which the Lord would not pardon.’ Jer. v. 1. ‘Run—through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem,---- ‘if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth ‘judgment, that ſeeketh the truth, and I will pardon it.’ Would not the Lord pardon the blood ſhed by Manaſſeh (to them that were involved in the guilt with him) as to the obligation to eternal wrath? Manaſſeh himſelf was pardoned in that ſenſe, and doubtleſs paſſed no ſuch peremptory ſentence on the reſt that were involved in his guilt. But the context plainly tells us, it is meant of temporary ſtrokes that came upon the Jews by the hands of their enemies. Is that the goſpel offer to pardon Jeruſalem as to the obligation to eternal wrath, if there were found but a few among them that ſought the truth? No, ſure, though the Lord averts temporal puniſhment on that account many times. The believing and repenting people of God ſtill under temporary ſtrokes complain Lam. iii. 42. ſaying, We have tranſgreſſed, and have rebelled, and thou haſt not pardoned. But will God hold his people under obligation to eternal wrath, though believing, repenting, confeſſing, and forſaking? Iſ. xl. 2. ‘Speak comfortably to Jeruſalem, and cry unto her that ‘her iniquity is pardoned, for ſhe hath received of the ‘Lord's hand double for all her ſins; not in a way of vindictive juſtice, ſurely, but temporary ſtrokes from fatherly diſpleaſure. I ſay then, that in this petition we are taught to pray daily for the pardon of ſin, as it reſpects temporary ſtrokes and fatherly diſpleaſure; but no otherwiſe, even no more than that God would juſtify us, and adopt us, &c. which are done already perfectly. And that this is the formal pardon which we are commanded to ſeek, is plain from that we are directed to go to a father for it. To conclude: we are taught there to pray for the ſenſe of pardon as touching the obligation to eternal wrath, and for a formal pardon reſpecting temporary ſtrokes; or, if you pleaſe, call it only that formal forgiveneſs juſt now mentioned, ſo that ye include the other in it, as a certain ſpecies in the general kind. For the confirmation of the objection, what the practice of the ſaints is de facto is not the queſtion; but what it ought to be de jure, or in point of right. When the children of God have loſt ſight of their intereſt in Chriſt, what wonder is it that they pray as thoſe who have no part in him? But ſuch a practice is grounded on a miſtake, and therefore is not warrantable. But that their prayers are actually ſometimes for the removal of temporary anger, when they pray for pardon of ſin, though ſome may underſtand them otherwiſe, is evident: As when David, Pſal. xxv. Lifting up his ſoul to God, verſ. 1. truſting in him, verſ. 2. waiting on him all the day, verſ. 5. recalling to mind former experiences of God's loving kindneſs, verſ. 6. and conſcious to himſelf of thoſe acts, yet prays, verſ. 7. that the Lord would not remember the ſins of his youth: can it be ſuppoſed, that he thought they were unpardoned as to the guilt of eternal wrath ſtill? Or did the church think ſo, Pſal. lxxix. 8. when ſhe prays, ‘O remember not againſt ‘us former ſins?’ It is plain both aim at the guilt of temporary ſtrokes, that may be brought on after they are, by their pardon, put out of hazard of eternal wrath. I ſhall conclude this anſwer with what Mr Rutherford ſays, “Our deliverance is twofold, as our miſery is. “Firſt, There is a guilt of ſin, or our obligation to e-“ternal wrath; the other miſery is the blot of internal “guilt of ſin. In regard of the former, we are freely “and perfectly juſtified, and pardoned at once from “all ſins in our perſon and ſtate. Through the ſenſe of “this, and in regard of deliverance from temporal “judgments, and doubtings and fears of eternal wrath “every day, while we ſeek daily bread, we deſire that “our ſins may be forgiven.”

Object. 5. It is poſſible, that a believing perſon may fall into ſuch a ſin or ſins of ſcandal, for which he may be juſtly caſt out from the viſible church; and, upon his neglect or practice of repentance, he ſtands bound or looſed from his ſin, not only in earth, but alſo in heaven; for ſo Chriſt himſelf delivers it to us in Matth. xviii. 18. But this cannot poſſibly be, if all ſins be already pardoned in heaven; for then they are always looſed and never bound in heaven.

Anſw. That it is poſſible a believer may fall into ſuch ſins, for which he may be juſtly ſo treated by the church; and that what the church does that way in that caſe is ratified in heaven, I doubt not. But that ſuch a perſon is bound over, upon his contumacy, either in heaven or earth, to eternal wrath, or looſed upon his repentance therefrom, I do utterly refuſe; and till that be proven, the argument is of no force. I will not here enter upon an inquiry into the nature of excomunication. But the ſcrewing it up ſo high in the caſe ſuppoſed, is ſo far from confirming the hypotheſis of our adverſaries, that it doth exceedingly weaken it: for by this the ſin of a believer may be looſed in heaven, and yet bound on the earth, and the church in her duty ſtill as to that perſon. Put the caſe (which may very well be ſuppoſed,) that the excommunicate believer, thinking himſelf (though wrongouſly) leſed by the ſentence of excommunication, goes over ſeas into a far country, where there is no church at all, and is there touched with the ſenſe of his ſin, renews his faith and repentance, and ſues for a pardon, or the removal of the obligation to eternal wrath; he cannot but have it, even according to the principles of our adverſaries: yet ſtill he is bound on earth; and if ſo, bound in heaven too, as we heard juſt now: and ſo his ſin is both pardoned and unpardoned in heaven at one and the ſelf-ſame time; pardoned, becauſe he has repented: unpardoned, becauſe he ſtill lies under the ſentence. And if this binding of a believer's ſin on earth and in heaven reſpects the obligation to eternal wrath, it ſeems to me natively to follow, that a believer in a ſtate of excommunication is in a ſtate of condemnation. For, as one ſays well, “If there were any ſin remain-“ing, a man is ſtill in the ſtate of condemnation.” How powerful is truth! If we turn over but another leaf before that in which this argument is applauded as Achillean indeed by the learned man, we ſhall find him telling us, that if God did yet hold you guilty, ye could not ſay, that ye have peace with God; for God is not at peace with you, nor ye at peace with him, while enmity continues between you; and ſo it doth while any ſin remains unpardoned. And after he hath told us there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt, he adds, “And verily, if all condemnation be removed, all ſin “is pardoned; if any one ſin remained unpardoned, “then condemnation would ſtill be in force upon us for “that one ſin.” But if we ſhall underſtand this binding and looſing of a believer's ſin with reſpect to temporary anger or temporal judgments, the matter is plain, and the abſurdity is evited: for though the man in ſuch a caſe may, by the renewing of his faith and repentance, recover the ſenſe of his pardon touching the obligation to eternal wrath; yet, till he be looſed on earth, he is not looſed in heaven from the temporary judgment he was laid under; but ſtill he feels the weight of God's fatherly diſpleaſure, having no acceſs to the communion of the church: which is no doubt a very heavy band to a tender heart, and will make ſuch an one go with a bowed-down back.

Object. 6. If all ſins, paſt, preſent, and to come, are forgiven at once, then a juſtified perſon in the midſt of the groſſeſt ſins, may rejoice in God, as much as when he humbles his ſoul, repents, and ſeeks his face.

Anſw. This objection is juſtly raiſed againſt Antinomians, who deny a believer's liableneſs, either to eternal wrath or temporary ſtrokes for ſin. But it can, with no colour or ſhadow of reaſon, be brought againſt us, who are taught, that the frowns of our deareſt Father are bitter as death. See more above.

Object. 7. Forgiveneſs of ſin is a judicial act in God, as the contrary act of condemning is. Now, the judge neither condemns nor forgives offences which are not extant.

Anſw. This objection is of a piece with the firſt, and does truly ſtrike at the root of the doctrine of the goſpel, and quite overturns the ſatisfaction of Chriſt: and is as unadviſedly objected here by the adverſaries, as ſome do object the logical maxim, Non entis nulla ſunt accidentia. It is dangerous to endeavour to regulate the procedure of the omniſcient Judge, according to the order of human policy. It was a judicial act in God, 'for ſin to condemn ſin in the fleſh' of Chriſt, Rom. viii. but wo to us that live now, if it was only ſin that was extant which was thus condemned.

Object. 8. ult. The continual work of Chriſt in heaven as our interceſſor, 1 John ii. 1. and the daily ſuing out of pardon in his name, ſeems to carry much in it for the acquiring of daily pardon.

Anſw. It does ſo for pardon: that is the taking off of temporary ſtrokes. And that we might be ſure of what we ſue daily for, he left that comfortable word with his people before he aſcended into heaven, 'I go to your Father and my Father, to your God and my God.' But of this before.

I conclude with that of the apoſtle, Gal. v. 1. 'Stand faſt therefore in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Verſ. 13. For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only uſe not liberty for an occaſion to the fleſh; but by love ſerve one another.'

QUEST. III.

Whether or not repentance be neceſſary in order to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin?

HAving, in the former queſtions, had ſo frequent occaſion to ſpeak of repentance its relation to the pardon of ſin, I ſhall endeavour to clear what I have hinted at before in this matter. I do not now ſpeak of the repentance that may be found in Cain and Judas, ariſing merely from the ſenſe of God's wrath, which is called legal repentance; but of the true goſpel repentance, which is a ſaving grace, and acceptable to God. Laying aſide the Popiſh and Arminian neceſſity of it, and the conditional neceſſity thereof urged by others; not needing to conſider them particularly, ſeeing a fortiori they will be overturned, if it can be proven, that the pardon of ſin is prior to repentance; I ſhall lay down ſome conceſſions touching this matter, then our aſſertion confirmed with arguments, and objections anſwered.

Conceſſ. 1. Repentance is neceſſary neceſſitate præcepti. It is a commanded duty, and ought to be preached by the miniſters, and practiſed both by them and hearers of the goſpel. And whoſo make no conſcience thereof, plainly appear to me to know neither Moſes nor Chriſt, law nor goſpel.

Conceſſ. 2. It is neceſſary alſo neceſſitate medii. It is a holy mean appointed of God, or a mids neceſſary to be gone through in order to the attaining of eternal life.

Conceſſ. 3. Faith and repentance, as they are ordinarily linked together in preaching, ſo they cannot be ſeparated in practice. And though we may, and muſt diſtinguiſh them, yet they muſt not be divided. And whatſoever precedency is here, it is rather in order of nature, than order of time. The graces of the Spirit being given together and at once, yet much depends on the diſtinct uptaking of the native order of thoſe graces.

Conceſſ. 4. As pardon denotes a relation to temporal ſtrokes, as hath been above explained, repentance is a neceſſary mean in order to the obtaining of it; that is, the removal of temporal ſtrokes. The reaſon of this is obvious: for the Lord's deſign in inflicting ſuch ſtrokes, is the believer's repentance, humiliation, and amendment, &c. So that when the Lord hath inflicted temporary ſtrokes on a believer for his ſins, they are not taken away till he repent and amend, and ſo anſwer the deſign of God in inflicting of them, Iſa. xxviii. 9. It is true, they may be changed as to the ſpecies of them; and when one ſort prevails not, the Lord brings on another. But ſtill there is a continuance of them till they prove effectual. I do not ſay, that preſently the ſin is pardoned, or the ſtroke removed upon repentance. Scripture and experience tells us the contrary. David, though repenting, yet lies under the effects of God's fatherly diſpleaſure; it is a while ere his broken bones be cured. The Lord will not, upon every repentance of a ſinner, paſs by the ordinary courſe of nature. Men may be caſt into diſeaſes for their ſins, and repent while God's hand is upon them, and may recover, but by degrees. Beſides, ſome temporary ſtrokes of God upon believers, are of that nature, that they cannot be taken off without a miracle; as the death of David's child, &c. And there is a great reaſon for this: for God, in inflicting of temporary ſtrokes on believers, has other deſigns beſides that of the amendment of the party; as the vindication of his own honour, that others may fear, and the like.

Conceſſ. 5. Repentance alſo is neceſſary in order to the attaining of the ſenſe of the pardon of ſin, as it relates to eternal wrath; as the tree muſt be known by its fruits. Repentance is a fruit of faith; and where there is no repentance, it cannot be ſuppoſed, that aſſurance can be had. Yet this conceſſion I underſtand ſo as, that although a clear diſcerning of repentance in a believer is neceſſary unto a firm aſſurance which fully quiets the heart, yet the believer may, without that, attain unto ſuch an aſſurance, as is that of an adherence unto the truth of that propoſition, My ſins are pardoned; of which perhaps we may hear more afterwards. Theſe things being yielded.

I aſſert, with Rutherford, That in regard of our obligation to eternal wrath, and all the puniſhments of ſin according to the order of juſtice by the law of God, faith in Chriſt is the only means and way to get out of our bondage and miſery. And I wiſh this way of ſpeaking of faith as a mean were more generally received. If it were ſo, it might be of good uſe to bury the debates about the conditionality of the covenant of grace, and the inſtrumentality of faith in our juſtification, and might tend to give us diſtinct uptakings of the true nature of the ſecond covenant. "I had rather (ſays Durham) "call it (faith) the mean by which it (Chriſt's righte-"ouſneſs) is apprehended." So then repentance is not required as a mean in order to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin, touching the obligation to eternal wrath. In a word, goſpel repentance doth not go before, but comes after remiſſion of ſin, in the order of nature.

Arg. I. The firſt and immediate effect of ſaving faith, is union with the Lord Jeſus Chriſt: for the formal act of faith as juſtifying, is the receiving of Chriſt, by which the ſoul is joined unto him, 1 Cor. vi. 17. The union betwixt Chriſt and believers may be conſidered, as with reſpect to us, actively and paſſively; as we are ſaid to join ourſelves, and to be joined to the Lord, Jer. l. 5. 1 Cor. vi. 17.; in reſpect of the latter, the Spirit, on God's part, apprehending us; and in reſpect of the former, faith on our part apprehending him, makes up the bleſſed union, as the immediate reſult thereof. Moreover it is evident we can have no ſaving benefit from Chriſt, by faith, without communion with him; which communion ſuppoſeth, and is grounded upon union with him. So Parſon, ſpeaking of the effects of faith, tells us, that firſt there is union with Chriſt. "What "can (ſays he) more neceſſarily and immediately fol-"low upon the offer, on God's part, in the goſpel, of "Chriſt to be ours, and our receiving him by faith, "than union to his perſon? This I take to be the "fruit of the firſt conſummate vital act of the quicken-"ed ſoul, and then is the marriage-knot tied." Now, if union with Chriſt be the immediate effect of faith, repentance muſt either go before faith, or it muſt come after remiſſion of ſins. The former cannot be ſaid, ſeeing the repentance in queſtion is pleaſing to God; but 'without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God,' Heb. xi. 6. The Lord himſelf tells us, that without him we can do nothing, John xv. 5. chorus emu, extra me, ſays Grotius; ſeorſim a me, ſays Beza. Now, we are ſtill without Chriſt, till by faith we are united to him, Eph. ii. 12. Wherefore true repentance cannot go before faith. It remains then, that it comes after remiſſion of ſin. For how can it be conceived, that the ſoul is united to Chriſt, but that ſin is alſo immediately pardoned? Seeing by virtue of this union the ſoul hath a perfect righteouſneſs to preſent unto God, it cannot but eo ipſo be juſtified and pardoned. If any thing ſhall be ſuppoſed to intervene betwixt union with Chriſt and juſtification, we ſhall have a man righteous and unrighteous, condemned and not condemned at once; condemned, becauſe, ex hypotheſi, he is not juſtified, nor his ſins pardoned; not condemned, becauſe he is 'in Chriſt Jeſus,' Rom. viii. 1.

Arg. II. We may clearly perceive this doctrine from the parable of the two debtors, Luke vii. where the concluſion of the whole is in verſ. 47. 'Wherefore I ſay 'unto thee, Her ſins, which are many, are forgiven; 'for ſhe loved much: but,' &c. The occaſion of this parable is told us, verſ. 37, 38, 39. A woman which was a ſinner comes to Chriſt, waſhes his feet with tears, wipes them with her hair, kiſſeth his feet, &c. The Phariſee having known what a profane wretch this woman was ſometime, but being ignorant of the change wrought on her, and the favour ſhe had obtained with God, thinks with himſelf, that Chriſt cannot be a Prophet, in regard he admitted ſuch a profane perſon to treat him ſo; which he ſuppoſeth he would not have done, had he known what ſort of a woman ſhe was. The ſcope of the parable is, to convince the Phariſee, that this woman was not ſuch a one as he took her to be; but that ſhe was a pardoned ſinner, and one who, notwithſtanding of her former courſe of life, had now obtained favour with God; and therefore there was no ground for the Phariſee's inference, that Chriſt was not a Prophet, and he was miſtaken in thinking Chriſt knew not what ſhe was. To prove that this woman was ſuch a one as is ſaid, he makes uſe of the parable of two debtors; the one whereof owed five hundred, the other fifty pence, both to the ſame creditor; and both are forgiven; then propoſes the queſtion, 'Which of 'the two will love moſt?' Simon anſwers, 'He to 'whom moſt is forgiven.' Wherefore the concluſion of the point is, that ſeeing thoſe love moſt to whom moſt is forgiven, and it is evident this woman loves moſt, which is manifeſt by thoſe her expreſſions of love, and her tears, moſt is forgiven to her, ſhe is a pardoned ſinner. And thus our divines againſt the Papiſts unanimouſly underſtand this love as the effect or conſequent of her forgiveneſs. See Calvin, inſtead of all, handling this place againſt the patrons of the merit of works. Hence I argue thus: Our love to God follows upon, and is a fruit of the remiſſion of ſin; but our repentance proceeds from love to God, and ſo in order of nature is poſterior thereto: Ergo, Repentance follows remiſſion of ſin. Both the premiſſes are evident from this parable, eſpecially the propoſition. To confirm the aſſumption, we are told, 1 John iv. 19. 'We love him, becauſe 'he firſt loved us.' God's love to us is always antecedent to ours towards him. Now theſe preſuppoſe remiſſion: for how can God delight in thoſe whom his law condemns? he hates thoſe whoſe ſins he hath not pardoned, as we heard before: or how can we love God while he is our enemy, which he is ſtill ſo long as our ſins are not pardoned? This is plainly taught us, Hoſ. xiv. 4. 'I will heal their backſlidings, I will love them 'freely.' Upon which Zanchius thus comments: 'He ſays not, in the firſt place, I will love them, then, I will heal their rebellions; but firſt I will heal; then, I will love.' He teacheth then, that God loves none with that love whereof we ſpeak, but after the forgiveneſs of their ſins through Chriſt; and that thoſe whoſe ſins are not pardoned, are hated of God. For there can be no love, ſays Hemmingius, no obedience, except mercy and reconciliation, for the Mediator's ſake, be firſt apprehended. We heard before Bayn telling us, there can none love God, but thoſe that are firſt loved of him, and have their ſins covered with him.

A godly and learned divine hath an exception here; which is this. Repentance may be conſidered as it doth not only follow pardon, but alſo the intimation thereof; ſo it is a melting of heart, and a ſelf lothing that floweth from felt love. This is the melting of heart ſpoken of in that woman. But repentance, as it is a work of ſanctifying grace, ariſing from the ſenſe of bypaſt ſin, and hope of future mercy, goeth along with faith, for the attaining of the hoped-for remiſſion.

Contra 1. That is granted, this woman's repentance followed her pardon, is well; but that it followed the intimation thereof, is not proven; yea, the contrary ſeems pretty clear, if we conſult the place; for after ſhe had expreſſed her penitency, as the evangeliſt tells us, her pardon is intimated, verſ. 48. And he ſaid unto her, Thy ſins are forgiven: and adds, verſ. ult. Thy faith hath ſaved thee, go in peace; which is a manifeſt check to her doubts and fears, creates a calm in her troubled ſoul; and tells us plainly, that ſhe came to him in trouble, fear, and anxiety. So far was ſhe from the intimation of pardon. And no wonder it was ſo; for it is but the Lord's ordinary way to uſe a hard wedge for knotty timber. She was a ſinner, a harlot, ſays Piſcator, and, it ſeems, but very lately converted; they who knew her before, not having as yet diſcerned the change. If it be ſaid, that intimation was made, not ſo much for her who had the ſenſe of pardon before, as for thoſe who ſat at meat with Chriſt; the contrary of that appears, in that the ſame was convincingly concluded as to them in the preceding verſe. As for what is ſaid of her repentance flowing from felt love, it is true in ſome ſenſe. For God's love may be felt two ways; firſt, materially and objectively; ſecondly, formally or ſubjectively. The firſt way no doubt ſhe felt it: for God's pardoning love was the effectual cauſe of her love to God, and repentance in her heart, according to that, Jer. xxxi. 3. 'With loving kindneſs have I drawn thee:' for God's love worketh its like in our ſouls, independently on our knowledge thereof; 'as the wind bloweth where it liſteth, and we hear the ſound thereof, though we know not whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth,' John iii. 8. 'Did not our hearts burn within us, (ſay the diſciples,) while he talked with us?' &c. Luke xxiv. 32. and yet they knew not till afterwards who it was that ſpoke to them; ſo might ſhe feel God's love, yet not formally and ſubjectively, as is clear from the neceſſity of the intimation ſpoken of before; for had ſhe known that indeed, the power whereof ſhe felt, it would have created peace, and quelled the ſtorm of conſcience in her.

2. That there is another kind of repentance, than this of that woman's, which goes alongſt with faith for the attaining of remiſſion, I muſt needs refuſe till it be proven. I confeſs I can ſee no ſuch repentance in the ſcripture as is here deſcribed. The repentance we now treat of, reſpects the ſoul's union with Chriſt, at the firſt converſion of the ſoul to God; and ſo the worthy author tells us in theſe words: "We ſay, that repentance underſtood in the laſt ſenſe, is ſimply neceſſary for the obtaining of the pardon of ſin; ſo that without it no unreconciled ſinner can expect peace with God." And yet this repentance is ſaid to be a work of ſanctifying grace. Now, that a work of ſanctifying grace ſhould, in order of nature, go before the pardon of ſin, I think will be hard to reconcile to that which is generally the doctrine of orthodox divines, that juſtification goes before ſanctification; that the ſtate of the ſoul muſt firſt be changed, and the tree firſt made good, before it can bring forth good fruit, or a work of ſanctifying grace; or that our perſons muſt be firſt accepted, ere our works can be acceptable. But ſure it is, while ſin is unpardoned our perſons are not accepted.

Arg. III. Hence then it further appears, that true repentance follows the pardon of ſin, and therefore cannot be a mean to attain it. For if good works do not go before, but follow our juſtification, as is generally maintained by Proteſtant divines, with whom you will ſeldom miſs, on that head, the famous ſaying of Auguſtine, Bona opera non præcedunt iuſtificandum, ſed ſequuntur juſtificatum; repentance muſt needs follow the pardon of ſin, or it muſt be denied to be a good work; the contrary whereof we have heard, in that it is ſaid to be a work of ſanctifying grace; and it is ſurely a very complex of good works, if it be ſuch as our Catechiſm, according to the ſcripture deſcribes it, viz. 'a turning from ſin unto God,' &c. We cannot but take notice how much Socinus and his fellows labour for the precedency of repentance to the remiſſion of ſin, hoc velut & magno mercentur. But repentance and converſion (ſays Socinus) goes before the blotting out of ſin, Acts iii. 19. For juſtification (ſays Schlichtingius) neither begins without faith and repentance, nor does it laſte without the fruits and effects of faith and repentance. I know, that the learned men who plead for repentance as neceſſary to the attaining of the pardon of ſin, do with their ſouls abhor Socinus's deſign therein; but why ſhould we yield any thing to the common enemy without neceſſity? In his treatiſe of juſtification, he lays hold on this their doctrine to inveigle them in a contradiction: "There is another extreme (ſays he) received commonly, not without the great undoing of ſouls, that is, that our good works do nothing at all pertain to our juſtification, but as they are the effects of the ſame. (Here is the venom of the Anti-Socinian doctrine.) Whence it follows, that ſeeing it is certain we are juſtified by faith, it muſt needs come to paſs, that they be of opinion, that a man is juſtified even before he doth any good, though afterwards he ſhall do. Which is contrary to the whole ſcripture; which, to paſs other things, doth plainly teſtify, that the remiſſion of our ſins doth not conſiſt nor exiſt without repentance; and ſeeing it is moſt true, and they themſelves acknowledge that, and confeſs that our juſtification is no other indeed than remiſſion of our ſins," &c. Hornbeek anſwer to this: "We confeſs, ſays he, that our good works pertain not to juſtification antecedently and caſually, but are the effects of juſtification itſelf." This is the very thing we plead. But as for that which the ſame learned man adds in anſwer to that of Socinus, viz. That repentance is required in the ſubject, which may be partaker of remiſſion, but is not therefore requiſite to God's juſtifying as it denotes his action abſolving a man; but well indeed as it denotes its termination, and the ſenſe of it paſſively in the faithful ſoul; it does indeed confirm me in the doctrine I plead for, while I ſee the miſerable ſtrait thoſe are brought into by this objection, who hold the precedency of repentance to the remiſſion of ſin. For I think it is clear, Socinus is not ſpeaking of juſtification as it is an action of God preciſely, not terminated upon the creature; for thus juſtification goes before faith as well as repentance, it being in that ſenſe from eternity; nor yet is he ſpeaking of the ſenſe of it in the ſoul; but of juſtification properly ſo called, terminated on the creature. And unleſs we make the termination of juſtification in the faithful ſoul, and the ſenſe of it, all one, I confeſs I cannot divine what is the difference betwixt juſtification as it denotes the difference of God abſolving a man, and as it denotes the termination of it on the ſoul; only they are different ways of conceiving one and the ſame thing; even as calefaction, as it is referred to the fire, is termed an action, and as referred to the water, is called paſſion. For an action of God abſolving a man, (unleſs you underſtand it of the decree of abſolution, which is not in the queſtion,) is a tranſient act; and it will be very hard to ſhew a difference betwixt a tranſient act, and an act terminated on an extrinſic object. I like much better what that learned author delivers afterwards. "So juſtification (ſays he) is conſidered either on God's part, or on our part, terminated in us, and its ſubject. The firſt is in the eternal decree of God deſtinated for us; in the promiſes from the firſt age of the world, and in the goſpel, offered; by Chriſt, merited; by his reſurrection, confirmed and ratified; hitherto actively. But it is conſidered paſſively, as applied to and terminated on the ſoul, by faith. And this way the grace of remiſſion is more clearly ſeen, as it comes to men, not only having merited nothing of good, but yet being (conſiſtentibus) in guilt and wickedneſs: in the mean time, with the grace of juſtification, endued alſo with that of ſanctification, whereby, for the time to come, they from the heart do live, not unto wickedneſs, but unto God and Chriſt." This doth indeed daſh Socinus's doctrine in the head and heart. The Aſſembly in their larger Catechiſm tells us, that in ſanctification the ſeeds of repentance unto life are put into the heart. Whereby it is manifeſt, that repentance doth not go before juſtification, and conſequently that it cannot be a mean to attain the pardon of ſin.

If any ſhall ſay, that repentance is properly and ſolely an evangelic work, and therefore is not to be put in the ſame claſs with other works following juſtification, and commanded by the law; I anſwer, That according to the doctrine of the goſpel, it is plain, that faith as it receives Chriſt, is oppoſed, in the matter of juſtification to all works whatſoever; and ſo does not only exclude repentance, but itſelf as work, as proteſtant divines teach againſt the patrons of the righteouſneſs of works. But this is not to be yielded, that repentance is in ſuch ſort an evangelic work, as if it were not at all commanded by the law: for the law of the Lord is perfect, and contains the whole duty of man. It is true, as was ſaid above, the law knows no place of repentance, how it may be accepted, as the goſpel doth; it promiſeth no ſtrength wherewith it may be performed, as the goſpel does. But as, ſuppoſing the revelation of Chriſt, and the offer of him in the goſpel, the law obligeth us to believe; ſo ſuppoſing the rational creature to have ſinned, the law obligeth him to turn from ſin unto God, that is, to repent; otherwiſe the impenitency of the devils were no ſin, which I think none will adventure to ſay. So then it is true, that expreſsly and abſolutely the law does not call for repentance, yet virtually and hypothetically it doth. But why are many works called evangelic, but becauſe they are done by faith in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt manifeſted in the goſpel, and under the influence of the covenant of grace? Whereas legal works are done by the power of nature, and under the influence of the covenant of works; and in this ſenſe any work of ſanctifying grace is as much an evangelic work, as repentance. But, upon the whole, let the forementioned author, in his confutation of Socinianiſm, anſwer for me, “ Now, (ſays he) in that he (viz. Socinus) placeth evangelic works before juſtification, in “ that he is contrary to ſcripture and reaſon; to the “ ſcripture, Rom. iv. 5. and iii. 28. Gal. ii. 16. Rom. “ xi. 6. That opinion is contrary to reaſon; becauſe “ ſeeing faith is the beginning of all good works, with- “ out which no man can pleaſe God, or perform any “ thing acceptable to him, and by it aſſoon as it is preſent, we are juſtified, good works cannot go before “ juſtification, as they cannot go before faith, but only “ follow.” The like he hath again elſewhere, telling us, that God abſolves men choris ergon, without works, without previous piety. It ought not to be ſaid, that by this doctrine, faith itſelf, as an evangelic work, is to be caſt behind juſtification likewiſe; for faith being the principle of all, muſt needs be excepted, in regard it is that which unites the ſoul to Chriſt. The forecited author tells us how we are to underſtand this. “ A man “ (ſays he) is juſtified before he hath done any good, “ that is, good following on faith; who when he believes is juſtified.” But the deſcription formerly given of an evangelic work, leaves no room at all for this exception; and truly the name of a work ſhould be far from the matter of our juſtification before God. Though it ſhould be ſaid, that repentance is not conſidered here as a work, but as a quality, it will not take off the force of the argument, which concludes againſt the very being of repentance before pardon, in order of nature at leaſt.

Arg. IV. If we conſider the promiſes of repentance in the covenant, we ſhall find they come in the ſame order that we plead for. Ezek. xxxvi. After the Lord had told them of remiſſion of ſin, verſ. 25. ‘ From all ‘ your idols will I cleanſe you; he promiſeth repentance, verſ. 31. ‘ Then ſhall ye remember your own ‘ evil ways,’ &c. So Ezek xvi. 60, 61, 62, 63.—‘ I ‘ will remember my covenant with thee.—Then thou ‘ ſhalt remember thy ways—And I will eſtabliſh my ‘ covenant with thee, that thou mayeſt remember, and ‘ be confounded,’ &c. Hoſ. xiv. 4. ‘ I will heal their ‘ backſliding,’ Verſ. 8. ‘ Ephraim ſhall ſay, What have ‘ I to do any more with idols?’ Iſa. xliv. 22. ‘ I have ‘ blotted out as a thick cloud thy tranſgreſſions, and as ‘ a cloud, thy ſins: return unto me, for I have redeemed thee.’ This is the native order of theſe things; and why ſhould we ſtrive to diſturb and confound the ſame? for this doctrine of the precedency of repentance to pardon calls for the quite contrary order. If it be ſaid, theſe promiſes reſpect a repentance they ſhould be ſtirred up to after their pardon; but that does not hinder but that there may be a ſort of repentance going before pardon: I anſwer, (beſides what is already ſaid on this head,) That there is a ſort of legal repentance that goes before pardon, I do not deny, which belongs to conviction, and may be in Judas and Cain, and was in thoſe elect ones, Acts ii. 37. when they were pricked to the heart; whom yet the apoſtle calls to true repentance, ver. 38. And this I judge to be neceſſary by God's appointment, at leaſt in the ordinary way, in the courſe of God's ordinary diſpenſation; thoſe perſons being firſt killed by the law, whom he minds to revive by the goſpel. But this goes before faith; and cannot, but in a very large ſenſe, be reckoned a mean in order to the attaining of remiſſion of ſins; ſeeing it is toto genere different from any ſpecial and ſaving work of the Spirit. But the queſtion is of goſpel repentance, which is theologically good; and if there be any ſuch different from that which is here promiſed, I would know where it is promiſed; for no other appears in thoſe places, but what follows pardon. If it be not promiſed at all, it is not at all, otherwiſe the covenant is defective; which is abſurd. If you ſay, it is included in the new heart; I ſhall on the ſame grounds infer the neceſſity of all the graces of the Spirit, as well as of repentance, patience, chaſtity, &c.; which no man holding juſtification by faith alone, ever ſaid were neceſſary in order to the attaining of pardon. But let it be ſo, the new ſtate of cleanneſs by way of pardon is ſet before; I will cleanſe you, alſo, I will give you a new heart. But we ſtand not on the order of words. The apoſtle plainly tells us, that the ungodly are the objects of juſtification, Rom. iv. 5. ‘ But to him that worketh not, but believ- ‘ eth on him who juſtifieth the ungodly,’ &c. Is the repenting ſinner the man who worketh not? is he the ungodly whom God juſtifieth? “ Who can think “ (ſays Hoornbeek) that the ungodly is ſaid by Paul to “ be juſtified, becauſe after juſtification he remains “ ungodly, and not becauſe he had been ungodly; and “ in the very act of juſtification, he could no otherwiſe “ be conſidered than in himſelf ungodly? though with “ his juſtification he be endued with the grace of God, “ whereby he ſhall afterwards live godly; but this neither before nor in juſtification; for God abſolves a “ man even choris ergon, without previous piety.”

Arg. V. Though the patrons of the doctrine of the neceſſity of repentance in order to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin, do not aim at any incroachment on the doctrine of free pardon; yet with all deference to thoſe learned men, I conceive, that ſuch doctrine is injurious to the grace of God, and doth much darken the free pardon offered in the goſpel, in regard the pardon is promiſed immediately to thoſe that believe, Acts x. 43. Through his name, whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins. Iſ. lv. 1. Acts xvi. 31. Rev. xxii. 17. But they require, that believers bring ſomething with them, if they would obtain it, even that they bring repentance alongſt with them. I think Dr. Preſton ſays well, when he tells us, “ It is a fault to think “ God's pardons are not free, and that you muſt bring “ ſomething in your hand. The very end (ſays he) of “ thy going to Chriſt, is to get thy hardneſs of heart “ and deadneſs of ſpirit removed, to be healed and enlivened.” And it is truly ſtrange to think from what airth repentance ſhould come to people, while as yet their ſins are unpardoned, and God is their enemy. What need is there of thoſe things? What need is there of thoſe ways? Why go we not by faith to a reconciled God, to get repentance; but muſt ſeek repentance wherewith we may go to an unreconciled God, who is a conſuming fire? If I miſtake not, that is not the way of the goſpel. It is a ſeaſonable admonition that one gives us to this purpoſe, “ When you go to mourn “ for ſin, begin aloft with Chriſt; and do not always “ think to begin below with ſin, and ſo to come up “ to Chriſt; but begin aloft with Chriſt, and fall down “ upon your ſin.” “ Papiſts (ſays Dr Preſton) tell of “ eſcaping damnation, and of getting into heaven. But “ ſcripture gives other motives (to good works). Thou “ art in Chriſt, and Chriſt is thine; conſider what he “ hath done for thee, what thou haſt by him, what “ thou hadſt been without him, and thus ſtir up thyſelf

“ to do for him what he requireth.” Let them that will, repent that Chriſt may do for them ; I ſhall deſire always to believe what Chriſt hath done for me, that I may repent : not doubting but that the being inſtructed therein is the plain way to ſmiting on the thigh, and ſaying, “ What have I done ?” So ſays a godly writer, “ Firſt of all, God's favour is apprehended, and remiſſi- “ on of ſin believed ; then upon that cometh alteration “ of life and converſation.” Upon the whole we may ſee that the goſpel teaches us to come empty-handed to the market of free grace, for remiſſion of ſin and God's favour. But he comes not empty, who brings repentance alongſt with him. If any man ſhall ſay, that if we ſcrew up matters ſo high in this point, we muſt caſt faith as well as repentance, in the matter of attaining pardon ; for that is ſtill ſomething we bring with us. I ſhall anſwer, for the ſafety of God's grace, let the work faith, the inherent quality faith, go, and be made to ſtand aback, while the ſinner ſtands before God's tribunal to be juſtified, that the empty-handed taking faith, may alone have place. Hath not the Lord made it to be only of faith, that it might be of grace, while faith comes with an empty hand, and receives all ? There is a vaſt difference betwixt faith and repentance in this matter, even as much as betwixt giving and receiving : for there is no grace of the Spirit that hath more of the nature of giving than repentance, in ſo far as it is a turning of the whole man from ſin unto God ; and upon that head it ought to be baniſhed far from the ſoul's juſtification, and to have no part nor lot in the matter of attaining free pardon. And ſeeing this doctrine doth ſo well agree with the natural religion that is in all men, whereby they, when they come to God to obtain a favour, would always be ſure of ſome qualification in themſelves fitting them for the receipt of it ; let us take heed, that it turn not the covenant of grace into a baſtard covenant of works. The covenant of works ſays, Do this : the covenant of grace ſays ſo too. Where is the difference then ? Why, the covenant of works ſays, ‘ Do this and ‘ thou ſhalt live,’ viz. in God's favour, wherein life lies, Pſal. xxx. 5. But the covenant of grace ſaith, ‘ Live ‘ thou, and do this, Ezek. xvi. 6, 7. Now, this doctrine ſays, ‘ Repent, and thy ſins ſhall be pardoned ;’ which is indeed, ‘ Do this and thou ſhalt live.’ It requires not perfect obedience indeed ; but if we reſolve it, we find it to be this, “ Turn from ſin ſincerely unto “ God, though thou canſt not perfectly, and thou ſhalt “ live in God's favour.” Now, we know magis & minus non variant ſpeciem. I have almoſt loſt ſight of faith its relation to the pardon of ſin : and no great wonder ; ſeeing another thing is ſet betwixt them, which ſeems to take the right hand of faith ; for they will not ſay repentance goes before faith, and yet they will not allow it to come after remiſſion of ſin. So then it muſt go betwixt them, and therefore is the neareſt mean : and whichſoever of two means be in themſelves the more noble, yet in relation to the common end, it is highly reaſonable to prefer the immediate and neareſt mean to the mediate and remote ; whereby it comes to paſs, that, in the matter of the pardon of ſin, repentance muſt be the more noble mean. Again, I ſay, I believe and deſire to go immediately to Chriſt for pardon : but doſt thou repent of thy ſins, thy faith cannot obtain pardon without repentance ? Well then, ſtill repentance is preferable to faith here ; for without it faith can do nothing ; but with it, it proves effectual ; now, Propter quod unumquodque eſt tale, illud ipſum eſt magis tale. But this I am confident is not the doctrine of the goſpel. Let us take a watchword from holy and learned Rutherford : “ We would beware (ſays he) of Mr Baxter's “ order of ſetting repentance and works of new obedi- “ ence before juſtification ; which is indeed a new co- “ venant of works.”

Arg. VI. ult. If repentance be a mean neceſſary in order to the obtaining of pardon, then unleſs a man be aſſured of the truth and reality of his repentance, he cannot without ſin embrace the offered pardon ; the very embracing of it is a ſin unto him ; which is very abſurd. I prove the connection : ‘ for whatſoever is not ‘ of faith, is ſin ;’ that is, ſays acute Beza, all that is done in doubt of conſcience, whether it pleaſe God or not, and ſo conſequently whether God command it or not, is but ſin. And the context makes it plain, that the apoſtle means it of the faith of God's command. Now, how can that be of faith, and how can that be but ſin, when the perſon doubts of God's command obliging him in particular to believe and lay hold upon the offered pardon ? He is perſuaded, that he dare not embrace the pardon or believe it, unleſs he be a true penitent ; for God offers it to none immediately, but to true penitents, ex hypotheſi ; and yet no wonder that he very much doubts whether he be ſuch a one or not, and is moſt ready to conclude he is not. So that till he be perſuaded of the truth of his repentance, he cannot in faith embrace the offered pardon. When God makes his offers of pardon only to ſuch as are ſo and ſo qualified, how can he be excuſed from preſumption that adventures on the embracing of them, not diſcerning himſelf to be thus qualified ? When the Lord covers his table in the goſpel, but invites none but ſuch as are qualified with true repentance, he that doubteth, is damned if he eat. But the goſpel requires no ſuch thing, as that a man muſt know his repentance to be true before he embrace the offered pardon ; but ſimply calls all that will come, to come and take of the water of life freely. We may eaſily perceive how injurious this is to ſouls under exerciſe, how it natively tends to keep them long in the place of the breaking forth of children. For although the perſon apprehends God's anger gone out againſt him, and hears of the free pardon offered in the goſpel ; yet ſtill it appears to him forbidden fruit, unleſs he be conſcious to himſelf of the truth of his repentance ; ſeeing true repentance is a mean abſolutely neceſſary in order to the obtaining of the pardon of ſin. And while they cannot ſee the truth of their repentance, the offers of the goſpel, and promiſes of pardon, while they hear them, do but torment them the more, while they perſuade themſelves, that none but true penitents can have acceſs unto them ; which ere they can lay hold on, they muſt redd the marches betwixt legal and goſpel repentance, and muſt have it made out to their conſciences, that their repentance hath all the diſcriminating characters that diſtinguiſh it from the repentance of Judas, and from that ſorrow for ſin which proceeds merely from the force of an enlightened conſcience. And ſeeing true repentance proceeds from love to God, as we heard before, they muſt love God, not only while they apprehend him their enemy, but even while he is their enemy in very deed ; being a judge to them, under whoſe condemnatory ſentence they ly, their ſins being unpardoned. Whatever the ſoul in this caſe actually does, it is plain from what is ſaid, that, acting according to this principle, they are obliged to ſuſpend the embracing of pardon till they know they repent. But I ſuppoſe, that when a ſinner is ſufficiently made to ſee his abſolute need of Chriſt, and of goſpel grace, he does then embrace Chriſt by faith, which makes up a happy union betwixt Chriſt and him ; whereupon follows the abſolvitory ſentence ; and that independently on his conſciouſneſs either of his own acts towards God, or of God's actions towards him. In the mean time, this falſe perſuaſion, while ſtuck to, mars their peace and comfort. The plain goſpel-way (ſo far as I underſtand it) is, That a ſoul being, by the law, brought to a ſenſe of the abſolute and indiſpenſable need of Chriſt, (for till then a ſoul will never be content with the goſpel-way of ſalvation,) hath an offer of Chriſt, and of the pardon of ſin, freely made unto it, without any reſpect to any inherent qualification ; and thereupon cordially takes both according to the offer, embraceth Chriſt and his pardoning grace ; or conſents to take Chriſt, by which he becomes his ; whereupon he is immediately juſtified and pardoned, without any more ado: and hence natively flows true repentance; which being diſcerned by them, confirms to them the pardon of ſin more and more. I ſaid more and more, in regard that this truth we now plead for being believed, ſuppoſing the ſoul conſcious of its own act of reception, it is even then, at the ſoul's firſt embracing of Chriſt, ſufficient in ſuo genere, to aſſure him of the pardon of his ſins. And no farther goes the conſciouſneſs of true repentance: for, in reſpect of both, the ſupervenient teſtimony of the Spirit is neceſſary to remove all doubts, and to ſet the ſoul in perfect peace. For let the medium be, either the receiving of Chriſt and the pardon offered, or repentance, the illuſtration of both premiſſes and concluſion by the Spirit is neceſſary, in order to the full quiet of the heart. And I think I may add, That faith is a more firm and ſteady ground of aſſurance of the pardon of ſin, quoad nos, than repentance; in regard it is eaſier known. And hence it is, that divines uſe to give advice to Chriſtians perplexed with doubts and fears as to their ſtate, when they can diſcern no evidences of grace in themſelves, to lay by the inquiry, and, as if they had never believed in Chriſt, repented of their ſins, &c. to exerciſe a direct act of accepting of Chriſt offered in the goſpel, and then to reflect on that act in order to their quietneſs. If any ſhall endeavour to retort this argument, and ſay, that if it hold, then as to faith, which is a neceſſary mean to pardon, we muſt in like manner be aſſured of the reality thereof, or it is ſin for us to embrace the pardon: I anſwer, It follows by no means. There are two ways of embracing a pardon. Firſt, A pardon may be embraced in the way of preſumption; which overleaps Chriſt himſelf, and graſps at his benefits; and particularly remiſſion of ſin. This no doubt is a ſin; for God offers no pardon in that way. Secondly, A pardon is embraced by faith; which receives Chriſt, and in him and with him the pardon of ſin. This cannot be ſin, whether we be conſcious of the reality and uprightneſs of our act or not; though it is not ſo in regard of repentance. The reaſon is, There is a vaſt difference betwixt faith and repentance in this matter. The laſt of theſe is required as a qualification in the party diſtinct from the receiving of the pardon; or it is required as a mids, through which a ſoul muſt go before it can win at the pardon; and therefore, if faith ſhould lay hold on pardon, not knowing it hath come by this mids quoad nos, we come not at it in God's way, and conſequently it is ſin to embrace it ſo, viz. not having known, antecedently to our taking of it, that we do repent. But faith is not a qualification previouſly required to the embracing of the pardon? but, as it is conſidered here, is the very act of receiving of it, Acts xxvi. 18. 'That they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins.' Wherefore the previous knowledge thereof in us cannot be neceſſary in order to the embracing of the pardon, unleſs you ſay, that a man muſt know he receives forgiveneſs before he receive it; which is abſurd. To conclude, I ſuppoſe, that the way to deal with ſouls in order to their ſalvation, is, to labour by all means to conclude them under the law; that is, to hold out unto them their miſerable ſtate by nature, ſo as they may clearly ſee themſelves lying under the curſe, no ways able to help themſelves; whence they ſhall feel an abſolute need of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and, when they are brought that length by the bleſſing of God, to propoſe unto them Chriſt with his free pardon; which he is to be commanded in God's name to accept, without any more ado about any thing to qualify him for a pardon. "Wherefore, (ſays Luther,) when I ſee a man "ſufficiently broken, to be oppreſſed with the law, terrified with ſin, and to thirſt after comfort; then is it "time, that I remove out of his ſight the law and active righteouſneſs, and propoſe, by the goſpel, paſſive "righteouſneſs; which, Moſes, with his law being excluded, does exhibit the promiſe concerning Chriſt, "who came to die for the afflicted and ſinners."

Object. 1. The command of repentance is prefixed to the obtaining of pardon, and preventing of wrath, and that by way of certification, that if it be not, remiſſion is not to be expected, Acts iii. 19. 'Repent, 'that your ſins may be blotted out;' which doth imply, that without this, the blotting out of ſin is not to be expected. See alſo Acts ii. 38. and viii. 22.

Anſw. How little weight is to be laid upon the prefixing of the command to the obtaining of pardon, will appear in the examination of the places of ſcripture adduced. As for that of preventing of wrath; I chearfully yield, we cannot be ſaved unleſs we repent and obey, as we cannot be pardoned unleſs we believe. For the better underſtanding of the ſcriptures alledged, I am content to borrow light from the learned man that hath this objection; who, while he defends faith alone to be the condition of the covenant of grace, propoſeth an objection againſt himſelf, viz. As theſe places (which he had adduced for confirmation of that aſſertion, that faith alone is the condition of the covenant) do propoſe faith, ſo other places do propoſe repentance, as Acts ii. 38. &c. He anſwers to this, That if that objection hold, repentance and works would be equalled with it. "We "therefore (ſays he) take it thus: Where repentance "is propoſed, there the whole way of turning to God "more generally is propoſed." And herein he follows Calvin, who ſpeaks thus; "And truly I am not ignorant, that under the name of repentance, is compre"hended, the whole turning to God, whereof faith is "not the leaſt part." I ſubſume, But in theſe places alledged, faith is not once named, but repentance is propoſed: Ergo, The whole way of turning to God more generally is propoſed. And if the prefixing thereof to the promiſe of pardon do ſufficiently evince, that it is previouſly required to forgiveneſs, then faith, repentance, and works are in the ſame balance, or repentance and works are equalled with faith: for who can deny, that new obedience is comprehended under the whole turning unto God? So Hemmingius citing that of Jeremiah, "Let every man return from his evil ways, and I "will forgive your iniquity and your ſins," tells us, "That here is a commandment, and a promiſe. The "commandment is, that the ungodly do return; the "promiſe is of reconciliation. Hereupon it is gather"ed, that repentance is a converſion of man unto God; "in the which converſion he doth depart from evil, "believe the promiſe, and ſtudieth to lead a new life "according to the will of God." Now, unleſs that our whole turning to God more generally be a mean of remiſſion of ſin, which I hope will not be ſaid by the objector, theſe ſcriptures alledged prove nothing to the purpoſe. But let us take a particular view of them, As to that, Acts iii. 19. Repent,—that your ſins may be blotted out; though I ſhould grant, that the repentance here exhorted to is repentance ſtrictly ſo called, and that God offers pardon here, and requires repentance; it will not therefore follow, that it is required antecedently to the obtaining of pardon. "Wherefore when "God offereth forgiveneſs of ſins, (ſays Calvin,) he "likewiſe uſeth to require repentance on our part: ſe"cretly declaring, that his mercy ought to be to men a "cauſe to repent them.——— Again, Repent ye, and "be converted, that your ſins may blotted out, Acts "iii. 19. where yet it is to be noted, that this condition "is not ſo annexed, as though our repentance were a "foundation to deſerve pardon; but rather (becauſe "the Lord hath determined to have mercy upon men, "to this end that they ſhould repent) he teacheth men "whether they ſhall travel if they will obtain grace." But indeed I very much doubt, if the repentance here ſpoken of, be meant either in whole or in part, of true goſpel-repentance; in regard we find converſion is alſo exhorted unto in the very next word, which I ſuppoſe may take in true repentance. Wherefore I rather incline to expound it ſimply of a change of the mind from one opinion to another, from worſe to better. It is well known, that the people of the Jews had very unſound notions concerning their Meſſiah, his nature and offices; they looked for one who ſhould make a great figure in the world, reſtore the kingdom to Iſrael, and deliver them from the Roman yoke. This prejudicated opinion remaining with them, the doctrine of the goſpel could have no acceſs unto their hearts; for the preaching of the croſs was to the Jews a ſtumbling block; they expected far other things of their Meſſiah than that he ſhould be crucified, &c. The apoſtle therefore calls them to lay aſide this prejudice, and be converted. This very well agrees with the context; for Peter having told them, how they had crucified him whom God now had glorified, he ſhews them, how it came to paſs they did ſo, verſ. 17. 'Through ignorance ye did it. For (as Paul ſays) had they known him, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.' Wherefore, verſ. 18. he removes their miſtake, telling them, that, by the writings of the prophets, the Meſſiah was to ſuffer the very things that they had inflicted on Jeſus of Nazareth. Whence he brings in that exhortation, verſ. 19. Repent therefore, &c. "Then be no more under the power of that dangerous miſtake, but change your mind, and turn to the Lord." But underſtand repentance here, what way you pleaſe, this ſcripture makes nothing for what is alledged; for it is evident, that the blotting out of ſin here reſpecteth, not the time of repentance, but the time of refreſhment. Wherefore, as Mr Rutherford anſwers, "The words ſhould bear, that ſins were not pardoned untill the time of refreſhment, that is, till the day of eternal happineſs, and reſt from our labours of this life; in which day ſins are only blotted out declaratively, ſaith Diodati." The world to come, ſays Tainovius, whoſe beginning is at the laſt judgment, is called by Luke very elegantly, as his manner is, Anapſuxis, becauſe it denotes refreſhment, which is done, and comes to them who are weakened by heat, through refrigeration; as ye may ſee in ſome who are in a ſwoon, when ye pour cold water on them. So Calvin, Beza, Piſcator, and Aretius, underſtand it. Wherefore the remiſſion here ſpoken of, is not the formal forgiveneſs that is in queſtion; but is an open declaration of the ſame at the day of judgment. And hereunto the emphaſis of the Greek word rendered blotting out doth beſt agree: for it ſignifies (ſays Zanchius) ſo perfectly to blot out a thing, that there remains behind no veſtige of it. As little does that place, Acts ii. 38. Repent, and be baptized--for the remiſſion of ſins, help their cauſe; for who ſees not, that the command of being baptized is prefixed to the promiſe, as well as the command to repent? Muſt it then follow, that baptiſm is a neceſſary mean in order to the obtaining of the remiſſion of ſin? The argument is of a like force for both. But moreover, where is there a promiſe here? Mention is indeed made of remiſſion, but not by way of promiſe. Nay, there is nothing here of a formal reception of forgiveneſs. For, as Piſcator well obſerves, theſe words, for the remiſſion of ſins, do not depend upon the word repent, but upon that be baptized. And the plain ſenſe of the word is, that they ſhould be baptized in teſtimony of remiſſion of ſin, not to obtain remiſſion of ſin through this mean or inſtrument; becauſe faith alone is the mean or inſtrument whereby we apprehend remiſſion of ſins in the goſpel. If you ſay, Is there no promiſe of the pardon of ſin to be found here? I anſwer, The formal forgiveneſs of ſin is comprehended in ver. 39. 'The promiſe is to you,' &c. Now, what promiſe? the promiſe of the Spirit, ver. 17. and of ſalvation, verſe 21. 'Whoſoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord, ſhall be ſaved,' firſt of all; which preſuppoſeth faith; 'for how can they call on him on whom they have not believed?' Now it is plain, that the apoſtle exhorts them to repent, from this ground, that the promiſe is to them, as the particle for imports. And though the 39th verſe comes laſt, yet, in order of nature it is firſt, as the premiſſes go before the concluſion. And thus I think, we have the plain meaning of the apoſtle in theſe words. Q. d. "Ye are pricked at the heart; but do not deſpond, in regard the ſaving and ſpecial gifts of God are in your offer, and promiſed to you upon your acceptance thereof: therefore do ye wholly turn to God by faith, repentance, and new obedience; and, for your confirmation in the remiſſion of your ſins, receive baptiſm as the ſeal of the covenant." As to that, Acts viii. 22. we ſay, that the command to pray is prefixed to what he ſays of remiſſion, as well as the command to repent is; yet muſt it not be hence concluded, that prayer muſt needs go before forgiveneſs. But here, as before, we ſay repentance is put for the whole turning to God.

Object. 2. The connection betwixt repentance and pardon is peremptorily inforced, Luke xiii. 2, 3. Except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. Prov. xxviii. 13. Whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſins, ſhall have mercy.

Anſw. All this is what we deny not. There is no doubt a connection betwixt repentance and pardon. But the queſtion is rather about the annexing of the one to the other, Whether repentance be annexed to pardon, or pardon to repentance? We ſay, the former is true, and there is nothing here to prove the contrary. Yea, the firſt of theſe ſcriptures cited, doth not ſo much as hold out a connection betwixt repentance and pardon, but only betwixt non-repenting and periſhing. And there is a vaſt difference betwixt theſe two; for the former cannot be lawfully inferred from the latter; as will appear, if duly conſidered. Let the argument be this, 'Except ye repent ye ſhall periſh,' Ergo, if ye do repent ye ſhall live. The conſequent is true; but the conſequence is naught. It is as that, Our ill works will damn us, Ergo, Our good works will ſave us, or as if we ſhould ſay, If ye do not pray to God, ye ſhall periſh, Ergo, If ye do, ye ſhall live. We ſee here the conſequent is falſe, and ſo is the conſequence; for bonum non niſi, ex integra cauſa, malum ex quolibet defectu. Non-repentance ſimply, and of itſelf, is ſufficient to make us periſh: but who will ſay, that ſimple repentance of itſelf is ſufficient to ſave us, even in the way of means? As to that other ſcripture, Prov. xxviii. 13. I ſay with Mr Rutherford, That the Holy Ghoſt there is not upon order, as if penitent confeſſion, forſaking of all ſin, muſt go before forgiveneſs; but the Lord deſigns the perſons pardoned, that they muſt be ſuch as forſake their ſins. Now, there is great reaſon for this; becauſe men who hide their ſins and forſake them not, will yet pretend to ſhare of pardon; who therefore have great need to be undeceived. And truly, ſeeing, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, 'Confeſſion is made with the mouth unto ſalvation,' Rom. x. 10. and, with reſpect to open and ſcandalous ſins, it muſt be underſtood of confeſſion before men; I ſee not how the neceſſary precedence of it unto pardon can be avouched; for who will ſay, that a formal pardon cannot be had, but theſe things muſt be before it?

Object. 3. The ſcripture grounds the cauſes of people's ruin on their not repenting, as in Lev. xxvi. Amos iv. Ezek. xviii. Rev. xvi. and many ſuch places; where this, They repented not, is given as the cauſe of God's continued quarrel with them.

Anſw. If we will underſtand this according to what was ſaid above, that by repenting in ſuch places where it is ſimply propoſed, without faith, is meant the whole turning to God, the argument is of no weight. But it ſeems here to be urged as taken for repentance ſtrictly ſo called. And let it be ſo, the conſequence is naught. Every thing that people's ruin is grounded on, the contrary is not therefore a previous mean to pardon; as is evident to any that will conſider, Hoſ. iv. Swearing, lying, &c. are made the grounds of that people's ruin; yet I hope the reverend uſe of God's name, and ſpeaking truth, muſt not therefore be reckoned the means of pardon. Many ſuch places might be alledged. But perhaps it will be ſaid, none of theſe things had been their ruin, if they had repented. But what is that to ſay, but that none of theſe things would have been their ruin, if they had turned from them unto God, embracing the contrary virtues ? So it is ſtill the ſame thing as before, theſe contrary virtues are made by this way the means of pardon. But if the argument be good, it is believing that is the mean : for the ſcripture expreſsly tells us, that men are condemned becauſe they have not believed, John iii. 18. and Chriſt calls believing the work of God, John vi. 29. and John calls it his command (1 John iii. 23.) by way of eminency.

Object. 4. ult. In the promiſes of the covenant, remiſſion of ſin is ſubjoined to the exerciſe of repentance, as neceſſarily antecedent ; ſo that without it there is no acceſs to any promiſe of pardon, Lev. xxvi. 40, 41, 42. 'If they confeſs their iniquity, then will I remember 'my covenant :' which doth preſuppoſe confeſſion, and the exerciſe of repentance, and the humbling of the heart, to go before the application of the covenant. And leſt it ſhould be thought a legal covenant, it is expreſsly ſaid to be the covenant with Abraham, which cannot be denied to be of grace, 1 Kings viii. 47. Solomon expreſsly covenanteth for pardon on theſe terms ; and 2 Chron. vii. 13, 14. the Lord doth expreſsly aſſent to theſe articles. It may be confirmed from 1 John i. 9. which ſuppoſeth that there is no engagement, to ſpeak ſo, upon God's faithfulneſs to pardon any ſinner, but him who repenteth.

Anſw. I have already proven the contrary of this in the fourth argument ; having produced ſeveral promiſes where there is no veſtige of any ſuch order, but of the contrary. If there be no acceſs to the promiſe of pardon without repentance, it is we ourſelves that bolt the door ; and therefore let us blame ourſelves, and thoſe who adviſe us to find any good qualification in ourſelves, before we embrace the free pardon. But if God's hand be at the work, the pardon ſhall find acceſs to us, and our hearts ſhall be opened to receive it ; and being received, it ſhall, by its ſupernatural efficacy, melt and thaw the heart into true repentance, though we know not whence it comes, nor whither it goes ; but are buſy in preparing the room for it, while we neglect to open the door to let it in. As for the covenant itſelf, it is our conſent that brings us within the bond of it. The Lord offers to be our God in Chriſt ; we by faith conſent to take him ſo. Call it the condition, mids, or what you pleaſe ; I hope you will not ſay, I dare not give this conſent until I repent ; for this conſenting or believing is my neceſſary and indiſpenſable duty, whatever ſtate I be in. But you will ſay, I dare not embrace the pardon till I repent. If you mean de facto, it is my weakneſs ; if de jure, how ſtrange is this ? I may not embrace what is leſſer ; and yet may, and muſt what is infinitely greater and better ; for God himſelf is better than ten thouſand pardons. But I am perſuaded, that when I find my ſoul content to take God in Chriſt to be my God, and do actually conſent to that gracious offer, that the promiſe of pardon is abſolute to me, Ez. xxxvi. 25. : for eo ipſo, that God is my God, his free pardon is mine, and it can be no preſumption in me to embrace what is mine own. God holds it forth to me, in the covenant, I by faith lay hold on it ; there is nothing here that intervenes, ſo that it is ſtill abſolute ; and if abſolute, how can it be ſaid there is no acceſs to it without repentance ? As for theſe ſcriptures, Lev. xxvi. 40. &c. 1 Kings viii. 47. 2 Chron. vii. 13 ; I grant they preſuppoſe repentance, &c. ; but they touch not the point in hand, in regard they reſpect the pardon of ſin, as it is the removal of temporary ſtrokes, as I have already ſhewn, and will be manifeſt to ſuch as view the places : for who ſees not, that the multitude of thoſe things there required, is very unlike the ſimplicity of the goſpel-offer, 'Believe, and thou ſhalt be ſaved ?' It is clear, that the people are conſidered there in a national capacity, and under national ſtrokes for national ſins ; for removal, repentance of the ſame kind is required. And though, in ſuch a general repentance of a people, they that believe are ſpiritually and theologically ſerious, and, with a removal of common calamity from off the ſociety whereof they are members, get God's countenance to ſhine on their ſouls ; yet the generality are never evangelically penitent. But moral ſeriouſneſs in ſuch a caſe, according to the Lord's way of dealing with nations, is a mean to get theſe temporal ſtrokes removed ; as may be ſeen in the caſe of the Ninevites, and many a time in the caſe of the Jews. What though this covenant be a covenant of grace ? the covenant of grace has undeniably temporary ſtrokes threatened in it ; and it is generally allowed, that there is a twofold being in this covenant ; the one external, the other internal. The one gives people to ſhare of the outward bleſſings of the covenant, the other makes them partakers of ſpecial and ſaving bleſſings. And thus one and the ſame perſon may be under the covenant of works and the covenant of grace ; in the former, in reſpect of his ſoul's ſtate, with God's curſe upon him, under the latter, externally partaking of the external privileges, protections, deliverances, &c. given to the viſible church. So then we may plainly ſee what it is for God to 'remember his covenant.' When the captive, broken, and afflicted Iſraelites confeſs their ſins, humble themſelves, &c. God removes the temporary ſtrokes they lie under. And this is applicable to particular perſons, in reſpect of the ſpiritual and ſaving federal relation to God ; for ſo it is in the inward and ſpecial adminiſtration of the covenant : but then it reſpects ſuch as are juſtified and ſanctified, but none other ; as theſe promiſes and prayers concern Iſrael ſeparated from among all other people, 1 Kings viii. 53. As to that ſcripture, 1 John i. 9. 'If we confeſs,' &c. the author himſelf tells us afterwards, that John is there writing to believers, and puts himſelf in the roll. And there is is no doubt but it is ſo : for he writes to his children, and that their joy might be full ; and ſpeaks of God as faithful, in reſpect of his promiſes to them ; and juſt to forgive, in reſpect of the merits of Chriſt imputed to them. And, as Caſe tells us, he aſſerts the doctrine of actual ſin in the juſtified againſt the Simonians, Gnoſtics, and other heretics of that age ; of whom he ſhews out of Auguſtine, that they taught that there was no ſin but unbelief ; that to the juſtified all things were clean, however they live, that a juſt man does not ſo much as commit a ſmall ſin, and upon this they could not but teach, that the juſtified were not to confeſs ſins. Againſt theſe then the apoſtle ſets himſelf here, and teacheth the juſtified to confeſs their ſins. Whence it appears, that this doth not at all concern the point in hand ; the queſtion being of the means neceſſary in order to juſtification, and the pardon of ſin at firſt ; betwixt which and the ſubſequent pardons, I have proven above that there is a vaſt difference.

QUEST. IV.

Where hath ſin its lodging-place in the regenerate?

‘GOD made man upright, but he found out many inventions.’ He was a glorious creature, as he dropt from the forming finger of God, all whoſe works are perfect. It was man's glory, that he was created after the image of God. It was God's will he ſhould be created mutably ſo. Of his mutability there can be no controverſy. Sad experience teacheth us, that man is not now perfect; but, on the contrary, a maſs of ſin, and lump of hell, the noble kind being infected with diabolic contagion, which he voluntarily received. Whereby it comes to paſs, that all is infected. The underſtanding, which formerly was a ſun of light in this little world, is not only overclouded, but utterly darkened, as to any ſaving uptaking of ſpiritual things. The will which before was the Lord's deputy-governor there, endued with principles of true loyalty to its ſupreme Maſter, is now turned traitor, and utterly perverſe; having forſaken its allegiance to the great King, gathers in the rents of the crown to itſelf, and in very deed, with ſacrilegious audacity, attempts to occupy the throne of the Higheſt. Call it no more Naomi, but Marah; no more will but luſt; for we have dealt bitterly with ourſelves. The affections, formerly ſubject to right reaſon, having loſt their maſter, go up and down, roving as lawleſs miſcreants; ſet themſelves on lawful objects exceſſively, and unlawful objects are their deſire. Neither conſcience nor memory can do their work. And the body with its members is made ſlave to this unruly beaſt; which alſo is made to ſerve the polluted piece of clay, which wants not a miſerable influence on the more noble part of man.

But grace makes a change; and ſets right the disjointed members, though not perfectly; for the ſaints complete deliverance cometh not till the pins of this tabernacle of the body be looſed. The body of death remains till the death of the body. Then ſhall they be made perfect in holineſs. But now they groan under the burden of indwelling ſin, and with Paul, cry out, ‘O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!’ That ſin doth remain in the regenerate, is evident from ſcripture and experience againſt deluded perfectioniſts. Where it remains, is the queſtion. The Dominican monks, and ſome others, were of opinion, that though original ſin remains after baptiſm, yet it is only in the inferior part of the ſoul, (as they ſpeak,) or in the ſenſitive part; but not in the mind and will. Some have been of opinion, that it remained only in the body, and that it was nothing elſe but deſire of meat; &c. or ſenſual pleaſures. No wonder theſe things entered into the minds of men, who were left to grow vain in their imaginations, without a due ſenſe of the remaining corruption of nature. But I find ſome expreſs themſelves in this matter to this purpoſe, viz. That ſin which is left in the regenerate, dwelleth in the body properly ſo called, and is as an enemy beat out of the town or ſtrong hold, and lodging in the outworks, and as it were, about the walls; from whence it makes its ſallies, and infeſts the ſoul. Which I ſuppoſe we may ſoon find contrary to ſcripture, reaſon, and experience.

Arg. I. The ſcripture plainly holds forth ſin dwelling in the heart: Jer. xvii. 9. ‘The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked; who can know it?’ There is an unfathomable depth of wickedneſs therein, which none can ſearch out unto perfection. Our Lord tells us, that the heart is the ſpring and ſource of all evil, Mark vii. 21. For from within, out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications: So Matth. xii. 34. he brings a general reaſon to prove that the Phariſees being evil could not ſpeak good things: For (ſays he) out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. Theſe places are manifeſtly general, and agree both to good and bad. Is there not deceit and deſperate wickedneſs even in the hearts of the regenerate? Have any ſuch perfectly known their own hearts? Do not evil words proceed out of their mouth? This then is from the abundance of the heart. Hereunto add the neceſſary qualification requiſite in thoſe who ſhall have acceſs to God in duties, that they know every one the plague of his own heart, 1 Kings viii. 38. Not without reaſon doth the wiſe man call for keeping of the heart with all diligence, Prov. iv. 23. that we may ſet double guards on it. It plainly tells us, that the heart is a deceitful thing, and bent to turn aſide after crooked ways. Say not, that all the hazard is from the influence which the body hath on it; for the heart can go aſtray in ſuch things wherein it is not capable of being influenced by the body, as will appear afterwards. But indeed if that were ſo, we ſhould rather have been directed to keep the body with all diligence. But it is plain, the greateſt hazard is from the heart; as Moſes teacheth in that parallel place, Deut. iv. 9. ‘Only take heed to thyſelf, and keep thy ſoul diligently,’ &c. Mr Gray ſpeaks feelingly, and no leſs truly, concerning the heart: “I think (ſays he,) ſuch is the deſperate deceitfulneſs of our hearts, that if all the ſaints ſince Adam's days, and who ſhall be to the end of the world, had but one heart to guide, they would miſguide it.”

Arg. II. The Spirit of God calls the regenerate to carry on the work of renovation in their ſouls, minds, and wills; which evidently holds forth, that there is much of the old man remaining there ſtill, even in their ſouls, and that in the moſt noble faculties thereof: Rom. xii. 2. ‘Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind;’ where it is clear the apoſtle is ſpeaking to regenerate perſons, Eph. iv. 23. he calls thoſe who had learned Chriſt, yet to be renewed in the ſpirit of their minds. And the apoſtle ſpeaking of himſelf, 2 Cor. iv. 16. tells us, that the inward man is renewed day by day. If any ſhall ſay, that by ‘the renewing of the inward man,’ is meant the ſtrengthening of the ſoul to bear afflictions; I grant the ſame without any prejudice to what we aſſert; for it ſuppoſeth a culpable weakneſs, in regard of which the ſoul hath need to be renewed. The apoſtle, Col. iii. 10. teacheth the ſame doctrine; ‘and have put on the new man, which is renewed;’ kai enduſamenoi ton neon, ton anakainoumenon; where I pray you take notice of the apoſtle's changing of the tenſe, ‘Ye have put on the new man, which is renewed;’ he ſpeaks of the renovation in the preſent tenſe, denoting the continuance of the action. And that it relates to the mind, is no leſs clear; for this new man is expreſsly ſaid to be renewed in knowledge. Hereunto add the apoſtle's prayer for the believing Theſſalonians, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. ‘And the very God of peace ſanctify you wholly: and I pray God your whole ſpirit and ſoul and body be preſerved blameleſs unto the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.’

And how frequently doth the ſcripture diſcover the particular evils that are to be found in the ſoul as their proper place? as we may ſee in the apoſtle's prayer for the believing Epheſians, chap. i. 17. &c. So Col. i. 9. 10. How frequently does the Lord reprove his diſciples for the relics of unbelief in them? The apoſtle confeſſeth in the name of all believers, the great remains of darkneſs that are yet on their minds, 1 Cor. xiii. 12. But to recount ſuch places as teach that ſin is yet remaining in the mind and will, were an endleſs labour.

Arg. III. There are many members of the body of death, which the godly ly under, that are purely ſpiritual; whereof the body can be no receptacle; and muſt needs remain in the ſoul, even in the mind and will; ſuch as, Atheiſm, ignorance, hatred of God, unbelief, want of love to God, &c. That theſe and the like cannot be ſaid to lodge in the body, is evident: For, 1. Some of theſe ſins are mere privations; as, ignorance of, and want of love to God, &c. privations, I ſay, of rectitude, that ought to be, not in the act, (for there is no act, but a ceſſation from action;) but in the power, which is nothing elſe than the ſoul, mind, and affections; unleſs you will ſay, that the body is capable to love God, which is moſt abſurd. And no leſs abſurd is it to aſſert the ſame anent the ſenſitive part of the ſoul, as they call it. 2. How can theſe ſins be ſaid to lodge there, where there cannot be ſo much as an imagination of their objects; as in hatred of God. The body is not capable thereof; in regard God is not the object of the fancy, but of the mind; ſo that we can have no imagination of him; he being infinitely removed from matter: and therefore as far from the imagination, as colours from hearing, ſounds from the taſte, or the moſt abſtract notions from the ſoul of a beaſt. 3. Moreover, there are ſome ſins founded on reflection, which the body is not capable of, as, pride, and lifting up of the ſoul, upon the account of its perceiving in itſelf ideas of the moſt ſublime things, far removed from the knowledge of others. How ſuch can be ſaid to be driven out into the body, I perſuade myſelf no man can ſhew with any colour of reaſon; yet pride is not the leaſt of the members of the body of death.

Arg. IV. If the remains of original ſin in the regenerate be not in the ſoul, but whatever remains of it be driven to the body; then original ſin is quite razed out in regeneration, not only ut non imputetur, but ut non ſit; it hath no more a being in the ſaints: and ſo there is no ſin the regenerate are chargeable with but actual ſin; and ſo all the children of God have been under a miſerable miſtake, while they confeſſed and bewailed their original corruption. All which is contrary to the ſcriptures, and the ſentiments of orthodox divines. I prove the connection, for if the remains of natural corruption lodge not in the ſoul, it hath no lodging in the man at all. The reaſon is, becauſe the body conſidered as contradiſtinct to the ſoul, is not ſubjectum capax; for the body as ſuch is ſubject to no law: now, 'where 'there is no law, there can be no tranſgreſſion;' and if the body as ſuch were ſubject to a law, then all bodies ſhould be ſo; I mean, of a moral law. If you ſay, the body is not conſidered here ſimply as a body, but as a conſtituent part of the man; I anſwer, that indeed the whole ſuppoſitum is under the law. But the formal reaſon of a man's being ſubjectible to a law, is rationality, which is the only thing that makes him capable to be directed by a law. So that although ſin may be from the body occaſionally, as madneſs from the diſtemperature of the brain; and may be alſo in it terminatively, as whoredom, drunkenneſs, &c.; yet formally it is in the ſoul; which, againſt the law, complies with the temptation, which in ſome caſes the body may have a deep ſhare in; and the ſoul uſeth the members of the body for fulfilling the deſires of ſin, to which it is incited by the body. Whatever power we grant unto the body for ſtirring up the ſoul to ſin, and whatever we ſay of that incitation conſidered ſimply as an action of the body; we judge it highly agreeable to reaſon, that the inciting to ſin which is by the body, as it ariſeth from a view of the object, is, at leaſt interpretatively, an imperate act of the ſoul, which takes fire upon the firſt view of the ſpecies of the external object preſented by the eyes, ears, &c.; and conſequently follows that act of the ſoul, though the motion of the blood and ſpirits, thus commanded by the ſoul, adds feuel to the fire. For whence, I pray you, is the motion of the blood and ſpirits in the body inciting to ſin, but from the ſoul, which, upon a view of the object, judgeth the ſame to be fit for it to enjoy hic & nunc; and ſo wills it with a ſort of velleity at leaſt; whereupon natively follow ſuch motions in the body? This is evident from this, that when the practical judgment goes a contrary way, theſe motions in the body follow it in the ſame: though indeed, when once the devil is raiſed thus in the blood and ſpirits, the ſoul cannot eaſily lay him; becauſe the will hath but a politic, not a deſpotic power over the fancy once ſet upon an object; as is too evident from experience. Had Achan, when he ſaw the Babyloniſh garment, and wedge of gold, judged they had been devils appearing in ſhape of bodies, doubtleſs quite contrary motions tending to averſation would have ariſen in him. So that I think it is clear, that incitation to ſin by the body, follows the conception of luſt in the ſoul; and that the body is only the midwife helping to bring forth the unhappy birth.

From what is ſaid it appears, that even actual ſin is not formally in the body, but in the ſoul: for though the body may contribute ſomething thereto in genere entis, yet the ſoul only gives all in genere moris. From thence is the anomia of the action. Now, if it be driven to the body, as is alledged, it ſurely ſtirs there; that is, original ſin there breaks forth into action; which cannot be ſaid, as we have already declared. And therefore we may ſafely thence, conclude, it is not there; for where it is, there it will bring forth its unhappy births.

One thing more I add: That if the patrons of this opinion be of the judgment, that the ſoul doth not always think, by this argument they ſhall be obliged to ſay, that regenerate infants have no ſin in them at all; nor godly perſons adult, when they ſleep, and do not dream: for ſin is put out of the ſoul, they ſay, and the body is at reſt.

Arg. V. If in regeneration indwelling-ſin be driven out of the ſoul into the body, then it is in the body, either in more or leſs, or in equal meaſure, as before converſion. In greater meaſure it cannot be, or then the renewing in the whole man falls to the ground; yea, the body is the worſe of regeneration, and is ſo far from having old things done away, that they are increaſed to a greater height; which to reconcile to the privilege which the bodies of believers have in their union with Chriſt, and being the temples of the Holy Ghoſt, is impoſſible. If it be ſaid, it is there in leſſer meaſure than before; let them ſhew how that can be. Surely, according to their principles, ſin properly had part of its lodging in the body before converſion. Now, what room it had in the ſoul, it has loſt, according to them. Wherefore it cannot be in leſs meaſure there than before; unleſs you ſay, that it had leſs before converſion in the ſoul, than it had in the body. But experience flies in the face of this aſſertion: for thoſe that are converted before they come to maturity, when they do come to years, find tenfold more difficulty in guiding of their bodies, than they had before their converſion. If the laſt be ſaid, then the body is nothing the better of regenerating grace; which is inconſiſtent with the union with Chriſt. If you ſay, that we juſt now confeſſed the body may be in a worſe caſe after regeneration than before, wherefore much more equally evil with what it was before, I anſwer, That I ever denied the body to be a ſubject capable formally either of moral goodneſs or evil; and therefore in that reſpect it neither can be better nor worſe. But otherwiſe, we muſt diſtinguiſh the ſtate of the body, with reſpect to nature, and with reſpect to grace. With reſpect to nature, and in itſelf, it may be indeed in a worſe caſe, as was ſaid; in ſo far as, by the power of nature grown up, it is more hard to be tamed and holden in than before. But in reſpect of grace conferred on the ſoul, when it is at its worſt, it is in better caſe than when it was in its beſt natural ſtate, the ſoul being graceleſs; as one is in a better caſe, when he hath drunk in the precepts of ſobriety, and has a faithful tutor, than when he was a child; though now both have more ado than formerly. This will more clearly appear, if we conſider how the body is partaker of regenerating grace. Grace is not, nor cannot be formally and ſubjectively in the body, but objectively and reductively. It is not by way of inherence in it, but in reſpect of uſefulneſs it is for it; for grace makes no change in the body, but in reſpect that the members of the body are thereby better employed than before, as the apoſtle teacheth, 1 Theſſ. iv. 3, 4. 1 Cor. vi. 19. Rom. vi. 13. So then grace in the ſoul is the guide and tutor of the body, though the body be not formally gracious; even as the eye which ſees alone ſerves the whole body for light; for if the eye be ſingle, the whole body will be full of light.

Arg. VI. ult. The experience of the godly teſtifies, that ſin is not ſo driven out of, the ſoul as is pretended: ſo. "who is ſo holy, that he does not find much dark- "neſs in his underſtanding? great ſelf-love in his will? "that all his faculties do frequently go aſtray from "what is true, juſt, and good?" &c. ſays Zanchius. Although the godly have much ado with their bodies, yet I conceive that the hardeſt work of all is with the heart. Nothing is more ordinary with exerciſed ſouls than complaints of the deceitfulneſs of the heart; which they believe, though it wanted a corrupt body, or a devil to tempt, yet would prove a tempter and a devil to itſelf. Who finds not, when the body lies quite by from troubling, ſufficient matter of exerciſe from a hard and dead heart? Who does not diſcern in themſelves a root of Atheiſm, blaſphemy, hatred of God, &c. all which are the kindly fruits of old Adam, ſpringing from the curſed ground of the heart? And I doubt not, but if I could have acceſs to the cloſet-doors of ſome ſuch as ſtickle for this baniſhment of ſin into the outworks, but I ſhould hear them confeſs ſin's lodging in the prime faculties of their ſouls, though in conference they refuſe it.

One thing more I muſt add: That ſeeing diſtempers having their ſeat in the body are to be cured, not by the word, but by phyſical applications, when miniſters have done their work in converting ſouls, they ought to turn them over into the hands of ſkilful phyſicians, the proper object of whoſe art is the body as curable of diſtempers. But enough of this.

Object. 1. The apoſtle (Rom. vii.) teacheth us, that ſin dwells only in the body, verſ. 24. Who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! verſ. 23. ſpeaking of indwelling ſin, he tells us, he finds a law in his members; and verſ. 18. I know that in me, that is, in my fleſh, (i. e. the body,) there dwells no good thing.

Anſw. Vehemency of affection, whether of love or hatred, produceth ſeveral deſignations to the things beloved or hated, the more to expreſs the vehemency of the mind for or againſt the object. So was it with the apoſtle in the matter of indwelling ſin, which was a moſt grievous burden to him. Wherefore ſometimes he calls it ſin by way of eminency, as being the great maſter-devil, Rom. vi. 12.; ſometimes luſt, Rom. vii. 7. to expreſs the vehemency of its activity, Gal. v. 17. ſometimes he ſpeaks of it as an officious troubleſome gueſt, Rom. vii. 17. 20. ſometimes he calls it a man, and an old man, Eph. iv. 22. becauſe of its antiquity, and ſubtilty, and ſtrength. It is old indeed, yea the elder brother, though made to ſerve the younger. Here he calls it a body, and a body of death. The meaning is, ſays Piſcator, "Who ſhall deliver me from this "death, which as a ſort of body, or thing ſubſiſting by "itſelf, exerceth its power in me, and miſerably vexeth "me? But by death metonymically he underſtands "indwelling-ſin." And indeed this very well agrees with the ſcope of the apoſtle; and chap. vi. 6. he had called it a body. But why he ſhould call his own body, which he knew was the temple of the Holy Ghoſt, a body of death, I ſee not. On good reaſon doth he call indwelling ſin, a body; in regard that as a body hath many members, ſo hath indwelling-ſin. It is not one ſimple luſt, but a compound of all iniquity, and the ſeed and ſpawn of all unrighteouſneſs. It is a complete body; it wants not one member; for as a believer hath every grace in the root and habit, ſo hath he every ſin the ſame way dwelling in him; for let grace once be withdrawn, there ſhall be a compliance with any temptation. And well might he call it a body of death, as being in its own nature a deadly thing, as lothſome as carrion, and devoted to death or deſtruction, being already nailed to the croſs of Chriſt, Gal. v. 24. from which it was not to come down till it had breathed out its laſt. As to what the apoſtle ſays of his members, Piſcator doth indeed underſtand it properly of the members of his body, in which ſin exerts its ſtrength; yet doth not dream that the ſeat of ſin is only or mainly in the body. And ſo we may underſtand it without prejudice to our cauſe; for it is plain ſin may exert its ſtrength there where it hath not its proper place of abode. Others think, that by members he means every faculty of ſoul and body; and ſo they will have the word taken, Rom. vi. 13. Jam. iv. 1. If this be admitted, it weakens the cauſe of our adverſaries. But I ſuppoſe the apoſtle here diſtinguiſhes two oppoſite parties in and from himſelf. The one he calls the inner man; the other he muſt be ſuppoſed to call the outer man. Let us ſee then what he means by thoſe men he ſpeaks of. That he does not thereby underſtand the ſoul and the body, is clear to me upon theſe three accounts: 1. Becauſe the inner man, in the act of ſin, ſtill ſtands out againſt the outer man; ſo that the inner man is blameleſs, verſ. 20. But this cannot be ſaid of the ſoul. 2. In the outer man there dwells no good thing, verſ. 18. which to underſtand of the body, I ſhall afterwards ſhew to be abſurd. I add, 3. That, as I ſaid before, the outer and the inner man are really diſtinct from the man himſelf. Though they both be ours, yet they are not ourſelves; which is plain, if ye conſider, that, through the whole of this diſcourſe, the man himſelf is holden forth as toſſed betwixt theſe two: ſometimes led by the one, ſometimes by the other: the man himſelf is the prey; they are the two combatants that fight for the maſtery over him; and accordingly the ſtrongeſt party carries away the poor captive. According to the inner man, he delights in the law of God; which gives us to underſtand, that according to the outer man, he is averſe to it. Whence it is evident, theſe two are diſtinct from himſelf, and therefore cannot be his ſoul and body. Moreover, theſe two are elſewhere called by the apoſtle the new and old man; whereof the one is ſaid to be put on, the other to be of the man himſelf, yet are they not divided or ſeparated from him: both of them are in him, and diffuſed through the man, according to the capacity of each part. Whence it plainly appears, that theſe men are nothing elſe but grace and corruption, as the apoſtle teacheth, verſ. 20.—'Sin that dwelleth 'in me.' And hence we may eaſily perceive, what he means by the members he ſpeaks of. Why, even as the ſeveral graces of the Spirit are the members of the inner and new man, Eph. iv. 24. ſo the ſeveral particular luſts of the heart are the members of the old and outer man; which members the apoſtle calls us to mortify, Col. iii. 5.

Now, in theſe members of his he finds a law; that is, activity, power, and efficacy: for the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, Gal. v. 17. "As laws, (ſays Flavel,) "by virtue of their annexed rewards and puniſhments, "have a mighty power and efficacy; ſo ſin, indwelling "ſin, that root of all our trouble and ſorrow, hath a "mighty efficacy upon us." And by this law, indwelling-ſin brings the ſoul into captivity to itſelf, the man being made captive to that law of ſin which is in his members. Where we muſt take notice, that the apoſtle does not refer that being in his members to ſin; if ſo indeed, this expoſition would be ridiculous; but the words in the original plainly refer it to the law, to nomo tes hamartias to onti, holding forth the power and efficacy of original ſin, which ſets it ſeveral members on work. But to proceed: That the apoſtle calls his body his fleſh, is falſe. For, 1. No good thing dwells in his fleſh; but the Holy Spirit dwells in his body. 2. Will any ſay, that the law of ſin is ſerved only with the body, and the law of God only with the ſoul? But the apoſtle tells us, ver. 25. that 'with the mind he ſerves the law 'of God, with the fleſh the law of ſin;' where he aſſigns to each part its proper work and ſervice. We ſay then, that the apoſtle does not here diſtinguiſh the ſoul from the body, but corrupt nature from grace, and himſelf as regenerate, from himſelf ſo far as he was unregenerate. And ſo the apoſtle, Gal. v. 19. &c. while he reckons up the works of the fleſh, he placeth among them hereſies; which, if any thing, do belong to the ſoul; and among the works of the Spirit we find temperance; which the body may claim on as good grounds as any good thing elſe. And it is remarkable, that when the apoſtle ſpeaks of the ſtate of non-regeneration, while men are totally under the power of corruption, he calls it being in the fleſh, Rom. vii. 5. not in the body I am ſure. And in this way of ſpeaking of corruption the apoſtle follows Chriſt himſelf, in his conference with Nicodemus, about the neceſſity of regeneration, John iii. 6. 'That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh;' not a body in oppoſition to a ſoul, but corrupt, and therefore ſtanding in need to be born again. Only, to hold forth the neceſſity more ſtrongly, he calls it not fleſhly, but fleſh, itſelf, in the abſtract: q. d. It is nothing but a very lump of ſin and corruption.

Object. 2. Rom. vi. 12. 'Let not therefore ſin reign 'in your mortal body:' Ergo. Sin remains only in the body, not in the ſoul.

Anſw. Some tells us here, that by the body is meant, ſnyecdochically, the whole man; as, upon the other hand, the Spirit of God, in the ſcripture, under the name of ſoul comprehends the body alſo. But the epithet given by the apoſtle to the body while he calls it mortal, ſeems to reſtrain it to the body properly and ſtrictly taken. Therefore we paſs that, and deny the conſequence, on good grounds: for it is plain here, the apoſtle ſpeaks metaphorically of ſin's power as a king: but who will ſay, but a king may reign there where his ſeat is not? wherever ſin remains, it is certain where it hath not loſt the reigning power, it reigns through the whole man, ſoul and body. Shepherd tells us, that here is, 1. Obedience, i. e. the outward acts; 2. Luſts, the inward breathings; 3. Sin itſelf, where the luſts are ſeated. "This therefore, ſays he, is the reigning "ſin, which hath taken poſſeſſion of every part." And no doubt ſin may work there where it hath not its proper ſeat, as a king reigns in the remoteſt parts of his dominions.

Object. 3. ult. 'That which is born of the Spirit, is 'ſpirit;' John iii. 6. Ergo. There are no remains of ſin left in the ſoul.

Anſw. The body is, ſuo quodam modo, born of the Spirit, as well as the ſoul; for the leaven of grace leavens the whole man; grace makes not a new ſoul only, but a new creature; 'Old things are done away, and 'behold, all things are become new,' 2 Cor. v. 17. The body, as well as the ſpirit, is Chriſt's, 1 Cor. vi. ult.; yea, the bodies of the regenerate are members of Chriſt; yet are they not wholly renewed. So ſay we of the ſoul: the whole ſoul is cleanſed but not wholly. Were men perfectly born of the Spirit, they ſhould be altogether ſpirit: but this renovation is carried on by degrees only. "For (as Luther ſaith) we have got "the firſt fruits of the Spirit; the leaven is hid in the "lump; but the lump is not wholly leavened; it is be"gun to be leavened.

QUEST. V.

Why the Lord ſuffereth ſin to remain in the regenerate?

WE have ſeen already, that though there is a great change wrought on the elect in their regeneration, yet that change is imperfect; there ſhall be no perfect delivery from indwelling-ſin till death; the body of death, though crucified, yet lives till the death of the body; and it is not ſo driven out to the outworks, but that it remains, and hath its ſeat in the main hold, in the ſoul, even in the mind and will. Experience ſuffereth not gracious ſouls to doubt of the being of ſin in them, while it occaſions ſo much ſtruggling and wreſtling; yea, while they feel the great ſtrength of it, they are many times ready from thence to call in queſtion the being of grace in them, and to put forth that which was Rebekah's queſtion, in another caſe, Gen. xxv. 22. If it be ſo, why am I thus? And therefore, although we are not to call God to an account of his doings with ſupercilious boldneſs, flowing from an obſtinate and ſtubborn heart; yet it may very well be allowed, that we go humbly, and with her enquire of the Lord.

The ſoul in regeneration gets a new nature, though the grace received is not of ſuch efficacy as totally to drive away the old. The regenerate get a real love to God in their hearts, and a real hatred againſt ſin: ſo that the man would fain leave ſin, if it would leave him. And the truth is, that although ſin and the ſoul are inſeparable till death, yet ſin rather cleaves to the ſoul than the ſoul to it. But, alas! though hated, it will not depart; following the man cloſely, as the ſhadow doth the body. But could it be lulled aſleep, could it be ſo intoxicated as to leave off action, the child of God might have ſo much the better occaſion to ſerve God without diſtraction while in the body. But how can the devil be quiet, when he knows his time is ſhort? How can this old man ſleep, while ſo many and various inſnaring objects ſtill preſent themſelves unto his view? Or how can the fleſh be at reſt, when it is nailed to a croſs? Wherefore ſin cannot but both be, and be active in the ſoul while on this ſide of time; even till that terrible ſoldier death come, and thruſt his ſpear into its ſide, and bring forth its heart-blood.

'But are not two ſparrows ſold for one farthing? yet 'one of them cannot fall to the ground without our 'heavenly Father; yea, the very hairs of our head are 'numbered.' We muſt not therefore think, that the children of God are left in this caſe by a fatal neceſſity, and that God is here an idle ſpectator. He hath the hearts of all men in his hand. If the centurion knew, that he being a poor mortal clothed with a ſhadow of authority, having rude ſoldiers under him, could ſay to one, Go, and he goeth; to another, Come, and he cometh; faith might well thence draw the concluſion, That, much more, God, the ſovereign Lord of all, can ſay to diſtempers, whether of body or ſoul, Go, and they ſhould be gone; Come, and they ſhould immediately be at hand. He raiſed up the ſoul when it was dead in ſin ſpiritually; now the living ſoul is ſick, how can any doubt of his power to cure it, and make it every whit whole? Yet the diſtemper remains with his deareſt children, though he be a hater of iniquity, and his people groan to him daily under it. Though he can, yet we ſee he will not free them from it till death. But whatever be the reaſon or reaſons of this diſpenſation, we believe, that when once his people have got over Jordan into the heavenly Canaan, they ſhall ſay without all reluctancy or doubting, He hath done all things well.

As when a man hath newly recovered out of a ſevere fit of ſickneſs, he is then moſt ready to take care of himſelf, and will be afraid of the leaſt cold blaſt, and more narrowly than before inquire into the cauſes of his diſtemper, by which he hath ſo ſore ſmarted; and if he find himſelf in ſuch circumſtances, that he cannot miſs but again fall into his old diſtemper, he will long to be rid of that condition, and ſeriouſly think how he comes to be in ſuch pitiful circumſtances: Even ſo I think it will be with a thinking ſoul, after a recovery from a dead frame and diſpoſition of ſpirit, into which, by his unwatchfulneſs, the power of corruption within, and the malice of the devil from without, he had before been caſt. Contraries ſet together appear then beſt in their own colours; therefore the diſadvantages of a bad frame can never ſo well appear, as when they are freſh in the memory of the newly recovered ſaint, who hath now the candle of the Lord ſhining on his tabernacle; and conſequently the way leading to that bad frame of ſpirit, never appears ſo hateful as at ſuch a time. Suppoſe then the thoughts of a certainty of his falling back to be obſervant unto him, what thoughts of heart will this create? It is true, ſometimes a child of God, when matters go right with his ſoul, may be thinking of building tabernacles here, as Peter on the mountain; and with David, ſaying, My mountain ſtandeth ſure, I ſhall not be moved. But this is a piece of the levity of the vain and fooliſh heart, when men look only above them, without deep conſideration of the way of God's diſpenſation. But I ſuppoſe, that when in this caſe they look about them, through the world, where ſo many ſnares are laid for them, amongſt which of neceſſity they muſt walk; and look alſo within them, and ſee what boſom-enemies are yet alive, ready to betray them into the hands of the devil; and do take pains to conſider what a vile heart yet they have, from whence ſuch miſts and fogs are ready to ariſe, as may again make a thick cloud betwixt them and their Lord, and make them loſe ſight of the guide of their youth, and captain of their ſalvation; they will then even ſtand in need of new comfort, and ſomething from above to eſtabliſh their hearts. And here I think we may ſtand, and ſee a gracious ſoul joining trembling with mirth, and bemoaning itſelf thus.

“ O happy hour when the Lord awakened me out of “ my ſpiritual ſleep! The devil and mine own corrup-
“ tions had lulled me aſleep; though even in the time
“ my heart waked, and I found an inefficacious diſſatis-
“ faction with myſelf, which was not able to rouze me “ up, but made me ſometimes as it were to ſtart in my “ ſleep: but my Beloved left me not, as juſtly he might,
“ to ſleep a perpetual ſleep; but knocked at the door of “ my heart, ſaying, “ Open to me, my ſiſter, my “ ſpouſe:” and though I was long a ſtirring to get up,
“ he ſtood ſtill, till his head was filled with the dew,
“ and his locks with drops of the night; at laſt he put
“ in his hand at the hole of the door, gave the rouzing “ knock, ſpoke to my heart the overcoming word, capti“ vated my ſoul ſo as my bowels moved towards him.
“ I opened to my Beloved; he came in; I ſupped with “ him, and he with me. He hath brought me into “ the banqueting-houſe, his banner over me is love.
“ O how does my ſoul love him! my Lord and my “ God!——But, ah Lord! my ſoul fails; I have been “ here before, but a cloud overtook me, darkened the “ holy place, I loſt the light of thy countenance; and,
“ which now pierceth my ſoul, the very enemies re“ main in me, who before carried me back into the bor“ ders of Egypt, ſet me down in the land of darkneſs
“ and ſhadow of death, and put out my two eyes. Now
“ is ſin to me more bitter than death and hell; yet I “ know aſſuredly I muſt again meet with that terrible
“ ghoſt; and if I live long in this tabernacle, I ſhall “ loſe all I now enjoy: my ſong ſhall be turned into “ lamentation and howling, the now ſmiling counte“ nance ſhall again be provoked to frown, my wine is “ mixed with water; corruption will again lift up the “ head, the ſorrowful day of my captivity will, I fear,
“ overtake me, this heart of mine will have me back
“ to where I was before. O to be gone! I ſee with a “ ſorrowful heart and weeping eyes, a neceſſity of ſin-“ ning, into which we poor mortals have brought our-“ ſelves, and the Lord leaves me yet under it. Lord
“ why are not the curſed Canaanites utterly rooted out?”

I judge, that a man in this caſe needs not fear his enjoyment to be a deluſion, there is ſo much of an evangelical ſpirit breathing in it. The ſound hatred that appears here againſt ſin, while the ſoul doth feelingly apprehend it as the greateſt of evils, is ſo far above the ſphere of elevated nature, that it is a clear diſcovery of a renewed nature. A man willing to part with all, ſo that he might be free of ſin, is one made partaker of the divine nature, aſpiring to a more accompliſhed participation of it. This caſe ſavours of much real burning love to the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, while the ſoul hath ſuch an ardent deſire of being nearer to him, and would fain be ſo near him, as to have ſuch communion with him as might never be interrupted nor overclouded any more. It is alſo an evidence, that the ſoul hath taſted of the ſweetneſs of Chriſt and fellowſhip with him, while it is ſo filled with fear of loſing his preſence. And many ſuch things may be diſcerned in it.

Yet I dare not juſtify the ſoul through the whole of this caſe. So true it is, Nihil eſt ab omni parte beatum. I conceive, there may be ſomething here in the mourner which is not allowable, and may juſtly be new grounds of mourning to him. There ſeems to appear here a kind of ſpiritual ſelfiſhneſs, when the ſoul hath its own ſpiritual advantage (which is ſo ſeemingly at leaſt) ſo much upon the heart, that it keeps not due reſpect to the ſovereign will of God, to which belongs the free diſpoſal of all good, and particularly of the influences of his grace; ſo that the creature, as a creature, is indiſpenſably bound to a ſilent ſubmiſſion, whatever way ſovereignty doth caſt the balance. When Peter was upon the mount with Chriſt, ‘ It is good for us to be here, ‘ let us make tabernacles,’ ſays he; but the verdict of the Spirit of God thereupon is, that ‘ he wiſt not what ‘ he ſaid.’ Senſe is much addicted to ſelf; and though it hath ſpecious pretences, yet its language is not always to be heard; for it is certain it is an ill judge of controverſies betwixt Chriſt and the ſoul. But faith is ſure always to decide in Chriſt's favour. If Chriſt ſmile on the ſoul, faith ſaith, He doth well; and ſenſe ſays ſo too. If he frown, then ſenſe cries out againſt him; but faith ſays, He doth all things well: let him deſert, afflict, yea, kill the man, faith ſays, It is the Lord; let him do what ſeemeth him good; good is the will of the Lord. Faith puts a knife to the throat of ſelf-love and ſelf-wit, to ſacrifice them to the will of God, who is infinitely wiſe: it teacheth a man to lay his mouth in the duſt, and wrap up his will in the will of God. In the hearts of the godly exerciſed, pride goeth much abroad in vail, though not in dreſs; it is there transformed into an angel of light, appearing in a ſhape different from that it doth appear in others. Pride in the hearts of natural men, when Chriſt comes to them, ſays, ‘ Depart from us, for ‘ we deſire not the knowledge of thy name;’ but pride in the hearts of the godly exerciſed, when Chriſt ſeems to be going away, or they know they will not have always the preſent meaſure of communion with him, will not ſuffer Chriſt to be maſter of his own proceſs; though it is certain, that we are obliged to a holy ſubmiſſion; and the potſheard muſt not quarrel with the potter, but the Lord muſt have leave to go and come as he pleaſeth: Humble-hearted Mary, when Chriſt ſays unto her, Touch me not, Mary, for I am not yet aſcended; though her love would have carried her forward, yet her deniedneſs to her ſpiritual ſelf, at Chriſt's command, makes her hold up her hands. It were good in ſuch a caſe to learn that leſſon.

Moreover, Satan may be working here under ground to blow up the preſent enjoyment with a fear of diſtruſt. Satan grudgeth the happineſs of the people of God, and endeavoureth by all means, ſeeing he cannot hinder theſe refreſhing influences of the Spirit, and comfortable manifeſtations, to make them as ſhort lived as poſſible; and for this end he goeth about to fill the ſoul with a diſtruſtful fear, holding before his eyes, the certainty of his backſliding, and of loſing the preſent enjoyment; which breeds in the ſoul a ſinful jealouſy of Chriſt, while the man is either ignorant of, or doth not conſider the end and deſign of God in his diſpenſation; which Satan is now buſy to miſrepreſent, wreſt, and make uſe of to his great diſadvantage; which once taking place, blaſts the comfort of the preſent enjoyment, mars our thankfulneſs for what God hath given already. And whereas it is now time for the man to improve his acceſs to God, for more ſtrength againſt the devil and his own corruption, this fear takes up the man ſo, as he lets that good occaſion ſlip out of his hands, and ſo is more eaſily overcome by the temptation; even as the fear of the battle in a ſoldier takes away his ſtomach, that he cannot eat, whereby he is the more unfit for his work. And, in fine, God may hereby be provoked to withdraw, ſo as they ſhall be made to ſay, "That which I "feared, is come upon me." Probatum eſt.

For the cure of this jealouſy of Chriſt in the ſoul, ariſing from the conſideration of his diſpenſation in leaving ſin to be and act in thoſe who wreſtle againſt it, and account it their greateſt burden, it is neceſſary the ſoul be acquainted with, and ſeriouſly conſider of the true reaſon or reaſons thereof, in regard we are ready to ſuſpect the worſt. A wife obſerving her huſband frequently to carry towards her reſervedly, and to wrap up himſelf from her, though he may be doing ſo for his own and her good, will be yet ready to ſuſpect, that ſuch carriage flows from his want of love towards her; and will not be ſatisfied eaſily, till ſhe know the true reaſon of his ſo doing. So is it here. And ſurely the Lord doth not deal thus with his people, but with great reaſon; which being known and ſeriouſly pondered, will make the ſoul conclude, he doth all things well.

To a ſoul then in this caſe ſeveral things may be propoſed.

I. In the firſt place, God hath ſo ordered the matter of the believer's ſanctification, that ſin is left to be active in their ſouls while here, for their further humiliation. They are hereby taught to bear low ſails all the days of their lives, and, with Hezekiah, to 'go ſoftly all their 'years in the bitterneſs of their ſouls,' Iſa. xxxviii. 15. Wherefore we read, that leaſt Paul ſhould be exalted above meaſure through the abundance of revelations, there was given to him a thorn in the fleſh, a meſſenger of Satan is ſent to buffet him, 2 Cor. xii. 7. And ſo we find David, after his grievous fall, grows in the grace of humility, Pſal. li.

II. Next, This gives the ſoul many errands to God, ſtirs him up to the frequent exerciſe of prayer, and calling on the name of the Lord. The ſoul feels the continual need of pardon, and therefore muſt needs be much lying at God's footſtool. The experience of the godly ſeals the truth of this, while, many times, they feeling the children (grace and corruption) ſtruggling together within them, are made (as Rebekah) to 'go and enquire 'of the Lord,' Gen. xxv. 22. Hence, when they grow remiſs in their duty, the Lord ſometimes, for their awakening, ſuffers them to fall into ſome ſin or ſins, grievouſly wounding the conſcience; and ſo, like a preſumptuous ſelf-willed child falling into the fire, they cry for and value the help of their Father more.

III. Yea hereby we are made more watchful and obſervant of the heart. When the priſoner, having eſcaped, is retaken, he will be put in more cloſe cuſtody than before. When men find by experience what a bankrupt the heart is, they will learn not to give it credit. We live in a world where there are traps ſet before, and behind, and on each ſide to catch us; we walk amidſt many ſnares, yet are ready to fall ſecure, and careleſs, and to let down our watch. It is not amiſs then that we ſometimes ſmart in order to our being kept awaking.

IV. Further, as God left the Canaanites in the land to try his people, ſo he hath left the remains of natural corruption in his people for their exerciſe and trial; that having liſted themſelves to war under Chriſt's banner, they may have whom to fight with, and whom by ſtrength from above they may overcome. God gives his people armour at their converſion; is it reaſonable it ſhould lie by them ruſting? If the Canaanites were at the firſt daſh utterly expelled the land, many of the graces of the Spirit ſhould be laid by as uſeleſs. 'Hope 'that is ſeen, is not hope; for what a man ſeeth, why 'doth he yet hope for it?' Had we no enemies, or were we put beyond their reach utterly, there ſhould be no occaſion for the exerciſe of the grace of watchfulneſs. Patience ſhould not have its perfect work; yea faith itſelf, as being 'the evidence of things not ſeen, and the ſub'ſtance of things hoped for,' ſhould be of no more uſe. What ſhould become of ordinances? God hath ſet up a miniſtry in his church to be for working together with him, to bring down the kingdom of darkneſs by degrees; he hath ſet up his word for a light to travellers towards Zion, not being well acquainted with the way; he hath given us his holy ſacraments for our confirmation in faith, growth in grace, and comfort through the Spirit: theſe all might be laid aſide, were it not that our ſanctification is carried on by degrees.

V. Moreover, by this diſpenſation of grace, we are made more and more to feel our need of Chriſt, and his precious blood for the removal of guilt daily contracted anew, and for ſtrengthening our ſouls in our Chriſtian courſe: ſo that we muſt come up out of the wilderneſs leaning on our beloved. And we ſee that our ſtock is not in our hand; and if it were, it would quickly be loſt. Is not the ſoul made hereby to bleſs the Lord, that it is not left to be its own pilot, while ſailing through the troubleſome ſea of this world; but that Jeſus Chriſt is his great ſteerſman, by whoſe conduct he ſhall come ſafe to Immanuel's land.

VI. I add, That it may be obſerved, it is God's ordinary way to bring about great works by degrees; amongſt which the ſanctification of a ſinner deſervedly takes place. God could have created the world in a moment, yet he was pleaſed to take ſix days for it. As ſoon as Adam fell, he could have ſent Chriſt to have died; but thouſands of years muſt paſs before this great work be accompliſhed. It is determined to the laſt days, the time of the world's old age. A dark revelation of this his purpoſe was made to Adam in the primitive goſpel-promiſe; it was made more manifeſt to Abraham; revealed yet more clearly to and by Moſes, more to the Prophets, till John the Baptiſt at laſt pointed him out with the finger. He could have brought Iſrael out of Egypt into Canaan eaſily in a few days; but it pleaſed him that they ſhould wander forty years in the wilderneſs. So that it is but conſonant hereunto, that he exerciſeth his people ſo long in the wilderneſs of the world, after he hath brought them forth of the ſpiritual Egyptian bondage. And as it is God's ordinary method to carry on great works by degrees, ſo to bring them to paſs through many difficulties. Joſeph muſt be ſold for a ſlave, and laid in irons in a ſtrange land, before he be advanced. The Iſraelites muſt endure hard bondage and grievous affliction in Egypt, before they are brought into the land flowing with milk and honey. Yea the man Chriſt muſt firſt ſuffer, and then enter into his glory. So that in this diſpenſation he holds but his ordinary road. Finally,

VII. A learned man lays down the whole matter thus. "While we bear about a mortal body, this domeſtick tyrant cannot be altogether expelled; becauſe it is neither expedient for the glory of Chriſt, nor for our ſalvation. For the glory of Chriſt is ſo much the more illuſtrious, as his benefit is the better felt by us, while that enemy doth indeed dwell in us, but by the grace and Spirit of Chriſt is ſo repreſſed and holden captive, that it cannot domineer over us, nor deſtroy us;—yea while we experience in us the grace of Chriſt ſo efficacious, that by it he makes us overcomers. Moreover the glory of Chriſt becomes more illuſtrious, while, by reaſon of indwelling ſin, we in very deed feel that we cannot be juſtified but by the perfect obedience of Chriſt, which we apprehend by faith. It is alſo expedient for our ſalvation, that the enemy abide in us till death, that we may have one to fight with perpetually, and fighting by the grace of Chriſt may overcome, and by overcoming may gain a greater crown to ourſelves, Rev. iii. 2 Tim. iv."

That the conſideration of theſe things may be very uſeful to a ſoul exerciſed with the conſideration of this diſpenſation of providence in the matter of ſanctification, as above declared, I think none can deny. To ſee how God makes ſuch an excellent medicine of ſuch poiſonous ingredients, cannot but be very delightful. Yet I doubt, if the principal, if not the only reaſon, be yet explained: or if thoſe things in this mould and frame be very likely to ſatiſfy the ſoul, when this puzzling queſtion comes more cloſely home upon the heart: but that very plauſible objections may be raiſed againſt the ſame, to ſhew their invalidity as to the main point in hand.

The great matter is, to find out the reaſon or reaſons why it hath pleaſed the Lord to leave ſin in the elect after converſion, and not to make them perfectly free from the indwelling of it at that very time, as he could certainly have done, if it had pleaſed him. Now, I obſerve upon the whole of theſe grounds formerly laid down, which are uſually pleaded in this caſe, that the caſe under conſideration is reſolved either into our own advantage, and the quickening of inherent grace, or into the will of God ſimply; and this by all of them, except the firſt part of the laſt ground aſſigned. As to the laſt of the two; it is indeed in effect that God would have it ſo becauſe he would have it ſo; which I do confeſs may ſuffice, and no more can be had in ſome caſes, Rom. ix. 18. 'Therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy.' But I ſuppoſe that this caſe is not of that ſort. As to the firſt; ſin now appearing to the ſoul in its blackeſt colours, the creature's advantage being laid in the balance therewith, can have but little weight. As for the three firſt grounds they do plainly ſuppoſe the queſtion. The fourth ſeems to go the ſame way. As for the firſt part of the laſt ground, it points out the truth in general. But the explication of it mars all, while it is declared by our proper feeling of the benefits of Chriſt; which doth indeed hold good conſidered abſolutely, but comparatively underſtood it doth not. Now, it is plain, that any thing that can be here ſaid, ſatisfyingly, muſt be by way of compariſon. But I think no man can doubt, but that the more free of ſin a Chriſtian is, he feels the benefits of Chriſt the better. The ſame is to be ſaid of the fifth reaſon. As to the reſt, they do at leaſt come under the diſadvantage propoſed in the general obſervation (to ſay no more upon them) reſolving the caſe as ſaid is.

To all of theſe grounds the following replies ſeem not to be unreaſonable. "You tell me (ſays the Chriſtian under the ſuppoſed exerciſe) that this is God's deſign by this diſpenſation to humble me, to ſtir me up to call on his name, to make me more watchful, to let me ſee my need of Chriſt more. But my pride, ſlothfulneſs, unwatchfulneſs, unſenſibleneſs of my need of Chriſt, are the great burdens I grone under. That which I would be at, is to have all theſe rooted out of my heart: and I know God could have done that at firſt, can do it ſtill, yet he does not: What ſhall I ſay? As for faith, hope, &c. it is my ſoul's trouble, that I have ſo little of them; I would fain be at the full meaſure; and I know the graces of the Spirit are inſeparable: whoſo hath one hath all. But though the exerciſe of theſe graces were inconſiſtent with the ſtate of perfection that I would fain be at, which nevertheleſs is not ſo, (for if I were perfect in this life, or altogether free from ſin, I could not but exerciſe faith, hope, and patience, as the man Chriſt did; and watchfulneſs, as Adam did, or at leaſt might have done in paradiſe;) yet I am ſure the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect above, are at no loſs in that they do not, nor need not exerciſe thoſe graces; neither is the glory of God thereby impaired, but indeed made more illuſtrious. I deſire to value ordinances more than my neceſſary food, both becauſe they have Chriſt's ſtamp upon them, and becauſe in this my weary ſtate I cannot want them. But, Oh! ſhould I not be content, though all the ſtars were ſet, and had hid their heads, ſo that the Sun of righteouſneſs were riſen with perfect healing under his wings? What though the inns were blocked up, if once the traveller were at his journey's end? But ſurely, if I were as I would be, I could manage ordinances far more to the glory of my Lord, and to mine own ſatisfaction, than I can now do at my beſt. The firſt and ſecond Adam wanted not ſacraments, and made uſe of them too. And I am perſuaded, that if I were free of ſin, I would have a far more deep ſenſe of Chriſt's benefits, and of my need of him, than now I either have or can have. Self-righteouſneſs, that ſpawn of the old ſerpent, is one of my greateſt burdens, that makes me weary of this longſome night, and long to ſee the day when I ſhall be able to ſing the ſong of the redeemed ones, and to give my Lord all and haill the glory, in which my wretched heart now will needs ſhare with him. Though I cannot love him as I ought, nay, nor as I would; yet would I be well content to continue in the fight never ſo long, ſo that I could but manage it without diſhonour to my Captain. It is not ſuffering, but ſinning that affrights me. And I cannot but think that ten thouſand jewels in my crown are too dear bought at the rate of one ſin againſt my Lord; whereas there is not one ſin, but many in my moſt complete actions now. It is God's ordinary method, I confeſs, to bring about great works by degrees, and over the belly of many difficulties. And O how early did God begin with me, how many times did he lay ſiege to my graceleſs heart, how long did he follow a poor miſerable worm nothing, ere I would give conſent? What great difficulties did grace break through, what iron gates did it lay by, when at firſt it ſhined into my ſoul? And yet I would chearfully bear, and go through difficulties, if they were only in the kind of ſuffering, ſo that I were free of ſin, that evil of all evils."

By all this we may ſee farther into the nature of the caſe propoſed, and may diſcover what it is that is at the bottom of all, and what that is which moſt toucheth them in the quick. The caſe then terminates in an ardent deſire of, and an unfeigned reſpect unto his glory, who hath brought the ſoul from darkneſs to light, and crowned it with loving kindneſs and tender mercies; to which glory ſin is ſo oppoſite. Wherefore I am of opinion, the whole is to be reſolved into the praiſe of the glory of his grace, Eph. i. 6. which ſeems moſt exactly to anſwer the point.

I confeſs, that as none can bear a wounded ſpirit, ſo none can cure it but the great Phyſician of ſouls. It is he that ſmiteth, and it is only he that can bind up: he kills and he makes alive. He is the healer of all the ſoul's diſeaſes and pains. An exerciſed ſoul hath great dexterity in raiſing objections, and is not eaſily ſatisfied; and its doubts and difficulties can no man reſolve to its ſatisfaction, till he who is the great Interpreter of the mind of God, and hath the tongue of the learned, take the work in hand, and ſpeak a word in ſeaſon to the weary ſoul, by his holy Spirit. Yet the ſcripture ſhews that the Spirit teacheth and comforteth by the word; 'He 'ſhall receive of mine,' (ſays Chriſt, ſpeaking of the Spirit,) 'and ſhall ſhew it unto you,' John xvi. 14. which is more clearly delivered, chap. xiv. 26. 'But the Com'forter—he ſhall teach you all things, and bring all 'things to your remembrance, whatſoever I have ſaid 'unto you.' So that from the word ſouls are to be dealt with for their comfort and ſatisfaction, looking to the Lord Jeſus to ſend his Spirit to render the ſame effectual.

It plainly appears to ſuch as read the ſcriptures with a humble mind, and conſider the doctrine therein delivered, and take notice of the Lord's way of dealing with his own, that the grand deſign of God in the contrivance of the elect's ſalvation, is, to exalt the riches of the free grace of God in Chriſt: Rom. iv. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be of grace, Eph. ii. 8. 9. 'For 'by grace are ye ſaved;---not of works leſt any man 'ſhould boaſt.' Moſt plainly does the apoſtle reſolve the whole of man's ſalvation into this, Eph. i. 3.---6. 'To 'the praiſe of the glory of his grace.' I ſay, not ſimply to exalt grace, (which is always here to be underſtood of the free favour of God, or the grace of God without us;) for even by the firſt covenant the grace of God was exalted, and manifeſtly appeared in God's condeſcending to enter into a covenant with Adam, and to require obedience of him by virtue of a covenant, and that with a promiſe of ſo great a reward, to which his beſt works could bear no proportion; when, by virtue of his ſovereignty merely, he might have exacted all obedience; here was grace, though, as Bayne calls it, a more common and inferior grace; but I ſay the riches of grace, in reſpect of which the former was but a ſmall ſcantling of grace. Thus the apoſtle holds it forth, Eph. i. 7. 'According to the riches of his grace.' Chap. ii. 4. 'But God, who is rich in mercy;' and verſe 7. 'That in the ages to come he might ſhew the exceeding 'riches of his grace.' This then is clearly the great deſign of God in the contrivance of man's ſalvation. Now, the heart of a child of God is (if I may ſo term it) ſhapen out in breadth and length to this deſign: for what is faith, but an hearty acquieſcing in the way of ſalvation held forth in the goſpel, as ſuited both to man's neceſſity, and the divine perfections, and particularly tending unto the manifeſtation of the riches of grace, whereby Chriſt is made all, and the creature nothing?

Here then I apprehend, we may find the great reaſon of the Lord's diſpenſation in the matter of the believer's ſanctification, the knowledge and conſideration whereof is moſt likely to give ſatisfaction to the ſoul thus exerciſed. And it is briefly this: The exalting of Chriſt, and of the free grace of God in him, is the great deſign and end of the contrivance of man's ſalvation, as held forth in the goſpel; but God's leaving of ſin to be, and to be active in the regenerate while they are in this world, yea and keeping of them for a while in that caſe in the world, does contribute more to the advancement of that deſign, than the making of them ſinleſs immediately upon their cloſing with Chriſt. Therefore may we already not only believe, but ſee, that in this matter he hath done all things well.

If we conſider a perſon under this exerciſe before declared, we ſhall find he is one that is filled with a deep ſenſe of his own vileneſs, emptineſs, and nothingneſs; and hath high thoughts of Chriſt, and of free grace; and ſo he is diſpoſed to welcome whatſoever hath a tendency to the exalting of the ſame. And foraſmuch as the glory of that God who hath done ſo great things for him, lies neareſt his heart, and the diſhonour done unto him, galls him moſt; when he ſees this way brings more glory to Chriſt, and exalts grace more than the way he would be at, it may juſtly be expected, he ſhall lay his hand upon his mouth, ſaying, 'It is the Lord, let him 'do what ſeemeth him good.' It remains then, that we demonſtrate the truth of this, that this way does more exalt Chriſt and free grace than the other; which I hope will be no difficult taſk.

I. The more ſins be pardoned to a believer, grace is the more exalted, Chriſt hath the more glory; the more items are blotted out of juſtice's debt-book by the precious blood of the immaculate Lamb, the ſinner is the more deep in the debt of free grace: but it is beyond controverſy, that in this diſpenſation more ſins are pardoned to a believer than otherwiſe would have been. Ergo. Let none pretend that free grace might have been as much or more exalted in keeping the believer from ſin altogether after converſion, as in pardoning of the ſame, leſt they fall foul upon God's deſign in ſuffering ſin to enter into the world, prefer the grace of the firſt covenant to that of the ſecond, and, in effect, ſay that God's diſpenſation is not ſuitable to this deſign.

II. The more ſin is aggravated by its circumſtances, the more is free grace exalted in pardoning of it, the more illuſtrious is the virtue of Chriſt's blood; for the deeper the ſtain is, the harder is it to waſh out: but by this diſpenſation, whereby ſin is left in the regenerate for a while, free grace hath the glory of pardoning ſins more heinous than thoſe committed in the ſtate of ignorance and unbelief. Ergo. Is not the offence of a ſpouſe, child, friend, &c. more grievous than the offence given by a ſtranger? Friends wounds pierce moſt deeply: for it was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have borne it, &c. Pſal. lv. 12. The godly lie under far more acceſſary bonds and obligations to duty than others; and it is certain, the more obligations a man lies under to duty, the ſin is the greater. Adultery and murder committed by a David, are more heinous in the ſight of God than the ſame ſins committed by a wicked man. This is ſo manifeſt, that I need not inſiſt to enumerate thoſe aggravating circumſtances that are to be found in the ſins of the godly, which by no means can be in thoſe of the wicked. And does not the pardoning of theſe deep-dyed ſins exalt free grace wonderfully? Let men but conſult their own experience, and they ſhall have a clear proof of this. The pardon of any ſin does much affect a godly heart with admiration of the riches of grace; but when a man, after a recovery from ſome ſin, after vows and reſolutions againſt it, &c. doth relapſe into the ſame, and yet has his backſlidings healed, this augments the admiration of it. Of all ſinners backſliders have the greateſt difficulty to believe; and upon a received pardon, as they indeed are, ſo they ſeem to be, greateſt debtors to grace.

III. The more deeply ſin appears to be rooted in our natures, the more is the grace of God magnified in rooting it up; the more inveterate the diſeaſe ſeems to be, the more is the cure of it to the honour of the phyſician: Since the world began, was it not heard that any man opened the eyes of one that was born blind, John ix. 32. If a tree were plucked up in an inſtant, beholders could never ſo clearly ſee how faſt rooted it was, as when it abides many pulls of a ſtrong hand. Who could have imagined the ſtrength of ſin to have been ſo great in David as it afterwards appeared, when he had been ſo often bruiſed and troubled in ſpirit, and had arrived at ſo great mortification. The experience of believers affords to us an example of the ſame. Many times, after great wreſtlings, they ſeem to themſelves to have got great victory over a particular corruption, ſo that they are ready to think with themſelves, that it will never be able to moleſt them as before; but at length it gets out again, renews the aſſault, and makes them ſee how it is, like Nebuchadnezzar's tree, Dan. iv. 15 faſtened in the earth of the heart with a band of iron and braſs. Now, it is manifeſt, that were ſin rooted out at the firſt daſh, the fixedneſs of it in man's nature could never ſo much appear to beholders, as it may and doth in the way of this diſpenſation. Ergo.

IV. That which diſcovers, to the view of all, the creature's emptineſs moſt, doth undeniably exalt grace moſt; but the emptineſs of the creature, and its continual need of ſupply diſcovered to the view of all this way: Ergo. I think, the angels themſelves, who deſire to pry into the myſtery of grace, could not but learn a leſſon of the creature's frailty and nothingneſs by Adam's fall, and of the riches of free grace in the way of his recovery; and the daily ſlips of the ſaints on the earth may be to them ſpeaking teſtimonies of the creature's weakneſs; for we ſee the apoſtle thinks it not below their dignity, that they go to ſchool in the church to learn the manifold wiſdom of God, Eph. iii. 10. Suppoſe a weak child be held up on his feet by his father's hands, ſo that he cannot fall; whether doth his weakneſs appear ſo as when he is left to feel his own weight, and ſo gets ſeveral falls? The ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, who are now above the clouds, and the confirmed angels, are ſtill creatures; and therefore live and act by a continued dependance on God; but the emptineſs of the creature appears not ſo clearly in their caſe, as in the ſtate of the ſaints on earth; whoſe weakneſs we not only know, but ſee with our eyes, while they get ſo many falls, and give ſo many ocular demonſtrations of their need of grace, and of their own emptineſs. So that if the nothingneſs of the creature proclaim the riches of grace, free-grace is moſt exalted this way.

V. The more cowardly, faint hearted, and feckleſs the ſoldiers are that get the victory over a potent enemy, the more is the valour of the captain diſcovered, the greater glory redounds to him; but ſuch are the ſaints in their Chriſtian warfare: Ergo. When David attempted to take in the ſtrong hold of Zion, 2 Sam. v. 6. the Jebuſites boaſting of the ſtrength of the caſtle, looking on it as an impregnable fort, told him, that except he took away the blind and the lame, he could not get in there; meaning that ſuch was the ſtrength of the fort, that the very blind and lame were ſufficient to defend it againſt David and all his men, though others ſhould ſit by, looking on and doing nothing: which did mightily commend the ſtrong hold. They are potent enemies, expert, and ſubtile, whom the Chriſtian is called to encounter with: Eph. vi. 12. For he wreſtles not (only) againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt the ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places. In the mean time, he is a weak creature, weak naturally as a man, in compariſon of them, but yet weaker as a ſinful man; but he is nevertheleſs more than conqueror: which ſurely doth more advance the glory of the great Captain of our ſalvation, than if he had ſtronger and more expert ſoldiers. O what riches of grace appears here, which otherwiſe would have been in greater meaſure ſmothered! and ſeeing the ſcripture ſo frequently calls the Chriſtian courſe a warfare, let me alſo add this, that when an enemy beſiegeth a town, wherein he hath a multitude of friends ready on all occaſions to betray the ſame into his hand, yet the town holds out, and he is repulſed; what a ſhameful repulſe is that? Is not the glory of the governor far greater in this caſe, than if he had forced the enemy to raiſe the ſiege, while he had plenty of his friends within the walls? the application is eaſy.

Finally, to ſhut up all; it is plain, that the more difficulties the work of man's ſalvation is carried through, the free grace of God is the more exalted; but Lord Jeſus, the author of eternal ſalvation, hath the greater glory; but in this way it is carried on over the belly of more difficulties, than it would have been, if by the firſt grace the Chriſtian might have been made perfect. Ergo. And ſeeing (cæteris paribus) none can prize reſt ſo much as they who have been ſore toiled, and have come out of the greateſt tribulations, I think I may be allowed to ſay, that a child of God having come to his journey's end after ups and downs, falls and riſings; having won through the troubleſome ſea of this world, and being ſet ſafe aſhore, after many dangers of ſhipwreck, in a longſome voyage, will have the praiſes of free grace in his mouth ſounding more loudly, and will ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb in a more elevated ſtrain and higher notes, than if he had never been in danger through the whole of his courſe.

From all which it appears, that this diſpenſation is moſt ſuitable to the grand deſign of the goſpel, the exalting of the riches of free grace in Chriſt. And what lover of Chriſt will not ſay Amen!

QUEST. VI.

Who have right to baptiſm, and are to be baptized?

THE right of infants to baptiſm hath been denied and violently oppoſed by the Anabaptiſts, ſo called from rebaptizing of thoſe that were in their infancy baptized; ſo that, according to them, adult perſons only have right to this ordinance, the whole ſpecies of infants being excluded. Againſt this ſpiritual robbery much hath been written by learned men, and infants right to baptiſm aſſerted and ſolidly inſtructed from the ſcriptures of truth. In which point I am fully ſatisfied, not doubting but as God is the believer's God, ſo he is the God of his ſeed; and therefore none can forbid water: wherefore I am not to meddle with this point. As the Anabaptiſts denying infant baptiſm, have been faulty in making the ſubject lawfully receptive of baptiſm too narrow; ſo it is a queſtion to me, Whether or not others have made the ſame wider than the word of God will allow? There may be a fault both ways; in exceſs as well as in defect. That ſome infants born within the viſible church may be baptized, I doubt not; but that all ſuch ought to be admitted to this holy ordinance, I find I cannot ſubſcribe unto, unleſs I be more ſatisfied in that point, than hitherto I am. This being a matter of practice, is worthy of conſideration; and my doubts in that point have obliged me to this enquiry, if poſſibly I may find any thing in this matter wherein I may reſt. In anſwer to the queſtion propoſed, ſomewhat muſt be ſaid touching the right of adult perſons to this ordinance, as well as of infants. But in regard that it is very rare to hear of an adult perſon baptized amongſt us, I ſhall ſay but little upon that head; and poſſibly I might have waved it altogether, were it not that it may contribute ſomething to the clearing of that wherein my difficulty lies, viz. the right of infants born of Chriſtian parents, who are a reproach to their profeſſion.

That we may the better ſucceed in this inquiry, there is one diſtinction that muſt be taken notice of; and that is, There is a twofold right to church privileges: there is a right in foro Dei, or before the Lord; and there is a right in foro eccleſiæ, or in the judgment of the church. Where theſe two are confounded, men multiply words to no purpoſe. A perſon may have a right to church-privileges before the Lord, who hath no right thereto before the church: and contrariwiſe, one may have a right before the church to church-privileges, that hath no right thereto before the Lord: for the being of a thing is ſufficient in foro Dei, but the appearing of it to be ſo, is neceſſary in foro eccleſiæ; ſeeing as to us de non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus eadem eſt ratio & idem judicium. So theſe are two diſtinct queſtions, "Who "ought to be baptized?" and, "Who ought to ſeek "baptiſm?" The firſt reſpects a right to baptiſm before the church; the ſecond a right thereto before God. Which being premiſed, we lay down theſe following concluſions.

CONCL. I. None have a right to baptiſm before the Lord, but thoſe who have actually a ſaving intereſt in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Arg. I. The ſcripture plainly holds forth, that the having of the Spirit and faith are neceſſarily prerequiſite to baptiſm: Acts viii. 36, 37. 'Here is water, (ſays 'the eunuch) what doth hinder me to be baptized?' Philip anſwereth, 'If thou believeſt with all thine 'heart, thou mayeſt.' He ſaith not only, 'If thou be'lieveſt;' but, 'If thou believeſt with all thine heart;' which plainly denotes faith unfeigned, as the apoſtle ſpeaks; hence then, as Urſin infers, Ergo, ſi non credas non licet; 'If thou believeſt not, thou mayeſt not;' which is neceſſarily to be underſtood with reſpect to the judgment of God; for none can ſay, that ſincere faith is neceſſary to a right to the ordinance before the church. And ſo Philip baptizeth him on a credible profeſſion of faith; but withal tells him, that it is no leſs than the truth of faith that can warrant him before the Lord to ſeek baptiſm to himſelf, Acts x. 47. 'Can any 'man forbid water, that theſe ſhould not be baptized, 'which have received the Holy Ghoſt, as well as we?' importing, that if they had not received the Holy Ghoſt, they had no true right to baptiſm; but they had received the Holy Ghoſt, as well as (Gr. Kathos, even as) the apoſtle himſelf, and the believing Jews, who received the ſame as a Spirit of ſaving grace, as well as of extraordinary gifts; not only (ſays Piſcator) the gift of tongues, but of Chriſtian faith. Whence he obſerves, That adult perſons, concerning whom it appears from probable arguments that they believe in Chriſt, are to be received into the church by baptiſm. What though this receiving of the Holy Ghoſt have an immediate reſpect to extraordinary gifts, it is no otherwiſe made a ground whereupon they have right to baptiſm, but as it is an evidence of their having the Spirit of ſanctification. They heard them ſpeak with tongues; therefore ſays Peter, 'Can any man forbid water, ſeeing theſe have 'received the gift of the Holy Ghoſt?' which, according to that, Acts ii. 38, 39. did preſuppoſe repentance, at leaſt in appearance; which appearance was the ground of their right in foro eccleſiæ, and the reality of the ſame the ground of their right coram Deo.

Arg. II. The words of inſtitution make this evident, Matth. xxviii. 19, 20. 'Go ye therefore, and diſciple 'all nations, baptizing them,' &c. They muſt be firſt diſcipled; and then, and not till then, have they a right to be baptized. To be a diſciple of Chriſt and a believer are reciprocal terms, as Chriſt teacheth us, comparing with this, Mark xvi. 16. 'He that believeth and is 'baptized,' &c. And infants may be no leſs diſciples of Chriſt than adult perſons, as is clear from that, Acts xv. 10. 'Now therefore, why tempt you God to put a 'yoke, (viz. circumciſion) on the neck of the diſciples?' The apoſtles underſtood it ſo, as is plain from their practice; which may well be to us a ſufficient commentary hereupon. See how Peter ſets himſelf to his work, Acts ii. 38. 'Repent therefore, and be baptized;' where it is plain, that he requires there repentance antecedently to baptiſm, as neceſſary to qualify them for the right and due reception thereof. And there is no example of baptiſm recorded in the ſcriptures, where any were baptized but ſuch as appeared to have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt; as afterwards we ſhall ſhow.

Arg. III. This will plainly appear, if we conſider the nature of ſacraments, the ends and uſes for which they are appointed of God, as the ſcriptures do declare the ſame.

1. The ſacraments are not converting, but confirming ordinances; they are appointed for the uſe and benefit of God's children, not of others; they are given to believers as believers, as Rutherford expreſſeth it, ſo that none other are ſubjects capable of the ſame before the Lord. Either we muſt ſay, they have no reſpect at all to ſaving grace; or that they are appointed as means of the conveyance of the firſt grace, that is, to convert ſinners; or, finally, for confirmation of grace already received. If it be ſaid, they have no reſpect at all to ſaving grace, then baptiſm cannot be called the baptiſm of repentance; nor are perſons baptized for the remiſſion of ſins; nor can it be looked on as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith: all which is evidently againſt ſcripture teſtimony. And I do not remember it is pleaded by any, though Mr Fulwood is pleaſed to ſay, that perſons may be conſidered to be truly baptized without reſpect to ſaving grace. If it be ſaid, they are appointed as means of the conveyance of the firſt grace; then, 1. Either there are none converted before baptiſm which is manifeſtly falſe, Acts viii. 12. 37. or elſe baptiſm is in vain conferred on converts, which is no leſs falſe. But ſurely in vain are means uſed to confer on any that which they have before. 2. It were unfaithfulneſs to Chriſt, and cruelty to men, to with-hold the ſacraments from any perſon whatſoever. Were it not ſoul-murder to with-hold the means of conveyance of the firſt grace from any, and unfaithfulneſs to him, who will have all men to be ſaved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth? But that the ſacraments, and particularly baptiſm, are not to be conferred on all promiſcuouſly, none can deny. Wherefore it remains, they are indeed appointed for confirmation; which doth neceſſarily ſuppoſe the pre-exiſtence of grace in the ſoul, ſeeing that which is not, cannot be confirmed.

2. Baptiſm is appointed of God to be a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith. So teſtifies the apoſtle concerning circumciſion, Rom. iv. 11. and conſequently of baptiſm, which hath now come into its room, Col. ii. 11, 12.——'By the circumciſion of Chriſt: buried with 'him in baptiſm.' This none but Socinians, and ſuch as they, will quarrel. But now none have right to the ſeal, but ſuch as have intereſt in the thing ſealed. The being of a thing is preſuppoſed to the ſealing of it; the contract muſt be made before it be ſealed. No wiſe man will ſeal a blank, far leſs muſt God's ſeal be given to him that hath no intereſt in that which it is appointed to ſeal. And it is evident, that ſuch as are out of Chriſt, have no intereſt in his righteouſneſs, therefore no right before God to the ſeal of it. 'Abraham received cir'cumciſion, (ſays the apoſtle,) a ſeal of the righteouſ'neſs of faith which he had before.' Where the party baptized is one that hath no ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, the ordinance as to him is abuſed, and ſo he hath no right thereto before the Lord. The abuſe is manifeſt from what is ſaid; for, as Witſius teacheth, God ſeals nothing to ſuch a one, that is truly good. The benefits of the covenant he hath neither part nor lot in; how then can he have right to the ordinance ſealing the ſame? Some poſſibly may ſay, it ſeals the conditional covenant of grace to ſuch a one. But, not to examine the conditionality of the covenant of grace, denied by many godly and learned divines, 1. This is inconſiſtent with the common doctrine of orthodox divines, teaching, That the efficacy of baptiſm is not tied to the moment of time wherein it is adminiſtred: for if it ſeal the conditional covenant to ſuch, it is certain its efficacy is tied to that moment; for we know no other efficacy of it but effectual obſignation. 2. Baptiſm either ſeals that conditional covenant as merely offered and not accepted, or as both offered and accepted. If the firſt be ſaid, then, 1. It ſeals no engagement on our part; which is not only contrary to the orthodox doctrine of divines about baptiſm, but is inconſiſtent with what the ſcriptures ſay of the baptized, their being ‘ buried with ‘ Chriſt in baptiſm, baptized into Chriſt, into one body,’ &c. 2. How then can any deny baptiſm unto thoſe to whom the conditional covenant is held forth, whether they conſent to be diſciples of Chriſt or not? If the ſecond be ſaid, the caſe is altered, yea, the cauſe is yielded; for ſuch as accept of the covenant are in Chriſt, ſeeing there can be no entering now into covenant with God but through the Mediator. It will not help the cauſe to alledge, that it ſeals the conditional covenant, as accepted externally by profeſſion: for God doth propoſe faith, and not profeſſion, as the terms of the conditional covenant of grace; and therefore whoſo come not up to the terms defined by God himſelf in his word, they are not accounted before the Lord to have accepted of the covenant, though before men they may be accounted of ſo; in regard not faith in itſelf, but the profeſſion of it vocal or real, appeareth to them. If any ſhall ſay, that baptiſm ſeals viſible church memberſhip to thoſe that have no ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, his righteouſneſs, &c. I would demand a proof of that, that baptiſm is appointed to ſeal viſible church memberſhip, and no other benefit of the covenant; or where it can be found, that God ſealeth the benefits of the covenant by halves. As Mr. Baxter obſerves, the end of a ſacrament muſt enter the definition thereof; and it is certain it is appointed of God to ſeal the righteouſneſs of faith, remiſſion of ſins, &c. to ſome. If then it be appointed to ſeal only viſible church memberſhip to others, there muſt be two baptiſms, though the apoſtle tells us there is but one, Eph. iv. 5.

3. Let us view thoſe ſcriptures that directly hold forth the nature, ends, and uſes of baptiſm, Matth. iii. 11. ‘ I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance, eis metanoian. So it is called the baptiſm of repentance, Acts xix. 4. ‘ John verily baptized with the baptiſm of ‘ repentance:’ not in reſpect of repentance to come after, but going before; for John baptized none but thoſe that confeſſed their ſins, Matth. iii. 6. and he required of them a profeſſion of their faith in him that was to come, Acts xix. 4. It is called the baptiſm of repentance, for remiſſion of ſin, Mark i. 4. Peter calls thoſe pricked at the heart to repent and be baptiſed for the remiſſion of ſin; where it can be no otherwiſe underſtood, but in teſtimony and confirmation of remiſſion of ſins, as our divines ſhew againſt the papiſts. Rom. iv. 11. ‘ He received circumciſion, a ſeal of the righte‘ ouſneſs which he had before.’ Gal. iii. 27. ‘ For as ‘ many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, have ‘ put on Chriſt,’ where baptiſm is made a ſeal of our union with Chriſt, which is one of the ends of baptiſm. This end, ſays a learned man, none but the faithful do obtain; for, as the apoſtle ſays in the ſame place, ‘ Ye ‘ are all the children of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus.’ So baptiſm is called the laver of regeneration, and we are ſaid to be baptized into Chriſt's death, and into one body; all which are to be underſtood of baptiſm, as ſealing thoſe things done already. From which it appears, that none but ſuch as have an intereſt in Chriſt have right to baptiſm before the Lord. Which will be further clear by the arguments to be adduced for proof of the next concluſion.

Many teſtimonies might be adduced which are given by orthodox divines unto this truth, whereof ſome afterwards ſhall be touched. But Mr Fulwood flies in the face of it, in his diſcourſe of the viſible church. “ The “ word of God (ſays he) Gen. xvii. 23. acknowledgeth “ that one may have a right to the firſt ſeal of the co“ venant, and that coram Deo,---that hath no ſaving “ grace.---Iſhmael was thirteen years old, verſ. 25; “ when he was circumciſed, and therefore---of age to “ anſwer for himſelf; yet Iſhmael had no ſaving grace; “ —neither was he within the covenant of Iſaac, the “ covenant of abſolute and certain ſalvation, from which “ he was excluded, verſ. 19. Yet Iſhmael hath a right “ to the firſt ſeal of the covenant coram Deo, as is moſt “ evident from the immediate command of God, that “ he that was born in Abraham's houſe,---muſt needs “ be circumciſed, verſ. 12. and accordingly Abraham “ underſtood it.———He proceeds upon the command “ of God to circumciſe Iſhmael firſt of all. Now, “ what is it that giveth one right to any ordinance but “ the command, or at leaſt more evidently than the “ command of God himſelf? And that right which we “ have from God's command, is doubtleſs a right co“ ram Deo, and in his ſight.”

In anſwer to this, I deny that Iſhmael had a right to circumciſion coram Deo; and the contrary is very far from being moſt evident from the immediate commandment of God, ſee Gen. xvii. verſ. 12. The commandment of God layeth an obligation on ſuch as it is directed unto, to make uſe of ſuch an ordinance as the command relateth unto; but it giveth not a right to any ordinance. If the ordinance which the command reſpects be not a ſealing ordinance, then indeed the command preſuppoſeth the perſon's right thereto, and evidenceth it; the ordinance being ſuch as requires no ſpecial qualification in the party to found his right thereto: As it is in the hearing of the word, the command to hear preſuppoſeth a right to hear, otherwiſe miniſters ſhould, at the command of God, preach to them that have no right to hear; for the command to hear obligeth not but when there is ſomething ſpoken that may be heard. But if the ordinance be a ſealing ordinance, as that we now ſpeak of is, then the receiving of it comes under a twofold notion; firſt, of a duty; and, ſecondly, of a ſpecial privilege; the confounding whereof, or not diſtinguiſhing of the ſame, ſeems to be the ground of this miſtake. It is a duty becauſe commanded; it is a ſpecial privilege, becauſe allowed only to a certain ſort of perſons. Now, in ſuch a caſe there is ſome ſpecial qualification in the party required to found his right to the ſealing ordinance. I think this learned man will not ſay but it was neceſſary, that the party having right to circumciſion, ſhould be one in covenant with God, whatever that covenant be ſaid to be; and that a perſon no way in covenant with God, could have no right thereto coram Deo: ſo that the right to that ordinance turned on the hinge of perſonal qualifications undeniably; and the command of God did not give a right to it, but obliged to the qualification (whatever it was,) and to the uſe-making of the ordinance, and that conjunctly; but did not ſo much as evidence a right thereto, either before God or the church. And what is ſaid of circumciſion, agrees to all ſealing ordinances; ſo that what is alledged by the learned man concerning the right to a ſealing ordinance, from God's command obliging to receive, it is de ſubjecto non ſupponente, in my opinion. And the thing he had to prove, was, that the command of God in ſuch a caſe gives a right to the ordinance; which cannot be received without proof, and upon a bare aſſertion. When Peter, in the name of the Lord, commands every one of thoſe to whom he ſpoke, to be baptized, Acts ii. 38. it did indeed oblige them to ſubmit to that holy ordinance, but in the mean time to go about it in God's way, and to be perſons duly qualified for baptiſm. But this command did not evidence their right thereto, either coram Deo or coram eccleſia, while they continued impenitent murderers of the Lord of glory; nay nor at all; for it was upon their gladly receiving the word that the apoſtle proceeded to admit them. Here then I would aſk, 1. Whether or no thoſe perſons to whom the apoſtle ſaid, ‘Be baptized every one of you,’ were obliged to ſubmit to this ordinance? That they were, is manifeſt, if the command of God, by the mouth of his ſervant, could oblige them. 2. Whether or no, while they continued impenitent mockers of religion, enemies to Chriſt, neither ſorrowing for their ſins nor profeſſing ſorrow for them, not believing nor repenting, nor appearing ſo to do, might the apoſtles have baptized them? or could they lawfully have received baptiſm? Whoſo will ſay they might, would pour contempt on Chriſt's holy ordinance. Sure I am, had they baptized them in ſuch a caſe, they had gone beyond the bounds of their commiſſion, obliging them firſt to diſciple, then to baptize. From all which it appears, that perſons may be obliged to the receiving of baptiſm by virtue of the command of God, and yet have no right thereto, either before God or the church. Again, the command of Chriſt, ‘Do this in remembrance of me,’ obligeth all that hear the goſpel to partake of the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, as God giveth opportunity; yet it neither gives all a right thereto before God or the church: nay nor does it evidence the ſame; for there are many that may not lawfully partake, and many that may not lawfully be admitted thereto by church-officers, notwithſtanding that the command of God obligeth them to do this. If it be their ſin not to partake, which it muſt needs be, Chriſt revealing his will to them, whereof this is a part; then it is their duty to receive it: yet they may not lawfully receive it, while continuing in their open wickedneſs. All that hear the goſpel have not a right to it, either before God or the church, as I think none will deny. All indeed ought to eat: but according to the apoſtle, they muſt firſt examine themſelves and then eat, 1 Cor. xi. 28. Urſin upon that queſtion, Who ought to come to the ſupper? tells us, “The ſacraments are appointed for the faithful and con-“verted only, to ſeal the promiſe of the goſpel to them, “and confirm their faith.” And that the wicked and hypocrites ought not to come; not that they are not obliged to come, that is not his meaning; but that they cannot lawfully come, as is manifeſt from what he ſays afterwards, that ſuch not coming peccatum peccato cumulant, ‘heap ſin on ſin.’ But hear the objection againſt this doctrine, and his anſwer to it. “Object. God com-“mands all to make uſe of the ſacraments; Anſw. “He commands to all the uſe of the ſacraments; yet “the lawful uſe, which is not without faith and repen-“tance. He commands that all be baptized, and make “uſe of the ſupper; but he alſo commands that all be-“lieve and repent, Acts ii. 38.” Let us ſuppoſe, a maſter commands his ſervant to ſow his ground; doth this give a right to him to go immediately and caſt in the ſeed, before that ever he break the ground with the plough, and make it fit for the receiving of the ſeed? Should he go thus to work, he were a diſobedient ſervant. Neither could it excuſe that he had his maſter's immediate command to ſow his ground. Even ſo in the preſent caſe. Iſhmael being by the command of God obliged to receive the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, was eo ipſo obliged to receive the righteouſneſs of faith; and till then he had no right to the ſeal before the Lord.

Concl. II. Viſible believers, and ſuch as have a profeſſion of religion, probably ſignifying their having of a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, have a right to baptiſm before the church, ſo that they may be admitted thereto, though indeed they have no ſaving grace, yea nor never ſhall have it. This may be allowed without a ſcrupulous inquiry into their ſtate before God; and men in this caſe ought to take the firſt probable profeſſion as the ground of admiſſion. All this is clear from the examples of baptiſm recorded in the ſcriptures, particularly from the practice of John the baptiſt, Matth. iii. 6. and of Philip baptizing the Samaritans, and amongſt them Simon the Magician; and his baptizing the Eunuch, Acts viii. And truly, if an apparently ſerious profeſſion did not warrant the church to give the ſeals to ſuch perſons as have it, they could adminiſter them to none without a revelation from God as to the perſon's ſtate before the Lord. But this is ſo plain, that it were in vain to ſtand upon further proof thereof. And therefore we proceed to Concl. III. None but viſible believers, or ſuch as appear to have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, have right to baptiſm before the church. Whatever people do profeſs, in words, as to their faith in Chriſt, &c. if their profeſſion be openly and viſibly contradicted and belyed by their practice; if they be habitually profane in their walk, or groſsly ignorant of the fundamental points of the Chriſtian religion, they ought not to be baptized, though they offer themſelves to baptiſm.

Arg. I. ‘That which is holy is not to be given ‘to dogs, neither are pearls to be caſt before ſwine,’ Matth. vii. 6. But the ſacrament of baptiſm is a holy thing, and thoſe that are not viſible ſaints, are viſible dogs and ſwine: Prov. xxvi. 11. ‘As a dog returneth ‘to his vomit, ſo a fool to his folly,’ 2 Pet. ii. 18, 20. Who is the fool, but he that underſtandeth not, and doth not ſeek after God, who is altogether corrupt and filthy? Pſal xiv. Our Lord himſelf tells us, that ‘it is not ‘meet to take the childrens bread, and caſt it to dogs,’ Matth. xv. 26. And therefore as Zanchy ſaith, “to ad-“mit unto the ſacrament of baptiſm the impenitent and “unbelievers, what elſe is it but to trample under foot “the blood of Chriſt, and expoſe it to mockery?” It were frivolous to ſay, that if this prove aught, it would prove that no unregenerate man ought to be baptized; for they are thoſe fools; for indeed, as was ſaid before, none of theſe have a right to the ordinance before the Lord. But be what they will as to their ſtate before God, unleſs they appear to us to be fools, dogs, and ſwine, we are not to hold them as ſuch, but to eſteem them viſible ſaints, as they are indeed ſuppoſed to be.

Arg. II. None ought to be baptized but viſible diſciples of Chriſt; for in baptiſm there is an open acknowledging of the party for a diſciple of Chriſt. He ought to be looked on as a ſervant of the great Maſter, before he get on his badge, and wear his livery. The commiſſion for baptizing runs ſo, firſt to make diſciples, then to baptize, Matth. xxviii. 19. And this is the very native order of theſe things. But none but viſible believers can be acknowledged for Chriſt's diſciples. Ergo. The aſſumption I prove, 1. None can be eſteemed Chriſt's diſciples, but thoſe that appear to have learned of the Father, and ſo alſo have come to Chriſt, being drawn effectually by the Father, John vi. 44, 45.; and none but viſible believers are ſuch. Though that the Lord may have begun to teach others, and they are beginning to learn of him, yet till this appear to us, we can never reckon them diſciples of Chriſt. Let it be remembered, that we do acknowledge infants to be diſciples of Chriſt, as well as adult perſons; and whatever is, or may be ſaid on this head, muſt be underſtood de ſubjecto capaci, and but prejudice to the holy ſeed, the infants of the faithful. 2. We muſt judge of people's diſcipleſhip by their fruit, Matth. vii. 20. ‘By their fruit ſhall ye know them;’ viz. whether they be Chriſt's diſciples or the devil's. This our Lord plainly teacheth, John xv. 8. ‘Herein is my Father glori-‘fied, that ye bring forth much fruit; ſo ſhall ye be’ (i. e. appear, yea further appear, to be) ‘my diſciples.’ The ſame is taught, John viii. 31. ‘If ye continue in ‘my word, then are ye my diſciples indeed.’ Hence it plainly follows, that none but viſible ſaints are viſible diſciples of Chriſt, and that ſuch whoſe practice belyes their profeſſion are excluded. 3. Such as are worſe than infidels, cannot be reckoned diſciples of Chriſt; ſuch as have ‘ denied the faith, are worſe than infidels,’ 1 Tim. v. 8.; and thoſe whoſe practice openly contradicts their profeſſion, have denied the faith; for though they ‘ profeſs to know God, yet in works they deny him,’ Tit. i. 16.; and it is horrid indeed to think on ſealing them with the ſeal of the covenant that in their works deny God, unto whom nothing is pure, who are abominable, diſobedient, and to every good work reprobate. 4. We are plainly inſtructed what it is without which none can be Chriſt's diſciples, Luke xiv. 26, 27. ‘ If any man——hate not his father and mother;——and whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, and come after me, cannot be my diſciple.’ Will Chriſt acknowledge men as his diſciples on no other terms? then without the appearance of theſe things, we ought not to reckon perſons his diſciples. Neither are ever any called diſciples of Chriſt in the ſcriptures, but ſuch as were viſible believers. We read indeed, John vi. 66. that ‘ many of his diſciples went back, and walked no more with him,’ and ſo ſome viſible believers apoſtatize; not that they are viſible diſciples of Chriſt when they fall into a total and final apoſtaſy; but they that now are apoſtates, were viſible diſciples of Chriſt before. When we ſay, an apoſtate diſciple, or a diſciple gone back, the term diſciple is affected with alienation, as philoſophers ſpeak; as when we ſay, a dead man, the meaning is, he who was a man while living, is now dead. Hence it appears, that the argument taken by Fulwood from this ſcripture, to prove that the viſible church may be conſidered to be truly a church of Chriſt without reſpect to ſaving grace, is of no uſe to his purpoſe. “ Now, let it be ſuppoſed, (ſays he,) that they now ceaſed to be diſciples, (and truly I think it may not only be ſuppoſed, but fully concluded they now ceaſed to be diſciples,) yet this only evidenceth, for the time paſt, that they never had any true grace, howbeit they were then diſciples. Unleſs they had gone on, they could not have gone back; and ſo long as they went on, they were diſciples. Not thoſe that ſeemed, but thoſe that were diſciples, went back.’ It is true indeed, that the apoſtaſy of theſe perſons evidenced, for the time paſt, that they never had any true grace; but it did not evidence that they never had any evidence, before men, of true grace, or that they never had any appearance of true grace, which, unleſs his argument prove it, cannot reach his concluſion: yea, it evidenceth the quite contrary, that they had ſome time an appearance of ſaving grace, in ſo far as they were accounted diſciples of Chriſt, and to have walked with him. But I deny that their apoſtaſy only evidenced they had no true grace; it evidenced alſo, that they were never the true diſciples, whom Chriſt ſent his diſciples to make and baptize, and ſo no church-members before God: for, as Mr Baxter ſaith, “ When Chriſt ſaith, “ Make me diſciples of all nations, baptizing them,” he “ means ſincere diſciples, though we cannot ever know them to be ſincere.” It is a weak criticiſm, to remark, that it was not thoſe that ſeemed, but thoſe that were diſciples, that went back; for were is no more in the text than ſeemed. And what if I ſay, they were ſeeming diſciples, and not real? But they were indeed viſible diſciples before their viſible apoſtacy; they were as really viſible diſciples as Peter and John were; but when they apoſtatiſed, they ceaſed to be viſible diſciples.

Arg. III. All the examples of baptiſm recorded in the ſcripture, hold forth none to have been baptized, but thoſe that before baptiſm appeared to have a ſaving intereſt in Chriſt. Thoſe whom John the Baptiſt admitted, were ſuch as ‘ confeſſed their ſins,’ Matth. iii. 6. So thoſe baptized by Peter, Acts ii. 42. Then they that gladly received his word, were baptized. The Samaritans believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jeſus Chriſt, and then were baptized, Acts viii. 12. ‘ Simon himſelf believed alſo, and was baptized,’ ver. 13. The eunuch ſaid, I believe that Jeſus Chriſt is the Son of God, and then was baptized, ver. 37, 38. Paul is firſt converted, and then baptized, Acts ix. 18. The centurion, and thoſe with him, received the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore none could forbid water. So Lydia, Acts xvi. 14, 15. the jailor, ver. 32, 33. Criſpus and others, Acts xviii. 8. Neither can any inſtance be adduced wherein the matter appears to have been handled otherwiſe; and ſurely theſe examples are our rule in this caſe. What though ſome of them, as Simon Magus, were indeed hypocrites, the argument nevertheleſs holds good, if their hypocriſy did not appear before they were baptized; which cannot be proven to have been even in the caſe of Simon: yea it appears right plainly, from the hiſtory of him, that it was ſome time after he was baptized that his hyprocriſy appeared; for, after he was baptized, he continued with Philip all the time, till the apoſtles which were at Jeruſalem ſent unto Samaria Peter and John, and the Samaritans received the Holy Ghoſt through the laying on of the apoſtles hands.

Arg. IV. If the admiſſion of ſuch to baptiſm as are not viſible ſaints, be a profaning of the holy ordinance, then they have no right before the church thereto, nor ought they to be baptized; the former is true: Ergo, the latter alſo. The profanation of the ordinance appears, in that thoſe are declared to be real members of Chriſt, clothed with the real righteouſneſs of Chriſt, bleſſed with the pardon of ſin, &c. who, to the ſight of the world, have, or at leaſt appear to have, none of theſe things: for baptiſm, as was ſhown before, is appointed of God to ſeal theſe and ſuch like; and ſo is a teſtifying ſign that the party baptized is ſuch a one. Wherefore, to baptize ſuch perſons, were to proclaim an agreement betwixt Chriſt and Belial, and to ſet up for concord betwixt light and darkneſs, and ſeal the ſame with a witneſs; which cannot be but an abuſe of God's holy ordinance. It was a heavy charge againſt the prieſts, Ezek. xxii. 26. that they had violated God's holy law, and profaned his holy things; and put no difference between the holy and profane, nor ſhewed difference between the clean and unclean. Now the law which they violated in this we have expreſsly ſet down, Lev. x. 8, 9, 10. ‘ And the Lord ſpake unto Aaron, ſaying, Do not drink wine nor ſtrong drink, thou, nor thy ſons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation; leſt ye die: it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever throughout your generations; and that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean.’ The firſt reſpects moral, the other ceremonial purity and impurity. And this putting difference is evidently diſtinguiſhed from the ſhewing difference doctrinally; as appears from verſ. 11. And that ye may teach the children of Iſrael, &c. Now, ſurely the Lord doth as little allow the profaning of his holy things under the goſpel, as under the law; and the putting no difference betwixt the holy and profane, cannot but be a profaning of God's holy things, now as well as then. The prieſts alſo are reproved for bringing into the ſanctuary, ſtrangers uncircumciſed in heart and in fleſh, and thereby polluting it, Ezek. xliv. 7. And to prevent the miſtake, leſt they ſhould think that the only ground of the quarrel was, that ſuch were uncircumciſed in fleſh, the Lord tells them, verſ. 9. that ‘ no ſtranger uncircumciſed in heart, nor uncircumciſed in fleſh, ſhall enter into his ſanctuary.’ Mark the disjunctive particle, ‘ uncircumciſed in heart, nor in fleſh.’ Was the ſanctuary more holy than the ſacrament of baptiſm is? will moral impurity pollute the one, and not the other? If any ſhall ſay, that this reſpects not Iſraelites, but ſtrangers; and ſo although it may hold good in our caſe as to profeſſed Pagans, yet not as to profeſſed Chriſtians: I anſwer, 1. The ſtrangers were debarred from the ſanctuary as uncircumciſed in heart, therefore all uncircumciſed in heart were debarred ; for a qua tali ad omne valet conſequentia. 2. The Lord expreſsly reproves the profane Iſraelites for entering into his ſanctuary, Jer. vii. 9, 10, 11.

Arg. V. ult. If none have a right to baptiſm before the Lord but real ſaints, then none have a right to it before the church but viſible ſaints. The argument has been already proven ; and the conſequent is very plain. Theſe two poſitions do mutually eſtabliſh one another. If the word debar all from the ſacraments that are not real ſaints, to admit ſuch as have no appearance of ſaintſhip, were to pull in with the one hand, while we ſhut out with the other ; which is the high way to make people Atheiſts, and to believe nothing that is preached. When God hath declared, that none have right before him to the ſeals of the covenant, but thoſe that have a ſaving intereſt in his Son, in whom ‘ the promiſes are yea and amen ;’ and hath required the diſpenſers of the holy myſteries, to ‘ put a difference betwixt the holy and unholy, and to ſeparate betwixt the precious and the vile,’ and told us, that ‘ we ſhall know them by their fruits ;’ men ought to beware of admitting ſuch as plainly appear to be profane and vile. Men muſt not be blind, when the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, Gal. v. 19.

Now, all this doth no way prejudice the right of infants to baptiſm coram eccleſia, for the infants of viſible believers, are no leſs viſible believers than they themſelves are, ſeeing the Lord declares himſelf to be not only the believer's God, but the God of his ſeed. “ We “ do not tie (ſay the profeſſors of Leyden) the efficacy “ of baptiſm to that moment when the body is waſhed ; “ but we do, with the ſcripture, prerequire faith and “ repentance in all that are to be baptized, at leaſt ac- “ cording to the judgment of charity ; and that as well “ in infants that are within the covenant ; in whom by “ the power of God's bleſſing and of the goſpel cove- “ nant, we affirm, that there is the ſeed and ſpirit of “ faith and repentance ; as in the aged, in whom the “ profeſſion of actual faith and repentance is neceſſary.” Yea, ſaith Zanchius, “ We muſt believe, that an in- “ fant of faithful parents is already baptized with the “ baptiſm of the Spirit, ſeeing it is in the covenant.” It were eaſy to heap up teſtimonies given by orthodox divines to the firſt and third concluſions. Urſin gives his judgment thereanent in two theſes. “ All (ſays “ he,) and only the regenerate lawfully, receive bap- “ tiſm. The church adminiſtereth baptiſm lawfully to “ all, and only theſe whom ſhe ought to account in “ the number of the regenerate.”

CONCL. IV. All infants deſcended of parents, whereof one only is a viſible believer, hath right to baptiſm before the church ; they ought to be baptized, whether it be the father or mother that makes a credible profeſſion. Such as are in covenant with God viſibly ; we are to look on them as probably within the covenant as to the ſaving benefits thereof, ſo that none can forbid water. The apoſtle plainly tells us, they are not unclean but holy, 1 Cor. vii. 14. and therefore ſubjects lawfully capable of this ordinance. I find no need to inſiſt on this point, being fully ſatisfied therein, and knowing none that deny it who do not altogether reject infant-baptiſm. If it be inquired, Who is to be ſponſor for the child when the father is an unbeliever ? I anſwer the father cannot be admitted, ſeeing there is no reaſon to expect that he will bring up his child in the fear of that God, the fear of whom is not before his own eyes ; or in that religion, to which he himſelf is a ſtranger. To overlook the mother, and to require another to be ſponſor for the child, I ſee no reaſon. But the mother is to be ſponſor for the child ; 1. Becauſe it ſeems the child hath its right by her. 2. Becauſe the ſcripture lays the bonds on her ; ſo that ſhe is antecedently obliged to bring up her child in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, Eph. vi. 4. 3. Becauſe ſhe is the perſon moſt to be truſted in ſuch a weighty concern. Whoever it be that preſents the child to be baptized, I ſuppoſe is not material, providing he or ſhe be a church-member. Neither is it neceſſary that the ſponſor preſent the child ; but if it can be conveniently done, it ought to be. Only in the caſe ſuppoſed, the bonds being laid on the mother, it is not reaſonable the child ſhould want the ſeal of the covenant till ſhe be able to appear in the congregation, if providence allow an opportunity before that time.

But now I come to the main point of this inquiry, viz. Whether or not all infants born of Chriſtian parents, ſo called in oppoſition to Jews, Turks, and Pagans, have a right before the church to baptiſm ? or, Whether the open wickedneſs, profanity, or groſs ignorance of the parents, ſhould hinder the infant to be baptized, till either the parents reform, or the child come to mature age, and by his perſonal walk ſatisfy the church as to his right to that ordinance ? What hath been ſaid to the former point, ſeems pretty clear ; but to determine this, hoc opus, hic labor eſt.

Many godly and learned hold the former part of that queſtion, though, as I apprehend, on different grounds ; all which I conceive, are expreſſed by Zanchy, and Oliver Bowles. Their words are as follows. “ The chil- “ dren of thoſe, ſays that judicious divine Zanchius, “ that are indeed in the church, but, becauſe of their “ unclean way of living, declare that they are not in- “ deed of the church ; if they be offered to baptiſm, they “ cannot be debarred therefrom, nor ought they. “ The reaſon is, Becauſe though the parents be wicked, “ yet their impiety ought not to prejudge their chil- “ dren which are born within the church. But if you “ ſay, only the children of the faithful are to be bapti- “ zed, becauſe thoſe infants only are judged to be with- “ in the covenant, and they only holy ; I anſwer, the “ impiety of their neareſt parents is not to be conſider- “ ed here, but the impiety of the church in which they “ are born ;——as alſo their anceſtors who have lived “ godly and holily.” “ All infants (ſays Mr Bowles) “ who, in the judgment of charity, are within the co- “ venant, are to be baptized.——And baptiſm is to be “ adminiſtred exactly according to this judgment of “ charity. And that judgment concludes all to be “ within the covenant, whoſe parents were ſometime “ ſealed with the ſeal of the covenant.” Hereto add Mr Fulwood's notion of it. He judgeth the children of openly wicked parents are to be baptized, becauſe their parents may be really members of the viſible church, (notwithſtanding their want of ſaving grace,) and really baptized. And ſo they allow the children of ſuch heretics amongſt whom the formula of baptiſm remains ſafe, children of excommunicate parents, baſtards, if there be any evidence of the baptiſm, at leaſt of one of the parents. Some add foundlings. Bowles requires that there be ſponſors found in order to the baptizing of theſe children of heretics, &c. otherwiſe he acknowledges the action to be luſory, and baptiſm to be polluted. I remember there is a queſtion, Whether or no the infants of Pagans, Turks, or Jews, wholly in the power of a Chriſtian believer, being by him devoted to Chriſt, ought to be baptized ? This is by Mr Baxter reſolved in the affirmative, on ſcripture-grounds. In this caſe, the infant's right is wholly from the ſponſor. Now, if the children of openly wicked Chriſtians be put in this caſe, the plea for their right to baptiſm from their being born in the church, of godly progenitors, of baptized immediate parents, falls to the ground. But I ſuppoſe thoſe learned men mean no ſuch thing ; but that, by virtue of their birth-privilege, the children of openly wicked Chriſtian parents have a right to baptiſm ; and that, laying aſide the caſe of ſuch ſponſors from whom the infants wholly derive their right to the ordinance, it is not neceſſary that one of the parents be a viſible believer, or have a ſerious and credible profeſſion, in order to their childrens having a right to baptiſm coram eccleſia. And for proof of this point, let the following arguments be conſidered.

Arg. I. The ſeal of the covenant belongs to all thoſe that are within the covenant; but the infants of all Chriſtian parents are with the covenant: for ſo runs the covenant, ‘I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed.’ Seeing the parents are ſealed with the ſeal, they muſt needs be within the covenant, and conſequently their ſeed alſo. The covenant is not made with the root, but alſo with the offspring; and if ſo, why may not the ſeal of the covenant be effectual, not only to the baptized parent, if he believe, but alſo render his ſeed capable at leaſt of the external ſign. Wherefore the apoſtle ſaith, ‘Now are your children holy,’ to wit, by external holineſs; whereby they are reputed to be within the covenant, being come of ſuch a parent as hath given up his or her name to Chriſt, 1 Cor. vii. 14. Let it be duly conſidered what was the caſe that was ſo ſtraitening to thoſe Corinthians, which Paul doth reſolve in the forecited place. It was not, whether or not the godly huſband or wiſe might lawfully abide in the ſtate of marriage with a wicked Chriſtian yokefellow? but, whether or no the Chriſtian huſband or wiſe might lawfully abide in that ſtate with a Pagan? The apoſtle tells them they might, and gives the reaſon, For the unbelieving huſband it ſanctified to the believing wiſe, i. e. the Pagan to the Chriſtian; and gives the reaſon, Elſe were your children unclean; but now they are holy. And it is very palpable, there was very open wickedneſs amongſt that people. What ſad diviſions and diſorders were among them? They tolerated the inceſtuous perſon; they did not mourn, but were puffed up; ſome of them were drunken when they came to the Lord's table; ſome denied the reſurrection, &c. Notwithſtanding of all, the apoſtle tells them their children were holy, conſequently within the covenant, and to be baptized.

Arg. II. The infant not having ſtretched forth its hand to the parents iniquity, muſt not bear his ſin, at leaſt in ſpirituals, Ezek. xviii. 20. The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father: the ſoul that ſinneth it ſhall die. But ſurely, if no infants ſhould be admitted to baptiſm but thoſe of viſible believers, many infants born of Chriſtian parents ſhould be debarred, and ſo uncontrovertibly bear the iniquity of their fathers. If God hath manifeſted his mercy ſo far, that the child ſhould not bear the father's ſin, they ſeem to go ſtrangely to work that will debar poor infants becauſe of the wicked life of their parents, in which they, poor ſouls, have no hand. Which is the more to be noticed, and calls people to be the more wary, if we conſider that many a time God brings choſen veſſels out of the loins of the moſt profligate parents. Even in the family of Jeroboam was one ‘found in whom there was ſome good thing found toward the God of Iſrael.’

Arg. III. If the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents did not exclude their children from circumciſion, then the hereſy, profanity, or impiety of Chriſtian parents, cannot exclude their children from baptiſm; the former is true: Ergo. The conſequence is plain; for baptiſm is the ſame to us that circumciſion was to them; ‘circumciſion was a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith,’ Rom. iv. 11. as well as baptiſm; and none will ſay, that the grace of God is more narrow under the New Teſtament, than it was under the Old. The minor is no leſs manifeſt, if we conſider theſe four things. 1. The univerſality of the command, with reſpect to circumciſion, Gen. xvii. 10. ‘Every man-child among you ſhall be circumciſed;’ which command is repeated, verſ. 12. Here is no exception. The puniſhment or cenſure to be inflicted on the uncircumciſed man-child among the Jews, verſ. 14. ‘The uncircumciſed man-child ſhall be cut off from his people,’ 4. Conſider the practice of Joſhua, who at God's command circumciſed the children of Iſrael at Gilgal, Joſh. v. where it is expreſsly ſaid, ‘When they had done circumciſing all the people,’ ver. 8. yet theſe were the children of them whom God for their wickedneſs kept out of Canaan, who fell in the wilderneſs, who vexed his holy Spirit forty years, ſo that he ſware they ſhould never enter into his reſt. And they themſelves cannot be ſuppoſed to be all viſible believers. 4. We never read of any of the Iſraelites children that were debarred from that ordinance on any pretence whatſoever. From all which it is evident, that the impiety of the Jewiſh parents did not debar their children from circumciſion, and therefore as little can the impiety of Chriſtians debar theirs from baptiſm. Here is a grant of the firſt ſeal of the covenant, yea, a command to receive the ſame, directed unto the children of all that are externally in covenant with God, as Chriſtians and their ſeed are. If any will ſay, it is now done away, and concerns not us under the New-Teſtament diſpenſation; they muſt acknowledge themſelves obliged to ſhew us the repeal thereof in the ſacred records, otherwiſe confeſs it ſtill ſtands in force.

Arg. IV. This doth further appear, if we conſider that ſcripture, Acts ii. 38, 39. Repent therefore, and be baptized every one of you.—For the promiſe is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God ſhall call. Now, what is that promiſe he ſpeaks of, but the great promiſe, ‘I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed?’ The apoſtle hereby means to ſtir them up to repentance, and to be baptized: and for their encouragement he tells them, ‘the promiſe is to them and their ſeed’ Note, that the promiſe is to them antecedently to their repenting; this is plain, becauſe the apoſtle's argument is truly thus, The promiſe is to you, therefore repent and be baptized: he argues from their privilege to their duty. Again, the promiſe is ſaid to be to ſuch ‘as are afar off, even as many as God ſhall call,’ meaning the Gentiles, Eph. ii. 13. ‘Ye who ſometimes were afar off.’ The call here ſpoken of, is the outward and external call, which puts the Gentiles into the ſame caſe with thoſe Jews who ſurely were not ſavingly called, ſo that the promiſe is to their ſeed alſo, as well as to the Jews ſeed. Hence I form a twofold argument.

1. If the promiſe be to the born Iſraelites and their ſeed, even antecedently to their repenting, then the promiſe is unto perſons within the Chriſtian church and to their ſeed, antecedently to true repentance in them; but the former is true; Ergo. And if the promiſe be ſo to them, the ſeal of it muſt be ſo likewiſe.

2. The promiſe is to the Gentiles, whom the Lord externally calleth, and to their ſeed; but ſuch are openly wicked Chriſtian parents: Ergo. Who can forbid water to their infants?

Arg. V. John the Baptiſt and the apoſtles admitted all to baptiſm that offered themſelves, Matth. iii. 5, 6. ‘Then went out to him Jeruſalem and all Judea, and were baptized of him.’ He debarred none; no not the Phariſees, whom yet he called a generation of vipers, verſ. 7. That he did baptize them, is clear from his own expreſs teſtimony, verſ. 11. where ſpeaking to the Phariſees and Sadducees, he ſaith, ‘I indeed baptize you with water,’ Luke iii. 21. it is expreſsly ſaid, ‘When all the people were baptized.’ Now the practice of John plainly holds forth, that they had a right to that ordinance, and that they were in covenant: Ergo, a majori the infants of wicked Chriſtian parents are to be baptized. Now, if we look to the apoſtles, we ſhall find, that notwithſtanding of all that John baptized, yet Chriſt by his diſciples baptized more than he; as the Evangeliſt expreſsly teſtifies, John iv. 1. Philip on a bare profeſſion of faith baptized the Eunuch; and ſo in other examples. Now, it is certain, that they would never have refuſed baptiſm to the infants of the parents whom they baptized; but ſo it is, that thoſe children whoſe title to this ordinance is queſtioned, are the children of ſuch parents as profeſs their faith in Chriſt; why then ſhould not their right to the ordinance be acknowledged?

Arg. VI. Thoſe children whom God acknowledgeth to be born to him, and to be his children, have a right to the firſt ſeal of the covenant; for what children have right to it, if God's children, ſuch as are born to him, have it not? but ſo it is that God owneth the children of the Jewiſh wicked parents to be born unto him, and to be his children: Ergo, Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. ‘Moreover, thou haſt taken thy ſons and thy daughters, ‘whom thou haſt born unto me, and theſe thou haſt ‘ſacrificed unto them to be devoured:—Thou haſt ‘ſlain my children, and delivered them to cauſe them ‘to paſs through the fire unto them.’ Here is moſt groſs and open wickedneſs of the parents, yet the Lord will not have it to prejudge the church ſtate of the children.

Arg. VII. If none but the infants of viſible believers have right to baptiſm, and ought to be baptized; then, 1. Families, pariſhes, and whole countries, might come in a ſhort time to be paganized; ſeeing in many places there are ſo very few viſible believers. 2. Through the rigidity and indiſcretion of church officers, many poor infants who are the children of believing parents ſhould be deprived of that ordinance: for people may go to heaven while we hear not the ſound of their feet: and it is well known ſaving grace may lie hid under the aſhes of much ignorance and corruption. 3. Then miniſters ſhould have no certain rule to walk by in baptizing any infants. All that is left to them, is their opinion: They think ſuch a one to be a believer, and ſuch an one to be an unbeliever; and therefore they will baptize the infants of the one, not of the other: and they may be miſtaken as to both, they may take a ſheep for a goat, and a goat for a ſheep. Is this ſure ſtanding? or can we ſuppoſe that God hangs ſuch a weighty matter as this upon the opinion and fallible judgment of men? one poſſibly thinks ſuch a meaſure of knowledge, and ſuch a walk, to be ſufficient ground whereon he may judge a man a believer: another will think ſo little will not ſerve the turn: Where ſhall we faſten? Surely theſe things hang not on ſuch uncertainties.

Arg. VIII. The children of baptized church-members ought to be baptized: but the children of many openly ſcandalous and wicked parents are the children of baptized church-members: therefore ſuch children ought to be baptized. This argument is Mr Fulwood's, and is the reſult of a large diſcourſe concerning the viſible church. And ſo much for the proof of this point.

Notwithſtanding of all that is ſaid for the right of the infants of ſuch Chriſtians, ſome are of opinion, that one of the parents muſt needs be a viſible believer, or have a ſerious credible or probable profeſſion, or elſe the child hath no right before the church to baptiſm. And truly, though I have not wilfully diſſembled any thing that might add more force to theſe arguments, but have repreſented them to the beſt advantage, ſo far as it occured to me, yet I ſtill doubt of the truth of that poſition: and therefore I will now propoſe ſome arguments that make me to doubt the truth of it, and incline me to the latter opinion, that I may at leaſt eaſe my mind a little, by caſting forth theſe my doubts into this paper.

In the firſt place, We muſt conſider, whether infants may derive their right from their mediate and remote parents, or only from their immediate parents; for to bury this in ſilence, were to beat the air in arguing for the laſt poſition. And if I underſtand ought of this controverſy, this is one of the main hinges of it. Some learned men diſtruſting the right of infants from ſuch immediate parents as are openly wicked, who declare by their impure life they are not of the church, do derive the right of ſuch infants from their mediate or remote parents, who lived a godly and holy life. I find two ſcriptures adduced for proof of this. The one is, Rom. xi. 16. ‘If the root be holy, ſo are the branches.’ “By “the root (ſays Zanchius) he underſtands not their “neareſt parents, who perhaps were wicked; but thoſe “firſt fathers of the Jewiſh people, Abraham, Iſaac, “and Jacob, to whom was made and confirmed the “promiſe and covenant, that God would be their God, “and the God of their whole ſeed, by a perpetual co“venant. Therefore all their poſterity, who had not “altogether apoſtatized to the gods of the Gentiles, “were, I ſay, they all were in the covenant, and they “were judged holy by reaſon of covenant-holineſs, fœ“deris ſanctitate ſancti judicabantur.” Hence the promiſe is ſaid to be to them and their ſeed, (Acts ii. 39.) many generations after Abraham. Another ſcripture is that, Exod. xx. 6. ‘Shewing mercy to thouſands of ‘them that love me, and keep my commandments,’ while he viſits iniquity only to the third and fourth generation. The truth is, if this were ſatisfyingly explained, and convincingly proven, the difficulty of the caſe would be in great meaſure removed. Againſt it let theſe few reaſons be conſidered.

I. I obſerve, that the learned men who plead this, muſt needs diſown the neceſſity of the baptiſm of one of the parents; and ſo they ſhall be judged holy, and within the covenant, and to have right to baptiſm, whoſe immediate parents were never ſo much as baptized; beſides, that they are openly wicked in their lives: for it is plain, that godly progenitors may have ſuch come of them as are unbaptized. But notwithſtanding, according to this opinion, the children of ſuch unbaptized parents may have right to baptiſm, and ought to be baptized; which will not be granted, (as we heard before,) even by ſuch as agree with them in the main point; and I ſuppoſe, there are few that will be ſatisfied with leſs than the baptiſm of one of the immediate parents.

II. Are there not many infants born in ſuch places where God has a church, whoſe immediate and mediate parents, ſo far as any man now living knoweth or can remember, have been brutiſhly ignorant, profane, or both; ſo that the God in whoſe name the infant is to be baptized, is a God whom neither they nor their fathers have known? As to theſe we may crave leave to inquire, Quomodo conſtat? What evidence is there that their mediate parents have lived a godly and holy life? I think no man that conſiders for how many generations God hath left ſome nations without the knowledge of his will concerning man's ſalvation, will obtain of himſelf to build his charity in this point upon that, that God ‘viſits the inquity of the fathers on the children to the ‘third and fourth generation’ only.

III. If it be ſufficient to give an infant a right to baptiſm, that it is come of godly progenitors, then the children of ſome Pagans and Mahometans have a right to baptiſm, though born and to bred up in a Pagan or Mahometan country, and having nothing common with the church of God; but that is abſurd, Eph. ii. 12. At that time ye were without God, ſtrangers to the covenant of promiſe. And the apoſtle gives us to know, that the children of Pagans are unclean, 1 Cor. vii. 14. The conſequence holds good, in regard the children of ſome Pagans have had godly anceſtors, and ſome of them lively baptized members of the Chriſtian church, as is manifeſt in the caſe of thoſe of Smyrna, Thyatira, Laodicea, and the reſt of Aſia (for the moſt part,) which are now unchurched. But you will ſay, theſe infants are unchurched. It is ſo, but how do we know that but by their parents being unchurched? What if a godly woman with child ſhould be caſt out into a Pagan country, and there bring forth her child; is the poor infant therefore ſtranger to the covenant, and no church-member, becauſe born in a Pagan country? No, ſure: the earth is the Lord's and the fulneſs thereof, and the place of the child's birth can never prejudge it of the right it has by the promiſe and covenant of God. Wherefore it is plain, that the place of the nativity of the Pagans children can never evince their being unchurched; for a quatenus ad omne valet conſequentia. So that it is by the unchurched ſtate of the parents that we know theſe infants to be unchurched. Let us conſider the infants of the firſt unchurched generation, we find they have no right to the ſeal of the covenant, yet, ex hypotheſi, they are come of godly progenitors. Wherefore it doth inevitably follow, that mediate parents their being in covenant with God, is not ſufficient to give to their remote ſeed a right to baptiſm.

IV. If infants may derive their right before the church, or the evidence of their right before the Lord, to baptiſm, from their remote parents; then either from any of them whatſoever, or from ſome of them only; I know no mids. If from any of them whatſoever, then there is no infant under heaven that hath not a right to baptiſm; which is abſurd. The reaſon of the conſequence is, becauſe there is not an infant in the world that is not come of parents that were godly; which will hold true, ſo long as it remains undoubted, that all the world is come of Noah and of Adam. If from ſome of them only, then, 1. They that will have this believed, muſt tell us how far we may go back to ſeek mediate parents, from whom the infant may derive its right. 2. They muſt afford us ſome probable evidence, that ſuch mediate parents were godly. 3. They muſt give us ſome reaſon, why we may go ſo far back, and no further. The demands ſeem truly as reaſonable, as the anſwering of them is difficult, to ſay no more.

Now, let us conſider the ſcriptures adduced for infants deriving their right to baptiſm before the church, from their remote parents. The firſt whereof is that, Rom. xi. 16. If the root be holy, ſo are the branches. I am ſatisfied, that by the root the apoſtle doth not mean Chriſt, as ſome think: nor yet the covenant, as others: but Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, or rather Abraham alone. And it is clear, that the apoſtle is ſpeaking here of the Iſraelites, to whom only Abraham was a root in reſpect of carnal generation; ſo that whatever advantage the Iſraelites may have of this, we Gentiles can have none, ſeeing he was none of our remote parents. It is true, the Gentiles may be the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham; but this quite alters the caſe, if we would plead it in this matter; for now we ſpeak of parents from whom infants deſcend by carnal generation. And the way how we come to be Abraham's ſeed, the apoſtle plainly tells us, Gal. iii. 29. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe. If any ſhall ſay, that this is a general maxim, and may be applied to the Gentiles as well as the Jews: then unleſs the immediate parents be the root, by virtue of which their children are holy, as was argued before, ſo now we crave, 1. That it be ſhown how far we may go up to ſeek the root. 2. That it be manifeſt ſuch infants are branches of a holy root. Yea, and it is reaſonable in this caſe, ſuch a remote parent be condeſcended on as had ſuch a privilege as Abraham had, that he ſhould be a root, whoſe remote ſeed ſhould be holy; for however every godly parent is, by the covenant of God into which he enters, ſo privileged, that God is his God, and the God of his ſeed; yet I think none will make every believing parent equally privileged, in this matter, with Abraham; the ſcripture holding forth Abraham's ſpecial privilege in the holineſs of his ſeed, by any other perſon in the world. Now, where can we fix for ſuch a one in the caſe of us Gentiles? But to ſpeak plainly to the point, I am of opinion, that unleſs we be ſwayed with authority of men, there is nothing in this ſcripture that appears for evidencing the right of the branches to the ſeals of the covenant; ſo that it hits not the point in hand. My reaſon for this is, that the branches the apoſtle ſpeaks of here, was the body of the people of Iſrael, the offspring of Abraham, and natural branches of this holy root: which branches were already actually broken off and unchurched; ſo that whatever be ſaid of them, they could have no right to the ſacraments, unleſs you will make them common to them that are without the church, as well as thoſe that are within. That the body of the Iſraelites was now broken off, is plain; ſo that it were in vain to prove it, while the apoſtle is treating ſo expreſsly of their reingraffing. And that they were the branches ſpoken of here, is evident to me from the ſcope and deſign of the apoſtle, which is to prove the calling again of the Iſraelites, and their reingraffing. For one proof of which, he adduceth this argument, ‘If the root be holy, ſo are the branches;’ but the root is holy: Ergo, the branches alſo. But holy branches, though cut off, ſhall be graffed in again. It is true, ſome of theſe branches were not broken off, viz. the believing Jews, for there were ſtill ſome, amongſt whom the Gentiles were graffed in, verſ. 17. But the apoſtle needed not prove, that the believing Jews were holy: neither would it contribute ought to his purpoſe, ſo far as I can ſee; neither did the Gentiles boaſt againſt thoſe branches that were not broken off, but againſt thoſe that were broken off, verſ. 18, 19, 20. ‘Boaſt not againſt the branches.—Thou wilt ſay then, The branches were broken off.—Well; becauſe of unbelief they were broken off.’ The only difficulty here is this, How branches broken off, or an unchurched people, can be ſaid to be holy? I find one arguing from this text for infant-baptiſm, brings in this objection. “But what kind of conſequence is this, If the root be holy, ſo are the branches?” which he ſolves, and ſenſeth the text thus. “The apoſtle in the former verſe ſpeaks of a receiving in again of the Jewiſh nation, and brings in this as a ground to hope for it: there is yet a holy root which hath an influence on the branches; and argues, that if the root be holy, when the branches broken off ſhall be reingraffed, they ſhall be holy likewiſe.” If this interpretation be received, the difficulty is removed; but I know none elſe that puts this ſenſe on the text. It is true, no time is defined in the text, neither the preſent nor the future; for the words are ei he riza hagia, kai hoi kladoi. But if we read that of the branches in the future tenſe, why not alſo that of the root? But that which ſtumbles me mainly as to this interpretation, is, that it is utterly alien from the ſcope of the apoſtle, makes his arguing very jejune, and fathers on him a moſt palpable petitio principii; for thus ſays the apoſtle, according to him, the ‘Jewiſh nation ſhall be received again; for when they ſhall be reingraffed, they ſhall be holy;’ which evidently ſuppoſeth the thing in queſtion. But the learned man ſupports the cauſe with better arguments than this. Only by the by I cannot but notice, that Mr Baxter upon that ſubject, adducing ſeveral arguments out of that chapter, makes no mention of any argument from the text under conſideration. In whatever ſenſe thoſe branches broken off are ſaid to be holy, it ſeems plain they are called holy. And, in my opinion, the branches of this root, or the body of that people which was now broken off, are ſaid to be holy; holineſs being attributed unto them not univerſally, but indefinitely; and that not only in reſpect of particular perſons, but particular generations of them. Abraham being the root, all that come or ſhall come of him, from the firſt child begotten of his own body, to the laſt of his race that ſhall be born in the world, are accounted the branches of this root, make up one collective body of branches, one ſeed and one people; which, by virtue of the holineſs of the root, is ſaid to be holy. Thus we find the apoſtle ſpeaks of them, verſ. 15. ‘For if the caſting away of them be the reconciling of the world; what ſhall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?’ Where it is evident, the apoſtle underſtands not this receiving again of the particular generation, or the particular perſons that were then broke off, as the event hath proven; yea, many generations have paſſed ſince, and they are not as yet received; but of this collective branches, which is ſaid to be received again, when ſome of them are received. So verſ. 24. ‘How much more ſhall theſe which be the natural branches, be graffed into their own olive?’ verſ. 31. ‘Even ſo alſo theſe have now not believed, that through your mercy they alſo may obtain mercy.’ Now, this holineſs is in reſpect of ſeparation to God by the decree of election; God having ſo caſt the lot of electing love, that it runs moſt eminently in that vein, or amongſt the natural branches of the root; though it is, by the unſearchable judgments of God, like unto ſome rivers, that having run above ground a good ſpace, get under the earth, and run there, (as Gaudiana in Spain, running under ground fifteen miles,) and afterwards break forth again, to run above the ground, till they empty themſelves into the ſea, as Ovid ſays of Lycus, a river in Lycaonia,

> Sic ubi terenno Lycus eſt epotus hiatu, > Exiſtit procul hinc, alioque renaſcitur ore.

So under the Old-Teſtament diſpenſation, ‘ Happy ‘ waſt thou, O Iſrael; who was like unto thee?’ Now their ſun is overclouded, but we look for the day when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, Rom. xi. 26. Or, if you pleaſe, call it a ſeparation by virtue of the covenant with Abraham; all comes to one thing. Only this holineſs of the branches, you ſee, can give no right to ſealing ordinances. The apoſtle right clearly favours this interpretation, verſ. 28. ‘ As concerning the goſpel, they are ‘ enemies for your ſakes; but as touching the election, ‘ they are beloved for the fathers ſakes.’ Why not holy, as well as beloved of God? not that every individual branch has ſhare, either before God or the church, of the ſpecial love of God; but that the people, and collective body of branches, is ſo beloved of God by others, that out of them he will yet chuſe many to himſelf, having in a ſpecial manner pitched on that ſeed for veſſels of glory. Thus God is ſaid to have ‘ ſo ‘ loved the world,’ (in oppoſition to fallen angels,) ‘ that ‘ he gave his Son, that whoſoever ſhould believe on him, ‘ ſhould have everlaſting life.’ Even as a king may be ſaid to love a particular family, when he takes one or two of that family, and prefers them, while he takes not any notice of other families, though he do not prefer every individual perſon among them. This is plainly confirmed by the apoſtle’s reaſon, verſ. 29. ‘ For the ‘ gifts and calling of God are without repentance.’ Yea, and they are ſtill called ‘ the natural branches,’ and ‘ the olive, their own olive,’ notwithſtanding that they are broken off, verſ. 24. And thus we ſee how the branches broken off are ſaid to be holy. As to that ſcripture, Acts ii. 39. brought for confirmation of the point foreſaid, it is plain, that notwithſtanding they were Abraham’s ſeed, and the promiſe was to them, and to their children, (in what ſenſe we ſhall afterwards enquire,) yet the apoſtle expreſsly prerequires repentance to their admiſſion unto baptiſm.

As to that other ſcripture, Exod. xx. 5, 6. ‘ Shew‘ ing mercy unto thouſands of them that love me;’ whence ſome learned men would prove infants right to baptiſm from their remote parents; I ſuppoſe no ſuch thing can be proven from hence. This promiſe doth not reſpect the children of wicked immediate parents, though the remote ſeed of the godly, as thoſe learned men would have it; but only the children of immediate godly parents, to whom the Lord will ſhew mercy for their parents ſake, and that unto thouſands, viz. ſucceſſively godly; the Lord will ſtill remember thoſe their progenitors, in doing them good; and the longer the godly race has continued, one after another, in the love of God, the better ſhall it be for the children. Now, theſe few reaſons incline me to underſtand it ſo.

I. If by the event we may judge of this promiſe, as doubtleſs we may, we ſhall find, that it cannot be underſtood as thoſe that differ would have it. Take we an inſtance in the ſeed of Abraham. From Abraham to Chriſt, as Matthew reckons, there are reckoned only thrice fourteen generations. However we underſtand the evangeliſt, it is certain, there were but a few generations in compariſon of the thouſand in the text; and yet a very little after, the Jews are broken off, and unchurched, and had no right to the ſeals of the covenant; and long before, the ten tribes, all the ſeed of godly Abraham, were rejected. Yet no doubt the promiſe of God remained ſure; his truth failed not, though the wicked ſeed of Abraham was caſt off, yea, and wrath came on them to the uttermoſt, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. I know that to ward off this, it is ſaid, the promiſe is only to be underſtood of thoſe that are within the church. But, in my opinion, thoſe who will be ſatisfied with this anſwer, are fixed before in the point in queſtion, on ſome better grounds, or elſe they are eaſily ſatisfied: for it ſeems ſtrange, to plead from this text in favours of the children of openly wicked immediate parents, for their right to the ſeals of the covenant, and yet to yield, that God may ſo far take away his mercy from them, notwithſtanding of this promiſe, as to break them off utterly, and put them in the ſame caſe with Pagans, while they, poor ſouls, were not capable to unchurch themſelves; ſo that, notwithſtanding of the piety of their remote parents, they are ruined by their neareſt parents. I would think, that if this promiſe made over church-privileges to ſuch children, it ſhould, in the firſt place, ſecure them from breaking off, and being caſt out of the church; in regard it is made to go over the immediate wicked parents, and the mercy is to be ſhown to their children, being the remote ſeed of the godly. If any ſhall ſay, that, by virtue of this promiſe, the rejected Jews ſhall be received again; it is gratis dictum: for there is nothing here peculiar to the Jews, nothing which may not be applied, and belongs to the Gentiles, and their ſeed, as well as the Jews; and ſo ye may as well argue for the receiving in again of the Laodiceans, Thyatirians, &c. But however it be, notwithſtanding of this promiſe, they are broken off for the time, and have no right to church-privileges.

II. Unleſs our interpretation be admitted, the promiſe and the threatening will be found inconſiſtent. For ſuppoſe the ſecond generation of a wicked man be godly, and alſo the third, the promiſe and the threat both ſhould belong to that third generation; the promiſe, becauſe ſuch a one is the immediate ſeed of the godly, and the Lord will ſhew mercy to thouſands of them that love him; the threatening, becauſe he is the remote ſeed of the wicked, even the third generation; and the threat is, that he will viſit the iniquity of the fathers on the children to the third and fourth generation. And that ſuch caſes may and do fall out, who can deny? An inſtance of it take in the caſe of Rehoboam, whoſe ſon was like himſelf, 1 Kings xv. 3. He walked in all the ſins of his father, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord. Yet Aſa, the ſecond from Rehoboam, did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, as did David his father, ver. 11. And the third, Jehoſhaphat, was a godly man. See then, according to the interpretation of thoſe that differ, if both the promiſe and threat belong not to Jehoſhaphat?

III. Unleſs we expound it of the immediate ſeed of the godly, there are none, or at leaſt very few in the world, not comprehended in this promiſe: for I think it will be hard to find any in the world that are a thouſand generations removed from godly parents. And truly, if it be ſo very good and profitable to be come of godly parents ſo far remote, genealogies are no more vain under the New Teſtament than under the Old.

Thus it would ſeem, that children derive their church-right to baptiſm from their immediate, and not from their remote parents. But I will add yet ſome more for proof of that point; and will try whether thoſe texts alledged on the contrary, have led us to any thing that may be helpful to our purpoſe.

Arg. I. The child ſtands coram eccleſia for church-privileges by the ſame perſons by whom he falls. This propoſition, I think, cannot be denied in the matter of moral ſtanding, and right to privileges, whether civil or religious; and of no other ſtanding do we ſpeak here. But ſo it is, that infants fall from church-privileges by their immediate parents: Ergo, they ſtand by them. The minor is clear from the caſe of the Jewiſh infants at the rejection of that people. That their infants fell from all right before the church to the ſeal of the covenant, is clear; and I think none will doubt it: for they were the natural branches as well as others, and were capable of reingraffing; and the believing Gentiles comes with his ſeed in the room of the unbelieving Jews and his. Well then, the apoſtle tells us, it was for unbelief they were broken off, Rom. xi. 20. If ſo, then either becauſe of their own, or their parents unbelief; not becauſe of their own, for they were not capable of rejecting Chriſt in their own perſons; if becauſe of the parents unbelief, then either of their remote or immediate parents; not becauſe of the unbelief of their remote parents; for their root was holy, verſe 16.; therefore becauſe of the unbelief of their next parents. I think none will quarrel our reaſoning from the caſe of the Jewiſh children to thoſe of Chriſtians, but Anabaptiſts and Socinians. I ſee not what exception any would enter againſt this argument, unleſs it be, that theſe Jews they profeſſedly rejected Chriſt; but the openly wicked Chriſtians, of whom we ſpeak, do not. But let the difference be what it will; though theſe Jews had turned profeſſed Atheiſts, ſtill it remains true, that unleſs their children had ſtood by them, they could not have fallen by them. I find Fulwood brings in this as an objection againſt his doctrine, "That children ſtand in the viſible "church in their parents right:" and anſwers, "That "the infant's right is ſeated in itſelf, though it be de"rived from its parents." And this he proves by four arguments. But, in my opinion, he needed not have been at the pains; for I doubt if there be any that ſay the child's right is ſeated in the parent, whether it be underſtood of his right before God or the viſible church. But ſure it is, the child can have no viſible right to the ſeals of the covenant, but as he is the child of ſuch mediate or immediate parents, that have right to the ſame, and are members of the church; and his viſible right ſtands or falls with theirs. So that it may well enough be ſaid, that they ſtand in their parents right, or that they ſtand before the church by their parents.

Arg. II. If the repentance of immediate parents be neceſſarily prerequiſite unto their infants right to baptiſm (I mean the viſible repentance of the parents to the viſible right of the infants) notwithſtanding that the infants are the remote ſeed of undoubtedly godly parents; then infants derive their right to baptiſm from their immediate, not their mediate parents; but the antecedent is true: Ergo. The conſequent alſo. The ſequel is manifeſt. The aſſumption I prove from Acts ii. 38, 39. Repent and be baptized for the remiſſion, &c. Here are two ſorts of perſons ſpoken of, viz. the adult, perſons, who were perſonally guilty of the murder of the Son of God; and their ſeed, or little ones. Both were Abraham's ſeed, at leaſt moſt of them were ſo: for however theſe words, and as many as were afar off, &c. be explained; yet none can doubt but the natural ſeed of Abraham are deſigned in theſe words, For the promiſe is to you, and to your children. So the children here ſpoken of, are the children of remote godly parents. Two things here remain to be proven for clearing of the aſſumption; 1. That repentance is required as neceſſary antecedently to a right to baptiſm here injoined. 2. That in the call to baptiſm, the children of thoſe parents are comprehended as well as themſelves.

1. As to the firſt, That repentance is required of the parents in this text, as neceſſarily prerequiſite to a right to the baptiſm urged by the apoſtle, is plain, if ye conſider, in the firſt place, That if they had right to baptiſm antecedently to their repentance, the apoſtle could not have denied the ſame unto them till they did declare it; and that the rather, that they were now pricked at the heart for their murdering of Chriſt, and crying out, What ſhall we do to be ſaved. Yet we find the apoſtle requires in the firſt place, that they ſhould repent, and ſtays their baptiſm till they have evidenced their repentance, notwithſtanding that their preſent perplexity required a ſpeedy poſſeſſion of thoſe privileges they had right unto. And when the apoſtles do fall a baptizing, they baptize thoſe, and thoſe only, who gladly received Peter's word, ver. 41. Further, how could they have been baptized antecedently to their repentance, ſeeing they were to be baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, as ſays the text; and none but Chriſt's diſciples ought to be baptized? Matth. xxviii. 19. They could not be accounted Chriſt's diſciples till they profeſſed their faith in him, and their repentance; and conſequently till then could have no right coram eccleſia to baptiſm in his name. Finally, they are called to be baptized for the remiſſion of ſins, non obtinendam, ſed obſignandam, i. e. in teſtimony of remiſſion of ſins: but this could not be before faith, ſeeing it is by faith we obtain remiſſion; and faith cannot be without repentance. Wherefore it is evident, they are called to repentance as neceſſary antecedently to baptiſm.

2. For the ſecond, That the call to baptiſm here comprehends the children of theſe parents as well as themſelves. Metanoeſate, kai baptiſtheto ekaſtos humon. The authors of Antiſynodalia Americana will have theſe words (if I right remember) read and every one of you be baptized, (it ſeems,) that the ſenſe may be, every one of you that repent be baptized. But as our tranſlation is exactly according to the original, ſo the call to repentance and to baptiſm, are of equal latitude, as the words plainly bear, and the nature of things themſelves, as was ſhown before; otherwiſe it was no ſin in them that rejected baptiſm ſo to do, providing only they did not repent, though under this call; which methinks is no ſound divinity. But to the point; This appears, if ye conſider theſe particulars. 1. Here is expreſs mention made of their children together with themſelves, 'For 'the promiſe is to you, and to your children.' Now, thoſe to whom is the promiſe, are by this call obliged to be baptized; but the promiſe was to their children as well as themſelves: Ergo. If any doubt the major, I might prove it thus: If the gift of the Holy Ghoſt was to be given after baptiſm, then thoſe to whom the promiſe is made, are called to be baptized; the former is true: Ergo. The reaſon of the conſequence is, becauſe the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, and the promiſe being to them, are joined together; the latter as the ground of the former. The aſſumption appears from the apoſtle's own words, 'Be baptized,——and ye ſhall receive the 'gift of the Holy Ghoſt.' 2. To what other end ſhould mention be made of their children, but that the apoſtle would have them to repent, ſo that both they and their ſeed might receive the ſeal of the covenant? This, I think, muſt be granted, unleſs we will join hands with the Anabaptiſts, and delay the baptiſm of their children till ſuch time as they were capable perſonally to evidence their repentance. 3. The ſcope of the apoſtle, which was to comfort thoſe that were pricked at the heart for the murdering of the Lord of glory, doth prove this. They ſaw now what it was to be guilty of Chriſt's blood, and doubtleſs (as an awakened ſoul has a quick memory for bygone ſins) they remembered well, that ſome time they had cried out, His blood be on us, and our children. Wherefore, that the plaſter might be as broad as the ſore, it was neceſſary that there ſhould be taught the reception of their children to baptiſm, together with themſelves; and ſo both were called together thereto. 4. In all examples of the parents call to receive the firſt ſeal of the covenant, the children alſo are comprehended, whether under the Old or New Teſtament diſpenſations; and how can it be otherwiſe, ſeeing God has ſaid, he will be the believer's God, and the God of his ſeed alſo?

Arg. III. God threatens that he will viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate him; but promiſeth to ſhew mercy to thouſands of them that love him, and keep his commandments. I have already proven, that the promiſe is only to the immediate ſeed of godly parents; and by the ſame labour, that the threatning is only to the immediate ſeed of the ungodly: and as I ſaid of the meaning of the promiſe, its being extended to thouſands; ſo ſay I of the threatening, its being extended to the third and fourth generation, viz. ſucceſſively, and one after another ungodly. God, in puniſhing the children, will remember the iniquity of their fathers and grandfathers; they being ſtill the children only of the wicked. Now whatever elſe the mercy promiſed doth comprehend, I think it will be denied by none but Anabaptiſts, and ſuch as they, that it includes a viſible right to the firſt ſeal of the covenant. By the ſame reaſon then, the threatening includes the contrary; and ſo God himſelf in his holy and wiſe diſpenſations, has explained it, while he hath broken off wicked parents and their ſeed from the viſible church, and all right to church privileges. The ſcripture then affords us a twofold argument for our purpoſe.

Arg. 1. from the threatening. If God viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children of immediate wicked parents, then the children of immediate wicked parents have no right to baptiſm, though they be the remote ſeed of the godly; the former is true: Ergo. The ſequel, which only needs proof, is thus evinced: The mercy promiſed to the children of God, comprehends a grant of viſible right to the initiating ſeal made to them; Ergo, the judgment threatened to the children of wicked parents, comprehends a denuding them of, or a denying unto them, a viſible right to the ſame; for contrariorum contraria ſunt conſequentia. And otherwiſe, they to whom the threatening viſibly belongs, ſhall have the mercy of the promiſe viſibly belonging to them alſo; not without great appearance of confuſion of thoſe things which God hath ſo divided and diſtinguiſhed. This reaſoning the learned Zanchius yields to us in theſi, though in hypotheſi he is againſt it. His words are, “There is a certain antitheſis betwixt the “promiſe and threatening. Now, what doth he pro“miſe, when he ſays, He will ſhew mercy to thoſe that “love him? temporal good things only? not at all; “but eternal life, according to that, He that doth theſe “things, ſhall live in them: and in many places he “promiſeth ſalvation to them that keep his law. There“fore alſo in the threatening, he threatens eternal “death.” Yet the ſame learned man will not allow us to conclude from this, that the children of thoſe parents who are excluded from the covenant for their iniquities and defections, are excluded alſo. But why, upon the ſame ground we may not argue as before is done, I ſee not. Nothing can ſtrike againſt the one, that doth not equally militate againſt the other. But ſays the learned man, “Surely when we come to the fourth generation, “where thoſe fathers alſo are wicked, and excluded from “the covenant for their own wickedneſs; their chil“dren alſo, belonging to the fifth generation, muſt ne“ceſſarily be ſuppoſed to be excluded from the covenant; “and likewiſe their children, and ſo on. How then “would it be true that the Lord ſays, he will not ex“tend this curſe but to the fourth generation at moſt?” I anſwer, with all deference to that judicious man, there is no abſurdity in this conſequence that he draws from the opinion of thoſe that differ from him; yea, the threatening itſelf obligeth us to believe it, it being ſuppoſed they are ſtill wicked one after another; for ſurely even the fifth generation, in the caſe ſuppoſed, are the children of thoſe that hate God, and ſo liable to the threatening; only the fifth generation, according to the threat, hath not the ſins of any of the former, but the fourth, remembered againſt them in the puniſhment; and ſo on, till we come to the third and fourth generation again; whereby the Lord ſhews himſelf indeed ſlow to wrath, but abundant in goodneſs; while on the other hand, the mercy promiſed extends to thouſands. And thus we ſee how it remains true, that God will not extend this curſe beyond the fourth generation, that is, viſiting the iniquities of the grandfathers upon the children. But nevertheleſs, if there ſhould be thouſands of quaternions of wicked generations, the denial of mercy ſhould be carried down through them all, according to the threatening. If the learned man mean, that we cannot refuſe, according to our interpretation, to allow the fifth generation of ſucceſſively wicked perſons the ſeal of the covenant; I deny any ſuch thing follows, but the contrary, as was cleared before. But if he take that to be true, it deſerves conſideration how that can agree with God's diſpenſation, in viſiting the iniquities of the fathers on the children among the Jews, ſixteen hundred years and upwards; not to ſpeak of the Pagans. It can no more be inferred from thence, then, that God will not give the mercy to more than thouſands of them that love him. But when God minds the mercy we ſpeak of, either to the fourth or fifth generation, the mercy, I ſay, of viſible right to the firſt ſeal of the covenant in their infancy, we may expect he will deal with the third or fourth ſo as to make way for it.

Arg. 2. from the promiſe. If the mercy promiſed belongs only to the immediate ſeed of godly parents, then children derive their viſible right to the ordinance of baptiſm from their immediate, not from their mediate parents: the former is true; Ergo. The reaſon of the conſequence is, Becauſe a viſible right to the firſt ſeal of the covenant is comprehended in this mercy, whatever more it include; which I need not ſtand to prove, till the arguing of the orthodox from this text, againſt Anabaptiſts, be invalidated. The aſſumption I have already proven by three reaſons. And I ſhall now add a fourth from the ſcope of the words. The ſcope plainly is this: That ſeeing it is natural for parents to deſire the proſperity and happineſs of their ſeed, and the evil that cometh on their children, eſpecially by their means, is afflicting and heavy to them; therefore, as they would not ruin the fruit of their bodies, they ſhould take heed that they depart not from the way of God's commandments; and as they would have their children to enjoy the mercy of God, they would ſhew themſelves to be lovers of God, and keepers of his commandments. That this is the ſcope of the place, is paſt doubt with me. This the learned man before mentioned doth grant. “If then (ſays he) their children be dear to them, at “leaſt on their account let them not revolt from the “true worſhip of God to idolatry. Surely this is the “end of this commination.” But how the contrary opinion agrees with the ſcope, I cannot ſee. Now, let us conſider the Iſraelites, to whom the law was immediately given. It is pleaded, that the open wickedneſs of immediate parents among them did not take away this mercy from their ſeed; but they derived their viſible right to the ſeal from the holy root, which was Abraham alone, or Iſaac and Jacob alſo. But theſe holy men were dead long before, ſo that there was no need to ſtir them up to keep God's commandments, being then in glory: and as for that generation of adult perſons, it could have no influence on them, being ſo underſtood; what needed they fear the threat, ſeeing their infants were already ſecured from any harm they could do them, ſeeing they were the remote ſeed of the godly? The promiſe could have no influence on them either; ſeeing by virtue thereof, however holy they were, their infants could have no advantage they had not before, from Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob. So that the threatening and promiſe both are rendered quite uſeleſs to them, and could have no tendency to the ſtirring up of them to a holy life; unleſs their fearing where no fear was, and hoping where there was no ground, could have efficacy on them. The ſame way is it rendered uſeleſs to us Gentiles, ſuppoſing once that we have had but one godly remote parent. I ſee no way to evite this, unleſs we ſay, that the mercy promiſed has no reſpect to a viſible right to the ſeal of the covenant, and ſo gratify the Anabaptiſts; or deny this to be the ſcope of the place. Either of which they may venture on that will. I dare not. It is in vain to ſay, that the mercy in the promiſe comprehends many particular mercies; and though that one was ſecured to them as the children of remote godly parents, yet there might be ſome others that the children might meet with, through the holy life of their immediate parents. For, though it might be, that they ſhould have many mercies, through the holy life of their immediate parents; yet none at all by virtue of this promiſe, which they had not before by their remote parents: for though the mercy promiſed comprehend ten thouſand particular mercies, they are all in that one word made over to the children of thoſe that love God; and if theſe be the remote parents, in the ſuppoſed caſe, then they are all made over unto the remote ſeed of the godly, though the immediate ſeed of wicked ones, as upon the account of the remote parents. But nothing can be more agreeable to the ſcope, than to underſtand it only of the immediate ſeed of godly parents: and it is eaſy to perceive what an incentive to a holy life it muſt needs be to every parent. It is very probable it would ſcar many from their open wickedneſs, if it were duly preſſed doctrinally, and followed accordingly in the way of diſcipline. And I am truly apprehenſive, that the blunting of the edge of this threat and promiſe, is one of the pillows of the ſecurity of our day, and fills our congregations with ſo many people as would not be tolerated in a well-ordered commonwealth. I will add yet.

Arg. 3. From the threat and promiſe jointly conſidered. If the children of openly wicked immediate parents may be acknowledged by the church to have a right to the ſeal of the covenant, on the account of their remote godly parents, as well as the children of godly immediate parents; then the church ſhould make no difference betwixt the children of thoſe that love God, and thoſe that hate him: but that ought not to be ſo. For where God in his word hath made a difference, the church ought to do ſo too; for in all things revealed we are bound to follow God's judgment: but ſuch practice ſeems to thwart with it, as the text ſhews; God having put ſo manifeſt a difference betwixt them, that he will viſit the iniquities of the fathers upon the one, and ſhew mercy to the other. It ſeems then, we ought to ſeparate betwixt the precious and the vile, put difference between the holy and profane, even in this caſe. Let none ſay, they know not who are the precious, who the vile, amongſt infants. Here is God's revelation of his mind, for the terror of the wicked, that he will viſit their iniquities on their children. If the Lord be pleaſed to bring elect veſſels out of the loins of openly wicked parents, and of his free grace to give them his Holy Spirit, as no doubt he may do, and many times actually doth; yet de occultis non judicat eccleſia. We are to wait till we ſee the ſame evidenced by their perſonal carriage; and in the mean time, we go according to the plain revealed word, leaving ſecret things unto the Lord: even as we are to look on the ſeed of viſible believers as viſible ſaints, and to deal with them as ſuch, till by their walk they manifeſt the contrary. Wherefore, there is no ground to ſay, as Zanchy, that "this is repugnant to God's eternal election, ſeeing that many times elect children "are born of wicked parents and idolatrous reprobates." What though they be elected, we have no evidence of it; without which, as to us, it is as if it were not. Truly, if this ſhould hold good, there is no infants of the moſt barbarous ſavages in the world but have a right to baptiſm; for who knows but they are elected, and in due time will be called? But I ſuppoſe, in admitting to baptiſm, the church looks to the party's being in Chriſt, and having the Spirit; not to his election immediately or ſolely; for even the elect may be for a time dogs and ſwine, not fit ſubjects of ſealing ordinances. If any ſay, that they do make a difference betwixt thoſe children requiring ſponſors, in order to the adminiſtering of the ſeal to the children of openly wicked parents: I anſwer, 1. I wiſh it were ſo ordinarily, that ſponſors were required for the children of ſuch parents as are not themſelves viſible believers. 2. If the godly parents die before the child's baptiſm, where is the difference? But, 3. There is no difference at all in point of right to the ordinance and church-ſtate: for ſtill the one as well as the other is ſuppoſed to have right to the ordinance as ſuch a ſeed; and the children of the godly are not baptized without ſponſors either.

Arg. IV. If the children be unclean, unleſs the unbelieving huſband be ſanctified by the believing wife, or the unbelieving wife be ſanctified by the believing huſband, then the children derive their right to baptiſm from their immediate parents; the former is true: Ergo. All this is clear from the teſtimony of the apoſtle, 1 Cor. vii. 14. For the unbelieving huſband is ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife——by the huſband: elſe were your children unclean; but now they are holy. So that the apoſtle plainly turns this matter of the childrens holineſs, and conſequently of their right to the ordinance, on the ſtate of the immediate parents, as the only hinge of it coram eccleſia. I do eaſily perceive an exception that will be entered againſt this argument by thoſe that differ, to wit, That in this caſe there were no remote parents from whom the children could derive their right: theſe immediate parents being both once Pagans, come of Pagan parents, though now the father or mother was a believer; and ſo can make no general rule. Anſw. Grant theſe parents to whoſe caſe the apoſtle applies this, were all come of mere Pagans; which nevertheleſs will be impoſſible to prove, but that ſome of them might be the children of parents proſelyted to the Jewiſh church; yet the rule that the apoſtle lays down here, is a general rule for all ſuch caſes wherein a believer is yoked with an unbeliever, For the unbelieving——is ſanctified——elſe were your children unclean, &c. This, I think, cannot be denied. Let us then ſuppoſe the believing wife, a daughter of a believer, but the wife of an unbeliever; ſuch a caſe not only may be, but no doubt has been. It is no ſtrange thing to imagine an unbeliever to profeſs faith and repentance, and that to gain marriage with a believing woman; and thereafter to turn back again to infidelity, and that openly, when he has accompliſhed his deſign: yea, it is very ſuppoſable, and like unto the Lord's dealing in his ordinary diſpenſation of grace, that there were ſome in Corinth in that caſe, the father and the daughter called, but her huſband left to remain in infidelity, or vice verſa. In this caſe then I aſk, whether or no the children of the believer and unbeliever ſhould be holy, and have right to the ſeal of the covenant, though the unbelieving huſband were not ſanctified by the believing wife? If you ſay, they muſt be holy, as you muſt ſay, while ſo much ſtreſs is laid on a child's being the remote ſeed of the godly (for ſo the child is in the ſuppoſed caſe) then you plainly contradict the apoſtle, teaching, that unleſs the unbelieving huſband were ſanctified by the believing wife, the children were unclean, not holy. If you ſay, they ſhould not be holy, unleſs the unbelieving huſband were ſanctified by the believing wife, then you plainly derive the child's right from the immediate parent, and acknowledge that the piety of the remote parent giveth not a viſible right to the ordinance unto the child; which is the very thing we plead for. Moreover, let us ſuppoſe among theſe Corinthians a believing father, his daughter, a wife, and her huſband, both unbelievers; which I think, is a very rational ſuppoſition: I aſk, whether or no their children be holy? If they be holy, then I would know what children under heaven are unholy. If they be not, then the piety of remote parents doth not evidence their ſeed to be holy, and infants derive not their right from godly remote parents. We have a caſe in the Old Teſtament, which we ſhall conſider here: Ezra x. 3. Now therefore let us make a covenant with our God, to put away all the ſtrange wives, and ſuch as are born of them. Ver. 16. And the children of the captivity did ſo. Ver. ult. And ſome of them had wives by whom they had children. Now, I would know whether or not thoſe children born to the Jews of their ſtrange wives, were holy children, and had right to the ſeal of the covenant? If they were, it is ſtrange they ſhould put away their holy children, or that the fierce wrath of the Lord ſhould go out againſt them for keeping ſuch a holy generation. This looks not very like God's way, to put out of his church a holy ſeed. To ſay they were to be put away becauſe they rejected the covenant of God, is gratis dictum; ſurely ſome of them were not capable to reject the covenant. Yet thoſe children put away, were the remote ſeed of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, as much as Boaz, whom Salmon begat of Rahab a Canaanite; and Obed whom Boaz begat of Ruth the Moabiteſs, and many others. Theſe two are expreſsly owned by Matthew to be the children of Abraham, Matth. i. 2. 5.: yet were not theſe children holy; and conſequently, ſome of the children of Abraham Iſaac, and Jacob, were not holy; and that though born within the viſible church: which, I think, ſhould go far to prove the main point now under conſideration. How was it then that they were unclean, and not holy? I know no other reaſon can be given, but that their mothers were not ſanctified to their fathers for bringing forth of a holy ſeed. The contrary whereof was in the caſe of the Corinthians; which ſtill hangs all on the ſtate of the immediate parents. Whatever diſparity be betwixt theſe two caſes, here is all we are ſeeking after, viz. children come of godly remote parents, born within the church likewiſe, as that phraſe is commonly uſed, yet unholy, having no right to the ſeal of the covenant, becauſe of the ſtate of their immediate parents. And if a thouſand differences betwixt theſe two caſes ſhould be produced, ſo long as they agree in the point for which they are adduced, the cauſe is ſafe.

Arg. V. ult. A curſed ſeed have no right to the ſeal of the covenant; but the children of openly wicked immediate parents, though they be the remote ſeed of the godly, are a viſibly curſed ſeed. This is plain from Deut. xxviii. 18. where God tells the Iſraelites, even the ſeed of Abraham, that 'if they did not hearken 'to the voice of the Lord, to obſerve to do all his com'mandments, the fruit of their body ſhould be curſed.' Hence it follows, that childrens right to the ſeal of the covenant is derived only from their immediate parents, not from their remote parents: for notwithſtanding of the holineſs of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, God will curſe their remote ſeed, becauſe of their immediate parents. Now, whom God has declared in his word to be curſed, they are viſibly curſed; which is inconſiſtent with a right to a ſealing ordinance, as I ſhall afterwards prove, when I come to improve this argument further. And ſo much for the proof of infants deriving their right to church-privileges, or to the ſacrament of baptiſm coram eccleſia, from their immediate parents only.

I come now to offer ſome arguments to prove, that none but the children of viſible believers, or ſuch as make a viſible profeſſion, have right before the church, or a viſible right, to the ſacrament of baptiſm. Having fixed the former point, viz. That infants derive their viſible right to baptiſm from their immediate, not their remote parents; now the queſtion is, Whether or not it be neceſſary, in order to the child's viſible right to baptiſm, that one of the immediate parents be a viſible believer, or have a probable or credible profeſſion? We offer the following arguments for the affirmative.

Arg. I. If no infants but thoſe whereof one of the parents do commend themſelves and their ſeed to the church, either by their converſation, or by their baptiſm, have right before the church to that ordinance; then no children but thoſe whereof one of the parents is a viſible believer, have a viſible right to the ſame; the antecedent is true: Ergo, the conſequent alſo. The truth of the antecedent is acknowledged, at leaſt by ſome of thoſe that differ, while they do neceſſarily require that it appear to the church, that one of the parents have been baptized, otherwiſe the children can have no viſible right to the ordinance; though indeed they think this ſufficient to intitle their children to baptiſm, though their walk be not as becomes the goſpel in any tolerable meaſure. I ſuppoſe thoſe learned men that do require the evidence of the baptiſm of one of the parents, underſtand it as the minimum quod ſit, that the church can be ſatisfied in this matter with nothing leſs than this: though albeit this were wanting, if the parents commend themſelves and their ſeed to the church, by a credible profeſſion or holy converſation in the ſight of men, they would look on this as giving their infants a viſible right to the ſeal. If it be not underſtood thus, I cannot yield to it. I doubt not but in ſome caſes, the adminiſtrator of baptiſm may have greater clearneſs to baptize the child of an unbaptized perſon, than of many that are certainly known to have been baptized. The child of ſuch a parent may have a viſible right to baptiſm: for it is plain, that an unbaptized parent may have faith and repentance, and that ſo as they may ſufficiently appear to the church to be believers and penitent, while in the mean time there is not the leaſt ſhadow of thoſe things in many that are baptized. Now, by faith the ſoul is entered into covenant with God; and at the ſame time the parent is taken into covenant, his child alſo is brought into the covenant; whence it appears, that both parent and child have a viſible right to baptiſm, antecedently to the baptiſm of the parent. So theſe converts, Acts ii. they had viſible right to baptiſm before they were baptized, and this by reaſon of their probable profeſſion; which alſo gave their children a viſible right thereto as ſoon as they themſelves had it. So, put the caſe ſuch parents ſhould have died before they were baptized, it could not have robbed the children of their viſible right which they had to the ſeal of the covenant. Yea, I ſuppoſe the truth of the antecedent is yielded by them all, viz. that one of the two, either the baptiſm, or elſe a viſible godly converſation of one of the parents, is neceſſary to the child's viſible right to baptiſm. As for thoſe that go to the remote parents for the child's right, we are agreed in that the viſible piety of parents is neceſſary. Only they ſay, the piety of the remote parents is neceſſary; we ſay, it is the immediate parent, as has been proven. Others expreſs themſelves thus, that the children of ſuch as are probably judged within the covenant, have right to baptiſm. Now, this probable judgment muſt needs proceed upon one of the two things mentioned. And as for thoſe who ſay, that the infants of wicked parents being born within the church, have right to baptiſm, I think it is plain they mean by that, born of baptized parents. Either they mean it ſo, or that it is the place of their birth that gives them this privilege. I could ſcarcely have thought any could have been ſo abſurd as to have affirmed the latter. Yet I find one zealous aſſertor of the real and viſible title that the children of openly wicked parents have to baptiſm, tells us, that there are many arguments urged by divines for it, that to him were never ſatisfactorily anſwered; whereof this is one: "That ſuch children have their right ſupplied "from the holineſs of the place or people wherein they "are born." I wiſh he had told us what divines thoſe are that urge this argument. I doubt if he can ſhew us any of whom he will have much credit, that ever aſſerted ſuch a thing. He might have left out the people here, for there are none born in people, but in the place where a holy people lives; but by this addition he ſeems to anſwer a queſtion ariſing from his own words, which I fancy would puzzle many great divines; and that is, How a place now under the goſpel-diſpenſation is made holy, eſpecially ſo holy, that the very birth of an infant in it gives it a real title and viſible right to the holy ordinance of baptiſm? Anſw. There is a holy people lives in that place. But I would propoſe more queſtions ſtill upon the back of that. What holineſs is that that a holy people communicate to the ſpot of ground where they live? And what is the way how they make it holy? And by virtue of what appointment of God is it that Engliſh ground is holy, where a holy people lives? And whether or no we may ſuffer Pagans to come in, and defile our holy place with their unclean feet? And how came it that the land of Egypt and Babylon were not made holy places, ſeeing they were places where God's holy people lived for many years? Why had not the Egyptian and Babyloniſh infants a right to circumciſion from the holineſs of the place and people wherein they are born? No doubt if this learned man had been living in the ſeventh century, when Auguſtine came from the Biſhop of Rome, and called the Britons to help him in the converſion of the Saxons that were Heathens, he would have thought their anſwer very unmannerly (as indeed it cannot be approven,) viz. That they were not obliged to preach to their enemies, ſeeing the Saxons had ſpoiled them of their lands, and did ſtill continue to prey upon them; but he would off-hand, not only have preached to them but baptized their infants, in regard of the holineſs of the place and pariſh wherein they lived; for, beſides the ancient inhabitants, the Queen was a Chriſtian, and had her preacher; and the King was converted too afterwards by means of Auguſtine, and no doubt he did not alone embrace the Chriſtian religion. But enough of this. Paul uſed another way of arguing, 1 Cor. vii. 14. 'For the unbelieving huſband is ſanctified by the wife, and the unbelieving wife is ſanctified by the huſband: elſe were your children unclean; but now are they holy;' though theſe infants were born in a place where God had a church. And I do not think we ſhall find many to conclude if a Pagan woman were caſt out upon our coaſt, and brought forth a child, that ipſo facto, the child ſhould have a right to baptiſm. But I proceed to prove the ſequel of the major thus: The baptiſm of a parent that hath no credible profeſſion, or is an openly wicked perſon, is not ſufficient to commend himſelf to the church, or to commend his ſeed to her, for the ſeal of the covenant: Ergo, the ſequel ſtands good. For if one of theſe two, the baptiſm or the credible profeſſion of the parent, be neceſſary to this end, then it clearly follows, that if his baptiſm be inſufficient to that end, and yet he have no credible profeſſion, his child hath no viſible right to baptiſm: and ſo none but the children of viſible believers are thus privileged. I prove the antecedent, That baptiſm that ought to be looked upon as unprofitable and non-baptiſm, cannot commend a man's ſeed to the church, as having viſible right to baptiſm: but that baptiſm which is without a credible profeſſion ought to be looked upon as unprofitable and non-baptiſm: Ergo, the propoſition is clear. The aſſumption I ſhall prove by the following reaſons.

Reaſ. I. The apoſtle tells us expreſsly, Rom. ii. 25. 'Circumciſion verily profiteth, if thou keep the law: but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumciſion is made uncircumciſion.' I hope thoſe that differ will allow us to argue from circumciſion to baptiſm; and will eaſily acknowledge, that we may ſay the ſame concerning baptiſm, 'Baptiſm verily profiteth,' &c. Urſin arguing for the neceſſity of church diſcipline, among other reaſons, gives this for it: "Thoſe that are not yet baptized, muſt not be admitted to the ſupper: but baptiſm is not baptiſm to thoſe that fall away from their baptiſm," Rom. ii. 25. Ergo. I hope none will think he is arguing for the neceſſity of church-diſcipline to be exerciſed againſt Turks, Pagans, and Jews; but the openly wicked of whom we ſpeak; as is manifeſt from what he ſays in the ſame page. It is evident the apoſtle ſpeaks here of the openly wicked Jews, who had the outward ſign of circumciſion, but a profane converſation; as is clear from the preceding verſes. So that verſ. 24. he plainly tells them, the name of God was blaſphemed among the Gentiles, becauſe of them, (as it is in our caſe,) which manifeſtly argues open wickedneſs, with a profeſſion of religion. Yet becauſe of their circumciſion they valued themſelves highly: but the apoſtle ſhews them they had no profit of it, but their circumciſion was by their profane life made uncircumciſion. "He anſwers, (ſays a learned commentator on the place,) That the outward ſacramental ſymbols profit nothing without good life and manners; ——without which circumciſion differs nothing from uncircumciſion; that is, a Jew differs nothing from a Heathen." If then God in his word hath pronounced the circumciſion of openly wicked perſons to be unprofitable and uncircumciſion, and he hath declared his mind concerning the baptiſm of openly wicked Chriſtians; the church ought to look upon it to be ſuch as God declared it to be, that is, unprofitable and non-baptiſm. If this hold good, it ſays much to the point. I ſhall conſider what exceptions may poſſibly be entered againſt it, ſo far as they occur to me.

Exc. 1. It would follow then, that ſuch ſhould be rebaptized when they repent. Anſw. I deny it would follow, more than thoſe to whom circumciſion became uncircumciſion by their profane life, ought to have been circumciſed again upon their repentance; which was never done: and yet this was no new, but the good old way, the apoſtle lays down here. Although, as Chriſt teacheth, by excommunication a man is made to be as a Heathen; yet the rebaptizing of an excommunicated perſon upon his repentance, is not urged. I ſay then with Urſin, in anſwer to the ſame objection, that "reception by baptiſm is ratified to penitents, even without the iteration of the ſign." Indeed, if baptiſm were of the kind of phyſical cauſes, this exception might poſſibly have ſome force; for when a Phyſical cauſe is unprofitable and as good as none, there muſt needs be a new application, or elſe the effect is not produced; as when a plaſter is laid to a ſore, if it be unprofitable, and as good as none, there muſt needs be a new application made, or the party cannot be healed. But the baptiſm is no phyſical cauſe, but a moral cauſe; which, though unprofitable, and as good as none to a perſon ſometimes; yet, without a new application, it may become profitable: as ſuppoſe a ſeal were appended to blank paper, even the King's ſeal, and given to a man, what is he the better of it, what doth it profit? nothing at all: but if the King ſhall write on that paper a grant of a penſion, then it profits indeed. But you ſee plainly there needs no iteration of the ſign. The application is eaſy.

Exc. 2. The apoſtle means, that circumciſion profits nothing to juſtification, though otherwiſe it may. I anſwer, Non diſtinguendum ubi lex non diſtinguit. The apoſtle ſimply, without any limitation, pronounceth, that 'circumciſion profiteth nothing, if a man be a breaker of the law.' To which that is a plain contradiction, 'Circumciſion profiteth ſomething, though a man be a breaker of the law.' Yea, he tells them roundly, it is uncircumciſion, and therefore unprofitable, not only to juſtification, but to all intents and purpoſes. And I think it can ſcarcely be denied by any that conſiders the apoſtle's diſcourſe, but that hereby he levels the openly wicked Jews with the Heathens in point of circumciſion, ſo that the one had as much real profit of it as the other, that is, none at all. Yet further, I do indeed believe, that the great thing the apoſtle is aiming at in theſe chapters, is juſtification by the free grace of God; and to this end he endeavours, in this chapter, to beat down the boaſting of the wicked Jews, (as, in the next chapter, he proves all, both Jews and others, to be guilty before God:) for effecting of which, he lays out before them their vitious lives ſo unanſwerable to the written law that God gave them; which has a native tendency to his main ſcope and deſign: and withal tells them, that their circumciſion would not cover their wickedneſs. But notwithſtanding of that, they were wicked men ſtill, as he clearly ſhews, ver. 28, 29. ‘ For he is not a Jew, ‘ which is one outwardly ——but he is a Jew, which ‘ is one inwardly,’ [illegible] I ſee no reaſon to underſtand the words of [illegible] we are now upon, as the exception gives it, [illegible] it profiteth nothing to juſtification, but in [illegible] is uncircumciſion. Read the whole text accordingly, and I ſuppoſe we may find the weakneſs, yea and unſoundneſs of this exception. “ For “ circumciſion [illegible] profiteth to juſtification, if thou “ keep the law: [illegible] thou be a breaker of the law, thy “ circumciſion is made uncircumciſion in point of juſ“ tification.” Now by juſtification here, is either meant [illegible] free grace, or juſtification by works. If [illegible] the free grace of God, according to the [illegible] grace, be meant; how does circumciſion [illegible]? has that any hand in our juſtification? If juſtification by works, according to the old covenant; then I aſk, by what appointment of God was ever circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, made [illegible] for juſtification by works? Let any ſuch appointment be produced, and then we ſhall ſee the law and the goſpel confounded. Wherefore, though a man ſhould keep the law of works, circumciſion ſhould profit him nothing to juſtification: yea, poſſibly I may ſay, if he ſhould go about it as a piece of God's worſhip, it ſhould contribute to his condemnation, in regard it is no part of the law of works, and therefore to him ſhould be [illegible]ſhip. And ſo, if any ſhall ſay, that though circumciſion was never appointed to be a ſeal of the covenant of works, yet it might profit as a commanded [illegible], and as an act of obedience to the law of works; I confidently deny it, that it could be an act of obedience to the law of works, that could ever profit that way. And the reaſon is, becauſe God never commanded it to be uſed but as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith; nor did it ever belong, before God, to any but ſuch as were in the covenant of grace with him; nor before the church, to any but ſuch as were viſibly in that covenant. The law and grace hath two diſtinct dominions, Rom. vi. 14.; ſo that receiving of circumciſion could no more be an act of obedience to the law of works, than the obeying of a particular law of the kingdom of England can be an act of obedience to the law of Scotland, though both kingdoms be under one ſovereign. Only I deſire it to be noticed, that when I deny that the receiving of circumciſion could be an act of obedience to the law of works, I deny it only in the ſenſe it is aſſerted in the inſtance againſt our anſwer to the exception; that is, that it could be an act of obedience to the law of works profiting to juſtification, thereby, as a part of a law righteouſneſs; which is the plain ſenſe of the inſtance. The reaſon why I add this caution, is this, Becauſe I am of opinion, that where the covenant of grace is revealed, and it is revealed only to loſt ſinners, and they are called to enter this covenant, and conſequently to receive the ſeal of it; thoſe ſinners being under the covenant of works, as to its commanding and threatening power, though the promiſe of it is weak through the fleſh, are, by virtue of that covenant and law of works, obliged to believe, and accept of the covenant of grace, and to receive the ſeals thereof, and ſo to get out from that covenant of works. In this reſpect, to receive the ſeal of the covenant of grace, is a remote act, at leaſt, of obedience to the law of works, but not at all profiting as a part of our righteouſneſs before God, or profiting to juſtification by that law. I cannot indeed apprehend how the covenant of works does not oblige every one that is under it to obey whatſoever God ſhall command them to do; ſo that, ſuppoſing a call to receive Chriſt made to one under the law, he is obliged by the law to receive Chriſt, and to ſubmit to the law of Chriſt, which commands men to receive the ſeals of the covenant of grace, whatſoever they be that are under it; and therefore I cannot deny but thus it is a remote act of obedience to the law of works, to receive the ſeals of the covenant of grace, in ſo far as it obligeth them to ſubmit to Chriſt, whoſe law particularly enjoins this; though indeed the law of works leaves the ſoul as ſoon as it is in Chriſt, they dying to it, and it to them. The law then that the apoſtle ſpeaks of here, I conceive to be the ten commands, as they are the law of Chriſt; to which obedience is performed only in point of ſanctification. And thus indeed theſe perſons might be profited by circumciſion, if they did evidence their faith in, and love to Chriſt, by ſincere keeping of his law; circumciſion being a ſeal of the covenant of grace; and their keeping of the law ſincerely, an infallible token that they were within the bond of that covenant, and had right to all the promiſes of it; the accompliſhment whereof is confirmed by the ſeal. But while they, by their looſe walk and wickedneſs, evidenced their hypocriſy, and that they were but Jews outwardly and in name, they were not a whit profited by circumciſion.

Exc. 3. This is underſtood of their circumciſion before the Lord, not before the church. Anſw. That cannot be proven from the text. But let it be ſo: Then, 1. I ſay, ſeeing God makes account of every thing as it is in itſelf, for his judgment is according to truth, then their baptiſm who are profane in their lives, profiteth nothing, but their circumciſion is made uncircumciſion. 2. Seeing God hath not kept this his judgment of it ſecret, but hath revealed the ſame in his word, ſo as every one may read what account he makes of it, it neceſſarily follows, that the church muſt account ſo of it, unleſs men may take liberty to let their judgment go another way than God's mind revealed, and look on them quite another way than God tells us he looks upon them.

Exc. 4. The apoſtle plainly teacheth the profit of circumciſion, Rom. iii. 1, 2. What advantage then hath the Jew? Or what profit is there of circumciſion? Much every way. For anſwer to this, we muſt take notice that here are two diſtinct queſtions, which are ſo many objections of the Jews againſt his doctrine. He had in the former chapter levelled them with the Heathens, and reckoned their circumciſion for uncircumciſion; he eaſily perceives the Jews would take this very ill, and therefore brings them in here with two queſtions in their mouths; the firſt, What advantage hath the Jew? the ſecond, or what profit is there of circumciſion? To the firſt of theſe, the apoſtle anſwers by way of conceſſion, Much every way, ver. 2. to wit, in reſpect of God, who had given them many things which were indeed advantageous in themſelves; which things he had not given to the Heathens; but not in reſpect of themſelves; for they were no advantages to themſelves, no advantages eventually. And ſo again, in this chapter, he puts the Jews and Gentiles in the ſame balance, by teſtimony from the Pſalms. So that it is a kind of ironical conceſſion, uſed alſo by the apoſtle towards theſe ſame perſons, chap. ii. 17, 18, 19, 20. As if he ſhould ſay: “ Ye have indeed much advantage every way, I “ confeſs; for unto you were committed the oracles of “ God; God gave you the revelation of his mind and “ will, when the poor heathens were left to walk in “ darkneſs, having nothing to guide them but the dim “ light of nature; but ſo much more the miſerable are “ ye, and the greater ſhall your condemnation be, while “ ye walk as ye do.” As for the ſecond queſtion, it is not here anſwered; but that (much every way) belongs allenarly to the firſt, which the words in the original plainly hold forth, which are theſe: Ti oun to periſſon tou Ioudaiou, e tis he aphelcia tes peritomes? Polu kata panta tropon. Polu, viz. to periſſon. But the ſecond queſtion he anſwers, chap. iv. 11.; where he tells them, what profit there is of circumciſion, and to whom it was profitable. Both theſe he ſheweth in the perſon of Abraham, of whoſe fatherhood they boaſted; ‘ And he ‘ received circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of ‘ faith which he had yet before being uncircumciſed.’ That is the profit of circumciſion, that it ſeals the righteouſneſs of faith; but it profits only thoſe that have received and ſubmitted to that righteouſneſs: to the wicked it profits no more than a ſeal ſet to a blank. So that the argument ſtands good notwithſtanding of theſe exceptions.

Reas. II. The baptiſm of thoſe perſons to which the characters given by the Spirit of God in the ſcriptures appear not to agree, ought to be reputed unprofitable, and their circumciſion is uncircumciſion; but ſuch is the baptiſm of thoſe who have no credible profeſſion: Ergo. The major is plain: for no baptiſm but the ſcripture-baptiſm can be reputed profitable; and the ſcripture-characters of baptiſm muſt needs agree to ſcripture-baptiſm. The minor will appear, if we take a view of ſome ſcriptures ſpeaking of baptiſm, Mark i. 4.—— ‘the baptiſm of repentance, for the remiſſion of ſins.’ Matth. xxviii. 19. ‘Diſciple all nations, baptizing them,’ &c. Mark xvi. 16. ‘He that believeth and is baptized.’ Acts ii. 38. ‘Repent, and be baptized, for the remiſſion of ſin.’ Acts xxii. 16. ‘Ariſe, and be baptized, and waſh away thy ſins;’ or, ‘be waſhed from thy ſins,’ as ſome read it, and the words will bear, kai aplouſai tas hamartias ſou. Gal. iii. 27. As many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt.’ 1 Pet. iii. 21.——Baptiſm doth alſo now ſave us; not the putting away of the filth of the fleſh. “For many are externally waſhed only, (which is the uſe of baptiſm not lawful, qui eſt uſus baptiſmi non legitimus;) few, ſo as they may call on God with a good conſcience.” Pareus in loc. “This purifying of the conſcience is oppoſed indeed to waſhing ſimply carnal, but not to the ſacrament of baptiſm; for to the entireneſs of baptiſm (ad integritatem baptiſmi) both concur the external and the internal waſhing, not one of them only; and when any hath received it worthily, that anſwer of a good conſcience towards God is joined.” Hornbeck. Now, let it be conſidered, how theſe things agree to the baptiſm of thoſe that have no credible profeſſion: What viſible agreement is there betwixt them? Nay, what viſible diſagreement is there not? If any ſhall ſay, that ſuch perſons they profeſs all thoſe things! I ſhall reply with Nunquid illa nonplus dicunt quam nudam aliquam a nobis factum profeſſionem?

Reas. III. That baptiſm which the church cannot look upon as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith to him that hath it, they ought to make no account of it, but look on it as unprofitable; but ſuch is the baptiſm of him that hath no credible profeſſion: Ergo. The propoſition is evident, if ye conſider, that baptiſm is a ſacrament of the covenant of grace; and all the ſacraments of the covenant of grace, whether under the Old or New Teſtament agree in this, that they are ſeals of the righteouſneſs of faith. Now, it is an undeniable maxim, Negato genere tollitur ſpecies; That which I cannot look upon as an animal, I cannot look on as a man. That baptiſm which is not a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, is non-baptiſm; and how can that baptiſm be profitable that ſealeth not that which baptiſm is appointed of God to ſeal? The aſſumption I prove alſo: Where the church cannot look on a man as privileged with the righteouſneſs of faith, they cannot look on his baptiſm as ſealing the righteouſneſs of faith to him; but ſo it is in the preſent caſe, where the perſon makes no probable or credible profeſſion: Ergo. The aſſumption is clear, and the propoſition alſo; for the having of the thing ſealed is preſuppoſed to the ſeal, as was ſaid before. If they repent, it becometh indeed a ſeal to them, but otherwiſe it doth not. This I apprehend to be the truth. We have heard Pareus's judgment, that the bare outward waſhing, which is all that many get, is the unlawful uſe of baptiſm. Urſin tells us, “The ſacraments are no ſacraments to them that have no true faith. Therefore (ſays he) they are mad that ſay unbelievers receive, together with the ſigns, the things ſignified by the ſigns.” And a little after he thus argues; “To whom nothing is promiſed in the word, to him the ſacraments ſeal nothing. To the wicked nothing is promiſed in the word;——therefore the ſacraments ſeal nothing to the wicked.” The learned Witſius teacheth us thus: “Baptiſm confers nothing on ſuch, (viz. to whom it belongs not ſtricto jure;) no grace, no ſalvation doth it ſignify or ſeal, no more than a piece of wax, adorned indeed with an elegant character, but appended to clean paper, on which nothing is written, and to be written; or, if you will, appended to a paper beſpattered every-where with ſo exceeding great blots, that no good can be written on it.” It muſt be obſerved, that this very learned man is of opinion, that all federate elect infants are regenerated before baptiſm. That I dare not ſay; but, with the generality, as I ſuppoſe, of the orthodox, I think they are, in the judgment of charity, to be looked on as ſuch, and that baptiſm is conferred on them as viſible ſaints. Now, that opinion made the learned man to expreſs himſelf, ſo, “On which nothing is written, and to be written.” And concerning adult perſons he tells us, “It cannot be that any adult perſon may well be baptized, but he that believeth.” So that it is plain, according to him, baptiſm ſeals nothing to the unregenerate. Mr Baxter gives us his judgment in the point thus: “Baptiſm is ordained to ſignify and ſeal, and thereby confer remiſſion of ſins; but not to all that have right in the judgment of the church to be baptized; but only to thoſe that have right to it before God, and to whom his word doth firſt give remiſſion; that is, not to all whom we muſt baptize, as being probably true believers, but only to thoſe that have true right to baptiſm and its benefits, as being true believers indeed.” And if we would hear again who have right to baptiſm before God, he tells us elſewhere, “It is only ſolid true faith which is the condition of the promiſe of remiſſion; therefore it is that only that gives right in foro Dei to the ſeal.” But how, notwithſtanding of all this, he condemns as an error in Mr Tombes the following propoſition, I do not underſtand. The propoſition is, “Every right adminiſtration of baptiſm is not God's ſealing: actually God ſealeth not, but when it is adminiſtred to a believer: it may be called a right act of the adminiſtrator according to God's appointment, but not God's ſealing.” We ſee here Mr Tombes ſpeaks plainly of the adminiſtration of baptiſm in reſpect of the adminiſtrator, not of the party to whom it is adminiſtred. I confeſs I incline very much to Mr Tombes's error in this point; and ſo much the more freely, that I think, by what is ſaid, it appears to be the judgment of others of more entire fame than he. Once more hear the learned Witſius. “Indeed (ſays he) the adminiſtrators of holy things, who muſt act about every one from the judgment of charity alone, cannot diſtinguiſh the elect from the non-elect; and in ſo far they are not at all faulty (atque hactenus nihil peccant,) if perhaps they baptize even them to whom baptiſm is not due ſtricto jure.” And a little before: “If we conſider the moſt ſtrict right to baptiſm, it agrees to none but the elect in very deed, and in the judgment of God.” And who would think but Mr Baxter himſelf had fallen afterwards into the ſame error with Mr Tombes, at leaſt when he ſays, “We ought to baptize them, though they have no true right to baptiſm, becauſe we are to take all for true believers that make a probable profeſſion.” Is not that a right act of the adminiſtrator which he ought to do, and muſt do? And yet, as he himſelf ſays, baptiſm is ordained to ſeal remiſſion of ſins, but not to all whom we muſt baptize. I hope none will ſay, God ſeals by baptiſm what he did not, or where he did not ordain it to ſeal. It would ſeem then very conſequential to infer Mr Tombes's concluſion from theſe premiſſes. Mr Baxter ſays indeed, in confutation of this poſition of Mr Tombes, “That it is only the conditional promiſe which God ſealeth by the ſacraments, If thou believe in the Lord Jeſus, thou ſhalt be ſaved.” Poſſibly then one may think, that he means God ſeals remiſſion of ſins to believers only, but to others he ſeals the conditional promiſe. But this will not ſalve the matter in my opinion. For, 1. Mr Baxter telleth us roundly, that the promiſe is to others beſides believers, and ſo is the ſeal: and that this will be evident, if it be once underſtood, that it is only the conditional promiſe, which God ſealeth by the ſacraments. What can be made of this, but that it is the ſame thing that God ſeals to believers, and to others beſides them? 2. Underſtand it only of others, beſides believers; is not remiſſion of ſin comprehended in that promiſe which he ſays the ſacraments ſeal? Sure I am the ſcriptures make it one main part of the ſalvation promiſed, Matth. i. 21. Thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus; for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. 3. How can baptiſm be appointed to ſeal remiſſion of ſins to believers, and only the conditional covenant to others, when, as Mr Baxter himſelf teacheth us, “That in relations, ſuch as ſacraments are, the end entereth the definition?” Therefore (if not through any natural incapacity of the ſubject (which I dare ſay, Mr. Baxter will not plead in this caſe,) but God's mere inſtitution, baptiſm have ends ſo exceeding different in (infants and the aged, ſays he there, let me change it into) believers and others, then you muſt have ſeveral definitions of baptiſm, and ſo ſeveral baptiſms; but the apoſtle ſaith, there is but one baptiſm. Much more he has to the ſame purpoſe in that place. Let them who can reconcile theſe things do it: it is altogether beyond my reach; it may be becauſe I am not well acquainted with his doctrine. But I will weigh what the learned man ſays in confutation of the above-mentioned propoſition, and to prove that the ſacrament rightly adminiſtered to a hypocrite, is God's actual ſealing. His arguments are two.

I. “If the ſacrament rightly adminiſtered to an hypocrite, have all in it that is eſſential to God's actual ſealing, then it is an actual ſealing; but the ſacrament———: therefore it is his actual ſealing. A ſeal is an engaging or obliging ſign, or at leaſt a teſtifying. He that actually uſeth a ſeal to ſuch an end, doth actually ſeal. Now, 1. God uſeth this ſign; 2. and to this end. 1. He uſeth the ſign while his miniſters uſe it in his name at his command. 2. He commandeth it to be uſed to this end, to engage himſelf to make good his promiſes. For, 1. To what other end ſhould God command them? 2. Elſe he ſhould command them to be uſed to one end to one, and to another end to another.——3. If the promiſe be to others beſides believers, then ſo is the ſeal, (for to whom God promiſeth, to them he engageth himſelf to perform;) but the promiſe is to others; therefore, &c. It is only the conditional promiſe, &c. ut ſupra.”

Anſw. I deny the minor of this argument, together with the proof of it, that God uſeth the ſeal to this end to hypocrites. The reaſon is, Becauſe hypocrites have no profeſſion of, intereſt in, or right to thoſe things whereof God hath appointed the ſacrament to be a ſeal. What a miniſter may do de facto, is not the queſtion: but I deny, that miniſters do uſe the ſacrament at God's command, or de jure, towards any but as they are viſible ſaints; and if they ſhould uſe it in his name towards any that are not ſo, they ſhould go beyond the bounds of their commiſſion, Matth. xxviii. 19. as it is above improven, with help from Mr Baxter himſelf. That God commandeth the ſeal to be uſed to this end, to engage God to make good his promiſes, is true in reſpect of them that are in Chriſt, in whom the promiſes are Yea and Amen; but in reſpect of hypocrites, it is falſe. But to what other end ſhould God command them? I anſwer that God hath commanded the ſeals as ſeals to be uſed towards believers only; and he hath commanded Miniſters to look on them as viſible believers that have a probable profeſſion. And if it be ſaid, that he has commanded miniſters to uſe them towards all viſible believers, but ſome of them are hypocrites, and ſo he commands them to be uſed to hypocrites: I anſwer, he commands the ſeals materially conſidered, that is, ſprinkling with water, and bread and wine, to be given and adminiſtered to all viſible believers; but conſidered formally as ſeals, he commands them only to be adminiſtered to thoſe that are real ſaints. So that in this ſenſe the ſacrament cannot be adminiſtered as a ſeal to any but on ſuppoſition that the party is in Chriſt, ſeeing none other have a right before God thereto: yet it is a right act of the adminiſtrator when he adminiſtereth the ſign to one that is a cloſe hypocrite, in regard he is a viſible believer. And in aſſerting that the adminiſtrator is not bound to know certainly and infallibly, that the party whom he baptizeth hath a right to baptiſm before the Lord, Mr Baxter himſelf will bear me out: for he ſaith expreſly, “Miniſters have right to baptize thoſe that before God have no right to baptiſm; for they muſt judge of mens right by a probable profeſſion.” Now, let Mr Baxter aſk, to what other end than to ſeal actually, doth God command the ſeals to be adminiſtered to a hypocrite? I anſwer, he commandeth them not at all to be adminiſtered to them; for whatſoever is given them, or adminiſtered to them, is not God's ſeal; for forma dat eſſe rei. And the water in baptiſm adminiſtred to a hypocrite, is no more God's ſeal to him, than a ſoul and a body without union are a man. And if I ſhould ſay, the ſacrament is no ſacrament to him, it is no more than what we heard before was roundly ſaid by a far wiſer head. And truly I think it deſerves to be conſidered, how the definition of a ſacrament agrees to that which is adminiſtered to a hypocrite. “A ſacrament is an holy ordinance, inſtituted by Chriſt; wherein by ſenſible ſigns, Chriſt, and the benefits of the new covenant, are repreſented, ſealed, and applied to believers.” But I paſs this. If we conſider other caſes wherein miniſters are commanded to diſpenſe other ordinances, beſides this of baptiſm, it may give light to what is now under conſideration. When a brother hath fallen into any ſcandalous ſin, and he appears penitent, the church-officers look on themſelves as commanded to abſolve him, and to looſe his ſin; and this they do in the Lord's name and at his command, not only looſing him from church cenſure, but declaring his ſin to be pardoned before God: yet this is on ſuppoſition that he really be before the Lord, that he appears to be before the church. Yet, notwithſtanding of all this, if he be hypocritical in his repentance, he is not looſed in heaven; but what they do herein, they do in God's name and at his command. And you may proſecute this the ſame way, to prove God's looſing the hypocrite in heaven, as Mr Baxter doth the preſent argument. In admitting of cloſe hypocrites to the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, the church dare not debar them, which argues a ſenſe of God's command in the caſe; yet the church dare not admit them but as they appear to be real believers. The act of admiſſion is a right act in thoſe that admit them; but God in his word declares they have no right to it, miniſters doctrinally debar them as ſuch to whom the ſeals belong not. Only men know not their hearts; and in their lives they are viſible believers, but in their hearts enemies to God, whom he will ſeverely examine for coming to this goſpel-feaſt without a wedding-garment; for ſtretching out their hands, being profane dogs, to ſnatch up the children's bread. Strange if notwithſtanding of all this, this adminiſtration be God's actual ſealing. The ſhort is, the command to the adminiſtrators is not an abſolute, but a qualified command. His ſecond reaſon to prove that God uſeth the ſeals for actual ſealing to hypocrites, falls with the firſt. It follows indeed on his doctrine, as was obſerved before, that the ſacraments are uſed for one end to one, and another end to another, which with him (as it was above explained) I account an abſurdity; but it no way follows upon our doctrine. As to the third reaſon, That the promiſe is to others, and therefore ſo is the ſeal; I cannot but obſerve another piece of inconſiſtency (as it appears to me) of this man with himſelf. He ſaith, the promiſe, meaning that, If thou believe, &c. is to others beſides believers, and therefore infers that ſo is the ſeal; no doubt he means it belongs to them really and in foro Dei: and yet elſewhere he flatly denies, that the ſeal belongs to any but true believers, and ſuch as have true ſolid faith in foro Dei, though it may belong to them in foro eccleſiæ. But I deny, that the promiſe which the ſacrament ſeals is that promiſe he ſpeaks of, and have given my reaſon before. But the former obſerve brings to mind an argument againſt it; which is this: If it be that conditional promiſe which baptiſm ſealeth, or God ſealeth by baptiſm, then whoſoever have a right before the Lord to that promiſe, have right before the Lord to baptiſm; but that is abſurd: Ergo. The conſequence is evident: for whoſo have a right to the thing ſealed, have a right to the ſeal; and deny it who will, it cannot be denied by any making uſe of this argument. The minor I prove thus: If thoſe that have a right to that promiſe before the Lord, have therefore a right to baptiſm before the Lord, then Jews, Turks, and Pagans, to whom the offer of the goſpel is made, though they be ſtill in their infidelity, have a right to baptiſm, even coram Deo; but that is moſt abſurd: Ergo. The ſequel is plain. For whoſoever they be that have the goſpel offered to them, have right in foro poli to the conditional promiſe of ſalvation; ſo that if they ſhould believe, God could not but ſave them by virtue of that promiſe. The appendix to his Aphoriſms, in which he ſaith he hath fully proven this poſition of his, my poor library doth not afford me; neither think I myſelf at any great loſs thereby; for I look on it as moſt uncomfortable doctrine, "That it is only the conditional pro-"miſe which God ſealeth by the ſacraments." If they ſeal no more, ſadly have many godly ſouls been deluded in their enjoyments at ſacraments. But, however, it falleth under the next queſtion, he ſays; and ſo we may expect to hear that ſad doctrine confirmed. If I really believed he could confirm and prove it convincingly, I would hear it as my doom and ſentence of death. Wo to poor ſaints, if the ſacraments confirm and ſeal no more to them.

Now, that which Mr Baxter in the next queſtion ſets himſelf to prove, is, That the abſolute promiſe (or covenant) of the firſt grace is not it that is ſealed in baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper. And for proof hereof he gives ſix arguments, But this ſeems to me as ſtrange arguing, as from the mill to the moon. What conſequence is this, It is not the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace that baptiſm ſeals; Ergo, it is only the conditional promiſe, If thou believe, thou ſhalt be ſaved? What though it be not the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace, muſt it therefore be that conditional promiſe? is there no other promiſes in the covenant but theſe two? I think if there were any ſhadow of a conſequence here, it behoved to be thus; It is not the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace; ergo, it is the conditional promiſe of the firſt grace; which ſhould be Pelagianiſm in grain, and put much reſpect on the Jeſuits maxim, Facienti quod in ſe eſt, Deus non denegabit ulteriorem gratiam. And we might leave him to his diſpute with Mr Tombes. But I cannot think that ever Mr Tombes would aſſert, that it was only the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace that baptiſm is a ſeal of. His words, as Mr Baxter ſets them down, are, "That the covenant whereof baptiſm is a ſeal, is "the abſolute covenant of grace, made only to the "elect." It is certain, many famous divines do hold, that the covenant of grace is abſolute, and that baptiſm is a ſeal of the covenant of grace; and therefore it muſt needs be, according to them, a ſeal of the abſolute covenant. But that which Mr Baxter aims at, ſeems to be that baptiſm doth not at all ſeal the promiſe of the firſt grace. Whatever be of this, if I were obliged to believe it, I would require more convincing arguments than Mr Baxter offers for it; which I will briefly conſider, to the end I may win to ſome light in it.

Arg. 1. "That which is ſealed to by the ſacraments "is a proper covenant, having a reſtipulation on our "parts, as well as a promiſe on God's part; but the ab-"ſolute promiſe is not a proper covenant, with ſuch a "mutual engagement: therefore." Anſw. Thoſe that hold the covenant of grace to be abſolute, will tell him, that in reſpect of us it is a mere promiſſory covenant. But if I deny the major with them, I ſee nothing to prove it, but ſomewhat from Mr. Baxter, who holds it to be that promiſe, If thou believe, &c. to diſprove it. For, ſays he, "The very definition of a proper cove-"nant ſheweth as much, that it muſt be a mutual en-"gagement. Now, in that abſolute promiſe there is "no ſuch matter——but only God telleth what he will "do." I ſay the ſame, mutatis mutandis, of the conditional promiſe. There is no mutual engagement there, but only God telleth what he will do, if we will do ſo and ſo. Where it is plain, there is no engagement at all upon the party to whom this promiſe is made by virtue of it, unleſs it be an engagement, by way of gratitude, to accept of ſuch a precious offer; but the promiſe is to him, whether he fulfil the condition or no, or any way engage with the promiſer, ay and until he that made the promiſe declare he will no longer ſtand to theſe terms. I am confident, that neither Grotius de jure belli, nor other lawyers (of whom he ſpeaks here) will ever ſay, that a bare conditional promiſe is a proper covenant, where there is a mutual engagement. Many times, both in peace and war, ſuch conditional promiſes are made, which not being accepted, there is no covenant made. So that by this argument neither Mr Tombes nor Mr Baxter are right.

Arg. 2. "If it were the abſolute promiſe of the firſt "grace that is ſealed by the ſacraments, then the ſacra-"ments muſt be given to no man, or to all men. But, "&c. The conſequent is manifeſt, becauſe that abſo-"lute promiſe or prophecy is only of the elect, and that "before regeneration; now, no man hath any ſign given "him, ſo much as probable, by which to judge of the "unregenerate elect." Anſw. I deny the conſequence, (here called the conſequent, either by a typographical error, though not marked amongſt the reſt, or that Aquila non captat muſcas.) And what is alledged for proof thereof, is falſe taken univerſally. Though we have no probable ſign given us whereby we may judge of the election of the ſeed of openly wicked parents, till ſuch time as they evidence ſome good thing in them by their perſonal walk; yet as for the ſeed of believers, we have God's promiſe, 'I will be thy God, and the God 'of thy ſeed.' As for infants eſpecially this holds good. And as for thoſe children of godly parents, who when they are come to years of diſcretion, yet favour nothing of piety, that ſays indeed we cannot judge them probably to be regenerated; but yet it ſays not that we may not probably judge them elected. But this brings into my mind an argument againſt baptiſm its being a ſeal of the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace, which poſſibly may deſerve conſideration. It is this.

If baptiſm be a ſeal of the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace, then ſome openly wicked adult perſons have a right coram eccleſia to baptiſm; but that is falſe, as we have before proved: Ergo. I prove the conſequence. They to whom the thing ſealed doth viſibly belong, have a viſible right to the ſeal of the covenant; but if baptiſm be a ſeal of the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace, the thing ſealed by baptiſm doth viſibly belong to ſome adult perſons openly wicked: Ergo, if baptiſm, &c. The propoſition is plain. The reaſon of the aſſumption is, Becauſe the promiſe of the firſt grace belongs viſibly to thoſe that are viſible elect ones, or ſuch as we may probably judge elected: and the ſeed of the righteous we muſt probably judge to be elected, becauſe of the promiſe, 'I 'will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed;" yet nothing is more plain, than that there are many of the adult ſeed of the righteous that are openly wicked; Ergo. But I paſs this.

Arg. 3. "It may be known to whom that covenant belongs which is ſealed by the ſacraments, but it cannot be known (before the fulfilling, no not at all) to whom (particularly) that abſolute promiſe doth belong: therefore, &c." Anſw. I diſtinguiſh the major. It may be known (without extraordinary revelation) probably to whom that covenant which is ſealed by the ſacraments belongs particularly, I grant; and in this ſenſe the minor is falſe. It may be known infallibly, I deny. But, as Mr Bowles ſaith, "Baptiſm is to be adminiſtered according to the judgment of charity, ſeeing it can by no certain ſigns be determined who they are that are actually in covenant." Now, if this argument could have any weight, it behoved to be proven, that we may without any extraordinary revelation know infallibly to whom in particular the covenant ſealed in baptiſm doth belong; which the learned man doth not attempt.

Arg. 4. "If——that abſolute promiſe muſt be fulfilled to a man before he be capable of receiving the ſacraments, which are ſeals of the covenant of grace, then it is not that abſolute promiſe which is the covenant of grace ſealed to by the ſacraments; but——that abſolute promiſe muſt be fulfilled, &c. therefore it is not that abſolute promiſe which is the covenant ſo ſealed to." Anſw. This is a manifeſt ignoratio elenchi. This is neither what Mr Baxter undertook to prove, nor what Mr Tombes denied, ſo far as we can learn by his words cited by Mr Baxter. Mr Tombes indeed ſaith, That the covenant whereof baptiſm is a ſeal, is the abſolute covenant of grace, as ſeveral divines of better note ſay as well as he, but not that the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace is the covenant of grace; it is according to their opinion a part of it, but a part is not the whole. Does Mr Baxter think, that his adverſaries in this point leave out of the covenant of grace all grace but the firſt? and if he would have concluded his own theſis, he ſhould have inferred, Ergo, it is not the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace that is ſealed to. But let us hear the proof of the conſequence; which is this: "The mercy promiſed in the covenant which is ſealed, is not given before the firſt ſealing: but the mercy promiſed in that abſolute promiſe is (according to Mr Tombes, and in part the truth) given before the firſt ſealing of the covenant of grace; therefore, &c." I wiſh Mr Baxter had ſet down his concluſion. However, we will get ſome concluſion in the premiſſes. But behold! how he wavers again. The concluſion of this argument is plainly this: therefore the mercy promiſed in that abſolute promiſe, is not the mercy promiſed in the covenant which is ſealed. And this concluſion we have inſtead of the major propoſition of his argument, which ought to have been the concluſion of his proof. Such wavering would tempt a man to diſtruſt the cauſe he is defending. But as to the premiſſes, the major taken univerſally is manifeſtly falſe; and unleſs you will maintain that there is only one ſingle mercy of the covenant which is ſealed, which is the covenant of grace no doubt, you muſt either take it ſo, or it is an argument ax puris particularibus, as is manifeſt. So then the major is, No mercy promiſed in the covenant which is ſealed, or in the covenant of grace, is given before the firſt ſealing. But moſt of our divines, that ever I read, againſt the Papiſts and Lutherans their baptiſmal regeneration, will tell him, that ſome mercies promiſed in the covenant which is ſealed, are given before the firſt ſealing; yea more, unleſs that ſome of theſe mercies be given before baptiſm, ſuch as the ſaving indwelling of the Spirit, regeneration, union with Chriſt, remiſſion, &c. they can have no right, before God, to the firſt ſeal; and unleſs they appear to us probably to be given them, they have no right before the church to it. And if Mr Baxter hath not ſaid as much, as that ſome mercies promiſed——are, yea and muſt be given before the firſt ſealing, or the parties have no right to baptiſm before the Lord, let what is ſaid before manifeſt. I need not ſtand to prove the falſity of Mr Baxter's major propoſition laſt named, it hath been ſufficiently done before. But at length we come to ſomething that is indeed to the point, which immediately follows the concluſion of the laſt ſyllogiſm; and it is this: "God doth not promiſe and ſeal to a man that hath a new heart, to give him a new heart; or to a man that is a believer, that he will give him to be a believer; except we ſpeak of the continuance or increaſe of faith and newneſs, which is not the thing in queſtion." But I anſwer, there is another uſe of a ſeal beſides that of engaging and obliging to the performance of any thing; it is alſo of uſe to teſtify and repreſent, as a demonſtrative ſign. This is plain, not only from the common nature of ſeals appended to contracts, but from that plain ſcripture, Rom. iv. 11. 'And Abraham received circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith which he had before.' And Mr Baxter himſelf acknowledgeth it; "A ſeal (ſays he) is an engaging or obliging ſign, or at leaſt a teſtifying." So then, although God doth not ſeal the promiſe of giving a new heart to him that hath a new heart, by way of engagement and obligation to perform the promiſe, yet he may ſeal to him that hath a new heart the promiſe of giving a new heart; he may ſeal it, I ſay, by way of teſtimony, that ſuch a promiſe hath been made to, or concerning that perſon that hath the new heart. This is not done in vain; for the promiſe contains a grant of the mercy; it is the foundation of our right, and the tenor of our freeholding, or holding of free grace; which it is very reaſonable we ſhould be put in mind of, the rather that ſome learned men do very much to darken the glory of grace. Suppoſe a king ſhould write a promiſe of a vaſt ſum of current money to be given freely to one that had been a traitor to him, or rather is a traitor, and ſhould actually pay it him before the writ be ſealed; and upon the payment thereof, the man ſees his folly, in that he ſhould have been ſo undutiful to ſuch a gracious prince, and ſo becomes a loyal ſubject: what ſoleciſm in conduct would it be, either in the ſubject to deſire of him, (even after he hath got the money,) that he would pleaſe to ſeal this his promiſe and grant; or in the king, to ſeal his own writ? May be the man hath no great ſkill to diſcern betwixt true and counterfeit money; the rather ſhould the promiſe be ſealed. The application is eaſy. God made promiſe to Abraham, ſaying, I will be thy God, ſeals it with circumciſion; yet before circumciſion the promiſe was made out to Abraham; God was the God of Abraham before he was circumciſed, yet was not the ſeal uſed in vain. But Mr Baxter will ſay, that he ſealed the continuance of that mercy of being his God. Let it be ſo; yet ipſo facto that God ſealed by way of engagement and obligation the continuance of that mercy to Abraham, he alſo ſealed, by way of teſtimony, the beginning of that mercy, or that mercy given at firſt, and conſequently the promiſe thereof; for God ſeals no mercy to us but as it is comprehended in a promiſe. If any will ſay, that the ſacraments ſeal any mercy but what the word promiſeth, let them prove it. For my part, I think it contrary both to ſcripture and reaſon.

Arg. 5. "The benefits of the covenant of grace, which is ſealed by the ſacraments, are (by thoſe of age) to be received by faith; but the benefits of the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace are not to be received by faith: therefore this is not the covenant of grace ſo ſealed. The major is evident. Mr. Tombes ſaith, only believers muſt be baptized as diſciples. The minor is proved before. Faith is a part of the thing promiſed; and we do not by faith receive our firſt faith, or our power to believe." Anſw. To paſs this, that the concluſion of this argument is indeed, Therefore the benefits of the abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace are not the benefits of the covenant of grace, which is ſealed by the ſacraments; the concluſion, as it is formed by the learned man, labours under the former diſeaſe, quod non concludit negatum. He had need of quicker eyes than I can pretend to, that can diſcern a contradiction between theſe two; The abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace is not the covenant of grace, which is ſealed by the ſacraments; and that, The covenant whereof baptiſm is the ſeal, is the abſolute covenant of grace, made only to the elect; which is the propoſition Mr Baxter undertakes to confute. But I deny the major, univerſally taken. When Mr Baxter ſpeaks of receiving the benefits of the covenant by faith, either he means receiving of the things themſelves, or receiving a right to them; and in both ſenſes the propoſition is falſe. If he mean it of receiving the things themſelves, as contradiſtinct from receiving a right thereto, then I would fain know, 1. Whether the reſurrection of our bodies, and glorification, be benefits of the covenant of grace? and then, 2. How theſe benefits in this ſenſe are received by faith? If he mean it of receiving a right thereto, contradiſtinct from receiving of the things themſelves, then I would deſire to underſtand, whether juſtification, adoption, and ſuch relative benefits, be benefits of the covenant of grace; and then, how a man can receive a right to relative benefits, as contradiſtinguiſhed in re from the things themſelves; or if a man can have a right to a relation, and not ipſo facto be ſo related. I ſpeak not of jus ſub termino; but an immediate preſent right, as the matter with faith in reſpect of juſtification, &c. Whoever may quarrel this, it cannot be contradicted by Mr Baxter's principles. "As to the relative " benefits, (ſays he,) right to them, and right in them, " are inſeparable, &c." As to the proof of the propoſition, I confeſs I ſee not how it toucheth the point. Mr Tombes ſaith very right, and according to the ſcriptures, when he ſaith, Only believers muſt be baptized as diſciples, meaning it of thoſe that have right thereto before the Lord; and many others ſay, and that on good grounds, that only the regenerate, juſtified, &c. muſt be baptized as diſciples: and yet it will not hence follow, that the benefits of the covenant of grace ſealed by the ſacraments, muſt be received by regeneration, juſtification, &c.

Arg. 6. "The covenant ſealed to by the ſacraments " is a plainly propounded, unqueſtionable covenant; " but this abſolute promiſe of the firſt grace is not " ſuch, &c." Anſw. This concluſion is like ſome others before, that hit not the ſcope of the diſpute. But no doubt the covenant is plainly propounded, and ought not to be queſtioned. But who can help the queſtioning that nice wits will needs make about truths plainly propounded? And this argument might have been left out, while it is ſeen plainly and unqueſtionably, that many that have eyes in their head as well as this learned man, cannot agree with him, as to what it is that the ſacraments do ſeal. But it is time now to come to his ſecond argument for God's actual ſealing to hypocrites.

II. "If God do no more in his actual ſealing to be" lievers, than he doth when the ſacrament is rightly " applied to hypocrites, then he actually ſealeth to " hypocrites; but God doth no more, &c. The ma" jor is proved by the enumeration of the ſeveral acts. " 1. God maketh the promiſe. 2. He commandeth " miniſters to publiſh it. 3. He hath inſtituted the ſa" craments as mutual engaging ſigns or ſeals. 4. He " commandeth miniſters to deliver or apply them to " thoſe that profeſs their conſent and deſire to enter or " renew the covenant.——Now, what act more than " theſe doth God perform to the elect or believers?" Anſw. The proof of the major I will take for the proof of the minor, which is denied. And to his queſtion, I ſay, God doth more than all thoſe things enumerated while he actually ſeals to believers, or elſe he ſhould not actually ſeal to them at all. The Weſtminſter aſſembly in their Shorter Catechiſm, tells us, what God doth more, in anſwer to that queſtion, How do the ſacraments become effectual means of ſalvation? The anſwer is, The ſacraments become effectual——by the bleſſing of Chriſt, and the working of his Spirit in them that by faith receive them. So then God bleſſeth them to believers, which he doth not when adminiſtered to hypocrites; God works by his Spirit in the one, not in the other; and thus he gives them efficacy to believers, not to others. God ratifies in heaven what miniſters do on earth, when the ſacraments are adminiſtered to them who are fit for receiving of them; which is not done in the caſe of others. What if a Jew or a Mahometan ſhould undertake to put a mock on the Chriſtians and their God; and in purſuance thereof, ſhould feign repentance, and faith in Jeſus Chriſt, ſo as no miniſter ſhould know but he were ſerious, and ſo be baptized? might not this be a right act of the adminiſtrator? But doth God no more in his actual ſealing to believers, than he doth when ſuch a one is baptized? Believe it who will, I cannot obtain it of myſelf to give credit to it. Put the caſe, that two viſible church members fall into ſome ſcandalous ſin, and are cenſured: both give ſufficient evidences of their repentance to the church, yet the one is hypocritical, the other ſincere; God maketh the promiſe, commandeth his miniſters to publiſh it, he hath inſtituted church-diſcipline for the re-gaining of offenders, he commandeth that ſuch as appear penitent be abſolved. But doth God no more towards the one than towards the other? Surely he doth, as in the former caſe.

Arg. II. If the parents of ſuch infants concerning whom our queſtion is, have no right to the table of the Lord, then the infants have no right before the church to the ordinance of baptiſm; but the former is true; Ergo. And hence it hath been a piece of difficulty to me, to reconcile the practice of admitting mens children to baptiſm, and in the mean time debarring themſelves from the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, and that conſtantly. The minor is leaſt to be doubted; for the church, in debarring openly wicked perſons from the table of the Lord, declareth that they are looked on as perſons that have no right thereto. I apprehend it will be ſaid, that ſuch perſons have jus ad rem, but not in re; and that the former is ſufficient to intitle their children to baptiſm in foro eccleſiæ. This I willingly grant, as to ſome that are debarred from the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper: even as in the caſe of the Iſraelites with reſpect to the paſſovet, where ſome had a remote right to that ordinance; but when they were unclean, they could not rightfully claim the poſſeſſion of it. But I would diſtinguiſh of ſcandalous Chriſtians, or baptized perſons. Some are habitually and conſtantly ſcandalous, who never gave any probable ſigns of their ſincerity; others there are that have ſometimes given ſuch probable ſigns, but afterwards fall into ſome ſcandalous ſin or ſins. That the latter ſort have jus ad rem, or a remote right to the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper, I will not deny. Yea, it will not be grievous to me to grant, that the children of ſuch perſons, while as yet they have not evidenced their repentance, have nevertheleſs a right coram eccleſia to baptiſm. And my reaſon is, becauſe the church ſtill looks on ſuch a perſon as a living, though not a lively member of Chriſt, as one ſavingly in covenant with God, evidenced by his former walk, before the hour of temptation; and the child's viſible right to baptiſm, depends not on the parent's frame, but his viſible ſtate as in covenant with God; for ſo runs the promiſe, 'I will be thy God, and ' the God of thy ſeed;' So that the church looking on the parent as having God for his God, in the ſenſe of the promiſe, muſt needs look on his ſeed as enjoying the ſame privilege, and conſequently a right to baptiſm. But as for thoſe who are habitually profane, who never appeared to walk in any tolerable meaſure becoming the goſpel, as there are too many baptized perſons, they have not ſo much as a remote right to the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper; for it is appointed of God for believers, and them only; for the living, to make them grow; not for the dead, to give them life, elſe why are any debarred from it? So that none have a right, no not a remote right thereto, before God, but real believers; and none have a remote right thereto, before the church, but viſible believers. Whatever ſome are pleaſed to plead for the right of all baptized perſons to the Lord's table, it will not much move me, nor do I think it will move many (but to indignation,) when they ſiſt their conſciences before the tribunal of a holy God; therefore I will not digreſs from my purpoſe, to conſider the weak arguings wherewith ſome endeavour to ſupport that cauſe. We ſay then, that as none have a remote right to this ſacrament in foro poli, but ſuch as are right as to their ſtate; and none a proximate right thereto, but ſuch as are in a frame, in ſome meaſure, ſuitable to that venerable ordinance; ſo none have jus ad rem in foro poli, but viſible believers; and none jus in re, but the ſame perſons being free of public ſcandal. I proceed to prove the conſequence. The child hath no viſible right to that ordinance to which the parent hath none. This propoſition hath been proven before. But if the parents have not ſo much as a remote right to the table of the Lord, they have no right to baptiſm: Ergo. if the parent have not ſo much as a remote right to the table of the Lord, the child hath no viſible right to baptiſm. The minor is clear; for I think it will be denied by none, that all that have right to baptiſm have a remote right to the table of the Lord, & vice verſa. None need to think ſtrange, that we ſpeak of perſons actually baptized their right to baptiſm, no more than to queſtion the right that a man hath to an eſtate he has long enjoyed; for it is certain here, that poſſeſſion may be where there is no rightful poſſeſſion, or right and title to what is poſſeſſed. If any ſay, that children are not baptized in their parents right, but in their own right, they may freely for me enjoy their liberty to expreſs it ſo; for it is certain the child has a right, and that right is not the parent's right; but all the evidence that we can have of a child's right to baptiſm, is from the parents; therefore ſaid I, the child can have no viſible right, &c. I doubt not, but as the child of a moſt profane parent may have the Spirit; ſo in that caſe it hath a moſt undoubted right before the Lord, to the ſeal of the covenant; but the parent being an openly wicked perſon, there is no probable evidence of this; nor can there be in that caſe, till the child do manifeſt the ſame by its perſonal carriage. In the mean time as to us de non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus eadem eſt ratio.

Arg. III. A curſed ſeed hath no right to a ſealing ordinance; but the children of the openly wicked, or ſuch as make no credible profeſſion, are a curſed ſeed: Ergo. There can be no doubt of the aſſumption, the ſcripture is expreſs for it, Deut. xxviii. 18. Curſed ſhall be the fruit of thy body. The propoſition I prove thus. If a viſibly curſed ſeed, (for ſo I underſtand the curſed ſeed I ſpeak of in the argument, taking it for granted, they are viſibly curſed whom God has declared in his word to be curſed, which I think none can deny with any colour of reaſon;) if a viſibly curſed ſeed have a viſible right to a ſealing ordinance, then a viſibly curſed ſeed are a viſibly bleſſed ſeed; but that is abſurd: Ergo. The conſequence is plain: for they that have right to the ſeal of the covenant of grace, are a viſibly bleſſed ſeed; they are ſurely viſibly bleſſed who appear to be in the covenant with God, and members of Chriſt, as thoſe who have a viſible right to baptiſm. The aſſumption is no leſs plain: for bleſſing and curſing are inconſiſtent; whom God viſibly curſeth, he cannot at the ſame viſibly bleſs, elſe they ſhould be viſibly happy and miſerable at one and the ſame time; even ſo happy as God's bleſſing makes, and ſo miſerable as God's curſe makes a perſon. It is in vain to ſay, they are bleſſed and curſed in ſundry reſpects; ſo that however in ſome other reſpects they are curſed, yet, in reſpect of a right to the firſt ſeal of the covenant, they are a bleſſed ſeed: for there is no ſuch diſtinction, nor ground for ſuch diſtinction, in the text. But in what other reſpects can they be viſibly curſed, when they are viſibly bleſſed in this reſpect! Were they in the moſt miſerable caſe that ever any was in the world in other reſpects, while they have a viſible right to baptiſm, God is their God, and who will dare ſay, that thoſe who are thus viſibly privileged are viſibly curſed? As the bleſſing of God puts a perſon in a bleſſed ſtate, ſo his curſe puts him in a curſed ſtate, in whatever particular the bleſſing or the curſe do chiefly appear; for God's bleſſing and curſing are formally forenſic actions, and ſo the different ſtates reſulting therefrom are inconſiſtent utterly, as juſtification and condemnation. Yea, I add, that the executive bleſſing and curſing are alſo inconſiſtent; for theſe flow from, and do neceſſarily preſuppoſe the formal acts of bleſſing and curſing; ſo that although a perſon in a curſed ſtate may receive good things from God, that are in themſelves, and unto others bleſſings indeed, yet they are curſed, Mal. ii. 2.: even as afflictions, which are curſes to the wicked, are nevertheleſs bleſſings to them that are in Chriſt. What though the ſeed of the wicked, by ſovereign grace may be bleſſed; yet, while this bleſſing is latent, we are to look on them as God in his word hath denounced the ſeed of the wicked to be: for the word is the rule of the church's judgment, not the ſecret will of God; Secret things belong to the Lord, but unto us thoſe things that are revealed. When they do by their perſonal carriage declare themſelves to be bleſſed ones, the church is to deal with them as ſuch then, but not till then. As God hath declared the ſeed of the wicked to be curſed, ſo he hath alſo declared the ſeed of the righteous to be bleſſed, Pſal. xxxvii. 26. His ſeed is bleſſed; and cxii. 2. The generation of the upright ſhall be bleſſed. What a vaſt difference doth the Lord in his word make between the ſeed of the righteous and the ungodly? the one is bleſſed, the other curſed: it ſeems reaſonable then the church ſhould make ſome difference betwixt them alſo in the matter of church-privileges, as was argued before. Can we ſuppoſe, that God hath given no more ground of comfort to the godly as to their ſeed, than he has given to the wicked, if they be but baptized? Or can we reſtrain this ground of comfort merely to temporal good things? In this readily the children of the faithful have leaſt ſhare. I think it is a pitiful ſtraitening of the many promiſes that are made to the godly and to their ſeed, to allow them no more ground of comfort as to their childrens ſouls, than wicked baptized perſons may have as to theirs, notwithſtanding of the curſes denounced upon them. Allow both an equal right to the ſeal of the covenant of grace, and ſo to all the benefits thereof, and then ſure all odds are made even. For my part, I am indeed of opinion, that, but prejudice to the ſovereignty of God, who hath neither in the curſe nor in the bleſſing ſet a law for himſelf, to bind up the hands of free grace from bringing forth elect veſſels out of the loins of wicked parents; nor the hand of abſolute dominion, in reprobating ſome of the ſeed of the godly; that the main thing aimed at, both in the curſe and in the bleſſing, is what concerns the eternal ſtate of their ſeed, viz. that God will deny his grace to the children of the wicked, and ſo damn them for their ſins; and give his grace to the ſeed of the godly, and ſo ſave them eternally. So judicious Calvin underſtands the threatening and the promiſe in the ſecond command. And it is highly reaſonable, that the holy oracles of God ſhould be always underſtood in the moſt comprehenſive ſenſe, where there is nothing to reſtrain the ſame, as it is in this caſe. And what elſe can we make of the grand promiſe of the covenant, I will be thy God, and the God of thy ſeed? This anſwers the ſcope and deſign of the declaration of the mind of God moſt fully, both in the declaration of the curſe, and of the bleſſing. This makes them moſt pungent incentives to true piety. And thus God himſelf hath viſibly explained the ſame. How often do we ſee the children follow the footſteps of their parents, graceleſs parents with their children no better than themſelves, when the children of the godly are bleſſed? It is true, the wickedneſs of ſome of the children of the godly is much noticed, and ready to be talked of, when the children of the wicked their impiety is not; but this plainly confirms what we ſay; for no better is expected of the ſeed of the wicked, when better things are looked for in the children of the godly. Seldom it is but the godly have ſome good; ſeldom the wicked have any. Of ſome ſtock of people God never wants ſome, even to the view of the world; and of others he hath none, in all appearance. And if the curſe and bleſſing be thus underſtood, it doth mightily ſtrengthen the argument, as I apprehend; for baptiſm is de jure conferred on children, only as they are apparently ſuch as belong to God in a ſaving manner, as was before pleaded. This argument then I will conclude, with Balaam's words inverted, How ſhall we bleſs whom God hath curſed?

Arg. IV. If it be neceſſarily prerequired to infants right to baptiſm coram eccleſia, that their parents appear penitent, and lovers, not haters of God; then none but the infants of viſible believers have a viſible right to the ordinance of baptiſm: The former is true; ergo, the latter alſo. The conſequence is plain; for viſible penitents, lovers, and not haters of God, are viſible believers, and none other; the one cannot be neceſſary, but the other ipſo facto is alſo neceſſary; and thoſe whom we cannot look upon as viſible penitents, and lovers of God, we muſt needs look upon as viſibly impenitent perſons, and haters of God, and ſo as viſible unbelievers, wanting that which is neceſſary to evidence their infants right to baptiſm. The aſſumption is proven before from Acts ii. 38. Exod. xx. 5, 6. From the former of theſe it plainly appears, that repentance was prerequired of thoſe pricked at the heart, antecedently to their own, or their childrens viſible right to baptiſm. And what though parents now are ordinarily poſſeſſed of that privilege in their infancy; when they were admitted as viſible ſaints, ſeeing afterwards they have nothing of that viſible ſaintſhip? ought they not to be preſſed to repentance, in order to a viſible right to their ſeed for this ordinance, having now loſt that viſible right thereto themſelves, which they had in their infancy poſſibly? Thoſe in the text were circumciſed, whether jure or injuria we ſhall not determine; and circumciſion was a ſeal of the ſame covenant whereof baptiſm alſo is; it was a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, as well as baptiſm; yet, notwithſtanding, they behoved to evidence their repentance before their childrens right to baptiſm could be acknowledged; as was proven before. It ſeems then no leſs reaſonable, that baptized parents ſhould be obliged to do the like, ere their childrens right to baptiſm be acknowledged by the church. From the latter of theſe ſcriptures, it hath been evinced, that the children of wicked parents are, by the threatening, denied a right to the ſeal of the covenant; and that it is given, by the promiſe, only to the children of thoſe that love God; which doth plainly reſtrain the ſame to the ſeed of viſible believers coram eccleſia. Hereunto add that teſtimony of the apoſtle, 1 Cor. vii. 14. 'For the unbelieving huſband is ſanctified by the wife: '——elſe were your children unclean; but now they 'are holy;' from whence it doth inevitably follow, that one of the parents muſt needs be a viſible believer, elſe the children cannot be reckoned holy; and hence it is ordinary to prove the right of the infants of the faithful unto baptiſm.

Exc. 1. By the haters of God in the ſecond commandment, are meant idolaters only; and ſo by lovers of God, thoſe that cleave to the true worſhip of God: and therefore the threatening cannot be extended to the children of thoſe that do not turn aſide to idolatry, to renounce Chriſtianity. Anſw. Many things may be returned to this exception; as, 1. Then all baptized perſons children have not a right to baptiſm; for they may be baptized, and yet be idolaters, though they have not renounced their baptiſm. 2. Then the children of Papiſts have no right to baptiſm; for they are manifeſt idolaters, as all Proteſtant divines do hold; and yet thoſe that differ, will not allow this. But, 3. Though the contempt of this command is no doubt aimed againſt in the threatening, and the promiſe hath reſpect to the keeping of it; yet to reſtrain either the threat or the promiſe to this command, is to do violence to the words: for the words are expreſs for God's commands in the plural number, both in Exod. xx. 6. and Deut. xxvii. 10. ſo that at leaſt they belong to all the commands of the firſt table. "If you conſider duly, (ſays "Calvin,) the promiſe which we have now explained "is not peculiarly annexed to one command, but is "common to the whole firſt table of the law." Zanchius carries it further. "The true interpretation "(ſays he,) is, that this (viz. the fifth command) is the "firſt command with a promiſe, to wit, not pertaining "univerſally to all the commands." And a little after: "God doth ſo much eſteem the keeping of this "command, that he addeth to it only, and ſo to none o"ther, a peculiar promiſe." 4. That by haters of God are meant idolaters only, &c. is gratis dictum. It ſeems ſtrange, to reſtrain that odious character to thoſe only, ſeeing the hatred of God is common to all unregenerate perſons, who are enmity againſt God, Rom. viii. 7. and the hatred of God is moſt vigorous amongſt thoſe, where idolatry is baniſhed, and the pure word of God preached, levelling pithily againſt the ſins of the wicked. And no leſs ſtrange is it, that thoſe ſhould be accounted lovers of God who outwardly cleave to pure ordinances, while they are openly wicked in their lives: ſurely Chriſt accounts thoſe his enemies, who ſhall be brought forth, and ſlain before his eyes, and that with a double death. Wherefore we underſtand the haters of God to be all the wicked and the lovers of God the truly godly, who obey out of love, as the other diſobey out of hatred to God; as Calvin judiciouſly teacheth. "Thoſe that "love me. The fountain and origin of true righteouſneſs "is expreſſed,——The tranſgreſſors of the law are "called enemies and haters of God.—For ſeeing he can"not be ſeparated from his juſtice, the contempt of the "law argueth this hatred; becauſe it cannot be, but he "that will not ſuffer God to be his lawgiver and "judge, deſires alſo to rob him of his government." 5. laſtly, Though it ſhould be yielded, that the threatening and promiſe belong only to this command, yet what reaſon is there that they ſhould be reſtrained to one ſin and one duty only? I ſhould think at leaſt, that ſuch as do not obſerve the ordinances of God, as prayer, &c. ſhould be alſo here included.

Exc. 2. The apoſtle (1 Cor. vii. 14.) means not real believers, in oppoſition to openly wicked Chriſtians; but believers, in oppoſition to Pagans, accounting all believers who had given up their name to Chriſt in baptiſm. Anſw. The apoſtle means viſible believers, amongſt whom ſome were ſincere, others hypocrites; even as he means viſible holineſs, when he ſaith, their children were holy. To ſuppoſe that there were any in the church of Corinth that were not viſible Chriſtian believers, is what I cannot grant without proof; and I am of opinion, it cannot be proven from the ſcriptures. There is, as I ſaid before, a vaſt difference betwixt one that ſometimes, by his perſonal carriage, gave probable evidence of his ſaintſhip, and one that never did ſo. There were certainly many grievous enormities amongſt that people, or in that church; yet the former of theſe appears to be their caſe. The reaſon is, Becauſe, as the hiſtory of the acts of the apoſtles ſhew, none in thoſe days were baptized, but ſuch as gave probable ſigns of their ſincerity, together with their children; and of the Corinthians particularly Luke teſtifies, that 'many of them hearing, believed, and were baptized,' Acts xviii. 8. and the Lord told Paul in a viſion, that ‘ he had much people in that city,’ and ſo ‘ he abode ‘ a year and ſix months with them,’ verſ. 9. 10. and though he himſelf baptized few of them, yet it cannot be thought but that people were baptized by his direction, and that therein he did as the reſt of the apoſtles, requiring them to evidence their repentance before baptiſm; and when he was gone, Apollos a faithful brother, was with them for a time, Acts xix. 1. That others than viſible believers were baptized among them, we cannot without proof grant, eſpecially ſeeing all of them whoſe baptiſm is recorded in the ſcripture, were viſible believers, and therefore baptized. Wherefore, although that by means of their own corruptions and hypocriſy, no doubt in ſome of them, and by means of falſe teachers, ſome were led aſide into erroneous principles and diſorderly practices, they could not loſe their viſible ſaintſhip, till ſuch time as they proved utterly irreclaimable: but how they took with the apoſtle's reproofs, the apoſtle himſelf plainly tells us, 2 Cor. vii. 8. &c. And indeed, for all the faults that were among them, the apoſtle acknowledgeth them ſtill as viſible believers: writing to them, as few miniſters amongſt us, I ſuppoſe, durſt write to his congregation of baptized ones: 1 Cor. i. 2. ‘ Unto the church of ‘ God that is at Corinth, to them that are ſanctified in ‘ Chriſt Jeſus, called (our tranſlation adds, but without ‘ reaſon, to be) ſaints.’ Verſ. 3. ‘ Grace be unto you ‘ and peace from God our Father.’ Verſ. 7. ‘ Waiting ‘ for the coming of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt:’ Verſ. 8. ‘ Who ſhall alſo confirm you unto the end, that ye may ‘ be blameleſs in the day of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.’ See verſ. 9. chap. vi. 15. 19, 20, But in our caſe the perſons we ſpeak of, are ſuch as never gave evidence of their ſincerity, in a way of probability, elſe there would not be ſo much difficulty about the buſineſs.

Arg. V. Thoſe who cannot be probably judged to be within the covenant, have no viſible right to baptiſm; but the children of openly wicked parents, cannot be probably judged to be within the covenant: Ergo. The major is owned to be a truth by moſt divines that are orthodox. Wendelin is very expreſs for it: ſpeaking of the ſubject recipient of baptiſm, he ſays, “ It is all, and “ only thoſe who are probably judged to be within the “ covenant of grace.” So ſaith Oliver Bowles, who nevertheleſs allows the children of all baptized perſons a right to baptiſm. “ All infants (ſays he) that in the “ judgment of charity are within the covenant, are to “ be baptized. I call that the judgment of charity, “ when we obtain all thoſe things by which it is probable “ the party to be baptized is within the covenant.” It is evident, theſe learned men ſpeak of a ſaving inbeing in the covenant, the probableneſs whereof they think is requiſite in thoſe that have right to baptiſm before the church; which is the very thing our propoſition doth import. However, I ſhall prove it. None have right to that ordinance, before the Lord, that are not really and ſavingly in covenant with God, as hath been already cleared; Ergo, none have viſible right to the ordinance that are not viſibly or probably within the covenant. The conſequence is manifeſt; becauſe the judgment of the church muſt be regulated by the judgment of God, ſo far as the ſame is revealed. Again, thoſe who cannot be probably judged to have a real right to the thing ſealed, or rather a real intereſt in the ſame, have no viſible right to the ſeal; but thoſe who cannot be probably judged to be within the covenant really and ſavingly, have no viſible intereſt in the thing ſealed: Ergo. If therefore any will plead an external being in covenant with God, as a diſtinct thing from a viſible being in covenant with him: and alledge, that the ſeal may be given on the account of this external being in covenant, they ſpeak unadviſedly; for it is no other covenant that is ſealed by baptiſm but the covenant of grace, which is entered into, or accepted by faith, neither can any be ſaid to be in it, but either really or apparently, which we call viſibly. Now, I prove the minor. Openly wicked parents cannot be probably judged to be within the covenant: Ergo, neither their children. The antecedent muſt needs be yielded, unleſs we ſay, that openly wicked perſons give probable ſigns of their piety and intereſt in Chriſt; that they are probably regenerated, juſtified, adopted, &c. which is in effect to ſay, that openly wicked perſons are not openly wicked, but viſible ſaints. It is in vain to ſay, that they are within the conditional promiſe, in ſo far as they are baptized; for we ſpeak now of a probable judgment of a particular perſon's being within the covenant. But if by this be meant, that they are within the compaſs of that promiſe, though they have not yet come up to the terms, then they have no more than what Pagans have, whenſoever the goſpel-offer is made to them; if the meaning of it be, they are within it in ſo far as they have really believed, then we would fain learn, how a real believer comes to be an openly wicked man; and by what means, or probable ſigns, men do judge an openly wicked perſon to be a believer. The conſequence is proved from hence, that children ſtand and fall before the church, with their immediate parents, ſo that we cannot judge a man's ſeed probably to be in covenant with God, if he himſelf be not viſibly in the covenant. I can apprehend no way how the force of this argument can be warded off, unleſs we make recourſe to the remote godly parents; which to how many inconveniences it is liable, we have heard before. Some indeed lay the whole ſtreſs on the baptiſm of the parents, one or both, and will have the judgment of charity to conclude all thoſe to be within the covenant probably, whoſe parents ſometime were baptized; which in my opinion is wonderfully wide charity, to ſay no more of it. How can a perſon's baptiſm be more uſeful to another, than to himſelf that perſonally received it? The baptiſm of ſome is followed with open wickedneſs; and that which we now ſpeak of, is that right the children of openly wicked parents can have to baptiſm; and we have proven, that the openly wicked cannot be probably judged to be within the covenant: and yet a baptized perſon may be openly wicked; conſequently the baptiſm of an openly wicked parent cannot be a ground whereon we may probably judge him within the covenant. Yet that this baptiſm, ſo uſeleſs to himſelf, ſhould be ſo uſeful to his ſeed, is a thing that would need ſtrong arguments to back it with, in order to its reception. One would expect, that ſuch as go no further than the immediate parents for the church-ſtate of the infants, ſhould ſhew as much in the immediate parent as the child hath, ſeeing nothing can give more than it hath to itſelf. Moreover if the judgment of charity muſt conclude all thoſe children to be probably in covenant whoſe parents were once baptized, then, if Simon Magus had enjoyed a child, even after his diſcovering of himſelf to have been ſtill in the gall of bitterneſs, and the bond of iniquity, and to have neither part nor lot with the people of God in the gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, that child would have been probably judged to be within the covenant, and ſo to have had right to the ſeal of the covenant: but that could not be, in regard Simon himſelf had then no viſible right to baptiſm; and had that diſcovery been made before, doubtleſs he had not been baptized. How many baptized perſons do as really diſcover themſelves to be ſtill in the gall of bitterneſs, as Simon did, by their open wickedneſs? But the unprofitableneſs of the baptiſm of openly wicked perſons while they continue ſo, has been largely diſcourſed on before.

Arg. VI. If none be viſibly priviledged with having God to be their God, and the God of their ſeed, (in the ſenſe of the promiſe and covenant of grace, which is ſealed to by the ſacraments,) but viſible believers: then the infants of openly wicked parents, though baptized, have no viſible right to baptiſm; the former is true: Ergo, the latter alſo. The ſequel is manifeſt. if ye conſider, that openly wicked perſons, though baptized, are viſible unbelievers, and that they can have no right to baptiſm coram eccleſia whoſe God the Lord is not: for, in baptizing infants, we do really declare that we look on God as the God of the parent, and the God of his ſeed. Now, that this great privilege viſibly belongs only to viſible believers, we hope to manifeſt by theſe following reaſons.

1. That which belongs only to real believers before God, viſibly belongs only to viſible believers and their ſeed; but this privilege belongs only to real believers before the Lord: Ergo, &c. The reaſon of the propoſition hath been given oftner than once in this diſcourſe, therefore I ſtand not upon it. I prove the aſſumption: Thoſe to whom this privilege is given, have ground to expect the accompliſhment of the reſt of the promiſes of the covenant to them: the reaſon is, becauſe this is comprehenſive of all, and all the reſt depend on it; for what can God promiſe or give more than himſelf to be a God to us? but none have ground to expect this but real believers: Ergo. Further, thoſe who are thus privileged now coram Deo, God will at the laſt day openly acknowledge as his people; for theſe two go together, I will be their God, and they ſhall be my people: but God will ſo own none but real ſaints: Ergo.

2. Thoſe to whom this privilege doth viſibly belong, whoſe God the Lord is, are thoſe, and thoſe only to whom the Lord hath been viſibly ſo gracious, as to 'put 'his law in their inward parts, and write it in their 'hearts:' but theſe are none other but viſible believers and their ſeed: Ergo. The major is clear; for theſe two are joined together in the promiſe, Jer. xxxi. 33. Heb. viii. 10. 'For this is the covenant that I will 'make with the houſe of Iſrael——I will put my 'laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; 'and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me 'a people.' See now how this doth viſibly agree unto the openly wicked, that viſibly caſt God's laws behind their backs.

3. Only Abraham's viſible ſeed are thus viſibly privileged: Ergo, only viſible believers. The antecedent is plain. The conſequence I prove thus: None are Abraham's real ſeed ſpiritually but real believers; Ergo, none are his viſible ſeed but viſible believers. The ſcripture plainly holds forth, that none are really Abraham's ſeed but true believers, Gal. iii. ult. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe. The apoſtle is there ſpeaking to ſuch as in the judgment of charity were Abraham's ſeed; but becauſe men may be Abraham's ſeed that way, yet none of his in the judgment of God, he tells them who they are that are the true ſeed of Abraham, even they that are Chriſt's by real union with him through faith; not by a bare profeſſion, or by baptiſm without true godlineſs; for there were none of them but were baptized, and profeſſed Chriſt, but that was not enough to make them heirs according to the promiſe, and conſequently not enough to make them ſons either. Gal. iii. 7. 'They 'which are of faith, the ſame are the children of Abraham. Verſ. 9. So then they which be of faith are 'bleſſed with faithful Abraham.'

4. Thoſe only are thus viſibly bleſſed for whom it appears Chriſt has died, and who are apparently redeemed by him from the curſe of the law; and ſuch are only viſible believers and their ſeed; for the apoſtle plainly teacheth, that theſe go before the bleſſing of Abraham, as the procuring cauſes thereof, verſ. 13. 14. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law—that the bleſſing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jeſus Chriſt; that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith. Now, it is certain, that God's being Abraham's God, and the God of his ſeed, was the bleſſing of Abraham, comprehending all other particular bleſſings, which is now come on the Gentiles.

5. From the ſame ſcripture we further argue thus; That bleſſing which comes on people only through Jeſus Chriſt, and that promiſe of the Spirit (or promiſed Spirit) which is received only by faith, doth viſibly belong to none but viſible believers, ſuch as appear to be in Chriſt and endued with faith; but ſuch is the bleſſing of Abraham which comes on the Gentiles: Ergo. The propoſition is plain: for where there is no viſible evidence of a perſon's being in Chriſt, through whom alone the bleſſing comes; where there are no probable ſigns of faith through which it is received, that bleſſing is not, nor cannot be viſibly come on them.

6. laſtly, It ſounds exceeding harſhly, to ſay, that God is the God of a viſible unbeliever and his ſeed, in the ſenſe of the great promiſe ſealed by the ſacraments; for in ſome ſenſe he is the God of the whole creation: but ſurely it will not be denied, that this is ſomething elſe, viz. that he is their God by way of covenant. Either, then, to have God for our God in the ſenſe of the promiſe, is to have God for our God in the way of the covenant of works, or in the way of the covenant of grace. The firſt will not be pleaded; for the ſacraments ſeal not the covenant of works; beſides, God is the God of all out of Chriſt that way, of Pagans, as well as others. It is therefore meant of God's being our God in the way of the covenant of grace; and what greater bleſſing hath the moſt undoubted real believer? Conſider then how this can be digeſted, that God is the God of an openly wicked perſon; one groſsly ignorant of the principles of religion, neceſſary to ſalvation to be known; of one poſſeſſed with a dumb devil, that calls not on God in ſecret or in his family; that hath not ſo much as a form of godlineſs, but is a viſible member of Satan's kingdom, and a viſible enemy to the kingdom of Chriſt. That God is the God of ſuch a one and his ſeed, and that we are to judge ſo of him and his ſeed, as of the moſt holy and exerciſed profeſſor of religion, is what would need bands of iron and braſs to tie a body to the belief of it. Wherefore I conclude, that ſeeing God cannot be judged to be the God of any and of their ſeed, but of viſible ſaints and believers, none other's children have right to baptiſm; which muſt needs hold good, till ſuch time as it be manifeſt, that others have right to baptiſm than they whoſe God the Lord is not, and have no intereſt in that privilege and bleſſing, to which circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, and conſequently baptiſm, was appended, Gen. xvii. 7, 8, 9, 10. Let none ſay, he is their God by their profeſſion, in ſo far as they were baptized in his name, and have not yet renounced it; for what ſort of a profeſſion is that which is viſibly contradicted by their practice? Surely men would lay little weight on ſuch a profeſſion of ſervice made to them by others. But God hath made faith, not profeſſion, eſpecially a profeſſion viſibly contradicted by their practice, to be the way of entering into covenant with him; and we look on a credible profeſſion only as a probable ſign of real faith, which we cannot diſcern but in its effects. Where then this credible profeſſion is wanting, there appears no faith; and conſequently there is no probable evidence of God's being the God of ſuch perſons, or of their ſeed.

Arg. VII. If the children of openly wicked parents, though baptized, have a viſible right to the ſeal of the covenant, then the church is bound to admit them to baptiſm, and actually to baptize them; but that practice of baptizing the infants of openly wicked perſons, or ſuch as are not viſible believers, as deriving their right from their parents, (in which ſenſe the propoſition is to be underſtood,) is unwarrantable: Ergo. The ſequel is plain: for it is as wrong, to deny any the poſſeſſion of that to which they have a viſible right, when there is no impediment laid in the way by the party who is to have poſſeſſion; as it is in the caſe of infants. Yea, it is a wrong, not to put infants in the poſſeſſion of thoſe privileges whereof they are capable, and have a viſible right to, ſeeing they are ſuch as cannot move in their own buſineſs. Thus Moſes was injurious to his ſon, in not circumciſing him at the time appointed of God; for which cauſe God ſought to kill him, Exod. iv. 24. I prove the minor; the action is luſory, even according to the principles of thoſe that differ, if the church hath no probable grounds to expect the religious education of thoſe children that are baptized, or that they ſhall be brought up for the ſervice of him in whoſe name they are baptized; but, in the caſe we ſpeak of, they have no probable grounds to expect the ſame: Ergo, the action is luſory, and conſequently unwarrantable. How can openly wicked perſons, whether groſsly ignorant of the fundamentals of religion, or profane in their lives having knowledge, be truſted for the bringing up of a child for Chriſt? Is it probable, that they who are viſible ſlaves to the devil themſelves, will bring up their children in and to the ſervice of God? We know not but they may formally renounce their baptiſm, and carry away their children with them to idolatry, &c. who have ſo far gone on in a practical renunciation of the ſame. Such perſons are not fit to be truſted in ſuch a weighty concern. If any ſhall ſay, that the baptizing of the children of ſuch parents is to be ſuſpended till their parents reform, or they themſelves come to ripe years, and evidence their piety by a viſible holy walk; we agree in the thing, though not in the name: for by this means the infant's viſible right is plainly made to depend on the viſible ſtate of the parent; which is indeed not to ſuſpend, but utterly to deny the thing, and all right thereto, unto ſuch infants, till ſuch time as one of theſe two things before-mentioned does appear. But how the ſuſpending of the child's baptiſm for ſhorter or longer time upon the parent's account, can be pleaded, according to the principles of thoſe that differ, I ſee not; ſeeing that were contrary to what they urge in the main point, that the ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father.

But this is thought to be ſalved by bringing in of ſponſors for ſuch children; that their openly wicked parents are not to be admitted to make faith for them, but ſome other fit perſon. If ſuch a fit perſon be found, then the child is to be baptized; if not, then indeed the action is luſory, ſay they. To this I anſwer, That either the child hath its right to the ordinance from the ſponſor, or the parent. If from the ſponſor, then not from the parent; which is the very thing we plead: if from the parent, then how comes the child to be denied that which it hath a viſible right to, in any caſe, while, poor ſoul, it can do nothing to lay an impediment in the way of its poſſeſſion of the privilege it hath right to? muſt it ſo far bear the iniquity of the father? It follows then ſtill, that ſuch an infant muſt be baptized in the right of the immediate parent; and that, on the ſame account, the infant cannot be kept back from baptiſm, nothing being on its part to hinder the actual poſſeſſion. It is in vain to ſay, that the infant had from the parent jus ad rem, and from the ſponſor jus in re: for unleſs there were a jus ſub termino fixed by the Lord in his word, as it was in the caſe of circumciſion, when the child had no actual right in that ordinance till the eighth day, which cannot be alledged here, the infant hath a moſt immediate right by birth privilege, if it have any at all; ſo that the actual poſſeſſion of that privilege may be immediately claimed in favours of ſuch a child. And therefore that diſtinction is not appiicable to the matter in hand. Neither do we need the help of it, in ſuch a caſe, where godly parents are both dead before the child be baptized: for ſuch a child being by birth-privilege within the covenant viſibly, and ſo having a viſible right to baptiſm, in whoſe favours the actual poſſeſſion of the ſeal may immediately be claimed, the church is bound to be tutor to it, and ſee to the education of it in the ways of God, and baptize it according to its right. Even as in the caſe of a temporal inheritance, where the heir is left an infant; the magiſtrate is bound to ſee to the bringing up of ſuch a one, and that it be not defrauded of its heritage. So the church, in this caſe, gives it not any right to the ordinance that it had not before, but doth her duty in putting it in actual poſſeſſion of that which it had all right to, antecedently to their meddling with it, and takes care of its education. And this they were obliged to do upon this formal conſideration, that ſuch a one was a child of the covenant.

To conſider a little further of ſponſors for the children of openly wicked parents: In the firſt place, the practice of many is to require thoſe only in ſome more odious caſes, as when the parent is guilty of fornication, adultery, or the like; but readily, if they be civilized, though they have not ſo much as a form of godlineſs, nor ever bow a knee to God in ſecret or in their family, which doth hold them out of the number of viſible believers, and ſo ranks them amongſt the openly wicked, no ſponſors are required for their children other than themſelves. Now, what, are thoſe perſons to be truſted in the religious education of a child? Either we muſt ſay, that mere civility is religion and Chriſtianity; or elſe we muſt ſay, it is probable that theſe will bring up their children in the holy religion and for Chriſt, that have not ſo much as a form of godlineſs themſelves; which is a ſtrange ſort of probability. And what reaſon truly is there why ſuch a difference ſhould be made, in this matter, betwixt civil men that have not ſo much as a form of godlineſs, and common drunkards, ſwearers, &c. that are baptized? Are they baptized? ſo are theſe we ſpeak of. Are they civil perſons, free of groſs immoralities? ſo are ſome Pagans as well as they. If the church be ſatisfied with them on the account of their baptiſm, they muſt alſo be ſatisfied with the other ſort: if on the account of their civility, then they muſt be ſo ſatisfied with Pagans alſo; for a quatenus ad omne valet conſequentia: if on the account of their baptized civility, why not alſo with many of the other ſort upon the account of their drunken prayers? Nothing but bad cuſtom, I preſume, hath authoriſed the want of a form of godlineſs, neglect of prayer, and the like, in a civil baptized perſon, to go with ſuch a black character, in the face of the viſible church, as drunkenneſs and the like are marked with. Further, what if the parents will not allow another perſon to be ſponſor for the child, and will rather let it lie unbaptized than ſuffer any ſuch thing; will the church force away their children from them, and baptize them whether they will or no, ſo that the child may not be defrauded of its pretended right? Finally, in order to the church's ſecurity for the education of ſuch children, it ſeems to be of abſolute neceſſity, that they be put wholly in the power of the ſponſor; for how can a man be truſted with the upbringing of a child that hath it not wholly in his power? To promiſe otherwiſe, is to promiſe impoſſibilities, or that which might be rendered impoſſible by the parent. Surely no man will take it upon him to learn another man's ſon a trade, whereby he may gain his livelihood, unleſs ſuch a one be put in his power, ſo that the father may not call him away when he pleaſeth. If the child be ſtill at the diſpoſal of the wicked parent, the ſponſor may promiſe, but the parent will perform as he ſeeth good. Now, if the child be put wholly in the power of the ſponſor as to its education, it is plain, the formal reaſon for which the child is baptized, is not becauſe he is born of baptized parents, but becauſe he is as it were the adopted ſon of the ſponſor; ſo that the child hath his viſible right to baptiſm, not by the parent, but the ſponſor. And ſo the cauſe is yielded, and the caſe and queſtion quite altered. And the queſtion will be, Whether or no an infant which is devoted unto Chriſt by a ſtranger, having it wholly in its power, at leaſt as to its education, hath a viſible right to baptiſm? which is reſolved by Mr Baxter in the affirmative, on ſcripture-grounds, even though they were the children of Turks and Jews. Againſt which I dare not as yet reclaim, providing theſe ſponſors be viſible believers, and ſo fit to be truſted in ſuch a matter. Hence it appears, ſponſors, 1. ought to be viſible believers; 2. having the child for whom they engage, wholly in their power as to its education; 3. required in the caſe of all children that are not the ſeed of parents whereof one is a viſible believer. If matters were brought to this paſs, much, if not all the difficulty of this caſe, would be removed.

Arg. VIII. No infants but thoſe of viſible church-members have right to baptiſm coram eccleſia; and none but the infants of viſible believers are the children of viſible church-members: Ergo. The major is evident; for if the children of thoſe that are no viſible church-members have right to baptiſm, it is made a privilege common to the church with thoſe of the reſt of the world; which is abſurd. I prove the minor: If none be true members of the church but the faithful or real believers, then none are viſible church-members but viſible believers; the former is true, therefore the latter alſo; conſequently none are the children of viſible church-members, but the children of viſible believers. The reaſon of the conſequence is this, That viſible church-members are none other but ſuch as apparently are true members of the church of Chriſt; ſo that if none be true members but real believers, none can be viſible members but ſuch as appear to be true believers. Chriſt hath not two churches, one inviſible and another viſible; but one church, that in one reſpect is viſible, in another reſpect inviſible: Chriſt is not a head with two bodies, but we are all baptized into one body, and myſtical Chriſt is but one, 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13. If then the true members of the church are only believers, it is plain that the viſible members thereof are only ſuch as are apparently believers. If we judge in theſi that believers only are true members of the church, when we come to judge in hypotheſi as to this or that particular perſon, we cannot judge him a true member but as he appears to be ſuch. As to the aſſumption, the body of Proteſtant divines will bear me out in it; whoſe conſtant doctrine againſt the Papiſts is, That the wicked, hypocrites, and reprobates, who outwardly profeſs the faith, are not true members of Chriſt's church; but only the godly and faithful, who not only profeſs faith, but indeed believe, and are regenerate, are to be judged true members of the church.

Arg. IX. If none but viſible believers have right to baptiſm before the church, and infants derive their viſible right thereto from their immediate parents; then none but the children of viſible believers have right to baptiſm before the church. The antecedent hath been already proven in both parts, and the conſequence is too evident to be denied. The ſcripture is ſo plain and full, in aſſerting that no adult perſons but ſuch as are viſible believers ought to be baptized, that I can ſee no evaſion from the force of this argument, for thoſe that do not derive the infant's right from the remote parents, but require evidence of the baptiſm of one of the immediate parents; whereby they plainly ſuſpend the viſible right of the infant on the viſible ſtate of the next parent; unleſs they ſay, either that one can give what he hath not to himſelf, or that the parents baptiſm, notwithſtanding of his groſs ignorance of the fundamental points of religion, or of his openly vitious life, never having had ſo much as a form of godlineſs, be a ſufficient evidence of his faith as to us; the abſurdity whereof I will not ſtand to prove, being under no temptation to ſuſpect the truth of it, but aſſured by the Lord's word that we ought to judge of the tree by its fruits.

Arg. X. laſtly, I ſhall conclude with this, That the way we plead for ſeems to have the advantage of the other, in that it apparently hath a more direct tendency to the advancement of the great ends of the goſpel; which calls men to join themſelves unto the Lord through Chriſt by faith, and 'to deny ungodlineſs and worldly 'luſts, to live godly and ſoberly in this preſent world.' And this it hath, in reſpect of the parents, of the children, and of others.

1. In reſpect of the parents. We find the moſt ignorant and profane wretches almoſt that are amongſt us cannot eaſily digeſt their childrens want of baptiſm, though they underſtand not the nature of it, the ends and uſes for which it is appointed; or if they do underſtand, yet take no care to perform their vows. Now, while their children are baptized, as they offer them to baptiſm, they are hardened in their impiety, and the church is mocked with their engagements; for what truſt can be put in them, or what credit can be given to the promiſes and engagements of ſuch? It is ſad that many are truſted in this matter, to whom we could give no credit in far leſs matters. And this evil is not cured by requiring of ſponſors: into whoſe power the child is not wholly given up, as to its education, as was ſaid before. But were the children of ſuch parents debarred from the ſacrament, till ſuch time as either their parents, one of them at leaſt, ſhould reform and amend their lives, as the ſame parents are debarred from the Lord's ſupper; or they themſelves ſhould evidence their faith by their carriage at years of diſcretion, it might rationally be expected, that we ſhould ſee a reformation in the lives of many, if not of moſt, who now do never bend themſelves that way: the haters of the Lord ſhould (at leaſt) lye unto him, as it is, Pſal. lxxxi. 15. And it is a promiſe made unto the church, that her enemies ſhall lye unto her, Deut. xxxiii. 29. but otherwiſe, it is rather a mocking than a lying to her; for, as Urſin ſays, "they "deny in their deeds what they profeſs with their mouth, "and it is plain they lye:" for faith and a Chriſtian life cannot be ſeparated. Whoſo ſeparate them, mock God and the church. But were they thus dealt with, they might at leaſt be brought to the performance of the external duties of religion; and who knows but many, being thus laid in Chriſt's way, might be really delivered from the ſnare of the devil, who otherwiſe are led captive at his pleaſure? Experience hath ſhown theſe hopes are not vain.

2. In reſpect of the children themſelves. They ſeem the ſame way to be hardened in their ſinful courſes. When they come to underſtand their parents have always lived as they ſee them do, and yet they were admitted to baptiſm in their infancy, being born not of unbaptized but baptized perſons, having right to the ſeal of the covenant by their parents, whether mediate or immediate; unleſs God with his overcoming grace work with them, there is no probability that they will in the leaſt trouble themſelves to mind religion. And if it ſhould be ſo, that their wicked parents ſhould tell them, they were devoted to God in their infancy, what ſucceſs can their inſtructions and admonitions be expected to have, while they have ſtill before their eyes the bad example of their parents? A more forcible inducement to wickedneſs, than a thouſand of their admonitions will be to the contrary. But were they denied baptiſm, till either their parents ſhould reform, or till they themſelves by their perſonal walk ſhould evidence their right thereto, in caſe their parents be incorrigible, it would be a very probable mean to induce them to ſeek the knowledge of religion, and to ſtudy a holy walk; conſidering that they live in a place where the goſpel is preached, and the ſad caſe of theſe that are without the church is holden forth. I confeſs, theſe things have no ſmall weight with my conſcience.

3. Whence it appears, that it would very probably have no ſmall influence on others, eſpecially the younger ſort; who firſt, becauſe of their youth, think religion not fit for them; and then betaking themſelves to a married ſtate, do wholly drown themſelves in the cares of the world or other luſts, leaving all care concerning their ſouls till they come to old age, (which perhaps they never ſee,) or to a death-bed. This would at leaſt put them in mind of changing their courſe of life, and turning over a new leaf ere they change their ſingle life. I ſhall add, that by this means it would probably come to paſs that the holy ordinance of baptiſm, which is a ſeal of the ſame covenant with the Lord's ſupper, ſhould not be ſo viſibly degraded, and put ſo far below the other ſacrament, in people's eſtimation, as indeed it is, by the promiſcuous admiſſion of infants thereto; there ſhould be a more beautiful harmony in the ſubjects receptive of both; groſs ignorance and wickedneſs ſhould get a black mark ſet on it before the world; and, finally the name of Chriſt ſhould not be ſo blaſphemed amongſt Turks, Jews, and Pagans, as it is, by reaſon of the vitious lives of thoſe that live in the viſible church.

Thus I have propoſed what arguments on both ſides have occurred to me, being deſirous to find out the truth: and though there be difficulties on both hands, ſome whereof poſſibly may not be eaſy to anſwer, yet truly, upon the whole of what is ſaid, I think the opinions of thoſe that ſay, None but the infants of viſible believers have a right to baptiſm before the church, is moſt probable; and that the infants of any ſuch as are not viſible believers, though their immediate parents be baptized, and though they have had godly remote parents, have no viſible right to baptiſm. And ſo I addreſs myſelf to conſider the arguments offered by thoſe that differ, which are mentioned above.

I. As to the firſt argument, That the infants of all Chriſtian parents are within the covenant; I anſwer, The phraſe of being within the covenant is ambiguous. 1. Improperly, it may ſignify a perſon's living under the outward adminiſtration of the covenant; that is, in a ſociety and amongſt a company where all goſpel ordinances are adminiſtered, ſo that they have the call of the goſpel to come to Chriſt, and partake of the benefits of the covenant; for to ſay, the meaning of that is, that they are thoſe to whom all ordinances are actually adminiſtered, as it would not help the cauſe, ſo it were impertinent here, while we ſpeak of thoſe to whom ſome of theſe ordinances may lawfully be adminiſtered. But this is very improperly ſaid to be a being within the covenant, and can give no right to the ſeals of the covenant: for why? people may be living under the outward adminiſtration of the covenant, that is, in a ſociety where all goſpel ordinances are adminiſtered, and yet neither be in reality nor in appearance within the covenant, as Jews and Pagans living in a Chriſtian town or country, having Chriſt offered to them, and the benefits of the covenant, as well as baptized perſons. So theſe Jews, Acts ii. were under the outward adminiſtration of the covenant, yet had they no viſible title to baptiſm, and conſequently were not properly within the covenant, till ſuch time as they gave evidence of their faith in Jeſus Chriſt, and repentance towards God. 2. There is a real being within the covenant coram Deo: as all are, whether adult or infants, that have the Spirit of grace. This cannot be meant here, (although it is that which only gives right before God to the ſeal;) becauſe, as Mr Bowles tells us, we cannot certainly know who are actually (as he terms it) within the covenant. 3. There is a viſible being within the covenant; that is, when a perſon doth really appear before men to be ſavingly within the covenant, or rather really and before God in it; and in this ſenſe I deny that ſuch infants as we ſpeak of, are within the covenant; yet this only is that whereby they can have a viſible right to the ſeal. The reaſon is, becauſe their parents are not viſibly within the covenant, unleſs you will reckon them to be viſibly within the covenant, who have made a profeſſed but a feigned devoting and upgiving of themſelves to God; which is openly and plainly diſcovered to be feigned, by their profane walk, or groſs ignorance. But of this before. Yet if you will, it will not be grievous to me to grant, that even this is a viſible being in a covenant with God, (though not in the covenant, viz. of grace, holden forth in the goſpel,) and a moſt proper viſible being, under their own voluntary promiſe to take God for their God; by virtue of which, God hath a kind of intereſt in them more than others that have not come that length, which ſerves to aggravate their ſin, and will heighten their miſery; ſo that they are God's people, by virtue of their voluntary obligation to take God for their God; and God alſo, by virtue of the ſame, is their God, to give them laws, exact obedience of them, and to puniſh them for their diſobedience. Yet are they not within the covenant of grace, either really or apparently; neither is God their God in the ſenſe of the promiſe on which this argument is built; and ſo they can have no right to baptiſm by their being under that covenant or promiſe, however it be called. The plain reaſon is, becauſe in that covenant, or the covenant of grace, to which baptiſm is appended as a ſeal, God promiſeth not to be our God on any other terms but ſaving faith: ſo that whoſoever believeth not really and ſavingly, is not before God within the covenant; and whoſo doth not viſibly believe, is not viſibly within it. Hence, ſeeing openly wicked baptized parents come not up, either really or in appearance, to the terms of the covenant, which is not a bare profeſſion with the mouth, or the receiving of the ſign in baptiſm, but true faith, or a real accepting of Chriſt, and God to be our God in him, they cannot be ſaid to be in the covenant, either really before God, or viſibly and apparently before the church. And this obſervation may ſerve to invalidate an argument wherein ſome do confide much, viz. That God owns himſelf to be the God of a profane people, and them to be his people. As to that which is added for proof, that ſuch are within the covenant, viz. That their parents were ſometimes ſealed with the ſeal of the covenant; I deny it follows; and there is good reaſon for it: for ſo let men turn Arians, Socinians, &c. or wallow in never ſo open and maniſeſt groſs abominations, notwithſtanding of all means uſed to turn them from their evil way, they muſt ſtill be looked on as within the covenant of grace, till they actually and formally renounce their baptiſm. But I ſay, with Riiſſenius, anſwering the Popiſh objection and argument adduced by them to prove that hypocrites and reprobates are true members of the church; becauſe they are baptized, they have only the ſign. It was never a ſeal to them, as I have already ſhown. It will be worth our pains to hear what a cenſure a very learned divine paſſeth againſt the aſſertors of this doctrine. "To "profane the covenant of God, (ſays he,) is to give "out and acknowledge thoſe for the confederates of "God, who are enemies to God; and ſo to make "ſuch a God as obligeth himſelf to hypocrites and "wicked ones." As for that proof of the argument viz. That the covenant is made, not only with the root but with the offspring; from whence it is inferred, that the ſeal may not only be effectual to the baptized, if he believe, but alſo render his ſeed capable of the external ſign, it is of no force. If the learned man that hath this argument mean by the root, the immediate parent, as I think he plainly does, then I deny the covenant is made with ſuch roots; and therefore not with the offspring either, viſibly; and have given the reaſon before. If he mean the remote parents, we have diſcourſed that already at ſome length. But truly I ſee no reaſon to talk ſo diminutively of baptiſm, as to call it the external ſign. Was ever baptiſm appointed of God 2.? for a mere external ſign? or do miniſters, in baptizing the children of profligate parents, mean that they ſhould receive only the external ſign, and not the ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, remiſſion of ſins, &c.? If ſo, no doubt they are guilty of profaning that holy ordinance. As for the confirmation of the argument taken from 1 Cor. vii. 14. we have already vindicated that place, and ſhewn that the apoſtle ſpeaks to them as viſible believers, which needs not be repeated here.

II. I am convinced there is ſcarcely leſs force in any of the arguments adduced for this cauſe, than in the ſecond, which is, That the children muſt not bear the iniquity of their fathers, (for which Ezek. xviii. 20. is alledged;) and therefore the infants of wicked, openly wicked baptized parents, are to be baptized. Anſw. 1. Why then is there an infant under heaven that ought not to be baptized? The infants of the rudeſt ſavages in the world have as little ſtretched forth their hands to their fathers iniquity, as the infants of baptized perſons. 2. Whoſe iniquity did the infants of the firſt unchurched generation of the Jews, and thoſe of Smyrna, Laodicea, and others, bear? I ſuppoſe none will plead their viſible right to baptiſm. 3. The Iſraelites had God's expreſs command for cutting off all the Canaanites, Deut. xx. 16, 17. Thou ſhalt ſave alive nothing that breatheth: but thou ſhalt utterly deſtroy them, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebuſites. All the males among the Midianites little ones are ſlain with the parents at God's command, Numb. xxxi. 17. The children of Dathan and Abiram were ſwallowed up with their parents; Achan's ſons and daughters were ſtoned and burned with him; and ſo, as Mr Baxter ſaith, cut off from the church and life. 4. Doth not the Lord expreſsly threaten, that he will viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation? But how all this may be, and yet that it ſhould be ſuch a ſtrange thing, that the children of openly wicked parents have no viſible right to baptiſm, becauſe they are the children of ſuch parents, I ſee not any colourable pretext for it. Now, as for the reconciling of this with Ezek. xviii. 20. the opponents are obliged to ſee to it as well as we, not only in the forementioned caſes, but alſo in their dealing with the Socinians, in the matter of the imputation of Adam's ſin, and our obnoxiouſneſs to the wrath of God upon the account of it, and in the point of Chriſt's ſatisfaction; in reference to both which, theſe heretics abuſe that ſcripture; yea, not only ſo, but in the caſe of baptizing the infants of heretics and excommunicated parents, where they do neceſſarily require ſponſors; and if there be none found that will oblige himſelf to the church, and undertake the care of teaching thoſe infants, they confeſs the action is luſory, and baptiſm is polluted: ſo that, even according to their own principles, the child may bear the father's iniquity. But the reconciling of theſe may be ſeen with ſuch of our divines as write on the ſecond command, and of the Socinian controverſy. And what anſwer thoſe learned men that uſe this argument, make for themſelves in the forementioned caſes, they may beſtow the ſame on themſelves for us. Only I think, in the mean time, they ſhould prove, that our doctrine doth properly make the children to bear the iniquity of their fathers in this caſe, as if the formal ground and reaſon whereupon the Lord proceeds againſt thoſe infants, were their parents open wickedneſs: which if they do not, they do but beat the air, and fight with a ſhadow. Why may not the Lord well be ſaid to viſit the open wickedneſs of ſuch parents on their children, when he only takes occaſion from that open impiety of the parents thus to puniſh the children; yea, to puniſh them for worſe, for their own ſin, which they bring to the world with them, and lays them open to the wrath of God? As if a king had a parent and his ſon both under ſentence of death for treaſon, and the father ſhould be ſo far from ſhewing any ſorrow for his offence, that he is ſtill going on in treaſonable attempts, the king ſhould on that occaſion execute the ſentence of death, not only on the father but alſo on the ſon, who otherwiſe might have had mercy; and thus puniſh the father in his ſon, as well as in his own perſon: and yet the formal reaſon of the ſentence againſt the ſon is his own treaſon, though he owes it to his father that the ſentence is executed, but yet has no ground to complain of injuſtice in this matter. For my part, I will plead for no more in this matter; and this ſufficiently maketh the argument without force.

III. But now we come to the third argument, which is the moſt conſiderable, in my opinion, of all that is advanced in this matter by thoſe that differ. It is this: If the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents, did not exclude their children from circumciſion; then the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of Chriſtian parents, cannot exclude their children from baptiſm; but the former is true: Ergo. Anſw. Before I come directly to anſwer this, I will propoſe three prejudices that I have againſt it. The firſt is this: That this argument concludes, that no hereſy, profanity, or impiety of Chriſtians, ſo called in oppoſition to Pagans, Turks, and Jews, excludes their children from baptiſm; ſo that the door is thereby opened to the children of the moſt groſs heretics that ever bare the name of Chriſtians, and that even though accompanied with the groſſeſt wickedneſs, unleſs perhaps they formally renounce their baptiſm: ſo that, as good right to the ſeal of the covenant have the children of the Gnoſtics, Nicolaitans, Ebionites, Cerinthians, Samoſatenians, Arians, and Socinians, and ſuch helliſh crew, as the moſt holy and pious profeſſor of the truth that is according to godlineſs. Quis feret hæc: what a ſad thing is it to repute practically open blaſphemers of Chriſt, and of the Holy Trinity, amongſt thoſe in covenant with God, although Turks, Pagans, and Jews belch not out ſuch blaſphemies as they do againſt the truth? 2. This is inconſiſtent with the principles of ſome of thoſe that uſe this argument. They ſay concerning the Jews ſimply, without any limitation, that their hereſy, &c. did not exclude their children from baptiſm; yet when they come to ſhew their mind concerning Chriſtian parents, they tell us only of the children of ſuch heretics, amongſt whom the formula of baptiſm is ſafe, that they are to be baptized; whereas their argument carries it, not only to thoſe, but to all heretics. And, alas! what is the formula of baptiſm to the purpoſe in Socinian congregations, where they do baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, while it is the open confeſſion of their Satanical ſynagogue, that Chriſt is a mere man, whatever divine dignity is conferred on him, and the Holy Ghoſt not a perſon? It is ſtrange there ſhould be ſuch virtue in bare words, without the true ſenſe and meaning. The Socinians in Tranſylvania ſometimes baptized in the name of Jeſus who was crucified, but afterwards were obliged by the Prince to baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. If the children of thoſe who were baptized in the name of Chriſt who was crucified, had right to baptiſm, then even the children of heretics, amongſt whom the very formula of baptiſm is not preſerved, have right to baptiſm; and ſo indeed the argument concludes: if they had not, but the latter ſort had, what made the difference betwixt them who ſtill retained their former doctrine and principles, and only for pleaſing of their prince changed their words? It is like it will be ſaid, the former were not Chriſtians: and why were they not Chriſtians? becauſe they were not baptized perſons, not being baptized in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt. I ſhould be loth to plead, that either of them were or are Chriſtians; but I dare not unchriſtian them upon this head, that they are not baptized, leſt I ſhould make the holy children of the faithful no Chriſtians, till they be baptized; or unchriſtian ſuch Anabaptiſts as are not baptized, till ſuch time as they may be baptized according to their principles; or unchurch the church in the wilderneſs, that for forty years wanted circumciſion: but I would make both the ſorts aforementioned no Chriſtians, on the ſame ground that John makes them Atheiſts, 1 John ii. 23. Whoſoever denieth the Son, the ſame hath not the Father, which is judiciouſly improven againſt them, by a late writer. And thus, as we go on, we go the deeper, finding the right of the children of very Atheiſts to baptiſm. 3. There is another prejudice I have againſt it, the lawfulneſs whereof may appear, if ye conſider this argument: If the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents, did not exclude their children from circumciſion; then the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents, did not exclude their children from baptiſm: the former is true. Ergo. The conſequence is plain: (I uſe the ſame words that the opponents do, for proof of the conſequence of their argument, only mutatis mutandis): for baptiſm was to them what circumciſion was to them; their circumciſion was to them a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, and ſo was baptiſm. Now, the grace of God is not more narrow under the New Teſtament, but more large than under the Old. This argument hath the advantage of the other, in that it proceeds from the Jewiſh parents and children under the old diſpenſation, to the ſame under the new; whereas the other proceeds from the Jews under the old, to the Gentiles under the new. If thoſe things alledged by them prove their conſequence, they muſt alſo prove ours. Yet I ſuppoſe they will not grant the concluſion of this argument, viz. That the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents, did not exclude their children from baptiſm; that the children of the Phariſees and Sadducees, impenitent murderers of the Lord of life, had a viſible right to baptiſm. However, I think Peter judged not ſo, when he does ſo peremptorily require repentance antecedently to baptiſm. One of the premiſſes muſt then be falſe: the minor is their own in terminis; they muſt then ſtick at the ſequel of the major. If there be any juſt ground ſo to do, we have the ſame reaſon againſt theirs, as we ſhewed before. And let me add, that it is certain it is one and the ſame covenant to which both baptiſm and circumciſion were appended as ſeals; it is one and the ſame church in which the Jews were under the Old Teſtament, and we are now under the New. The believing Jews were not taken out of one church, and put into another; but only others were graffed in amongſt them, and they continued ſtill in the ſame olive, Rom. xi. God did not pull down his old houſe, and build a new one; but only took down the partition-wall, and ſo made more room, Eph. ii. 14. Say then that the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents did not exclude their children from circumciſion, and ſee if it will not follow, that theſe things did not exclude them from baptiſm either. I am not concerned either as to the truth of the antecedent, or of the conſequent; it is only the connection betwixt the two. It is as true a propoſition, Si equus eſſet alatus, eſſet volabilis; as Paſſer eſt alatus & volabilis. I do indeed think the conſequent falſe, and therefore am led by the hand to queſtion the truth of the minor of the argument propoſed. I cannot but obſerve that (ſo far as I have read or remember) our divines againſt the Anabaptiſts do ſtill ſet themſeves to prove that the children of the faithful ought to be baptized; and, in their arguing from circumciſion, do hold the concluſion in the ſame terms: and ſo indeed the argument is not liable to the former exception, if it be ſo propoſed. The children of the faithful under the Old Teſtament were circumciſed; ergo, the children of the faithful under the New muſt be baptized. Now, although I ſhould not anſwer the argument propounded to mine own ſatisfaction, theſe ſeem to me ſuch lawful prejudices againſt it, that until I be rid of them, I cannot fall under the force of the argument.

To come now to anſwer directly to the argument, I deny the minor, viz. That the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents did not exclude their children from circumciſion. The grounds whereupon I deny it, beſides that in the third prejudice, are theſe. 1. God threatens the Jews as well as others, in his law given on mount Sinai, that he will viſit the iniquities of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation; which was already ſhown, that it extends to the ſeal of the covenant. And judicious Calvin underſtands it of “the Lord's taking away from the houſe of the wicked “his grace, the light of his truth, and other helps of “ſalvation.” He doth alſo declare the ſeed of the wicked to be a curſed ſeed, Deut. xxviii. 18.; of which before. 2. It was a poſitive law that God gave unto the Jews, That in caſe a city were withdrawn to ſerve other gods, that city was utterly to be deſtroyed, and all that was therein; no not the infants were to be ſpared, Deut. xiii. 12, 13, 14, 15. Now, if the idolatry of the Jewiſh parents excluded their infants from the church and life, it excluded them alſo from circumciſion; and ſo the impiety and profanity of the Jewiſh parents excluded their children from circumciſion. So Achan's ſons and daughters were ſtoned and buried with him, Joſh. vii. 24. 25, 26. How hard is it to believe, that the impiety of wicked parents among the Jews did go ſo far as to cut them off, even from the church and life; and yet not to cut them off from a viſible right to the ſeal of the covenant? 3. The Jews were to be excommunicated for hereſy, impiety, and profanity. This muſt needs be granted, unleſs we ſay, that there was no ſuch thing as excommunication amongſt them; for who could be excommunicated but ſuch? Now, even thoſe amongſt them that were excommunicated with the leaſt degree of excommunication, called NIDDUI, thoſe who were the apaſynagogoi, their male children were not circumciſed, as Goodwin tells us. And truly, whoſo conſiders how uſually the children ſmarted with their parents in their impiety, will not eaſily conceive of it otherwiſe. 4. This further appears, if we conſider how God viſits the profanity of the Jewiſh parents in their contempt of circumciſion, not only upon themſelves, but their ſeed; as we may learn from Gen. xvii. 14. And the uncircumciſed man child whoſe fleſh of his foreſkin is not circumciſed, that ſoul ſhall be cut off from his people: he hath broken my covenant. To underſtand this place, ſo as that the parent only was liable to this puniſhment, and not the child, till he come to the years of diſcretion, as Goodwin doth, ſeems to me a commentary deſtroying the text; which paſſeth a ſentence on all Jewiſh male children whoſe fleſh of their foreſkin is not circumciſed, that theſe ſhall be cut off from their people, and not that they ſhall be cut off when they are paſt the age of childhood. Till the eighth day they were not obliged, yea, they might not be circumciſed; but when that was over, and the child not circumciſed, through the parent's contempt, he is then an uncircumciſed man-child, and ſo liable to this ſentence here paſſed againſt all ſuch. Now, a parent might be guilty of this profane contempt two ways; either by reaſon of continuing impenitently in an openly wicked courſe, whereby his ſeed loſt viſible right to that ordinance; or by a profane ſlighting of it, though otherwiſe his child's title to it could not be denied; however, the child by this profanity of the parent, is cut off before he be capable to cut off himſelf; and no leſs can be meant by it, than a cutting off from viſible church-memberſhip. “If any object (theſe are Cal-“vin's words,) that the infants were not to be blamed; “——I anſwer, That even as God adopts the infant-“ſon in the perſon of the father, when the father re-“jects ſuch a benefit, the infant is ſaid to abdicate him-“ſelf from the church; for ſo much ſignifies that word, “——To be put out from among the people whom God “had choſen for himſelf. That ſome expound it, they “ſhall not be Jews,——is too coldriſe: we muſt go “further to wit, that God will not acknowledge among “his people thoſe who will not bear the mark or badge “of adoption.” However this text directly toucheth the cutting off of the child, yet it ſeems plainly to follow thence, that much more the parent was to be cut off. From which it appears, that the profanity of the Jewiſh parents did render their children no viſible church-members, and conſequently excluded them from circumciſion, as Jewiſh children, or children of ſuch profane parents: which hath the more weight, if it be conſidered, that the Lord doth not here command others to ſee to the circumciſion of ſuch a child, which might have been expected if he had any viſible right thereto, but precludes this, while he tells us, he ſhall be cut off, or not acknowledged among his people: ſo that ſhould ſuch a one afterwards be admitted, he comes in as a ſtranger doth, but not by birth-privilege.

I come now to conſider the reaſons adduced to prove that the hereſy, impiety, or profanity of the Jewiſh parents, did not exclude their children from circumciſion. The firſt, which is taken from the univerſality of the command, is anſwered already, in taking off an objection made againſt our firſt concluſion. The command does indeed oblige all to be circumciſed; but it doth alſo at the ſame time oblige them to be ſubjects theologically capable of that ordinance; as is above more fully declared. And by the ſame labour, the force of the ſecond reaſon, taken from the puniſhment to be inflicted on them, is removed alſo. And that ſcripture we have ſpoken to before, and improved it for our purpoſe. To the third, taken from the practice of Joſhua, in circumciſing all the people at Gilgal, at the command of God; I anſwer, It can no more be proven from hence, that Joſhua circumciſed every individual male among this people, than it can be proven from Matth. iii. 5, 6. that every individual perſon of Judea, and the region round about Jordan, was baptized of John, confeſſing their ſins; for there it is ſaid, 'All 'Judea, and all the region,' &c. yea it is certain, neither Joſhua himſelf nor Caleb were then circumciſed, being circumciſed before. But the perſons that were the firſt ſubjects recipient of that ordinance there, were men at age ſtanding in their own right, capable to anſwer for themſelves; and for the infants among them, they ſtood by the right of their parents, who are, without all poſſible proof, denied to be all viſible believers. How can it be proven, that ſuch were there circumciſed as were not viſible believers? The contrary is rather manifeſt, that being men at age, they were circumciſed at God's command. But if men will hold by this, that ſuch as were heretics, impious, and profane, were circumciſed by Joſhua, then we ſee more how far on this argument does lead us, not only to admit the children but even ſuch perſons themſelves at age, to baptiſm. That is obſervable in Joſhua's commiſſion, Joſh. v. 2. Make thee ſharp knives, and circumciſe again the children of Iſrael the ſecond time. With reſpect to Abraham and his family their being circumciſed, which was the firſt time, where the firſt ſubjects recipient of the ordinance were men at age and then the infants by right derived from them; and ſo to be continued in the church, the males always to be circumciſed in their infancy; but this order was broken off by the generation of adult perſons who came out of the land of Egypt, verſ. 5. Joſh. v. ſo that it is now a ſecond time to be ſet on foot, and ſo to go on as at firſt was appointed; firſt men at age to be circumciſed, and then their infants. But in Old or New Teſtament it cannot be inſtanced, where the firſt ſubjects recipient of the ſeal of the covenant, were not viſible believers. And is it not expreſsly ſaid, that all the people that were men of war, which came out of Egypt, and obeyed not the voice of the Lord, were conſumed in the wilderneſs? and after their circumciſion, before they removed from Gilgal, theſe people kept the paſſover? verſ. 10. Either then we muſt ſay, they were not heretics openly impious and profane, or elſe let us admit ſuch as theſe to the ſacrament of the Lord's ſupper too under the goſpel: As Urſin obſerves from theſe two places, Numb. xv. 28. Deut. xvii. 12. "God commandeth the contumacious to be taken away "out of the common wealth, nor does he allow them "to be members of his people; much leſs then will he "have them to be holden for members of his viſible "church, and to be admitted to the ſacraments." And it appears, that in the wilderneſs, in a ſpecial manner, God acted himſelf the part of the magiſtrate, and put his own laws in execution. As to the fourth and laſt reaſon, That we never read of any of them excluded; I anſwer, A non ſcripto ad non factum non valet ſequela. We read of children excluded from the church and life by their parents impiety, and it would ſeem there were laws for the excluding of them; ſo that, by the word of God, they were excluded de jure. And we have heard, that the children of excommunicated parents were actually excluded.

IV. As to the fourth argument, taken from Acts ii. 38, 39. we have already explained and improved that ſcripture againſt the doctrine of the opponents. Whether by the promiſe be meant that, I will be your God, and the God of your ſeed, or not, is not very certain. Some learned men underſtand by the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, peculiar to the firſt times of the church; and by the promiſe, the promiſe of the ſame, cited by Peter out of Joel, which he did repeat at large, verſ. 17. &c. But howſoever it be underſtood, it is clear, that this promiſe's being to them gave them not a right to baptiſm, but that repentance was not neceſſarily prerequired of them in order thereunto; as we have proved before; which quite invalidates any argument taken from hence for the cauſe that is pleaded. Again there is another thing in this text that makes it, as explained for this cauſe, altogether uſeleſs to the purpoſe; and that is, That the promiſe is no leſs ſaid to be to thoſe whom the Lord ſhall call, who as yet were afar off, than it is ſaid to be to thoſe to whom he ſpoke; but had the Gentiles yet uncalled a right to baptiſm too? Finally, it is to be marked, that thoſe to whom the apoſtle ſpeaks here, were not all Jews, but many of them were Gentiles, neither were they all proſelytes, as Aretius obſerves; yet to them is this ſpoken as well as to others. I have ſeen nothing as yet that ſatisfieth me as to that, in what ſenſe the promiſe is ſaid to be to thoſe perſons; but from what hath been ſaid, it plainly appears, that in whatever ſenſe it be ſaid to be unto them, it doth not follow, they had thereupon a right to baptiſm.

V. The fifth argument is, that John the Baptiſt and Chriſt's diſciples, baptized all that offered themſelves. This plainly concludes that we are to baptize all that offer themſelves; which I doubt if any ſober man will affirm, ſeeing Turks and Pagans may offer themſelves in mock to be baptized; nor would ever this have come into my head, that they baptized all that offered themſelves, as an argument for this cauſe, unleſs I had ſeen it among the arguments offered, as Mr Fulwood ſays, by divines, (what divines he means, unleſs it be Mr Prin, I cannot conjecture,) which to him were never ſatisfactorily anſwered. I grant indeed, that John and Chriſt's apoſtles did baptize whoſoever being viſible believers offered themſelves; but I utterly deny it in any other ſenſe. The proofs adduced, are lame, and not to the purpoſe; for it is plainly ſaid of the perſons whom John baptized, that they were baptized, confeſſing their ſins. Whether or no he did baptize the Phariſees and Sadducees, of whom mention is there made, is a queſtion, the negative whereof I think is moſt probable; ſeeing it is expreſsly ſaid, Luke vii 30. But the Phariſees and lawyers rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him. And in Luke iii. while the Evangeliſt is ſpeaking of thoſe whom John baptized, particular mention is made of the people, the publicans, and the ſoldiers, their aſking queſtions of John as to what they ſhould do, and each of them gets their directions: but there is not one word of the Phariſees and Sadducees aſking what they ſhould do, nor any particular directions given to them; for which no ſatisfying reaſon appears, if we admit that they were baptized as well as the the reſt: Matth. xxi. 32.——Ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him. ver. 45. And when the chief prieſts and Phariſees had heard his parables, they perceived that he ſpake of them. As for that ſaying of John, 'I indeed baptize you with water,' ver. 11. it will no more prove that he baptized every individual perſon to whom he ſpoke, than it will prove that Chriſt baptized every individual among them with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; for this as well as the other, John ſpeaks to the ſame perſons. Luke tells us the occaſion of this ſpeech, and to whom he ſaid it, Luke iii. 15, 16. And as the people were in expectation, and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt or not: John anſwered, ſaying unto them all, (amongſt whom the Phariſees and Sadducees were, as Matthew muſt be underſtood,) I indeed baptize you with water:——he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt. Will any from hence infer, that he baptized every individual perſon that heard him? if they will, we ſhall infer on the ſame ground, that they were all baptized with the Holy Ghoſt. So then that word, Luke iii. 21. When all the people were baptized, muſt needs be underſtood of all thoſe of them who were baptized by him at that time; as the forecited word, ver. 15, 16. All men muſed——and he ſaid to them all, viz. that heard him at that time. But grant he did baptize the Phariſees and Sadducees, how will it be made appear, that they were not viſible believers, or that they did not with the reſt confeſs their ſins? That he calls them a generation of vipers, will not prove it; for that he ſaid to all the multitude that came forth to be baptized of him, as well as to them: and it is to be ſpecially noticed, he calls them not vipers, but a generation of vipers, gennemata echidnon, thoſe come of vipers, or the offspring of vipers: this they might be, and yet not be vipers themſelves. That word, John iv. 1. doth indeed bear, that Chriſt by his diſciples baptized more than John; yet neither John nor Chriſt's diſciples baptized any but viſible believers; for it is expreſsly ſaid, that Chriſt made and baptized more diſciples than John, ibid.; ſo that both made them diſciples before they baptized them. Finally, I deny that the apoſtles baptized any on a bare profeſſion, or on a profeſſion which was not a probable profeſſion, or a probable evidence of true faith; as is clear from the ſcriptures inſtanced, of which before.

VI. As to the ſixth argument, taken from Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. that the children of the idolatrous Jews are called God's children and born to God: I anſwer, This will not prove that they had a viſible right to the ſeal, no more than that magiſtrates have ſuch a right, becauſe they are called the children of the Moſt High, Pſalm lxxxii. 6.; as ſpecious a character as is given here to the ſeed of theſe idolatrous perſons. Theſe might be God's children, as being heirs of God and the kingdom of heaven, though thus barbarouſly ſlain by their parents; yet no viſible members of the church, nor having any viſible right to the ſeal. What if I ſay, they were the firſt-born whom God challengeth a ſpecial propriety in, upon the account of the deliverance their fathers met with when the firſt-born of the Egyptians were ſlain? according to that law, Exod. xiii. 2. Sanctify unto me all the firſt-born, whatſoever openeth the womb,——both of man and beaſt: it is mine. It will not hence follow, as Mr Fulwood ſays, that he owneth their parents yet to remain in his covenant; for this law would have obliged the children of Iſrael, though they had openly renounced God's covenant and turned entirely apoſtates. It was the whole nation of Iſrael, that had this mercy conferred on them, and ſo it obliged thoſe that were of that nation, though not of the church. Wherefore, howſoever the parents ſhould apoſtatiſe and renounce the covenant, by this law their firſt-born was the Lord's, unleſs we will ſay, that men by their iniquity may free themſelves from being under the law of God once given to them. But truly I think, if we conſider the context, we may plainly perceive the reaſon of this deſignation given to thoſe children; and that is this: Becauſe God gave them thoſe children, but, in the giving of them, reſerved ſtill his propriety in them, and made them not abſolute lords over them, to diſpoſe of them what way they pleaſed; but they were obliged to make uſe of them for God's honour, under whom they had their right to them. So that herein, not only cruelty, but robbing of God, and diſpoſing of what was his, contrary to his revealed will, is objected to them. Now, view the context, and ſee how it favours this expoſition, ver. 17. Thou haſt alſo taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my ſilver, which I had given thee, and madeſt to thyſelf images, ver. 18, 19. Thou haſt ſet mine oil and mine incenſe before them. My meat alſo which I gave thee, fine flour, &c. ver. 22. Thou haſt not remembered the days of thy youth, when thou waſt naked and bare. Nothing more ordinary with the wicked and idolaters, than to forget God's propriety in what they have, and thence to take liberty to diſpoſe of it at their pleaſure, and to thank their idols for them rather than God; therefore God will vindicate his propriety in what they have, that they may ſee their ſin, in abuſing God's gifts to them towards his diſhonour. Hoſ. ii. 5. I will go after my lovers, that gave me my bread and my water, my wool and my flax, mine oil and my drink. Ver. 8. For ſhe did not know that I gave her corn, and wine and oil,——which they prepared to Baal. Ver. 9. Therefore will I——take away my corn,---my wine,---my wool, and my flax.

VII. The ſeventh argument is taken from the following abſurdities, that are ſuppoſed to accompany our doctrine.

1ſt, Families, pariſhes, &c. ſhould ſoon be paganized. Anſw. Fiat juſtitia, & ruat mundus. A man, ſay ſome, had better be a beaſt than like a beaſt. Sure I am, it had been telling ſome they had never been baptized, nor acknowledged to be church-members. But truly I think the quite contrary would follow moſt probably, viz. that this would be a mean to bring them to be viſibly chriſtianized, as was above declared. It is truly a ſad matter, that people have nothing but their baptiſm to diſcern them from Pagans. I confeſs, if the church ſhould give over all dealing with them, there were ſome ſhew for the abſurdity, or rather bad conſequence, before mentioned; but while it is ſtill the church's duty to preach to them in order to their converſion, there is no reaſon for it; yea, if it were ſo, by all probability, preaching would have more influence on them than now it hath. Though I dare not ſay, it is more for the honour of Chriſt to have no more in his viſible kingdom than only ſuch as are real believers, and rather to want cloſe hypocrites than have them: yet I confeſs it is my ſettled judgment, that as it is a greater credit for a maſter of a family to have a few ſervants of entire fame in his houſe than to have a great many rogues; ſo it is more for the honour of our holy head in the world, to have a few viſible believers or ſaints, viſible members of his church, than a great number of profligate wretches amongſt others, members of the ſame.

2dly, Many infants of believing parents ſhould be deprived of this ordinance. I anſwer, Baptiſm is not due coram eccleſia to the infants of any but viſible believers, if therefore a parent be a believer, and yet not a viſible believer, his child hath no right before the church to baptiſm; for de occultis non judicat eccleſia. But whatever men may ſpeak of peoples going to heaven, the ſound of their feet not being heard, it ſeems to be no very difficult queſtion, Whether or not a perſon come to years, can be a real ſaint, and yet want a form of godlineſs? "Although, ſays a grave author, we cannot "ſay, every one that hath a form of godlineſs, hath alſo "the power of godlineſs; yet we may truly ſay, that "he who hath not the form of godlineſs, hath not the "power of godlineſs; though all be not gold that "gliſtereth, yet all gold doth gliſter." Our Lord tells us, By their fruits ye ſhall know them. I ſhall add, that if a perſon be a real believer, and yet not appear ſo to be, he that judgeth him a real believer, judgeth amiſs, for he is not ſo.

3dly, As to the third, That miniſters have no certain rule, &c. it equally militates againſt the ordinary practice of admitting to, and debarring from the Lord's table thoſe that are baptized, and not excommunicated; the ſame flouriſh of words might be uſed in that caſe. But I deny that we have no certain rule here, or that we ſtand on uncertainties. The rule is certain, becauſe laid down in God's word, viz. That we are to take that perſon for a viſible believer who makes a credible profeſſion, and are to deal with him in the diſpenſing of the ſeals, as ſuch. This rule we learn from all thoſe ſcriptures that ſhew us on what grounds miniſters did baptize perſons who offered themſelves, Matth. iii. 6. Acts ii. 41. and viii. 12. 37. and ſuch like. And what though the perſon whom we take for a viſible believer be not a believer indeed, we are not miſtaken in our judgment, unleſs we go to judge ſo as we have no warrant, that is, to judge him to be certainly a true believer; if men judge ſo of others, what wonder they be miſtaken, when they arrogantly thruſt themſelves into that which the Lord hath not revealed. But we are to judge according to the rule, That a perſon making a credible profeſſion, is probably a true believer, that is, certainly a viſible believer: and herein we are not miſtaken, though the perſon we ſo judge of, be really in the gall of bitterneſs, and bond of iniquity; for it is certain he appears and ſeems to be a true believer, though indeed he is ſtark naught before the Lord. As for that which is added, viz. "That one thinks ſo much enough to make "one a viſible believer, &c." Anſw. The Lord hath plainly told us in his word whom he accounts real ſaints, and whom the church hath accounted viſible ſaints. If we ſwerve from the rule in our application, it is no doubt our ſin: who can help it, if men will needs cloſe their eyes when the works of the fleſh are manifeſt? It is certain we are commanded to ſeparate the precious from the vile, to put difference betwixt the holy and profane, and to judge of the tree by its fruits. And for infallibility of our judgments in the application, as none will pretend to it now, ſo it can as little be had the other way as this way. Suppoſe it be, that ſuch a parent was baptized; that ſuch a one hath had godly remote parents amongſt us Gentiles; unleſs we go up to Noah or Adam, no greater certainty can be here than what we have from our eyes and ears, which doth not reach to an infallibility; yea, for the moſt part, we have not ſo great certainty the other way, as in the way we plead for. But enough of this.

VIII. We come now to the laſt argument, viz. That the children of many openly ſcandalous and wicked parents, are the children of baptized church-members. Anſw. I conceive there is a vaſt difference betwixt an openly ſcandalous, and an openly wicked perſon; ſo that they ought not to be confounded. David and Peter in the hour of temptation were openly ſcandalous, but not openly wicked perſons. And therefore as to many openly ſcandalous I yield the argument, concluding that the children of many openly ſcandalous ought to be baptized; but then there is ignoratio elenchi. Laying aſide this then of many openly ſcandalous, and the argument being made to proceed only as to the openly wicked, I diſtinguiſh betwixt church-members de jure & de facto. It is plain we ſpeak now of viſible church-members. Thoſe that are church-members de jure, are thoſe who have not only a poſſeſſion of church-membership, but a right and lawful poſſeſſion of it. Thoſe are church-members de facto (only,) which have a viſible poſſeſſion of that privilege, but no rightful poſſeſſion; and therefore ought to be caſt out and deprived of that poſſeſſion. Now, ſuch a poſſeſſion can give no right either to the parent or child as to church-privileges, for nullum jus fundatur in injuria: even as an uſurper, though he hath the crown, yet neither he nor his have right to the revenues of the crown. Wherefore I diſtinguiſh the major of that argument. The children of baptized church-members, who are viſible members in point of right, ought to be baptized; and thus the minor is falſe; the children of baptized church-members, who are ſuch only de facto, and not de jure, ought to be baptized, I deny. And in this ſenſe only are the openly wicked (ſome of them, I ſay,) baptized church-members.

A MEDITATION on the DAY OF EXPIATION, and the FEAST OF TABERNACLES.

THE day of expiation was the only anniverſary ſtated faſt and humiliation that God gave to the church of the Jews; it was a ſorrowful day, for afflicting their ſouls: ſo that he who ate any thing that day, was liable to cutting off. The feaſt of tabernacles was the moſt joyful feaſt they had; ſo that the Jews ſay, That he who never ſaw the rejoicing at the drawing of water (uſed at this feaſt,) never ſaw rejoicing all his life. The ceremonial law was the Jews goſpel; and the goſpel to them and us is glory let down in words and ſyllables, the map of Immanuel's land, a looking glaſs wherein we ſee heaven, a ſcheme and draught of the houſe with many manſions. The day of expiation repreſents to me the time of this life, the ſtate of the ſaints in this world; the feaſt of tabernacles, heaven.

The day of expiation went before the feaſt of tabernacles. Why ſhould not our day of afflicting our ſouls go before our days of rejoicing? The Babylonians began their natural day at the ſun riſing, and ſo their night came laſt. The Jews began theirs at ſun-ſetting, and ſo they had their night firſt. Wo to you that laugh now, for ye ſhall weep. Bleſſed are they that mourn now, they ſhall be comforted. Let the evening and the morning make our day. If we have our morning firſt, the fears of the approaching night will make our ſun go down at noon. If we will take the evening firſt, when in the darkeſt hour we cry, Watchman, what of the night? we will get the anſwer, The morning cometh. It was the Pſalmiſt's choice, Pſal. xvii. 14, 15.

The day of expiation was but one day: the feaſt of tabernacles laſted ſeven days; which number of ſeven has gained the reputation of perfection. If the ſaints life here be ſorrowful, it is ſhort. Our life here is but a day, with a morning, noon and evening. And that ſun in the heavens which runs ſuch a rapid courſe, never ſtanding ſtill, either aſcending or deſcending, ſeems to be ſet in the heavens, to teach us ſo to count our days, as to apply our hearts to wiſdom, Eccleſ. i. 5. haſteth to his place where he aroſe; Heb. panteth, as a man running with full ſpeed, till almoſt out of breath. How quickly is the vain ſhew in which we walk at an end? Solomon (Eccleſ. iii.) will allow only a time to be born, and a time to die, as if life were nothing but a ſkip out of the womb into the grave; the womb of mother earth (Job i. 21,) being ready to keep us, when falling out of the womb of the mother that conceived us. No wonder our weeping and crying, wherewith we come to the world out of our mother's womb continue till we return thither; there being ſcarce time betwixt the two to dry our cheeks. But, as theſe flies bred by the river Hypanis in Scythia, we are bred in the morning, winged at noon, and dead at night. Much need to fly while our wings laſte. If our affliction be grievous, it will not laſte. Nay, but the apoſtle comparing our affliction with the weight of glory, will not allow it any weight, 2 Cor. iv. 17. where he calls it Gr. That light thing of our affliction; light, not only in reſpect of weight, but ſwiftneſs: that haſte-like thing of our affliction, which in a moment ſkips away. This ſhould correct the petty time-eternities that we make to ourſelves in our affliction, Pſal. xiii. 1. Nay, our weeping endures but a night, Pſal. xxx. 5. The feaſt comes in the morning, Pſal. xvii. ult. O but the feaſt laſts long! what ſhall or can we ſay of eternity, that everlaſting Sabbatiſm that remains to the people of God, that morning that knoweth no night; that ocean that knoweth no ſhore?

There were but four free days intervening betwixt the day of expiation and the feaſt of tabernacles; the former being on the 10th, the latter on the 15th day of the ſeventh month, Lev. xxiii. 27. 34. By what time the greateſt affliction ſits down with us, the greateſt joy knocks at the door. O quick harveſt of glory! O hot ſeed of tears that ſo quickly ſpring up, and ſo ſuddenly bow their heads with that weight of glory on them! to ſee bottles of tears turned, and that ſo quickly, into rivers of pleaſures, wonderful! Surely there is need of faith in our religion, to believe ſuper-rational myſteries. It is a bundle of wonders. How unlike were the Jews rejoicing and dancing at the feaſt of tabernacles, to what they were but four days before, when bowing down their heads and afflicting their ſouls, at that ſolemn yearly remembrance of ſin! Quantum mutatis ab illo qui quondam! If it were not that the light of glory infallibly removes all miſtakes, the ſaints there would miſken themſelves, and be apt to think it a dream. It would at leaſt be a while ere they came to themſelves.

At the feaſt of tabernacles they were to dwell in booths made of the branches of the trees, not in houſes, Lev. xxiii. 42. and the reaſon is given, ver. 43. Becauſe they dwelt in booths in the wilderneſs, when the Lord brought them out of Egypt. So their places of mourning are turned to places of rejoicing. Joy ariſing from paſt dangers, feelingly toucheth mens hearts. The more they remember their wilderneſs-booths, the more they will rejoice. This ſeems to me to point out an ingredient in the heaven of the ſaints, that would have had no place in the heaven of innocent Adam, and his ſinleſs offspring. Had not the Jews dwelt in booths in the wilderneſs, they had not rejoiced in them ſeven days in the land of Canaan. It was their going ſo low that raiſed them ſo high. Surely the ſaints are more than conquerors. God's people in heaven will not forget their wilderneſs entertainment. It will be for the glory of God to mind, and it will ſcrew up their joy, Rev. v. 9. It is ſtoried of Agathocles, who being a potter's ſon, became king of Sicily, that he uſed to be ſerved at his table with earthen veſſels; alledging the reaſon thereof from his extract. He was wiſe, to give that additional ſweetneſs to his enjoyments, which he could not have had if he had been born heir to the crown. Certainly meat can never be ſo ſweet as to a hungry man; nor can one ſo much eſteem wealth as he that has been pinched with poverty. The beſt view of the ſtars is from the bottom of a deep narrow pit. Surely the remembrance of the croſs will ſweeten the crown; and the memory of the wilderneſs will put an additional verdure on the fields of glory, when the ſaints ſhall be walking through them in their white robes, remembering the mournful blacks in which they were wont to appear. Let us not caſt at our bleſſings, nor grudge to ſow the ſeeds of glory. Durate, & voſmet rebus ſervate ſecundis. The Heathens, it ſeems, allowed proſperity not to be firſt, but allotted it the ſecond place. God himſelf has confirmed the order. Take your firſts then pleaſantly, though grievous. Olim hæc meminiſſe juvabit.

I[illegible] worthy of our conſideration, to take notice what theſe booths were to be made of: Lev. xxiii. 40. And ye ſhall take unto you on the firſt day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook. Compare Neh. viii. 15. ——Fetch olive-branches, and pine-branches, and myrtle-branches, and palm-branches, and branches of thick trees, to make booths. As to the boughs of goodly trees, the Jews, ſays Lightfoot, interpreted that of the pomecitron; and ſo did carry a pomecitron apple in their hand at that feaſt. This is not clear from the text.

As to the olive-tree, it is a beautiful tree, that retains its greenneſs all the winter, Hoſ. xvi. 6. The pine likewiſe is an ever-green, continues green all the year. Spec. mun. This puts me in mind of that perpetual ſpring wherewith Immanuel's land is bleſſed for ever. No winter there, no caſting of leaves. The crown is immarceſſible, fades not away, as the flowery garlands given of old to victors did in a little time, 1 Pet. i. 4. We have long winters here; wherein life, leaf, and fruit, are all many times almoſt gone. Our ſprings are ſhort. Our greenneſs ſoon decays. That will make amends for all.

They were to take the boughs, Heb. the fruit of goodly trees, i. e. of fruit-bearing trees, or boughs with the fruit on them, Lev. xxiii. 40. The pine bears fruit, called pine-apples; of which I can give no account. But concerning the fruit of the olive, ſee Judg. ix. 9. Pſal. civ. 15. Oil which maketh man's face to ſhine, uſed ordinarily at feaſts. This may preſent to our view that paſſage in Chriſt's transfiguration, Matth. xvii. 2. His face did ſhine as the ſun. With which we may compare what the apoſtle ſays, Phil. iii. ult. that he ſhall change our vile bodies, and make them like his glorious body. Compare alſo Dan. xii. 3. What though our faces are now clothed with ſhame? what though they gather blackneſs? His viſage was marred more than any man's; yet there is now no veſtige thereof in that face which ſurpaſſeth the ſun in brightneſs, and would with its ſplendor darken that globe of light. Neither ſhall any ſpot be ſeen in the faces of thoſe who dwell in theſe booths in the promiſed land.

The pine was alſo remarkable for its durableneſs, not being ſubject to worms or rottenneſs, for which cauſe ſhips were made thereof. The ſaints have their anchor, and therefore their ſhip too, Heb. vi. 19. O who would think that ever the ſhip were ſo durable! What a blyth ſight will it be to ſee them all brought ſafe and ſound, after ſuch toſſing in the ſea of this world, to the ſhore of Immanuel's land! There they will never rot.

As for the palm-tree, the beſt of which grew in Paleſtine, it is notour it was a ſign of victory; the reaſon whereof ſeems to be that which is ſaid of it, that when oppreſſed with heavy weights, it yields not, but rather ſhooteth upward the more. The myrtle alſo was a ſign of victory, being worn garland-wiſe in triumphs. Hence (Zech. i. 8.) Chriſt is ſeen among the myrtle-trees in the valley; ſhewing, that the church of Chriſt, however low ſhe was brought by the enemies, ſhould come off victorious. It ſeems then, all that will come up to the feaſt of tabernacles, muſt be ſoldiers, and conquerors too. Indeed the Jews behoved to fight their room in and their way to Canaan, and they won it at length. And what is heaven but an eternal triumph? Rev. vii. 9. Let us animate us to the ſpiritual warfare. The people in Egypt, the more they were oppreſſed, the more they grew. How ſweet will all the heavy wreſtlings with fleſh and blood, principalities and powers, be to us when we get the palms in our hands!

I find the palm was wont to be given to thoſe that overcame in bloody battles, and particularly to thoſe that were victors in the bloody ſpectacles of the gladiators; the myrtle, when they had got a victory without ſlaughter of men. All the ſaints go not to glory through a ſea of their own blood. Every one gets not a fiery chariot. And we have reaſon to believe, that as all are not alike in the battle, ſo there will be degrees of glory, and the triumph of ſome greater than that of others. But, if we look ſomewhat higher to the main thing that ſtood between heaven and us, the victory to all the ſaints is a bloody, unbloody victory; bloody in reſpect of Chriſt, unbloody in reſpect of them. Some of them have ſlept, never one of them died, in the cauſe: Rom. viii. 34. It is Chriſt that died. The protomartyr (Acts vii. ult.) fell aſleep. Therein, as in a glaſs, the Lord would repreſent to all thoſe that were after to ſtrive againſt ſin reſiſting to blood, what that ſort of paſſage to heaven would be to them. Sure death's nature is changed; it is not what it was to Chriſt; it is not that which was threatened, Gen. vii. 17. Why may not the name be changed too? The Holy Ghoſt's connection, (Rev. xii. 11,) is worthy to be remarked. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony; and they loved not their lives even unto death. In the victory, Chriſt's blood and their blood are not joined together: but Chriſt's blood and their word of teſtimony. Chriſt fought, they but gave the ſhout, to the obtaining of the victory. Sure he trode the wine-preſs alone, and of all the people there was none to help him.

As for the willows, it is known the place thereof is by the water-ſides. Hence that text, Lev. xxiii. 40. calls it the willows of the brook. God's people ſometimes hanged their harps on the willows that grew by the rivers of Babylon, Pſal. cxxxvii. 1, 2.; becauſe then their joy was turned to mourning, and they had no uſe for them. In Immanuel's land there is a river, on either ſide of which grows the tree of life, Rev. xxii. 1, 2. but no harps hang thereon. They behoved to go to the brook, and fetch their willows. I cannot find one place where the willows is ſpoke of, but it is ſtill with ſome addition of its growing by the waters, Job xl. 22. Pſal. cxxxvii. 1, 2. Iſa. xv. 7. Ezek. xvii. 5. Iſa. xliv. 4. They cannot want nouriſhment in the greateſt drought. This preſents to my view, that Immanuel's land is no land of drought; the trees of the Lord's planting are ſet by the rivers, ſo that they can never want moiſture, but ſhall have an eternal ſupply of the Spirit, by Chriſt, from the Father, whereby they ſhall ſpring as willows by the water-courſes, even thoſe floods of the Spirit's influences, Iſa. xliv. 3, 4. This promiſe is but arled in this life; it will tell out through all the ages of eternity, and will never be at an end, till the laſt drop of that river run by, which will never be.

It is alſo ſaid of the willow, that it is a great friend to chaſtity: for which cauſe forſaken lovers are allowed to wear a willow-garland. Which offers to our conſideration that character the ſcripture ſo often gives to thoſe that are to be the inhabitants of the upper houſe, who are to be preſented as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt, when the marriage is to be ſolemnized in heaven, 2 Cor. xi. 2. and without ſpot, Eph. v. 27. They that ſtand on mount Zion with the Lamb are virgins, Rev. xiv. 4. True it is, it is not to the ſtate of the ſaints in heaven that theſe words have the neareſt reference; but it is implied therein: the ſtate of the church in the world being held out in terms borrowed from the ſtate of the church triumphant.

When I compare that Neh. viii. 15. Go forth unto the mount, and fetch olive-branches, &c. with that Lev. xxiii. 40. and willows of the brook, not brooks: I cannot but incline to think theſe willows grew about the brook Kidron, which ran between Jeruſalem and the mount of Olives; which, no doubt, was the mount they were directed to. Which may lead us to the conſideration of the ſpring and ſource of all the joys in heaven, even the ſorrows of Chriſt. When David was obliged to leave Jeruſalem upon the account of the rebellion raiſed by his own ſon, he paſſed over this brook Kidron in great diſtreſs, and went up by the aſcent of mount Olivet, weeping as he went, 2 Sam. xv. 23. 30. In this there was a type of Chriſt's ſuffering for the ſins of ſons and daughters. And ſo we find him, after he had been at the laſt feaſt with his diſciples, preached his farewell ſermon to them, and prayed that prayer, John xvii.; the hour being come, ver. 1. paſſing over this brook Kidron, John xviii. 1. to grapple with the wrath of God, in the garden that was on the other ſide of it. Who can imagine in what caſe he went over it? for who can conceive that weight of wrath he was to bear? A far-off proſpect of it had a terrible effect on him, John xii. 27, 28. Behold the wells of ſalvation whence we draw our joy; thoſe bitter waters of wrath that he was plunged into, that terrible cup which his ſinleſs human nature ſhivered at; the brook that he drank of in the way, Pſal. cx. ult.

Lightfoot ſaith, that the Jews ſo underſtood that rejoicing, commanded at that feaſt, as that there was in the court of the temple trumpets ſounding, dancing, &c.; that their greateſt joy began towards night, continued far on in the night, and ſome of the moſt zealous would ſtay out the whole night, Iſa. xxx. 29. compare Rev. iv. 8. They reſt not day and night, ſaying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

He adds, that once every day, they went about the altar, with their myrtle, palm, and willow in their hands, ſinging Hoſanna, Pſal. cxviii. 28. In the mean time they ſet their boughs bending towards the altar. Truly the imagination of this pierceth; we will never ſee them do that again: but we will ſee the ſaints in glory compaſſing the altar always, and ſinging their Hoſanna about it, bending their palms towards the altar; acknowledging they owe all to him, even to the 'Lamb that 'was ſlain, and hath redeemed them to God by his 'blood.' I conclude with that, Rev. vii. 9.——'A 'great multitude——ſtood before the throne, and be'fore the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms 'in their hands; ver. 10. 'And cried with a loud voice, 'Salvation unto our God that ſitteth upon the throne, 'and unto the Lamb.' A plain alluſion to what is ſaid. O that we may be helped ſo to manage our day of expiation, (for it is but a day, and no expiation beyond it,) as that we may be accounted worthy to partake of the joy of the feaſt of tabernacles!

ARGUMENTS from Scripture and Reaſon, proving CONSERVATION to be a poſitive Act, or a continued Creation.

CONſervation is a poſitive act, i. e. an effect, or continued creation; though not a bringing of the creatures out of nothing, yet a keeping them every moment from running back into the womb of nothing: ſo that in reſpect of God they are continually in fieri.

This I find was the doctrine of the ſchoolmen: and both ſcripture and reaſon prove it.

ARGUMENTS FROM SCRIPTURE.

Arg. I. Heb. i. 3. Pheron te ta panta, &c. The apoſtle ſeems to me to have reſpect to Job xxvi. 7. He hangeth the earth upon nothing, ſuſtaining the ſame by his creating power. Thus the Son of God holds up all in their being by his power, that they may not fall down into that abyſs of nothing, from which the ſame power raiſed them up at firſt. I remark, 1. That the word pheron; whatever elſe be imported in it, there can be no leſs than conſervation and ſuſtentation, whatever way theſe be explained. And as the ſcripture ordinarily links together creation and conſervation, ſo that is not wanting in this context either; compare ver. 2. 'By whom al'ſo he made the worlds.' 2. This ſuſtentation or conſervation is a poſitive act, according to the import of the word. It is an act of power; not a ceaſing from acting, or a not deſtroying of the creature: by the word of his power they are upheld. 3. They are ſuſtained the ſame way they were created. It is the word of his power does both, Gen. i. 3. 'And God ſaid, Let there be light: 'and there was light.' Ver. 6. 'And God ſaid, Let 'there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters; and 'let it divide the waters from the waters.' Pſal. xxxiii. 6. 'By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; 'and all the hoſt of them by the breath of his mouth.' Ver. 9. 'For he ſpake, and it was done; he comman'ded, and it ſtood faſt.' The apoſtle ſays, he calleth things that are not, to be; calleth them, viz. by his powerful word; a moſt poſitive action. Thus alſo he ſuſtains them: therefore conſervation is a continued creation. 4. This is a continued action, pheron, in the preſent time; therefore a continued creation. It is not needleſs; therefore they would fall down from that in which they are kept, if they were not ſuſtained every moment, if his bearing ſhoulders ſhould ſhift them off for a moment to bear their own weight, Iſa. xlvi. 4. I have made, and I will bear——carry, &c. as one doth a weight or burden on his back. I will not ſay but this looks farther; but this ſuſtentation cannot be excluded, but is ſuppoſed. However, the Arminians have no ground to quarrel it; ſeeing they will allow that God made us men, though we make and continue ourſelves his people. 5. The apoſtle uſeth this to prove Chriſt to be God, as appears from the whole chapter. Compare chap. ii. 1, 2, 3. Now, if this be no poſitive act, or any thing leſs than what argues omnipotency; if all of it be the leaving of the creature to ſtand, as the maſon leaves his houſe after it is built, it would no more prove Chriſt to be God than the angels. True, I do not think an angel can annihilate the leaſt creature; yet ſure then they do not deſtroy them, they leave them in their being. But though they cannot deſtroy or annihilate the ſoul or the body, yet they can deſtroy man. The ſcriptures prove God to be God, from his poſitive acting; and idols to be no gods, becauſe they act not.

Arg. II. Rev. iv. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honour, and power; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are, and were created. Here again creation and conſervation are joined as effects, or rather acts, of the ſame almighty power; Thou art worthy to receive——power, i. e. to have thy power acknowledged; for thou haſt created all things, and for thy pleaſure they are and were created. Now, there can be no reaſon why he ſhould receive glory, honour, and power, becauſe things are for his pleaſure, if he did not glorify and honour his power in keeping them up. If it be a mere ceſſation of his power, and that he does only not throw them down, that may be ground for the glory of his mercy and goodneſs, but not of his power; for every attribute of God is glorified by the emanation thereof: but in this caſe there were no emanations of power; but on the contrary, a ſtopping of the ſame. But according to the right ſide of the plea, things run pleaſantly here, and that according to the ſtrain of the ſcripture, which magnifies the power of God upon the account of the ſuſtentation, as of the creation of the creatures. I cannot but take notice of the Greek, dia to thelema ſou eiſi, which Beza and Piſcator render per voluntatem tuam. Compare Rev. xxii. 11. Gr. And thus the words ſpeak home to the point, ſhewing that it is by the will of God that they are even as they were created. So that creation and conſervation are ſet on an equal level.

Arg. III. Col. i. 17. By him all things conſiſt. Such is the fluid nature of the creatures, that they cannot conſiſt without conſervation from the Lord, more than waters, unleſs they be held together by ſomething beſides themſelves. And this giving of them this conſiſtence, is a poſitive action; or they conſiſt by a poſitive action of God; for it is by virtue of the very ſame power, and in the very ſame way, that they were created, verſe 16. en auto ektiſthe; and verſe 17. en auto ſuneſteke. This is likewiſe uſed to prove the divinity of Jeſus Chriſt. Therefore, &c.

Arg. IV. John v. 17. My Father worketh hitherto. Chriſt here defends his healing on the Sabbath day the man that lay at the pool, by the example of his Father's working ſtill, and that on the Sabbath-day, as well as other days; though the Jews obſerved, by God's appointment, the Sabbath-day, in commemoration of God's reſting on that day from the work of creation. Therefore the Father's working here, is the work of providence, and particularly of conſervation, which is mainly aimed at; for the work which Chriſt defends by this example, was of that kind, even the preſerving of the life of man. This working of the Father muſt needs be a poſitive action, or the Arminians muſt give us a new lexicon. Beſides, unleſs it be ſo, this example could not juſtify our Lord's practice; for they condemned him becauſe he did not ceaſe from working, and leave the poor man as he was before the Sabbath.—Moreover, this working of the Father is a continued creation; for though he reſted the ſeventh day from all his work which he had made, Gen. ii. 2. yet he hitherto works, how? by continuing it in the conſervation of all things, ſpecies and individuals; and the work that our Lord was defending was a creature-conſervation, being a miraculous cure. Further, if this work of conſervation be nothing elſe but a not deſtroying of the work which was made, and left with a power in it to conſerve itſelf, it would no more prove the Father's working on the Sabbath-day, which Chriſt in theſe words doth aſſert, than the going of a clock on the Sabbath, which was made and ſet a going any other day of the week, will prove the maker of the clock to work on the Sabbath-day.

Arg. V. Acts xvii. 28. For in him we live, and move, and have our being. If we live, move, and have our being in God, conſervation is a poſitive act, and continued creation; for we ſhould fall from life and being upon the ceaſing of that life-giving power to act in us, as doth the body when the ſoul is gone. If conſervation were not a poſitive act, but negative, that is, no act at all, but a ceſſation from action, after he had given us life and being, we might be ſaid to live and be from him, but not in him, but in ourſelves. It is like it will be ſaid here, that this is to be underſtood of the effect of a paſt action of God, and that en auto is no more than per illum, as Luke xi. 20. en dactula Theou, by the finger of God. Indeed, no doubt the apoſtle means, that we live, move, &c. by the Lord; but I think, whoſo will allow himſelf to be encompaſſed with the light of this context, verſ. 27, 28. He is not far from every one of us; for in him we live, &c. muſt needs acknowledge there is ſomething more in the expreſſion, even that the omnipreſent God does ever compaſs us about on every ſide with his continued influences for life, motion, and being, as the light of the ſun doth our bodies, ſo as we ſee. not only by, but in it; which emanations of light from the ſun ſhould they be withdrawn, we ſhould in a moment be left in darkneſs. But conſider, 1*ſt*, The text doth not only ſay we move, but, which is more, kinoumetha, we are moved by him. Here is a paſſion, and there can be no paſſion without an action. If we are moved by him, then he moves us; that is, he acts poſitively, and leaves us not to move ourſelves, by ceaſing to act on us. Where I apprehend I have inſenſibly ſlipt into the very heart of the controverſy; hinc illæ lachrymæ. But this paſſion cannot be the effect of an action long ſince paſt; for action and paſſion are ſo inſeparable, that they muſt needs be at the ſame time, live and die together; for what elſe is action, but the changing of the ſtate wherein a thing is? Now, it is impoſſible a thing can ſuffer a change, if there be not ſomething at the ſame time producing that change, which is called action; and you ſhall as ſoon conceive a mountain without a valley as a paſſion without an action. Paſſion is the ſuffering of an action, and muſt needs ceaſe whenever the action ceaſeth; as the heat in my hand cauſed by the particles of fire acting on it, muſt preſently ceaſe when they are gone. So that we not only move by him, as the clock by the artificer that made it, which is all I think they will allow; but as the clock by the weights hanging at it, which when they are taken away, the clock is at reſt, and can move no more. Even ſo we live, move, and are (eſmen) by him, from whom at firſt we had our being. But quorſum hæc, ſeeing the controverſy is not about motion? Anſw. 1. Seeing the text ſpeaks of all the three alike, if it hold in this, it muſt hold alſo in the other. 2. If our motion depend thus on God, much more does our life and being, to which we can contribute leſs than to our motion. I apprehend the Arminians will not ſtick here; for if we would yield to them our moving ourſelves without an immediate hand of God, I ſuppoſe they would not ſtand to gratify us with the other point. 2*dly*, Conſider the apoſtle hereby proves that God is not far from every one of us; but God's giving us life, motion, and being at firſt, with a power to conſerve the ſame without his continued action, can never prove that, more than a man's making of a ſhip will prove him to be in America, when the ſhip is there, though he be in Scotland. I ſhould rather think, that the apoſtle reaſoning with philoſophers, proceeds upon the maxim Nihil agit in diſtans; therefore ſeeing we live, and are moved in and by him, he is not far from us. It ſeems to me that Markan anſwers to the Heb. MeRaCHoK, which ſignifies diſtance of time as well as place, Pſal. cxxxix. 2. Jer. xxxi. 3. So that the ſenſe is, God is ſtill with us, acting in us, and not at the diſtance of a number of years. This opinion ſeems to me a-kin to the Socinians denial of God's omnipreſence in reſpect of his eſſence, allowing it only in reſpect of his virtue and power: as Arminianiſm in other points is ſeen to pave the way to Socinianiſm.

Arg. VI. ult. Iſ. xlviii. 13. I call unto them, they ſtand up together. This call is a poſitive act, for it hath a poſitive effect. It is a continued action; KoRE. I am calling. It is the act of conſervation; for, 1. It is a call that makes things which are already created (compare the firſt clauſe) to ſtand, ſo that the frame of the world is not diſſolved. 2. God here proves himſelf to be the Firſt and the Laſt. The Firſt, becauſe he laid the foundations of the earth, &c. the Laſt, becauſe as he called them when they were not, ſo his call makes them ſtand up, abide, or remain, as the word ſignifies alſo. This cuts off the exception of interpreting it of gubernation: for gubernation can never prove the governor to be laſt in being in reſpect of the governed, ſeeing the latter may very well ſurvive the former. But that is ſimply impoſſible in the caſe of conſervation, ſuch as we plead for; for an effect depending in its being on the continued acting of its cauſe, can never be poſterior to its cauſe. If the creatures being wholly depend on God's continued conſervation, ſo that it muſt go to nothing when he withdraws his ſupporting power, this demonſtrates him to be the Laſt.

ARGUMENTS FROM REASON.

Arg. I. There is no neceſſary connection betwixt the creature's moments of duration: Ergo, &c. It follows not, becauſe I am this moment, therefore I ſhall be the next, for ſo I ſhould be an eternal neceſſary being, which is proper to God. If it be ſaid, So many moments of my duration, and no more, are connected by the decree of God; I anſwer, This decree is either a will to hold up ſo long, or a will to leave me to the power of conſerving myſelf, and not to deſtroy me for ſo long a time. I know no mids. If the firſt, it is the very thing we plead: if the ſecond, the thing willed here is a mere ceſſation from action, which can have no poſitive effect, and therefore it can make no connection of theſe moments. My being laſt moment is now gone; an evidence it had no connection with my being this moment, which then was not, but is now come forth from a creating power. Now, if there be no connection betwixt the creature's duration one moment and another, it is plain they are in a continual flux and ſtate of diſſolution by their very natures; and therefore there muſt be a continual poſitive conſervation of them, no leſs than creating, or they cannot endure.

Arg. II. Our duration muſt have ſome immediate cauſe. That muſt either be God, ourſelves, or ſome other creature. The laſt I think none will plead; if they will, let them ſhew who it is. If it be God, it muſt be by a poſitive act of conſervation; for it is inconceivable how it can be otherwiſe, and therefore they refuſe an immediate hand of God in our conſervation. Now, it cannot be ourſelves; for we neither do, nor can conſerve ourſelves. Which I prove thus. 1. Nothing can give what it has not; we have not our being next moment: Ergo, &c. Exception. Our being is ſtill the ſame in all moments. Anſw. No otherwiſe than the water of Ettrick is the ſame it was this morning. Thoſe things which may be ſeparated are not the ſame; but my being in the moment A, may be ſeparated from my being in the moment C, being annihilated in B, and created again in C. Now, there is the ſame reaſon of all. My being this moment is neceſſary; for quicquid eſt quando eſt neceſſario eſt: my being next moment is not neceſſary, for I may be annihilated: ergo, they are not the ſame. And truly, if I may now look again to ſcripture, I do not ſee how this opinion leaves the name I AM to God alone. 2. We find often we cannot conſerve a thought, how can we then conſerve our own being, which is more? 3. What man is conſcious to himſelf of his act of conſervation of himſelf? As for the conſervation of ourſelves, by meat, drink, &c. the queſtion is not anent that; theſe keep us not in being, but in well being; for if we ſhould deſtroy ourſelves in a vulgar ſenſe, yet we ſhould ſtill be ſomething till annihilated by the hand that made us. Nay, even by all theſe things we cannot conſerve thoſe particles whereof our bodies are juſt now compounded, but uſe them as conſtant badges of a perpetual flux. But how can a man conceive his conſerving of his ſoul? it is inconceivable. Surely they that are in hell do not believe they conſerve themſelves, that would every moment creep back into the womb of nothing, if the hand of Omnipotency keeping would deſert them. 4. I aſk, What way this ſelf-conſerving power is conſerved? If God by a continued act conſerve the ſame, they are in the ſame mire where they alledge we are, putting God's work in meaner circumſtances than man's. And why may they not allow the conſervation to reach us immediately? Fruſtra fit per plura, quod æque commode fieri poteſt per pauciora. If he does not by a continued act conſerve it, there muſt be another power for conſerving it, and another for that, and ſo in infinitum: which is abſurd.

Arg. III. Angels and ſouls may be deſtroyed, and we can conceive but two ways of it; either by creating ſomething wherewith they cannot co-exiſt, and we know nothing wherewith angels cannot co-exiſt, they being incapable of diſſolution as bodies are; or by withdrawing of the ſupporting power. If ſo, then conſervation is a poſitive act and continued creation.

Arg. IV. ult. From that opinion it would follow, That one creature depends more on another than on God; as light on the ſun, plants on the ſun and earth, &c. for they need continual conſervation from their particular cauſes. But that one creature depends more on another than on God, is abſurd. See for the whole Job xxxiv. 14. 15.

Of the Origin, Names, Texture, and Uſe of GARMENTS.

THE firſt garments were made of the leaves of the fig-tree, which is ſaid to be of thoſe trees that have the broadeſt leaves; of theſe our firſt parents made baghoroth, aprons, things wherewith they girded themſelves about, Gen. iii. 7. The text ſays, they ſewed them together. I obſerve late writers vary from this tranſlation, and will have it, that they faſtened or twiſted the tender twigs of the fig-tree with the leaves on them, about their waiſt; which ſeems to be taken up to ſatisfy our Atheiſts, becauſe forſooth they had not then needle and thread. But they anſwered as well, who alledged they uſed other things inſtead of theſe. And why might they not ſew the leaves together, though they had neither needle nor thread, while they had thorn-prickles to ſerve inſtead of needles, yea, or nails on their fingers; and rinds of trees, &c. inſtead of thread? Beſides, it would ſeem no eaſy girdle or apron that were made of twigs, though the leaves were on them; nor very fit to cover nakedneſs at all times, unleſs the leaves had been ſewed together. If it was ſo, I ſhould obſerve, God's calling them to an account, Leruchh Hajom, in the wind of the day, verſ. 8, at which time they might quickly be convinced their fig-leaf aprons were to little purpoſe for covering of nakedneſs. The word rendered ſewed, is found only in other three places, viz. Eccleſ. iii. 7. Ezek. xiii. 18. and Job xvi. 15. Nichols, in his conference, ſays, it ſignifies not to ſew together with needle and thread: for which he cites that place in Job. It is plain, in the two firſt paſſages it denotes proper ſewing; and it ſignifies no other in Job xvi. 15. We may fairly account for the tranſlation there and the ſenſe accordingly, without ſuppoſing Job to ſew ſackcloth on his loins, as one ſews a piece of cloth on a block; it being moſt frequent in the holy tongue, which is very conciſe, to denote both an antecedent and conſequent action by one word ſignifying the antecedent, as Iſa. xxxviii. 17. Heb. Thou haſt loved my ſoul from the pit, ver. 21. Heb. Bruiſe them upon the boil, i. e. bruiſe them, and then lay them on the boil. So Job ſewed ſackcloth, and, being ſewed, put it on his loins. This ſewing of the firſt garment of the firſt Adam, brings me in mind of the ſecond Adam's, which was without ſeam; and what a covering we have from him, even one that is all of one piece, while Adam has left us nothing but patched up rags.

The prime reaſon of garments is plain from the ſame paſſage, to wit, to cover the ſhame of our nakedneſs, which was not ſhameful till man had ſinned. And the holy language puts them on us ſtill as badges of our ſin and ſhame, that they may ſerve us as memorials for humiliation, and phylacteries of the doctrine of the fall.

Beged, primarily treachery, ſignifies a garment, from bagad, he dealt treacherouſly. I take this to point at the breach of the firſt marriage-covenant betwixt God and ſinners, the covenant of works; for the word is ordinarily uſed of the breach of a marriage-covenant. So Jer. iii. 20. Mal. ii. 14. Thus Prov. ii. ult. adulterers are called bogedim; compare ver. 17.——forgetteth the covenant of her God. And obſerve the puniſhment,——they ſhall be rooted out of the earth; becauſe they take ſuch methods to root themſelves in it, Hoſ. iv. 10. Remarkable is that of Solomon, that all his wives left but one ſon, and him a fool. To confirm this notion, it may be obſerved, that the word Gen. iii. 23. vaiſhallehhehu, God ſet him forth out of paradiſe, is the word ordinarily uſed of the ſetting off of the divorced woman, Deut. xxiv. 1. 3, 4. Among the Jews, if there could be proved any thing of villainy againſt the wife, ſhe was ſent away, ſine tabulis, (wherein her dowry, and what ſhe brought with her when ſhe was married, was written,) and deſtitute of all things, becauſe ſhe had played the harlot: to which there is an alluſion, Hoſ. ii. 3.—'leſt 'I ſtrip her naked.' Thus our marriage-ornaments are kept in the houſe of our huſband, and we ſent away only with the badges of our treachery.

Yea robes are but megnile, Ezek. xxvi. 16. from magnal, he treſpaſſed, to put us in mind of to tou enos paraptoma, that offence of that one, Rom. v. But the megnil was one of the High Prieſt's garments belonging to him alone, Exod. xxviii. In which we may ſee our High Prieſt clothed with our tranſgreſſions, coming in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, and, as Joſhua, ſtanding before the Lord in the filthy garments of our guilt. Whence in the day of the ſpiritual marriage we get on his robe of righteouſneſs, megnil tzedakah, and are decked as prieſts (as the word ſignifies, Iſa. lxi. 10) whoſe garments were for glory and beauty, Exod. xxviii. 2.

A garment they alſo call ſimlah, and, by a tranſpoſition of a letter, ſalmah: from ſemol, the left hand; ſiniſtra, the unlucky hand. Thus they are put on us as badges of our going wrong, turning out of the way, and falling from our honour. Scripture-antiquity has given the preference to the right hand, and ſo the profane likewiſe; though ſome ſtand for the ancients preferring the left, of which ſee Rivet on Pſal. cx. Xenophon tells us, that Cyrus ſet thoſe whom he minded moſt to honour, on his left hand; but withal gives the reaſon of his doing ſo, Becauſe in that poſture men were leaſt liable to ſnares, which ſeems to argue it was an invention of his own. It is ſomewhat ſurpriſing, that the Greeks called the left hand ariſteran, the beſt: but in the Pagan rites of divination the left hand was the beſt, becauſe the giver's right hand in beſtowing a benefit is oppoſite to the receiver's left hand. Thus, avis ſiniſtra intonuit lævum. are good luck. Hence, as Lipſius thinks, the Greeks ſo called the left hand. Theſe confirm the preference of the right hand: Jacob lays his right hand on Ephraim, and his left on Manaſſeh, ſeeing Ephraim was to be the more honourable. And the ſheep are ſet on Chriſt's right, the goats on his left hand, at the laſt day. The left hand alſo was the place aſſigned to the accuſed in the Jewiſh courts, while the accuſer ſtood at his right hand; hence, Pſal. cix. 6. Zech. iii. 1. Satan is repreſented in the poſture of an accuſer. And on the right hand of the judge ſat one who wrote the ſentence of abſolution; which may give further light to that of Chriſt's ſitting on the right hand of God; compare 1 John ii. 1. and on the left, one who wrote the ſentence of condemnation. On which account our garments may well bear the character of the left hand. The cuſtom among the Greeks was, that the accuſer ſtood in a pulpit on the left hand of the tribunal, the accuſed in another upon the right, ſo that they were one juſt over-againſt another. And it ſeems this alſo was the cuſtom amongſt the Romans, to ſtand face to face in judgment, Acts xxv. 16. And it ſeems it was alſo in uſe amongſt the Hebrews, as well as the other cuſtom, 1 Kings xxi. 10. So ſaith Leigh. But that confounds the accuſer and witneſſes. But theſe two men of Belial, ver. 13. are expreſsly called witneſſes; and whereas the accuſer and accuſed ſtood, theſe witneſſes ſat, ib. Their cuſtom then it ſeems was, that both the parties ſtood before the judge, Zech. iii. 1. the accuſer on the right hand, ib. and the witneſſes ſat, and that before the accuſed, 1 Kings xxi. 10 negedo, over againſt him; unto which David ſeems to allude, Pſal. li. 3.——ever before me. And ſo it is more fully declared, Hoſ. vii. 10. And the pride of Iſrael doth teſtify to his face. Hence our garments to us are as a face-covering of the condemned.

Laſtly, It is called Lebuſh, which the Talmudics, as

Buxtorff relates, ſay is quaſi Lo buſhah, not ſhame, becauſe by clothing it comes to paſs that man is not aſhamed of his nakedneſs. I ſhould rather think it is Leboſh or boſhah, for ſhame. We have put in the letter, and made that word bluſh; the native conſequent now of nakedneſs diſcovered. All nakedneſs is not ſhameful yet, but of thoſe parts that nature will have covered. So our firſt parents made them aprons. Which conſideration muſt needs preſent to our view original ſin propagated by natural generation. To this nakedneſs of Adam after he had ſinned, that ſhame of our nakedneſs, Rev. iii. 18. which the ſecond Adam offers us white raiment to cover, hath reſpect. The ſhame of nakedneſs is a deep impreſſion on all mankind to atteſt the fall; and ſo remains with them, that even ſavages have Adam's art of covering what the ſcripture calls nakedneſs. It is worth the notice to this purpoſe what Valerius Maximus tells of the Roman people, at the Ludi Florales, where ſhameleſs ſtrumpets run up and down naked, that while Cato was looking on, the people were aſhamed to deſire that thoſe ſhameleſs creatures ſhould be ſtripped; which when he knew, he went away from the theatre, that he might not ſtand in the way of what was the cuſtom. And hence it is threatened as the greateſt diſgrace, Iſa. xlvii. 3. Ezek. xvi. 37.; and therefore was inflicted on the Egyptian captives, Iſ. xx. 4. which may give light to that, Rev. xvi. 15. 'Bleſſed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, leſt he walk naked, and they ſee his ſhame;' denoting that everlaſting contempt they ſhall get poured on them at the coming of Chriſt, who ſhall be found naked as Adam was when God came to him to call him to an account. It is alſo to be added, that there was one who walked the round through the temple-guards every night, and if he found any aſleep, he had liberty to ſet fire to his garments, and ſtruck him: to which there is here a manifeſt alluſion. Compare, 'Behold, I come as a thief.' Hence we may conclude, that the nakedneſs of Saul, 1 Sam. xix. 24. when he propheſied before Samuel, and that of Iſaiah, chap. xx. 2. was not abſolute nakedneſs. That before noted, may be one reaſon among many, why the devil is called the unclean ſpirit, and it is not to be thought ſuch a geſture could proceed from the motion of the Holy Spirit. But the Hebrews call him naked who hath caſt off his upper garment. And ſo the Greek plays, called Gymnici, where they caſt off their cumberſome clothes, that they might the more nimbly perform their games; for it cannot be thought, they were abſolutely naked. To this the apoſtle alludes, Heb. xii. 1. 'laying aſide every weight, and the ſin that doth ſo eaſily beſet us;' apothemenoi, putting off, as one doth a garment, Eph. iv. 22.; euperiſtaten amartian: Sin is compared to their large and long garments coming down to the heels, that were laid aſide as unfit for a race, ſeeing they were ſo apt to fold about the legs, and hinder them in their courſe. Germanos Mela plerumque nudos egiſſe dicit: Interpretatur id Tacitus, rejecta veſte ſuperiori, ſays Grotius. Hence we may alſo ſee why Chriſt hung naked on the croſs, even becauſe he was to ſatisfy the juſtice of God for that ſin which had made Adam naked. What a fearful ſight of the fall was to be ſeen on the croſs? and what a killing piece of ſuffering was this? Goodwin out of Artemidorus ſhews, that thoſe that were crucified ſuffered naked, that they were firſt ſtripped of all their clothes, and then faſtened to the croſs. And with this the ſcripture agrees, Matth. xxvii. 35. Heb. xii. 2. He endured the croſs, and deſpiſed the ſhame.

Theſe were the firſt garments, taken on to cover the ſhame of nakedneſs, after they were ſtripped of their garments of innocency, and, as ſome think not improbably, of a glorious brightneſs that was upon their bodies before the fall; upon the removal of which they ſaw they were naked, and ſo betook themſelves to the leaves of a tree to cover their nakedneſs. In which the providence of God is remarkable, that the cover they make themſelves, was not only a badge of their ſin, but of the very kind of their ſin; while they that had ſinned in the eating of the fruit of a tree, have the leaves of a tree for the covering of the ſhame of their nakedneſs ariſing therefrom. And what a melting conſideration is it, to imagine Adam and his wife ſiſted before the Lord, to anſwer for their eating of the forbidden fruit, and that in a garb of the leaves of a tree, which ſome think was the very kind of tree on which the forbidden fruit grew, even as a thief brought to judgment with what he has ſtolen hanging about him?

The next garments were of the ſkins of beaſts, which have been long in uſe, as the Greek word bimation, from himas, leather, gives ground to ſuppoſe. The ancient Germans covered themſelves with jackets that came down ſcarcely to their haunches; were faſtened with a claſp: and were made either of coarſe cloth, or ſkins with the pile on the outſide. The ſlaves had them ſometimes of the rind of a tree; and they lay on boar ſkins. Mezer. hiſt. de France, p. 27. 28. And to this day the Finlanders, it ſeems, wear coats of ſkins, they being often ſeen on the coaſts of Orkney in their little boats of ſeal-ſkins, or ſome kind of leather, with their leathern coats on them; as Mr Brand ſays in his deſcription of Orkney. Many of the worthies under the Old Teſtament were made to wander up and down in ſheeps-ſkins, and goats-ſkins, Heb. xi. 37. The author of the ſupplement of Pool's annotations in loc. ſays, this was the common apparel of the prophets, as of Elijah, 2 Kings i. 8. Zech. xiii. 14. What authority there is for that I find not. But I think the text points out theſe not as the ordinary array of them that were then, but as taken up in a deſtitute caſe, for lack of better; as they had dens and caves, ver. 38. inſtead of their houſes, which they durſt not keep. It is there added, that they wore thoſe ſkins as they came off the beaſts back, undreſſed. But the prophets garments from the ſcriptures, ſeems not to have been of ſkins, but of hair. So 2 Kings i. 8. Elijah is called a hairy man, and his girdle is ſaid to be of leather, as of matter different from that whereof his gown was made; which is explained in the other Elias, Matth. iii. 4. whoſe garment is expreſsly ſaid to have been of camels hair, which being coarſely wrought, might have the hairs ſticking out in it; on which account Elias might be called a hairy man. The rough garment, Zech. xiii. 4. is addereth ſegnar, a garment of hair. Compare with this, Rev. vi. 12. where 'the ſun became black as ſackcloth of hair,' whence it may be gathered, that ſackcloth of hair was in uſe in time of mourning: and what was extraordinary to the people, may be allowed as ordinary to the prophets. From what is ſaid, it appears the prophets garments were of hair; and that garment is called in Iſ. xx. 2. 'the prophet's ſackcloth.' For if that garment of Iſaiah's was his habit only in time of mourning, as ſome would have it, how comes it that he is injoined to caſt it off when he is to appear as a mourner, to wit, naked and barefoot? 2 Sam. xv. 30. And it is plain the ſcripture expreſſeth a joyful turn in a perſon's caſe by caſting off of ſackcloth in that ſenſe, Pſal. xxx. 11. But Iſaiah might well be ſaid to be naked, caſting off his prophet's coat, as Peter, John xxi. 7. caſting off his fiſher's coat. In the time of Antichriſt, the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth, as being the ſucceſſors truly of the ancient prophets; and particularly there ſeems to be an alluſion in it to Elijah's propheſying, in time of the appoſtaſy and idolatry of his day, in ſackcloth of hair; as there is inconteſtably an alluſion to Elijah's caſe, Rev. xi. 6. Theſe have power to ſhut heaven.

I am ſo far convinced of the truth of that opinion, that theſe were the ſkins of beaſts offered up in ſacrifice, that I cannot think it probable, as Nichols in his conference ſays, that they were not made for them till the winter after. The covenant being made, and the Meſſias promiſed, it is moſt reaſonable to think it was confirmed by ſacrifice; in reſpect of which ſacrifice Chriſt may be called the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world. And upon this original ſacrifice, that ſacrifice, Gen. iv. Heb. xi. 4. is brought in as a piece of ordinary inſtituted worſhip. Did not Anton. van Dale de oraculis Ethnicorum repute for a fable the ſtory of the pilot Thamus, hearing by night a voice ordering him to cry, The Great God Pan is dead, at the death of Chriſt the great Shepherd; I would with a great deal more pleaſure obſerve what Valer. Max. lib. 2. cap. 2. tells of the Lupercals, wherein Pan was honoured with ſacrifices, and games ſo called. The Lupercals, ſays he, were begun by Romulus and Remus then, when being overjoyed that Numitor had allowed them to build the town there where they were brought up, they did ſacrifice goats, (which were two,) and having ate and drank liberally, they diverted the company of ſhepherds, and merrily ran up and down, cincti pellibus immolatarum hoſtiarum, ſwitching every one they met with in their merriment. One would think the devil had taken this, from whence he has drawn many other rites in to his ſervice.

But on ſurer grounds we may obſerve, that our firſt parents made their firſt garments, and God made the next, which were effectual for the uſe of garments. Whence we may learn the utter inſufficiency of our own righteouſneſs to cover ſpiritual nakedneſs, and the abſolute neceſſity of the righteouſneſs of God, the imputed righteouſneſs, with its fitneſs every way to clothe the ſinful ſoul. And when I conſider how, when the antitype was ſacrificed, they parted his garments, and on his veſture did they caſt lots, I am the more convinced that our firſt parents were clothed with the ſkins of the firſt ſacrifice. We may alſo hence take a view of our natural inclination, upon the firſt view of our nakedneſs, to provide a covering for ourſelves of our own making, and to hold by it, till, being ſifted before a righteous God, we ſee it will not avail; at which time Chriſt is ſeaſonably diſcovered, and the proud heart being humbled, will at length ſubmit to an imputed righteouſneſs, Rom. x. 3. Finally, thoſe Adam and his wife made, were ſewed together; as for the other, Moſes only ſays God made them.

The original of veſts, a vellere, I find not. The Pagans have made Minerva the goddeſs of weaving, and generally of lanifice. So Buchanan calls weaving the Paladian art, ad Ad. Otterb. And the Greeks ſeem to have derived their ergon from arag, to weave, as if it were a work by way of eminency, which it is indeed. Voſſius takes Naamah to be the Heathen Minerva or Venus. And the Arabians ſay, that the ſame Naamah invented colours and painting, as Jubal did muſick. And it is very probable, as lanifice is ſtill moſtly left to the women, ſo the invention of weaving is due to that ſex. Weaving was a piece of houſe-wifery, and the uſual employment of women in their houſes amongſt the ancient Greeks, Arch. Attic.; and that not only of thoſe of the meaner, but of the higheſt and moſt honourable character amongſt them. Penelope's web is famous to a proverb. And Creuſa in Euripides, daughter of Erichtheus king of Athens, had a bearing cloth of her own weaving for Ion. This was the cloth in which they wrapt the new born child after it was waſhen, which Iſrael wanted, Ezek. xvi. Auguſtus Cæſar, ſays Suetonius, trained up his daughters and nieces to card, ſpin, and make cloth. Yea, he readily wore none but what was made within the houſe by his wife, ſiſter, daughter, or nieces. Which obſervation may make that character of a wife for a king, Prov. xxxi. ſeem leſs ſtrange to us. And it would ſeem that a virtuous woman is a weaver as well as a ſpinſter, ſeeing ſhe makes herſelf tapeſtry, verſ. 22. ſee verſ. 24. being ſkilled in weaving, and having her loom, of whatever ſort it was, in her chamber, as Delilah, Judg. xvi. 13, 14.

A PARAPHRASE on the Epiſtle of PAUL to the GALATIANS.

CHAP. I.

1. PAUL an apoſtle (not of men, neither by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt, and God the Father, who raiſed him from the dead,)

2. And all the brethren which are with me, unto the churches of Galatia;

3. Grace be to you and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

I. The preface v. 1. 2. the party from and to whom. v. 3. the ſalutation. v. 4. a deſcription of Chriſt. v. 5. a doxology to the Father.

Ver. 1. PAUL an apoſtle, not an apoſtle of men, as an ambaſſador of a ſtate, but an apoſtle of the Great GOD; and that not mediately, by man, as ordinary church-officeers, but called thereto immediately by God-man Jeſus Chriſt, and by God the Father, who raiſed Chriſt from the dead, and ſo gave an infallible teſtimony to the doctrine of Chriſt; who, being raiſed from death, may well be allowed to ſend out me for an apoſtle, as he did others while he was yet bodily preſent on the earth: ver. 2. And all the profeſſors and miniſters of the church that are with me at the writing hereof, (who do approve of this my epiſtle, to me dictated by the Spirit:) Unto the congregations of the country Galatia; whom I ſtill hold for true churches, notwithſtanding of the errors embraced by them. verſ. 3. The good-will and favour of God, and all ſort of true peace and proſperity, be to you, from the Father as the fountain of all grace, and from Chriſt as the only conduit by which both flow or can flow to ſinners.

4. Who gave himſelf for our ſins, that he might deliver us from this preſent evil world, according to the will of God and our Father:

5. To whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.

Ver. 4. Whom ſeeing I have named, I cannot but commend; the rather that we may ſee we have ſo much in him for our perfect happineſs, as that we need not look to our own works for an eek; for he gave himſelf to the death for expiating of our ſins, which cannot be but ſufficient for that end; and one great deſign of his dying for us was, that he might deliver us from the ſnares which the wicked men of this preſent world lay for us; which is too ſadly verified in your being inſnared by the falſe teachers among you. This Chriſt did according to the will and decree of the Father, who was concerned for the redemption of the elect, ſo that he gave a commiſſion to the Son for that purpoſe. verſ. 5. And therefore let him have the glory of our redemption, by our lips and lives; and ſeeing time is not ſufficient for the work of his praiſe, let it be echoed out of the ſaints mouths for all eternity. So be it.

6. I marvel, that ye are ſo ſoon removed from him that called you into the grace of Chriſt, unto another goſpel.

7. Which is not another; but there be ſome that trouble you, and would pervert the goſpel of Chriſt.

II. The body of the epiſtle. 1. He aſſerts the truth of his doctrine; uſhered in v. 6, 7. with a ſoft reproof; v. 7. blaming their teachers rather than them.

Verſ. 6. I am ſurprized to hear, that ye are embracing the doctrine of the neceſſity of the obſervation of Moſes's law, and mixing the works of the law, whether ceremonial or moral, with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt in point of juſtification; and for to make way for that, over the belly of the doctrine I taught you, ye hearken to falſe teachers, queſtioning my apoſtolic office, and ſuggeſting that I had the doctrine of the goſpel only from the ſecond hand, which I have ſince corrupted: I marvel, I ſay, that ye have embraced theſe doctrines, whereby you making defection (being carried thereto by others) from God, who by my miniſtry, called you to Chriſt's goſpel, the goſpel of free grace, are carried off, and that very ſuddenly, (which aggravates your ſin,) unto a pretended goſpel: verſ. 7. Which is not a goſpel at all; for it brings bad, inſtead of good news. But I cannot lay all the blame on you: there are ſome among you, who as winds do trouble waters, ſo they trouble your churches by their new doctrine, ſtirring up diviſions, and bringing many to that, they know not what to believe, or whom; and they no leſs trouble your conſciences, drawing you off from the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt, whereby it comes to paſs that ye can never have ſolid peace within; and they would overturn the goſpel, ſetting up a doctrine inconſiſtent with the doctrine of the goſpel.

8. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other goſpel to you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accurſed.

He aſſerts it 1. by anathematizing thoſe that ſhould preach another goſpel.

Verſ. 8. But ſo fully am I perſuaded of the truth of the doctrine I have preached to you, and of the perfection and ſufficiency of it for true happineſs, that I doubt not to anathematize and declare ſeparated from Chriſt, accurſed of God, and to be deſtroyed, myſelf or an angel from heaven, if either of us ſhould preach another goſpel way of juſtification or ſalvation.

9. As we ſaid before, ſo ſay I now again, If any man preach any other goſpel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accurſed.

Verſ. 9. It is not paſſion and unruly rage that makes me talk thus, but my zeal for God; and therefore with all ſoberneſs I denounce the ſame againſt any man that ſhall adventure ſo to do. Ye formerly received the very ſame doctrine that I preached, and therefore ſo let it be to him who preaches what is inconſiſtent with your former principles.

10. For do I now perſuade men, or God? or do I ſeek to pleaſe men? for if I yet pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt.

Verſ. 10. Wonder not I am ſo bold in devoting to a curſe thoſe that preach other doctrine than I: for though when I was a Phariſee, I perſuaded people to hear and follow the dictates of men, which humour yet remains with your teachers; yet now my only buſineſs is, to perſuade men to hear and follow the dictates of God himſelf; ſo that it is God's cauſe, not my own, or mens. Neither do I ſeek to humour men, as thoſe teachers of yours bend their doctrine to curry favour with the Jews; which was my own way in the time of my blindneſs; but if that were my way ſtill, I ſhould not be about Chriſt's work, and ſo I ſhould be not the ſervant of Chriſt, but of men.

11. But I certify you, brethren, that the goſpel which was preached of me, is not after man.

2. Upon the ground of his divine and immediate call, which he clears by Verſ. 11. But I am the ſervant of Chriſt; for I aſſure you, the doctrine I preached to you, was not from earth but from heaven.

12. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt.

Verſ. 12. For I neither received it from men as the authors of it, though men would be found the higheſt ſpring of the new doctrine among you, if you would impartially examine the author of it; neither was I taught it mediately, by the help of any apoſtle, or other man, as ſome alledge; but I had it by immediate revelation from Jeſus Chriſt at the time of my converſion.

13. For ye have heard of my converſation in time paſt, in the Jews religion, how that beyond meaſure I perſecuted the church of God, and waſted it:

14. And profited in the Jews religion, above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers.

a narration, or ſhort hiſtory of his life to chap. ii. v. 5. 15.

Verſ. 13. The truth of which will convincingly appear from a ſhort hiſtory of my life; for ye have heard of my former converſation, while I was a Jew; and I grudge not to confeſs it to my own ſhame and God's glory, how I was an eminent perſecutor of the church; and like an enemy going through a land with fire and ſword, leaving nothing but deſolation behind him, ſo I waſted the church, getting ſome killed, others ſcattered. ver. 14. And I wanted not parts to my hoſtile mind: for though I ſhall not ſay I profited more in the Jewiſh religion than thoſe that were elder than myſelf, or than all thoſe that were of the ſame ſtanding with me, or thoſe in other nations; yet I may without breach of modeſty ſay, that I was more learned in Judaiſm, than many of my ſtanding in mine own nation. And the worſt part of that religion, even unwritten traditions, to which Chriſt was a great enemy. I beſtowed the cream of my zeal upon; which zeal had arrived to an exceeding high pitch.

15. But when it pleaſed God, who ſeparated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace,

16. To reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the Heathen; immediately I conferred not with fleſh and blood:

17. Neither went I up to Jeruſalem, to them which were apoſtles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damaſcus.

Ver. 15, 16, 17. Yet notwithſtanding of all this, when the time appointed of God for my converſion came, and it pleaſed God (who from my mother's womb had ſeparated me to the apoſtolic office, in ſo far as his providence had from that time been ſecretly working to ſhape me out for the work, bringing me into the world by ſuch parents giving me a healthſul conſtitution, and the benefit of human learning; who alſo by his powerful and overcoming grace called me to himſelf, who had been running away from him: when it pleaſed him, I ſay) to give me the ſaving knowledge of Chriſt, which in an extraordinary way, without the preached word, did immediately break into my ſoul; to the end I might not only be ſaved thereby myſelf, but might preach the ſame Chriſt unto the Heathen world; then I was ſo perſuaded of the divinity of the doctrine revealed, and ſo clear as to my call to the miniſtry, that I would not conſult mine own reaſon, nor any man whatſoever, as to my duty in this caſe; neither did I return from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem, to meet with the other apoſtles to get a permiſſion from them to preach, or to get my call confirmed by them: but without diſputing the call of God, having firſt ſtaid certain days in Damaſcus and preached, Acts ix. 19.---22. I went, not without great hazard and pains, to preach to the Heathen Arabians, and returned from Arabia afterwards, and came to Damaſcus, Acts ix. 23.

18. Then after three years I went up to Jeruſalem, to ſee Peter, and abode with him fifteen days.

Ver. 11. Then three years after my converſion I went up from Damaſcus to Jeruſalem, to make a viſit to Peter, not to learn any thing of him, but to give a teſtimony of agreement in the ſame doctrine, he being the great apoſtle of the Jews, and I of the Gentiles; and it was but ſhort time I abode with him, ſo that I had not time to learn.

19. But other of the apoſtles ſaw I none, ſave James the Lord's brother.

Ver. 19. Neither learned I of the reſt of the apoſtles, for I ſaw none of them but James, our Lord's kinſman according to the fleſh.

20. Now the things which I write unto you, behold, before God, I lye not.

Ver. 20. Now, as to the truth of theſe things, ſeeing God's glory and your edification requires it, I confirm it by an oath, declaring before God as a judge and witneſs, in the matter, that I am ſpeaking nothing but truth.

21. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia;

22. And was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Chriſt:

23. But they had heard only, That he which perſecuted us in times paſt, now preacheth the faith which once he deſtroyed.

24. And they glorified God in me.

Ver. 21. Afterwards I came into the regions of Syria, and particularly into Cilicia, my native country, and preached the goſpel there. ver. 22. And though the Chriſtian churches in Judea, viſible members of Chriſt's body, were not acquainted with me, having been but occaſionally ſometimes in Jeruſalem, and made no conſiderable ſtay, and having made it my buſineſs familiarly to converſe with thoſe of my own charge, rather than them to whom I had not ſuch a ſpecial relation: ver. 23. Yet when they had heard the news of my converſion, and of preaching that doctrine which once I endeavoured to deſtroy, by perſecuting the profeſſors thereof, ver. 24. They acknowledged the mercy and power of God appearing in his dealing with and by me; and conſidering me as a convert and ſucceſsful preacher, they gave God glory upon my account.

CHAP. II.

THEN fourteen years after, I went up again to Jeruſalem, with Barnabas, and took Titus with me alſo.

Ver. 1. THEN fourteen years after my converſion, I made another journey to Jeruſalem, with Barnabas my ordinary companion in my travels, and I took Titus the evangeliſt with me alſo; as two witneſſes which might teſtify to the apoſtles at Jeruſalem what doctrine I preached amongſt the Gentiles, and with what ſucceſs and viſible ſeals of my miniſtry; and who might alſo teſtify again to the Gentiles what ſhould paſs in the deſigned conference.

2. And I went up by revelation, and communicated unto them that goſpel which I preach among the Gentiles, but privately to them which were of reputation, leſt by any means I ſhould run, or had run in vain.

Ver. 2. And I went up by an impulſe of the Spirit of God, revealing that particular to be my duty; and when I came there, in a friendly and familiar way I declared to the churches of Judea the goſpel and doctrine which at this preſent I preach, (for I preach no other doctrine now than what I always preached ſince I was an apoſtle;) but Chriſtian prudence obliged me, not to give this declaration of my doctrine preſently before the whole multitude, leſt unneceſſary ſcruples and debates might be raiſed amongſt the vulgar; nay this declaration I thought neceſſary to make, not to any of the apoſtles, but thoſe who were of greateſt reputation in the church; and the great deſign of my entering upon this conference with them was, to preſerve the fruit of my preaching in time paſt, and to ſecure it for the time to come; for if once that had obtained amongſt the Gentiles, that I preached other doctrine than the chief apoſtles, my labours in the goſpel would have been loſt, both for the time paſt, and the time to come.

Comp. Acts xxv. 14.

3. But neither Titus, who was with me, being a Greek, was compelled to be circumciſed:

4. And that becauſe of falſe brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to ſpy out our liberty, which we have in Chriſt Jeſus, that they may bring us into bondage.

Ver. 3. But in that meeting, Titus, an uncircumciſed Greek, was freely admitted to the apoſtle's ſociety; and ſo far were they againſt the neceſſity of the obſervation of the ceremonial law, that they did not require him to be circumciſed; which they would certainly have done had they thought that circumciſion was neceſſary to be obſerved. Ver. 4. And in this particular caſe they did thus carry: not becauſe they thought that circumciſion was yet ſimply unlawful, but becauſe they would not give an occaſion of triumphing to ſome falſe brethren, who held the neceſſity of obſerving the ceremonial law, and who had been brought into this meeting without the apoſtle's knowledge, and came into it, not with any good deſign, but as ſo many ſpies, to ſpy out our Chriſtian liberty, and to rob us of it, and bring us again under the bondage of the ceremonial law; for if Titus had been circumciſed here, they would have made uſe of that practice, as a certain confirmation of the neceſſity of circumciſion, and the obſerving of the whole ceremonial law.

5. To whom we gave place by ſubjection, no not for an hour; that the truth of the goſpel might continue with you.

Ver. 5. But being aware of this their deſign, we, the reſt of the apoſtles, at the meeting, and I, would not ſubject our Chriſtian liberty to them, nor yield to them in that point, no not in uſing circumciſion but that once. The reaſon of our ſtiffneſs in this was, that the doctrine of the goſpel might remain with you Galatians and other Gentiles, pure and uncorrupted, and not mixed with Jewiſh leaven; for had they got their will in this particular, they would have had a ſpecious pretence againſt Chriſtian liberty.

6. But of theſe who ſeemed to be ſomewhat (whatſoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God accepteth no man's perſon) for they who ſeemed to be ſomewhat, in conference added nothing to me.

7. But contrariwiſe, when they ſaw that the goſpel of the uncircumciſion was committed unto me, as the goſpel of the circumciſion was unto Peter;

8. (For he that wrought effectually in Peter to the apoſtleſhip of the circumciſion, the ſame was mighty in me towards the Gentiles;)

9. And when James, Cephas, and John, who ſeemed to be pillars, perceived the grace that was given unto me, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowſhip; that we ſhould go unto the Heathen, and they unto the circumciſion.

Ver. 6. But of the apoſtles of greateſt credit, in compariſon of whom I am deſpiſed by ſome, as nothing in compariſon of them, I indeed learned nothing. Say not, they were apoſtles before me, and had ſeen Chriſt in the fleſh, and therefore I am nothing in compariſon of them. Whatever advantages they had of me, I notice not, neither does God judge of men according to theſe external things. I am an apoſtle now as well as they, and preach the goſpel as well as they. I do not deny but they have theſe advantages of me: but that is nothing to the matter in hand; their having them makes not my office nor my doctrine leſs divine than theirs: for in conference about our calls and doctrine they added nothing to me; they found no error to correct, nor defect in my doctrine or call to make up. Ver. 7. But indeed they were ſo far from adding any thing to me, that they forthwith gave me the right hand of fellowſhip, when they ſaw, by undoubted evidence, that God had committed to me the diſpenſation of the goſpel (as a rich treaſure) unto the Gentiles, even as he had committed unto Peter the diſpenſing of the goſpel unto the Jews. Ver. 8. This they clearly underſtood from this, that the ſame God who had given his aſſiſtance to Peter, and had made uſe of him as a bleſſed inſtrument in his hand to the converſion of the Jews, by his overcoming grace, had done no leſs by me towards the Gentiles, whoſe converſion they looked upon as a ſeal of my apoſtleſhip. Ver. 9. And when James, Peter, and John, who were reputed the upholders of the church, under God, perceived the gifts, ordinary and extraordinary, wherewith God had fitted me for the apoſtolic office; when (I ſay) they ſaw my call to the work, and my gifts fitting me for it, they gave to me and Barnabas the right hands of fellowſhip, ſhaking hands with us in token of our agreement in doctrine, and amicably dividing of our charges for carrying on the work of our common Maſter; that they might go on to preach (for ordinary) to the Jews, and we to the Gentiles.

10. Only they would that we ſhould remember the poor; the ſame which I alſo was forward to do.

Ver. 10. Only they deſired Barnabas and me, to make a collection through the Gentile churches, for the relief of the poor Jews who were turned Chriſtians; which I did (εσπουδασα) with all diligent ſtudy to make effectual.

11. But when Peter was come to Antioch, I withſtood him to the face, becauſe he was to be blamed.

Ver. 11. But when Peter, ſome time after this conference, was come to Antioch, where was a church of the Gentiles uſing their Chriſtian liberty, I freely and boldly to his face oppoſed him, becauſe he was indeed blame-worthy.

12. For before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles; but when they were come, he withdrew, and ſeparated himſelf, fearing them which were of the circumciſion.

Ver. 12. For he did make uſe of his Chriſtian liberty, freely eating with the Chriſtian Gentiles, having no regard to the difference of meats, nor of Jews and Gentiles, eſtabliſhed by the ceremonial law; this liberty (I ſay) he uſed all the time he was in Antioch, before the coming down of certain Jews from Jeruſalem, where James had his ordinary reſidence; which Jews were zealous for the obſerving of the ceremonial law; but when they came, Peter withdrew from the Gentile and uncircumciſed Chriſtians, would not keep up fellowſhip with them, but ſet up a ſeparate meeting from the uncircumciſed Chriſtians; to which offenſive courſe he was led, by a prepoſterous fear of thoſe bigotted Jews, leſt they ſhould have been offended by his liberty.

13. And the other Jews diſſembled likewiſe with him; inſomuch that Barnabas alſo was carried away with their diſſimulation.

Ver. 13. This was great diſſimulation in Peter, to aſſert, by his practice, the neceſſity of obſerving the ceremonial law; which he knew notwithſtanding, by divine revelation, was now of no force, Acts x. and xi.; and the other Jews, who had before uſed Chriſtian liberty, they fell into the ſame diſſimulation: and ſuch was the ſpeat at that time, that even Barnabas himſelf was not able to withſtand his and their example, but he diſſembled alſo, withdrawing and ſeparating himſelf.

14. But when I ſaw that they walked not uprightly, according to the truth of the goſpel, I ſaid unto Peter before them all, If thou, being a Jew, liveſt after the manner of the Gentiles, and not as do the Jews, why compelleſt thou the Gentiles to live as do the Jews?

15. We who are Jews by nature, and not ſinners of the Gentiles,

16. Knowing that a man is not juſtified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, even we have believed in Jeſus Chriſt; that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.

Ver. 14. But when I ſaw their practice crooked, and contrary to the doctrine of the goſpel in this point, I ſaid unto Peter before all the reſt carried off by his bad example, Seeing thou thyſelf, though a Jew, and ſo bound, if any were, to obſerve the ceremonial law, yet doſt not obſerve it, but for ordinary liveſt after the manner of the Gentiles, making no difference of meats clean or unclean, as appears by thy former practice in this place; how canſt thou force upon the necks of the Gentiles that yoke which thou thyſelf haſt caſt off, by your ſeparating from the Gentiles on this account, thereby obliging them either to embrace the ceremonial law, or elſe to be deprived of fellowſhip with you and your adherents? ver. 15. And now, (to fall upon the main point,) ye may obſerve, O Galatians, from the hiſtory of Peter's carriage, particularly before theſe zealots came from Jeruſalem, and from my reproving him, and his not defending of the fact, that we who are born Jews, and not of the profane nations without God's covenant, we to whom the ceremonial and judicial laws were given particularly, and who received the decalogue upon mount Sinai, that we, (I ſay,) ver. 16. being perſuaded in our conſciences, that no man circumciſed or uncircumciſed, is declared or reputed righteous before God, upon the account of his own works, done in obedience to the law of God ceremonial, judicial, or moral, but by faith in Chriſt, receiving him and his righteouſneſs; even we (who (if any) might have purſued a law-righteouſneſs) have renounced our own works for juſtification, and have, by faith, betaken ourſelves to Chriſt for a righteouſneſs, that ſo we might be juſtified by faith in Chriſt, and not by works: and with what confidence then can the Gentiles ſeek righteouſneſs by the works of the law, a great part of which was deſigned only for us Jews? Now, that we have done ſo, ye ſee is plain; and that we might and ought to have done ſo, and you alſo, is plain from the Old Teſtament, which teſtifies, that by the works of the law no man, Jew or Gentile, can be juſtified before God, Pſal. cxliii. 2.

2. That juſtification is not by works, but by faith. Arg. 1. v. 15. 16.

17. But if while we ſeek to be juſtified by Chriſt, we ourſelves alſo are found ſinners, is therefore Chriſt the miniſter of ſin? God forbid.

Verſ. 17. Ye will readily object, That our doctrine has little advantage by what I have narrated of Peter and others, their obſerving the ceremonial law over the belly of their light; it ſeems they have learned that art of groſs diſſimulation at the ſchool of your goſpel. But I ſay, what though we ourſelves have been found (eurethemen) ſinners and groſs diſſemblers, (we, I ſay, that know our freedom from the law, and that there is no juſtification by the law,) even then while we were ſeeking juſtification by Chriſt? does it therefore follow, that the doctrine of the goſpel burying the ceremonial law, teaches men to ſin? God forbid.

18. For if I build again the things which I deſtroyed, I make myſelf a tranſgreſſor.

19. For I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God.

Verſ. 18. For if I, or Peter, or any man, do by our practice build up again the ſin which we have deſtroyed by our doctrine, and practice conform thereunto; in that caſe we ourſelves, or (to hold out this ſuppoſition in my own perſon) I am the tranſgreſſor who ſhould be blamed, and not the goſpel which I preach. This is clear, if ye conſider, ver. 19. that the goſpel natively tends to my leading a holy life, and the goſpel is not to be blamed for my ſinful ſlips; for I am now dead to the law, and look upon the relation betwixt it and me as ceaſed; not that I may live as I liſt, but that I may live to God in the duties of obedience and thankfulneſs to God; and this is what the goſpel teacheth me: and to this actual death to the law, I was brought by the law itſelf, which proved ſuch a rigorous huſband to my conſcience, that it would be ſatisfied with nothing I could do; which neceſſitated me to give over thoughts of ever pleaſing it, and ſo to betake myſelf to my new huſband Chriſt.

20. I am crucified with Chriſt: nevertheleſs I live; yet not I, but Chriſt liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the fleſh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.

Verſ. 20. Yet have I done the law no injury, but am dead to it in point of right: for by faith I am crucified in the perſon of Chriſt my head and repreſentative; ſo that the law having got all it could demand, it has no more to crave of me than it has of Chriſt. But notwithſtanding of this crucifixion I am alive, I live to God. But no thanks to me for this life; I have it not but becauſe of my union with Chriſt, who is the ſoul of my ſoul, and the vital principle in me: and that life of ſanctification which I now live while I am in this mortal body, I live by faith in the Son of God; by which I draw vital influences from him the fountain of life, who loved me with an everlaſting love, and from that undeſerved love was pleaſed to give himſelf to the death for me, that by his dying I might live.

21. I do not fruſtrate the grace of God: for if righteouſneſs come by the law, then Chriſt is dead in vain.

Verſ. 21. I think this was wonderful love; and I do therefore endeavour to make a ſuitable return, lippening my ſalvation to the death of Chriſt, and to that only, and ſo I do not render God's grace in ſending Chriſt to die for me, in vain. If I ſhould do otherwiſe, I ſhould make it a vain needleſs thing: for if our righteouſneſs be by our works, for what end did Chriſt die for us?

Arg. 2.

C H A P. III.

O Fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that you ſhould not obey the truth, before whoſe eyes Jeſus Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth, crucified among you?

O Fooliſh Galatians, what deviliſh artiſt has deluded your ſpiritual ſenſes, and caſt miſt before your eyes, to dazzle them, and make things appear which you do not indeed ſee, ſo that you do not obey the commanding light of the truth of the goſpel? In which ye are moſt inexcuſable, ſeeing by my miniſtry the doctrine of Chriſt was as evidently preached to you, as if the myſtery of Chriſt had been painted on a board before your eyes, and he had been crucified again amongſt you.

A ſharp reproof.

2. This only would I learn you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

3. Are ye ſo fooliſh? having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the fleſh?

4. Have ye ſuffered ſo many things in vain? if it be yet in vain.

Verſ. 2. Ye are very fond of the doctrine of juſtification by works; but pray you tell me this one thing, Ye have received the Spirit of God to dwell Arg. 3. in you as the principle of ſaving grace and miraculous operations, according to the promiſe thereof in the prophets; but whether did you receive this Spirit by the doctrine continually buzzing in your ears the works of the law, or by the doctrine of faith in Chriſt which ye heard? Your own conſciences will tell you, it was the latter, not the former way; and is it poſſible that doctrine ſhould be falſe by which God communicated to you his Spirit? ver. 3. Wonderful folly! when ye firſt embraced Chriſtianity, ye received the Spirit of God, which, as a ſeal of the truth of that doctrine ye heard, taught you to look for juſtification by faith alone; ſo that it muſt be indwelling corruption that ſets up for another way; and what more unworthy of a wiſe man, than to think the Spirit began the work, but corruption muſt give it the finiſhing ſtroke, and teach you a doctrine better, though contrary to that which the Spirit ſealed? Ver. 4. I know ye ſuffered many hard things for adhering to the goſpel-doctrine, eſpecially by the Jews, whoſe rage was kindled to raiſe perſecution againſt the Chriſtians, becauſe they thought the goſpel was deſtructive of the law; and have ye ſuffered all theſe things in vain, ſo as to loſe the reward by your after diſowning of the truth ye ſuffered for? Shall I ſay ye have ſuffered in vain? I would fain hope yet it will be otherwiſe, by your taking up again the ſame cauſe ye ſuffered for before.

5. He therefore that miniſtereth to you the Spirit, and worketh miracles among you, doth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?

6. Even as Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteouſneſs.

Ver. 5. Ye did receive the Spirit at firſt among you by means of the doctrine of evangelical righteouſneſs; I will aſk you then another queſtion, Some among you do receive the Spirit at this day, and there are yet miracles wrought among you; now, what ſort of teachers is it whoſe miniſtry God thus ſeals by conveying ſaving grace into the hearts of the hearers, and by miracles? Is it they who preach juſtification by works, or thoſe that preach juſtification by faith? Ye cannot but acknowledge it is the latter, not the former ſort. Truly ſaving benefits are communicated to none any other way than they were before; they are received by faith ſtill: Arg. 4. ver. 6. Even as Abraham received, who believed God in that promiſe, (ver. 8.) and that was reckoned for righteouſneſs to him; not faith in itſelf, which with other works is alſo excluded, but that righteouſneſs of Chriſt which Abraham's faith did lay hold upon, was reckoned by the Lord for his righteouſneſs.

7. Know ye therefore, that they which are of faith, the ſame are the children of Abraham.

Ver. 7. I would have you know, then, that ſeeing Abraham was juſtified by faith, thoſe that ſeek juſtification by faith, they are the ſpiritual children of Abraham, heirs with him of the ſame ſpiritual inheritance, though they be Gentiles, and none of his natural ſeed.

8. And the ſcripture foreſeeing that God would juſtify the Heathen through faith, preached before the goſpel unto Abraham, ſaying, In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed.

Ver. 8. And this will plainly appear, if it be conſidered, that the Spirit of God who ſpeaks in the ſcriptures, ſaw long before it was accompliſhed, that God would juſtify the Heathen by faith; and therefore long ago he preached to Abraham the ſame goſpel we now preach, which was holden forth in this promiſe, viz. That all nations, Jews and Gentiles, ſhould be bleſſed in him, in ſo far as of him ſhould come that bleſſed ſeed Jeſus Chriſt, who ſhould purchaſe all bleſſings to be beſtowed on them, and not leave them to be procured to them by their own works.

9. So then they which be of faith, are bleſſed with faithful Abraham.

Ver. 9. So then it follows, that they which ſeek juſtification by faith, are bleſſed with the ſame bleſſings as believing Abraham, and ſo are his children and no other.

10. For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them.

Ver. 10. For as many as adhere to the law, ſeeking to be thereby juſtified, they are under God's curſe, and ſo have no ſhare in Abraham's Arg. 5. bleſſing. That they are under the curſe, the ſcripture teaches, where it is written, That every one who gives not perfect and perpetual uninterrupted obedience to the law, is under the curſe, being by the ſame law devoted to deſtruction. So we ſee that all men adhering to the law for juſtification, are curſed by the law.

11. But that no man is juſtified by the law in the ſight of God, it is evident: for, The juſt ſhall live by faith.

Ver. 11. But that no man is juſtified by the law before God, (however their works may juſtify them before men,) is evident from that of the Arg. 6. prophet Habakkuk, He that is juſt by faith, even he ſhall live a live a life of juſtification, ſanctification, and comfort, and that for ever; he ſhall never loſe it.

12. And the law is not of faith: but, The man that doth them ſhall live in them.

Ver. 12. But the law does not hold forth juſtification or life by faith, but by works; for thus ſpeaks the law, The man that doth thoſe things which the law commandeth him to do, he ſhall live by virtue of his works; and this no man can do, and therefore no man can be juſtified by the law: nor is law-righteouſneſs the righteouſneſs pointed at by the prophet as the righteouſneſs which will give life.

13. Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us: for it is written, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree:

14. That the bleſſing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jeſus Chriſt; that we might receive the promiſe of the Spirit through faith.

Ver. 13. Perhaps ye will ſay, That if the law be ſo rigorous, as we pretend, that it will Obj. 1. not juſtify a man but him that fulfils it every way perfectly, and curſes others, we ourſelves muſt be curſed too, or elſe the law's threatening is made void. I anſwer, That Chriſt has freed us from the curſe of the law; and that not by making it void, but by his bearing the curſe that the law denounced againſt us. And that Chriſt did bear the curſe, is evident from his curſed death which he died, being hanged on the tree of the croſs; which kind of death had, by the great Law-giver, a ceremonial curſe annexed thereto; and all the ceremonies having a reſpect to Chriſt, the curſe fell on him in the greateſt reality, which lay but typically on malefactors, that were hanged on a tree, verſ. 14. And Chriſt bare the curſe of the law, to the end that the ſame bleſſings which were entailed on Abraham, the father of the faithful, by promiſe, might be given to the Gentiles through Chriſt, coming into the world, dying and by his death taking down the partition wall, and making Jew and Gentile all one, according to the promiſe, 'In thee ſhall all nations be bleſſed.' And further, he bare the curſe, that we, both Jews and Gentiles, might receive the Spirit, comp. verſ. 2. which was promiſed to be poured out in goſpel days in larger meaſure than ever before; that we might, I ſay, receive the Spirit through faith, not by the works of the law.

15. Brethren, I ſpeak after the manner of men; Though it be but a man's covenant, yet if it be confirmed, no man diſannulleth, or addeth thereto.

Obj. 2.

Verſ. 15. Brethren, I will borrow a ſimilitude from human affairs, to let you ſee that the giving of the law by Moſes did not bring in a new way of juſtification, different from that of the promiſe made to Abraham, or covenant of grace. Though a covenant be made only between man and man; yet if it be confirmed by oath of parties, or other uſual ways of confirmation, neither of the parties can juſtly make that covenant void, nor add any clauſe thereto deſtructive of the former.

16. Now to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made. He ſaith not, And to ſeeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy ſeed, which is Chriſt.

Verſ. 16. Now the promiſes of the inheritance, &c. were made of God to Abraham and to his ſeed. God making theſe promiſes, ſaith not, And to Abraham's ſeeds, as if the promiſe had reſpect to ſeveral ſorts of Abraham's ſeed, ſome to be juſtified one way, ſome another way: but as including all his children together in one, he ſaith, To thy ſeed, which is Chriſt myſtical, believing Jews and Gentiles gathered together into one body, making up Abraham's one ſeed; to which the promiſes are made, as well as to Abraham himſelf.

17. And this I ſay, that the covenant that was confirmed before of God in Chriſt, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot diſannul, that it ſhould make the promiſe of none effect.

18. For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promiſe; but God gave it to Abraham by promiſe.

Verſ. 17. This then I ſay, for application of that known maxim in human affairs to the buſineſs in hand, That ſeeing the covenant of grace, or thoſe abſolute promiſes, verſ. 16. made to Abraham and to his one ſpiritual ſeed, before the giving of the law confirmed and made ſure by the oath of God to Chriſt myſtical, that one ſeed; the law of Moſes, which was given four hundred and thirty years after the promiſes above ſaid, cannot make void the covenant, ſo as to render the abſolute promiſe of righteouſneſs and life of none effect, and to no purpoſe; it never being fulfilled, but a new way introduced, viz. by the law, which would undoubtedly make the promiſe uſeleſs: verſ. 18. Becauſe if the inheritance of glory, typified by the inheritance of Canaan, be by the law, it is not by that abſolute promiſe, for theſe are inconſiſtent. But ſure it is, for God gave the inheritance to Abraham by virtue of that promiſe, and therefore it was not by the law.

19. Wherefore then ſerveth the law? It was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions, till the ſeed ſhould come, to whom the promiſe was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hand of a Mediator.

20. Now a mediator is not a mediator of one; but God is one.

Obj. 3.

3. That Moſes's law, particularly the ceremonial is abrogated.

Verſ. 19. Ye will ſay, For what end was Moſes's law given then, if it was not that we might get life by it? I anſwer, That, purely with reſpect to the Iſraelites, to diſcover their tranſgreſſions to them, Moſes's law was adjoined to the promiſe made to the one ſeed, not as a part of the covenant, but as a thing extrinſical to it, yet ſubſervient thereto; which was only to remain adjoined to the covenant or promiſe till ſuch time as the one ſeed ſhould come, Jews and Gentiles being gathered together into one body, and one ſpiritual ſeed by Chriſt; to which one ſeed the promiſes were made, as I have before ſhewed. And that Moſes's law was thus, and no other way added to the promiſe, appears from its being ordained and given by the miniſtry of angels. Moſes ſerving as mediator betwixt God and the people in the giving of the law. Verſ. 20. But ſo it is, that this Mediator of the law, to wit, Moſes, is not the Mediator of the one ſeed, to which the promiſe was made; and yet God is the covenanted God of the one ſeed, he being that one God of all, in whom both believing Jews and Gentiles have a common intereſt, as making up the one ſeed of Abraham, to which he promiſed to be a God, ſaying, I will be thy God and the God of thy ſeed. Therefore it clearly follows, that Moſes's law had reſpect to no other but the Iſraelites, and that only a temporary reſpect, even to them; and that God is the covenanted God of believing Jews and Gentiles, Moſes's law being entirely laid aſide, having already ſerved out its time.

Rom. iv. 16.

21. Is the law then againſt the promiſes of God? God forbid; for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteouſneſs ſhould have been by the law.

22. But the ſcripture hath concluded all under ſin, that the promiſe by faith of Jeſus Chriſt might be given to them that believe.

Verſ 21. But ye will object, If God be the covenanted God of Abraham's one ſeed, but Moſes not the mediator of that one ſeed, the law will be contrary to the promiſe, ſeeing the law promiſes life only to works, and yet God will be a God to people without any reſpect to works. I anſwer, That were a blaſphemous aſſertion to ſay, The law is contrary to the promiſes, for that would make God inconſiſtent with himſelf: but the law was given for no ſuch end as to give life to ſinners; for if that law had been given by Moſes, as a law able to give life to ſinners, truly then righteouſneſs had been by the law. verſ. 22. But that written law of Moſes, is ſo far from giving righteouſneſs, that upon the contrary, it hath, by its rigorous commands, and ceremonial rites, concluded in a priſon, our perſons, thoughts words, actions, in a word, ta panta Gr. our all under ſins. It has irrefragably demonſtrated all to be ſinful, to the end that the righteouſneſs and life promiſed in the abſolute covenant, might be given to them that believe, they receiving the ſame by faith. So that the law of Moſes was notably ſubſervient to the promiſe, and not contrary to it.

23. But before faith came, we were kept under the law, ſhut up unto the faith, which ſhould afterwards be revealed.

Ver. 23. But before the doctrine of faith in Jeſus Chriſt was revealed clearly in the goſpel, being ſevered from thoſe things wherewith it was inveloped under the legal diſpenſation, we Jews were kept, as by a guard, under the laws of Moſes, and ſhut up, as in a priſon, by the commands and threatenings of the moral law and by the rites of the ceremonial law, which ſtill held guilt and death before our eyes; that the revelation of the doctrine of faith, which was clearly to be propoſed in the goſpel, might be as welcome to us, as the opening of priſon-doors to poor priſoners.

24. Wherefore the law was our Schoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith.

Ver. 24. Whence it follows, that the law of Moſes ſerved the church in its infant-ſtate, as a ſchool-maſter to teach us the need we had of Chriſt, and ſo to bring us to him, that we might be juſtified by faith in him.

25. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter.

26. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 25. But now ſeeing the clear revelation of the doctrine of faith is made in the goſpel, we are no more under that ſchoolmaſter. ver. 26. For all of you, whether Jews or Gentiles, believing in Chriſt, are now ſons of God, come to age, having the clear knowledge of the myſtery of Chriſt by the goſpel, and ſo not ſtanding in need of that legal pedagogue: ye hear and know that Chriſt was crucified, &c. ſo that ye need not ſacrifices to hold forth the death of the Meſſias to you, &c. And ye are ſons of God, and that ſons come to age, by reaſon of your faith in Chriſt Jeſus, who is already come; your faith having the pre-eminency of the faith of the ſaints under the legal diſpenſation; that whereas the object of their faith was Chriſt who was to come, the object of yours is Chriſt come already.

27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt.

Verſ. 27. Ye need not doubt your ſonſhip, becauſe of the want of circumciſion: for baptiſm has come in to its room: and as many of you as have been baptized (I ſpeak of you according to the judgment of charity, none of you having been baptized by the miniſters of Chriſt, but ſuch as made a credible profeſſion of ſaving faith:) as many of you, I ſay, as have been baptized in token of your ingrafting to Chriſt, are united to Chriſt the Son of God; of the which union your baptiſm is a ſeal.

28. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Chriſt Jeſus.

Ver. 28. The one ſeed is now come, the partition-wall is taken down; though before it was otherwiſe, yet now it is no matter whether ye be Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, male or female. The believing Gentile, without any more ado, has as great privileges as the Jews. And though bond-ſervants and women were reſtrained from the enjoyment of ſome privileges under the Old Teſtament, which free perſons and men were admitted to, (Lev. xxii. 10. Gen xvii. 10.) it is not ſo now; women are baptized, though they were not circumciſed; bond-men may eat of the goſpel holy things, and freely partake as well as the free, though they were debarred from eating of the holy thing under the law: for why? ye are now all one body and one ſpiritual ſeed, made one in Chriſt, to whom all of you are joined by faith.

29. And if ye be Chriſt's, then are ye Abraham's ſeed, and heirs according to the promiſe.

Ver. 29. Now, ſeeing ye are Chriſt's, which intereſt of his in you is ſealed by baptiſm, ye are the ſpiritual children of Abraham; yea, all of you together are that one ſeed of his to which the promiſes were made, and ſo ye are heirs of the heavenly inheritance, according to the promiſe thereof made to you as Abraham's ſeed, without any reſpect to the law.

CHAP. IV.

NOW I ſay, that the heir as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a ſervant, though he be lord of all;

2. But is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father.

NOW, for the further clearing of the abrogation of the law, this I ſay, that the heir (in human affairs,) as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a ſervant, in reſpect of liberty, and actual poſſeſſion of the inheritance, though in the mean time he is lord of all his father's inheritance, in reſpect of right and title thereto. ver. 2. But he is ſtill under the government of tutors and curators, until the time come that his father, in his will or teſtament, has ſet forth his liberty, and entering to the actual poſſeſſion of his inheritance.

3. Even ſo we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world:

4. But when the fulneſs of the time was come, God ſent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law,

5. To redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of ſons.

Ver. 3. Even ſo we, the church of God, while we were in our minority, under the Old Teſtament, though heirs, yet, as ſervants, were in bondage, and that under the grievous yoke of ceremonies and carnal rites, whereby we were rudely inſtructed, even by corporal things, as figures of ſpiritual things. ver. 4. But when the time ſet by our heavenly Father was fully come, God ſent forth his Son Chriſt, being without father as man, but made by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, of the ſubſtance of the Virgin Mary; being alſo, though Lord of the law, yet, in our ſtead, made ſubject to the law, or covenant of works, its threatenings and commands; whereof the ceremonial law, to the Iſraelites, made up a conſiderable part. ver. 5. And Chriſt was thus made under the law, that they that were under the law might be delivered from it; that all that ſhould believe, might be freed from the commands of the law of works, as the condition of life, and from the threatenings of the law upon their diſobedience; and the Jews who were under the ceremonial law, might be delivered from that yoke of ceremonies, Chriſt the ſubſtance of them being come: and that we, both Jews and Gentiles, believing in Chriſt, might receive a more clear maniſeſtation of our ſonſhip to God under the New Teſtament diſpenſation; even as the heir, when he becomes major, and actually enters to the poſſeſſion of his inheritance, appears no more in the condition of a ſervant, but a ſon.

6. And becauſe ye are ſons, God hath ſent forth the Spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba Father.

Ver. 6. And becauſe ye are now ſons come to age, God has ſent forth in a more plentiful meaſure his own Spirit into your hearts; whereby ye have a more ready acceſs to God, and familiarity with him, whether ye be Jews or Gentiles, than believers under the Old Teſtament had; there being as great a difference betwixt your and their acceſs to and familiarity with God, as between that which the heir, being a child, has with his father, while he is under the rod, and that which he hath, being a man, come to years.

7. Wherefore thou art no more a ſervant, but a ſon; and if a ſon, then an heir of God through Chriſt.

Verſ. 7. Wherefore, ſeeing ye have received this plentiful effuſion of the Spirit of adoption, ye are no more as ſervants, as the child under age is; but ye are ſons, paſt your minority; and if ſons, then heirs of God himſelf as your inheritance; to which privilege you are advanced through Chriſt, to whom by faith ye are united. From all which it is evident, that your cleaving to the ceremonial law is as unreaſonable, as if you, being come to years, ſhould return to the ſtate you were in while in your non-age.

8. Howbeit, then when ye knew not God, ye did ſervice unto them which by nature are no gods.

4. He ſets himſelf to work on their affections.

Verſ. 8. Howbeit, then when ye knew not the true God, ye ſerved idols, which are gods only in mens opinion, and not by their own nature; and ye were neither born nor bred up under the ceremonial law, but in Pagan idolatry, ſo far were ye from ſonſhip to God, which ye are now advanced to.

9. But now after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye deſire again to be in bondage?

10. Ye obſerve days, and months, and times, and years.

11. I am afraid of you, leſt I have beſtowed upon you labour in vain.

Verſ. 9. But now ſeeing ye know the true God, or rather are known of God, the acquaintance being entirely due to God's free grace, what a return is this ye make to God for his kindneſs, to return again to ceremonial obſervances, which are ſuch as can neither juſtify you, nor afford true conſolation, but in theſe reſpects are weak, yea and beggarly, as a coffer from which the jewel is gone, Chriſt being now come, and therefore no more to be ſeen in them; to which nevertheleſs ye will needs again be in bondage? verſ. 10. I ſpeak not of this your foul retreat without ground; for ye do obſerve days after the Jewiſh manner, viz. their ſabbaths and new moons, their months, as the firſt and ſeventh anniverſary feaſts, and ſabbatical years. verſ. 11. Upon which account I am afraid my labour among you may be in vain: for what will it profit to return from Paganiſm to Judaiſm?

12. Brethren, I beſeech you, be as I am; for I am as ye are: ye have not injured me at all.

Verſ. 12. Brethren, I beſeech you, let me have room in your affections; for I aſſure you, that ye have a place in my heart as my other ſelf; and while I ſo ſharply reprove you, I perſuade you I am not reſenting any perſonal injury, but the injury ye are doing to Chriſt and his truths.

13. Ye know how through infirmity of the fleſh, I preached the goſpel unto you at the firſt.

14. And my temptation which was in my fleſh, ye deſpiſed not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Chriſt Jeſus.

Verſ. 13. Ye know how that, at the firſt when the goſpel came to you, I preached it to you, being in a contemptible outward condition by reaſon of the afflictions I endured in the work. verſ. 14. And that trial of mine wherewith God was pleaſed to try me, in reſpect of my various bodily afflictions and perſecutions, ye did not haughtily overlook and deſpiſe, nor did ye reject me and my miniſtry for them; but, upon the contrary, ye received me as a meſſenger of God, yea, as Chriſt himſelf, looking upon me as his ambaſſador, as knowing Chriſt ſpoke to you by my mouth.

15. Where is then the bleſſedneſs you ſpake of? for I bear you record, that, if it had been poſſible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes and have given them to me.

16. Am I therefore become your enemy, becauſe I tell you the truth?

Verſ. 15. But where is that happineſs ye thought ye had in my miniſtry, where is it now; I am ſure the the time was ye thought yourſelves very happy in me; for I can bear witneſs, that ſometime your reſpect to me was ſo great, that you would have parted with any thing ye had for my encouragement. Verſ. 16. Ye looked on me then as your great friend; but now will ye look upon me as your enemy, becauſe I tell you that which is truth; ye ſhould herein be very injurious to me; for my telling you the truth, is an argument of my laſting affection towards you.

17. They zealouſly affect you, but not well; yea, they would exclude you, that you might affect them.

18. But it is good to be zealouſly affected always in a good thing, and not only when I am preſent with you.

Verſ. 17. The legal teachers among you have a great deal of zeal for you indeed, but it is not of the right ſtamp; yea, they would exclude you out of my affections, that ye might be zealous for them and their doctrine. verſ. 18. But I would put you in mind, that as ye have been zealous for my doctrine before, ſo it is good to be conſtant in your zeal for ſuch a good thing; and it is not good, but very bad, to have been zealous for it only when I was perſonally preſent with you.

19. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again, untill Chriſt be formed in you.

20. I deſire to be preſent with you now, and to change my voice, for I ſtand in doubt of you.

Verſ. 19. O Galatians, whom I love as my little children, for whoſe converſion I laboured at firſt, as a woman laboureth to bring forth a child, and of whom I am as it were travailing in birth again, untill the image of Chriſt, defaced by error in you, be reſtored to its former luſtre; verſ. 20. I would fain be preſent with you, to ſpeak with you, face to face, and to accommodate my ſpeech more cloſely to your preſent caſe; for being abſent, I am in ſeveral doubts about your caſe; which might be cleared by converſe with you.

21. Tell me, ye that deſire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?

22. For it is written, that Abraham had two ſons; the one by a bond-maid, the other by a free-woman.

23. But he who was of the bond-woman, was born after the fleſh; but he of the free woman, was by promiſe.

Verſ. 21. Ye that deſire to be under Moſes's law, tell me, Do ye not hear Moſes's law? This of itſelf might convince you of your error. verſ. 22. For it is written in the book of Geneſis, that Abraham had two ſons, Iſhmael by Hagar a bond-maid, and Iſaac by Sarah a free-woman. verſ. 23. But there was a difference in their nativity: for Iſhmael was born according to the courſe of nature, of a young woman fit naturally for conception; but Iſaac was born by virtue of a ſpecial promiſe, Gen. xviii. 10. his mother being barren, and alſo paſt the age of child bearing.

6. He illuſtrateth the whole former diſpute by the typical hiſtory of Abraham's family.

24. Which things are an allegory; for theſe are the two covenants; the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar.

25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and anſwereth to Jeruſalem which now is and is in bondage with her children.

Ver. 24. Which things are a typical hiſtory: for theſe two women repreſent the two covenants, with the churches thereto adhering reſpectively; the one from mount Sinai, to wit, the covenant of works, which was given there, and where the Jewiſh ſynagogue, under that covenant, had its beginning: this bringeth forth children indeed, but ſuch children as are mere mercenary worſhippers, and under the bondage of that covenant, its curſes and commands; and this is that repreſented by Agar the bond-woman, and that very conveniently. ver. 25. (Gr. To gar Agar, Sina oros eſtin en te Arabia, &c.) For as to that allegorical Agar, the mountain Sinai is in Arabia, where lived Agar and her ſon; and the ſame Sinai anſwers well to the earthly Jeruſalem, the new Jewiſh ſynagogue, nothing being heard from either of them, but Do and live: but Sinai ſtill but ſerves with the legaliſts her children, Sinai and her covenant, becauſe it was never deſigned but to be ſubſervient to the covenant of grace, as Hagar to Sarah; her children, the legaliſts, following the ſtate of the venter, i. e. the womb from whence they came, are but in the ſtate of bond-ſervants; not in the ſtate of ſons and heirs, more than Iſhmael had Iſaac's privilege.

26. But Jeruſalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all.

27. For it is written, Rejoice thou barren, that beareſt not; break forth and cry, thou that travaileſt not: for the deſolate hath many more children than ſhe which hath an huſband.

Ver. 26. But the other covenant, the covenant of grace, with the church adhering thereto, to wit, the church of believers in Chriſt, which is the heavenly Jeruſalem, enjoying the reality of all the typical external privileges which the earthly Jeruſalem had, which covenant and church is the mother of us all, Jews or Gentiles, that believe in Chriſt, even ſhe is free; the covenant is ſerved, but ſerves not as Sarah: the church is miſtreſs of the family, being Chriſt's ſpouſe; and her children ſons and heirs, as Sarah and her Iſaac. ver. 27. I ſay, the Chriſtian church is that free mother of us all; for Iſaiah in his 54th chap. ver. 1. with an eye to that typical hiſtory of Hagar and Sarah in Abraham's family, after he had ſpoke of the ſufferings of Chriſt, immediately addreſſeth himſelf to her, as ſhe was in her very firſt days before the preaching of the goſpel by the apoſtle, ſaying, Rejoice thou that, as Sarah, art yet barren, thy children making no figure in compariſon of the ſynagogue, break forth over all thy diſcouragements, and cry for joy, though thou travaileſt not yet to bring forth children, as thou ſhalt do ere long by the preaching of the apoſtles, after the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt on them: for though thou ſeem deſolate as a widow, thy huſband being yet in his ſtate of humiliation, and ſo very little known, thou ſhalt have many more children, even ſuch as ſhall join themſelves to thee as members, than the Jewiſh ſynagogue, which only ſeems to have God for her huſband. This ſhall be as ſure to thee, as if thou hadſt all theſe children about thy hand already.

28. Now we, brethren, as Iſaac was, are the children of promiſe.

Ver. 28. Now, brethren, to apply the whole unto us, ye ſee, we who adhere to the covenant of grace are ſuch children as Iſaac, even children of promiſe; born unto God by virtue of the abſolute promiſe; not by the ſtrength of nature, or by our own works.

29. But as then he that was born after the fleſh perſecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even ſo it is now.

30. Nevertheleſs, what ſaith the ſcripture? Caſt out the bond-woman and her ſon; for the ſon of the bond-woman ſhall not be heir with the ſon of the free-woman.

Ver. 29. But as then Iſhmael perſecuted Iſaac, ſo now the legaliſts, children of the covenant of works, perſecute the children of the covenant of grace. ver. 30. Nevertheleſs, what ſaith the ſcripture? even, Caſt out Hagar and Iſhmael, for he ſhall not be heir with Iſaac. The ſame ſentence is paſſed againſt the Jewiſh ſynagogue, and all that adhere to the covenant of works; they ſhall be rejected and caſt out of the ſociety of ſaints, for they ſhall never partake of the heavenly inheritance with thoſe that believe in Chriſt.

31. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free.

Ver. 31. Therefore, ſeeing we are children of promiſe, as Iſaac, we are not under the legal covenant, but the covenant of grace, and ſo are free: and therefore have nothing to do with the law.

CHAP. V.

STAND faſt therefore in the liberty wherewith Chriſt hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage.

2. Behold, I Paul ſay unto you, that if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall profit you nothing.

3. For I teſtify again to every man that is circumciſed, that he is a debtor to do the whole law.

FROM the whole of that I have ſaid, I exhort you to ſtand faſt in the liberty purchaſed to us by Chriſt, as ſtout ſoldiers keeping their ground where the captain has ſet them; and let no man wreathe that ſervile yoke of the legal covenant about your necks again. And to preſs you to this, ver. 2. Behold, (in oppoſition to all that the ſeducers among you ſay for it,) I Paul, an apoſtle of Chriſt, ſay, that if the Gentiles ſhall be circumciſed, looking on that rite as neceſſary to your juſtification, ye ſhall have no benefit by Chriſt. ver. 3. For I, as Chriſt's meſſenger, do further teſtify to every man who is circumciſed, laying any ſtreſs on it for his juſtification, that by his very receiving of circumciſion under that notion, he is obliged perfectly to obey the whole law, under pain of the curſe; which is inevitable to him, in regard no man is able ſo to obey it. He is, I ſay, thereby obliged to give ſuch obedience; in regard whatever evangelical uſe circumciſion had to believers, yet it is to him the ſacrament of the legal covenant, binding him to the obſervance of the ſame covenant, according to the tenor of it, which promiſes life to perfect obedience, and otherwiſe denounceth the curſe.

4. Chriſt is become of no effect unto you, whoſoever of you are juſtified by the law; ye are fallen from grace.

5. For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteouſneſs by faith.

6. For in Chriſt Jeſus, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith which worketh by love.

Verſ. 4. Whoever of you ſeek to be juſtified by the law, can have no benefit by Chriſt; for by your ſeeking juſtification by the law, ye renounce and fall from the free favour of God as the fountain of juſtification, and ſo ye renounce Chriſt alſo, and therefore muſt ſtand and fall according to your works. verſ. 5. Ye that do ſo, are certainly fallen from grace; for we that ſtand cleaving to it, look for no good by our works, or by the law; but through the Spirit of God working in us, we look for, and expect heaven, which is given only to the perfectly righteous; we expect it I ſay by faith only. verſ. 6. And this we do, becauſe we know, that, in the kingdom of Chriſt, neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion availeth ought to juſtification, and a right to glory, (whatever circumciſion may avail for in the law's dominions, or whatever ſtreſs that way fooliſh Gentiles may lay upon their uncircumciſion;) nothing avails here for theſe ends but faith; not that which is dead and idle, but that faith which is operative. So that ye need not fear want of work by caſting off of the legal covenant; if ye have faith of the right ſtamp, even that which is juſtifying, it will put you to work good works; and that not from a mercenary principle, fear of puniſhment, and hope of reward, as thoſe that live under the influence of the legal covenant; but out of a principle of love becoming ſons.

7. Ye did run well, who did hinder you, that ye ſhould not obey the truth?

8. This perſuaſion cometh not of him that calleth you.

9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.

Verſ. 7. Time was when you did forwardly embrace and cleave to my doctrine, ſo that you was making pleaſant progreſs in religion; who has now ſtopt you in your courſe? whoever it was, it is unaccountable ye ſhould be ſtopt in giving obedience to the truth. verſ. 8. However fully ye ſeem to yourſelves to be perſuaded of your opinion, that perſuaſion is from another hand than his, who by my goſpel called you out of Paganiſm to Chriſt. It is not from God. verſ. 9. To tell you the myſtery of it, As a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump, even ſo a few ſeducers that have crept in among you, have corrupted by their falſe doctrine, the whole churches of Galatia, which are as one lump.

10. I have confidence in you through the Lord, that you will be none otherwiſe minded, but he that troubleth you, ſhall bear his judgment, whoſoever he be.

Verſ. 10. I have confidence concerning you, when I conſider the conſtancy of God's grace, that ſome time you will think no other thing than I have juſt now told you of the riſe of this perſuaſion, and that you will be of the ſame mind with me in that matter, and ſo will return to the truth ye have deſerted: but be who he will that troubles you, and loads you with that yoke of bondage, God ſhall lay a burden on him of another ſort, even a burden of puniſhment here or hereafter, (baſtaſei to krima.)

11. And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumciſion, why do I yet ſuffer perſecution? then is the offence of the croſs ceaſed.

Verſ. 11. But as for me, brethren, it is ſtrange that any ſhould have the impudence to ſay, that I preach the neceſſity of circumciſion, becauſe forſooth I circumciſed Timothy: for if I preach that doctrine, how come I to be perſecuted of the Jews as an enemy to Moſes's law? yea ſurely, if I preached that doctrine, then the offence that the Jews take at the doctrine of the goſpel, holding forth Chriſt's ſufferings, embraced by faith, as the only way of ſalvation, is ceaſed; which I find daily the contrary of, by their reſtleſs malice againſt me.

12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you.

13. For, brethren, ye have been called unto liberty; only uſe not liberty for an occaſion to the fleſh, but by love ſerve one another.

14. For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even in this; Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.

Verſ. 12. I would that they which ſo trouble you with the doctrine of cutting off the foreſkin, were themſelves cut off from the ſociety of the church with the circumciſing knife of excommunication; though indeed to do it actually at this time, while ye are in ſuch a ferment, would not tend to edification. verſ. 13. I wiſh not this without good reaſon; for, brethren, God has called you to liberty, but they have called you back again to bondage. God has indeed called you to liberty, only I would caution you againſt the abuſe of Chriſtian liberty; do not ſo make uſe of your liberty, as to make it a pander to your corruption, taking occaſion of licentiouſneſs from it: but on the contrary, (though now ye are all in confuſion among yourſelves,) learn to advance one another's welfare, (as if each of you were ſervant to his neighbour,) by mutual love. verſ. 14. For this is the moſt compendious way of fulfilling the law, the law being fulfilled in one word, even in this, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour with the ſame ſincerity thou loveſt thyſelf. This argument may well take with you that are ſo zealous for fulfilling the law.

The love of our neighbour preſuppoſes love to God.

15. But if ye bite and devour one another, take heed that ye be not conſumed one of another.

Verſ. 15. But on the other hand, if ye, like ſo many wild beaſts go on to bite one another by reproaches, and to devour one another by violence, take heed it end not in a total devaſtation of your ſociety, by your own hands.

16. This I ſay then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſt of the fleſh.

17. For the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh; and theſe are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye cannot do the things that you would.

Ver. 16. But for remedy of theſe evils, I ſay, Walk ye, and frame your converſation according to the dictates of the Holy Spirit dwelling in you; and ſo although your corrupt part will have its luſt, in ſinful motions, yet ye ſhall be thereby kept from conſenting thereto, which perfects and fulfils that ſinful motion. verſ. 17. For the corrupt nature luſteth againſt the Spirit, deſiring thoſe things which are grievous to the Spirit; and the Spirit againſt corrupt nature, in ſo far as he ſtirs up in the ſaints, deſires of thoſe things that are grievous to the corrupt nature; and thoſe in the gracious ſoul lie againſt one another, as ſoldiers in a trench againſt a fort; on deſign that ye may not (ina me ha an thelete, tauta poiete) do whatever things ye would, whether as gracious or as corrupt; ſo that, if you take part with the Spirit, ye will get the upper hand, though the fleſh will ſtill luſt in you, and ſo make a blot in the faireſt lines you write.

18. But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye are not under the law.

Ver. 18. But, for your comfort in this caſe, I tell you, that if ye be led by the Spirit of God, walking after, and ſetting yourſelves to follow his dictates, ye are not under the law as a covenant of works; for the Spirit is given to none under that covenant, as I told you before, chap. iii. 2.; and if ſo, then ye are not under, nor liable to the curſe for your ſlips.

19. Now the works of the fleſh are manifeſt, which are theſe, adultery, fornication, uncleanneſs, laſciviouſneſs,

20. Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, ſtrife, ſeditions, hereſies,

21. Envyings, murders, drunkenneſs, revellings, and ſuch like: of the which I tell you before, as I have alſo told you in time paſt, that they which do ſuch things, ſhall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Ver. 19. Now ye may know whether ye be led by the Spirit or by the fleſh, by your actions and courſe of life; for as to the fleſh, though that corrupt principle lies very inwardly and is hid, yet the works of it are manifeſt, any body may diſcern them. Theſe works are, adultery, fornication, all other ſorts of filthy luſts of that kind; wantonneſs, ver. 20. Idolatry, witchcraft; feuds (echthai,) quarrellings proceeding therefrom; emulations, whereby men deſire to outſtrip others in what is commendable, juſt becauſe they have no will to be overclouded by them; wrath, or inordinate anger; contentiouſneſs; ſedition, or diſſention, in which men ſeparate from one another; errors oppoſite to ſome ſubſtantial truth in religion, pertinaciouſly maintained; ver. 21. Envyings at the good of others; murders, drunkenneſs, revellings, or exceſs of belly cheer, joined with laſcivious behaviour; and ſuch like vices. Of which I now warn you aforehand, as I have before told you by word of mouth, when I was preſent with you, that thoſe who impenitently perſiſt in theſe things, ſhall never inherit the kingdom of heaven.

22. But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, faith.

23. Meekneſs, temperance: againſt ſuch there is no law.

Ver. 22. 23. But the ſavoury product of the Spirit in men, is love to God and our neighbour; ſpiritual joy; * peaceableneſs, whereby we are diſpoſed to do no wrong to any man; long-ſuffering, whereby we patiently bear if they wrong us; gentleneſs, whereby we are affable and pleaſant to them, and eaſy to be intreated; goodneſs, whereby we are ready to communicate any good we have to any man; fidelity, meekneſs, and temperance, which bridles fleſhly appetite and deſires. No law ſtrikes againſt ſuch things, but they are commanded by the law. In order to your trial, ye have heard what are the works of the Spirit, and what are thoſe of the fleſh.

* Mark the gradation in theſe four following.

24. And they that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts.

Ver. 24. But ſo it is, that all they that are Chriſt's by his Spirit dwelling in them, have ſerved their corrupt nature, together with its uneaſy paſſions and pleaſant deſires, as they ſerved Chriſt; that is, they have crucified them, they have nailed them to Chriſt's croſs, and given them death's wounds, ſo as though they be not utterly extinct as yet, they nevertheleſs are a-dying.

25. If we live in the Spirit, let us alſo walk in the Spirit.

Ver. 25. If then we pretend to have the Spirit in us as a principle of ſpiritual life, let us evidence it by our taking part with the Spirit againſt our corruptions, and framing our life according to his dictates.

26. Let us not be deſirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

Ver. 26. I fear ambition has been very hurtful to you; ſo I would exhort you, in order to your returning to a ſound mind, that ye would not be ambitious or deſirous of applauſe among men, which is but vain and empty glory; provoking one another by mutual diſdain, as if others were nothing in compariſon of you; and envying one another, deſiring none to be eſteemed but for yourſelves.

CHAP. VI.

BRethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are ſpiritual, reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs; conſidering thyſelf, leſt thou alſo be tempted.

BRethren, if any of your fellow-church-members who have ſometimes given evidence of their having the Spirit, be ſurpriſed in a fault, whether in principle or practice, by the fleſh's prevailing againſt the Spirit; I exhort you who are ſtrong, who ſtand by the Spirit's prevailing againſt the fleſh, that ye would endeavour the recovery of ſuch, as a ſurgeon ſets right a disjointed member; (for thoſe, by their fall, are disjointed members of Chriſt's body;) and that ye would do this in meekneſs, purging your admonitions and reprooſs to them, of fleſhly paſſions: and to preſs and help you to this, ye would, in the mean time ye are about that work, conſider yourſelves, how the root of all ſin is in you; leſt, if ye forget to look to yourſelves in theſe glaſſes of human frailty, God be provoked to make you a glaſs to others, ſuffering you for ſelf-conceit to be tempted and ſuccumb.

2. Bear ye one another's burdens, and ſo fulfil the law of Chriſt.

Ver. 2. Take a liſt of one another's burdens, ſympathizing with them under their miſcarriages, as if they were your own, being affected with them; and thus anſwer the command of loving one another, which is Chriſt's law, recommended to us in a ſpecial manner by his precept and practice. This Chriſtian ſympathy will be an evangelical fulfilling of that excellent law.

3. For if a man think himſelf to be ſomething, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himſelf.

Ver. 3. Thoſe that have fallen, they doat on Moſes's law; ye that ſtand do ſay ye will hold by Chriſt's law: pray you then give this proof of your ſincerity in theſe pretenſions; for if a man think himſelf ſomething, and above others, while, in the mean time, in his practice he is no more than his neighbours, that man is (heauton phrenapata) a ſoul-deceiver of himſelf; ſo ye, if ye hold by Chriſt's law in your principles, but flinch from it in your practice, ye deceive yourſelves, valuing yourſelves upon principles contradicted by your practice.

4. But let every man prove his own work, and then ſhall he have rejoicing in himſelf alone, and not in another.

5. For every man ſhall bear his own burden.

Ver. 4. But let every man try his work and practice by the touchſtone of God's word; and then, if he find it will abide the touchſtone, he ſhall have ground of rejoicing, and counting himſelf happy in his ſtate; he ſhall have it, I ſay, in himſelf thus approven by God's word, ſo that he ſhall not need to fetch in that ſilly joy and rejoicing in his own ſtate, from other men's falls, as ſome do who think themſelves right enough becauſe they are not ſo bad as ſome others that they ſee, ver. 5. Let every man try his work: for at the day of judgment every man ſhall give an account of his own actions to God; and the beſt will find they have burden enough, when they come before a holy God, who will never paſs a comfortable ſentence on any, juſt becauſe they were not ſo bad as others.

6. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate unto him that teacheth, in all good things.

Verſ. 6. Let the people who are taught, communicate to their miniſters who teach them, in all temporal good things neceſſary for their comfortable maintenance.

7. Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap.

8. For he that ſoweth to his fleſh, ſhall of the fleſh reap corruption; but he that ſoweth to the Spirit, ſhall of the Spirit reap life everlaſting.

Verſ. 7. Do not deceive yourſelves; when ye have no will to be at the expence of maintaining your godly paſtors, ye can find out many fair pretences for it to ſtop their mouths, whereby they are mocked; but ye have to do with God, who will not be ſo mocked by you: for as a man ſhall reap the ſame grain that he ſoweth, ſo ſhall ye at the great day get a reward ſuitable to your actions in this life. verſ. 8. For he that liveth according to the fleſh, ſhall get eternal deſtruction, as the product of his ſinful actions; but he that liveth according to the Spirit, ſhall get eternal life, as the product of his good works.

9. And let us not be weary in well-doing; for in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if we faint not.

Verſ. 9. And being entered on a courſe of doing good works, let us not ſhrink back from it, as cowards in war; for though we do not reap the fruit of it preſently, more than the huſbandman does, yet we ſhall reap the fruit of it, even eternal life, in the time deſtinate for reaping, viz. the harveſt of the world, if we do not faint and give over, like a man ſunk under a burden, his ſpirits being waſted, and his members thereby being as it were all looſed.

10. As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, eſpecially unto them who are of the houſhold of faith.

Verſ. 10. Therefore, as we have opportunity to do good, let us do good, ſpiritual and temporal, to all men; but in a ſpecial manner to the godly, who are members of Chriſt's family, which is joined together by the bond of faith.

11. Ye ſee how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand.

Verſ. 11. Ye ſee how large a letter I have writtento you with mine own hand, and thereby my affection to you, for though I have written larger letters to others, yet they were written with other hands than mine own.

12. As many as deſire to make a fair ſhew in the fleſh, they conſtrain you to be circumciſed; only leſt they ſhould ſuffer perſecution for the croſs of Chriſt.

13. For neither they themſelves who are circumciſed, keep the law; but deſire to have you circumciſed, that they might glory in your fleſh.

14. But God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.

15. For in Chriſt Jeſus neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creature.

16. And as many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them, and mercy, and upon the Iſrael of God.

Verſ. 12. As many as deſire to make a fair outward ſhew of religion in the body, while they neglect religion in their ſpirits, they by the doctrine of the neceſſity of circumciſion, conſtrain you to be circumciſed, only that they may ward off from themſelves the blow of perſecution by the Jews, who would be ſtirred up againſt them, if they ſhould preach the ſincere doctrine of Chriſt's ſufferings. verſ. 13. It is not out of true reſpect to the law that they urge it; for even they themſelves that are circumciſed, do neither keep the moral law, nor the ceremonial law, where it croſſeth their intereſt; but they deſire to have you circumciſed, that they may ſatisfy their ambition, and may glory in making ſo many proſelytes to their opinion, receiving circumciſion in the fleſh, which we have preached down. verſ. 14. But far be it from me to glory in any thing but the ſufferings of Chriſt, by which I am ſo mortified, that I care no more for the world's good opinion, or any thing in it, than men uſe to care for or value a crucified perſon, who is pronounced to be curſed; and on the other hand, the world cares as little for me, even upon the very account of Chriſt's croſs which I preach, and put my whole confidence in. verſ. 15. I glory only in the croſs of Chriſt; for I take it for an infallible rule, That in the kingdom of Chriſt, neither circumciſion nor uncircumciſion is ought worth; but that the new creation, or regeneration, is the great buſineſs requiſite to evidence our intereſt in Chriſt. verſ. 16. And as for thoſe that turn the edge of their endeavours this way, living according to this rule, I, as an apoſtle of Chriſt, bleſs them from the Lord, (though falſe teachers ſhould curſe them;) Peace of all kinds be on them, and the mercy of God be their ſure refuge; and let theſe be on all the Spiritual Iſraelites, true believers, which God will account his Iſrael, though they be not circumciſed.

17. From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jeſus.

18. Brethren, the grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit. Amen.

Verſ. 17. From henceforth let no man trouble me, quarrelling my call or my doctrine, particularly alledging that I myſelf teach the neceſſity of circumciſion; for in my body I bear ſuch ſcars received from perſecutors, as are marks of my being a ſervant of Chriſt, even as ſervants bear their maſters mark: and theſe received by me for preaching Chriſt ſincerely, ſhew, that I have not pleaſed the Jews in preaching circumciſion. verſ. 18. Brethren, all the ſaving benefits purchaſed by Chriſt be with your ſouls. Amen.

PRACTICAL DISCOURSES.

GOSPEL-COMPULSION.

A SERMON preached immediately before the Celebration of the Lord's Supper, at Ettrick.

LUKE xiv. 23.

Compel them to come in.

AND are they not happy that are in? Is your rock as their rock, O ſinners, yourſelves being judges? And why will not you come in too? Chriſt's houſe is not yet filled. Many have come in, but there is room for more, verſ. 22. And we are ſent to compel you to come in. So we have it in charge in our text.

The ſcope of this parable (which, upon the matter, is the ſame with that of the marriage feaſt, Matth. 22.) is to ſhew the rejection of the Jews for their rejecting of Chriſt, and the calling of the Gentiles into their room. The ſupper to which they are bidden here, is Jeſus Chriſt, with all his ſaving benefits; he is the maker, and the matter of this ſupper alſo. In the morning of time, in the patriarchal ages, men were invited to this feaſt; for even then there were not wanting preachers of righteouſneſs, 2 Pet. ii. 5. In the mid-day, under the law, they were invited to it, by prophets, prieſts, and Levites. And here in the evening, in the laſt times, the times of the goſpel, they are called to it as a ſupper; the diſpenſation of the goſpel being the laſt diſpenſation of grace to the world. The Jews were they that got the firſt offer, but they would not come; they made their excuſes, as ye may read, ver. 17. 18, 19, 20, of this chapter. The Gentiles get the next offer; the ſervant is ſent out to the ſtreets and lanes; the miniſters of Chriſt preach the goſpel to the poor Gentiles, and they receive it. But all come not in at once: therefore the ſervant is ſent out into the high-ways and hedges, where the moſt miſerable ſort of people are to be found; and even theſe muſt be compelled to come in. Poſſibly, this double ſending forth of the ſervant, may point the Lord's way in the diſpenſation of the goſpel to the Gentile world: the goſpel being firſt preached to thoſe of them who had renounced the idolatry of their country, and worſhipped the true God; and ſometimes aſſembled with the Jews in their ſynagogues to learn of them the knowledge of God, though they did not embrace the ceremonial part of their religion: theſe might well be repreſented by the poor, maimed, and blind, ſitting in the ſtreets and lanes of the city. But afterwards it was carried to the moſt dark corners of the earth, where there was no reſpect either to the Jewiſh or Chriſtian religion, but all were ſunk together in moſt groſs ignorance and idolatry; which might fitly be repreſented by the high-ways and hedges. See Acts x. and xiii. 42. 46. 49.

In the text we have three things. (1.) The great deſign miniſters ſhould have before their eyes in preaching of the goſpel; and that is, to bring ſinners in to Chriſt. It muſt not be to draw them to a party, but to draw them to Chriſt. It is not to make them only change their work, they continuing ſtill without, by preaching mere morality to them; but it is to make them change their maſter too, to get them into Chriſt by faith. (2.) Conſider whom they are to deal with in order to bring them in; even thoſe that are ſitting in the high-ways and hedges, like beggars in rags and ſores, the moſt unworthy and vile ſinners. (3.) The method they muſt uſe to get them in; Compel them to come in, not by uſing bodily violence towards them. Chriſt put the ſword of the Spirit in the hands of his miniſters, but not the temporal ſword. Dragooning, torturing, murdering, may be fit means to bring in men to Antichriſt, but not to bring them in to Chriſt. The compulſion in the text is a moral compulſion, ſuch as thoſe uſe who invite men to feaſts, who are not wont to cudgel them in, but ſeriouſly and earneſtly to deal with them until they conſent. So ſhould miniſters compel ſinners to come in to Chriſt, dealing with them ſeriouſly and affectionately, ſo as ſinners may ſee they are in good earneſt upon their Maſter's errand. We muſt give them the charming invitations and offers of the goſpel, upon the one hand, and lay before them the terror of the Lord, on the other hand, that if men will go to hell, they may go with a witneſs. Withal, here is intimated that efficacy of the Spirit, which goes along with the word, to the converſion of the elect; which does not force, but ſweetly neceſſitates them to come in.

DOCT. It is the great work of miniſters to compel ſinners, in a goſpel-way, to come in to Chriſt.

The beſt way that I can handle this text, is to aim at that which is given in charge in it. And in order to this, conſider with me the import of it.

I. Sinners naturally are out. Were it not ſo, they needed not be compelled to come in. Hear all ye this day that are out of Chriſt, what are ye out of, and where ye are.

Firſt, Sinners, do ye know what ye are out of? (1.) All ye that are out of Chriſt, are out of God's family, Ehp. ii. 18, 19. God's houſhold is the houſhold of faith ye are none of it. His houſe may be an empty houſe, for you. Adam ran out of the houſe, and all his poſterity with him; and ye are ſtill there, where Adam left you. And is not that a ſad caſe, to be out of God's family? Though ye are in your mother's houſe, ye cannot call him Father, ſeeing ye are not in Chriſt his Son: ye can have no claim to the portion and inheritance of the children, Gal. iv. 30. (2.) Ye are out of God's covenant of peace, and ſo without hope of ſalvation, while in that ſtate, Eph. ii. 12. Ye read of a glorious chariot, Cant. iii. 9, 10. It is the covenant of grace, the covenant of peace, as it is held forth in the everlaſting goſpel; for that is the word of truth, meekneſs, and righteouſneſs, upon which Chriſt rides and proſpereth. The firſt chariot, wherein Adam and his children ſhould have been carried to heaven, was the covenant of works: Adam had the guiding of it; but it did not drive far, till it was broken to pieces. Now, there is a new one made, in which Chriſt is carrying all his people to glory; but ye are out of it. King Solomon, the Mediator Chriſt, made it; it could not be made without him. He made it for himſelf, to manifeſt his own glory, and the exceeding riches of his grace by it; and for the daughters of Jeruſalem, to carry his bride home to his Father's houſe, in it. It was made of the durable wood of Lebanon; for he will have it to be an everlaſting covenant, that ſhall never be broken. It has pillars of ſilver, thoſe excellent promiſes that are peculiar to the covenant of grace, as the promiſes of pardon, perſeverance, &c. for it is eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes. And becauſe there is no ſmall weight in this chariot, when a ſinner is in it, he hath made the bottom thereof of gold ſolid and ſtrong, ſo that none that are in it (though heavier than mountains of braſs) ſhall fall through it: for the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his, 2 Tim. ii. 19.; they are ſecured by God's eternal decree of election. No ſtorms of wrath can fall upon them that are in it; for it hath a covering of the purple blood of Jeſus Chriſt. The midſt thereof, the inner part of it, is paved with love: love lines the chariot, it is above them, it is on every hand of them; yea, it is underneath them, ſo that if they do fall in it, they ſhall not get ſuch a grievous fall, but they will be able to riſe again. Happy they that are in it! But, alas! ſinners, ye are out of it. Ye are lying there where the firſt chariot laid you when it broke. (3.) Ye are out of God's favour, being out of Chriſt. Now, that is dreadful; for our God is a conſuming fire. And there is no ſhelter from the wrath of God, but under the covert of the blood of the Mediator, Eph. ii. 13. The deſtroying angel is coming through, and there is no blood ſprinkled on your door poſts. God is in Chriſt, reconciling the world to himſelf; if ye do not come in, and meet him there, what can ye expect but that he will meet you without, as a bear bereaved of her whelps, rent the caul of your heart, and devour you like a lion? Hoſ. xiii. 8. What do your duties avail, while ye are out of Chriſt? can they procure you God's favour? Your tears will never come into his bottle, nor will your prayers reach his ears, John xiv. 6.

Secondly, Know ye, ſinners, where ye are? I will tell you where ye are. (1.) Ye are on the devil's paſture, the mountains of vanity, about the lions dens, and the mountains of leopards, where Satan feeds his herd. Ye are out of God's houſe, wandering abroad for bread, begging at the world's door, ſaying, where is it? Ye know not Chriſt, the bread of life; and therefore the dung of worldly profits and pleaſures is ſo valuable in your eyes. But tell me, ſinner, are you ever ſatisfied? You would fain fill your belly with the huſks of the world; but do they fill you indeed? is not the ſubſtance ſqueezed out of theſe things, ſo as ye find them but empty huſks? In all your traverſing of the mountains of vanity, came ye ever to the place of which you could ſay (and ſtand by it,) This is my reſt, and here I will ſtay? no, nor never ſhall, till ye come to Chriſt, Iſ. lv. 2. (2.) Ye are in hell upon earth. To be in hell is to be without, Rev. xxii. 15. and ye are not come in, ye are condemned already, John iii. 18. bound in the priſon, Iſ. lxi. 1. What is the difference betwixt you and them that are in hell? Ye are both priſoners; only ye are in the outer priſon, they are in the inner priſon. Ye are both away from Chriſt; only ye will depart from him. They muſt depart from him. The fire of God's wrath is ſet on in the conſciences of both; only it is not as yet blown up and made to flame in you, by the breath of the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone to kindle it, as it is in them; but ye know not how ſoon it may be ſo. But there is yet another difference; they are priſoners paſt hope, ye are priſoners of hope. Therefore we proceed to another point.

II. It is the great errand of the friends of the Bridegroom to bring them in that are out. Sirs, ye that are out, ye are where ye ſhould not be, ye are on forbidden ground. We ſhould have you in; we would have you come in to Chriſt, to unite with him, by believing in him, accepting of him in all his offices.

Firſt, We declare unto you, that our Lord is inveſted with the ſole authority and commiſſion to be the great Prophet, the Preacher and Teacher of the way to Immanuel's land, Acts iii. 22, 23. He has ſet up his ſchool amongſt us, but he hath few diſciples; and we are come to compel you to come in, that his houſe may be filled. Satan has many diſciples; carnal wiſdom has many ſcholars. Alas for it! O leave them. Our Lord alone is he that is given of the Father to be the great Leader to the heavenly Canaan, Iſ. lv. 4. None ever came, or ſhall come there, but his followers; come in then, give up yourſelves to him to be guided by him. Ye would all be happy, ye would all be at heaven at laſt; but ye are wandering in a wilderneſs, where there is no way; and ye will ſurely loſe yourſelves, if ye take not him for your leader. The way to glory is a difficult way, and ye are not acquainted with it; nay ye are blind travellers, ready every moment to fall over ſome precipice. O will ye take a guide? Ye are now ſtanding (as it were) in a place where two ways meet, uncertain which of them to take. Your own wiſdom, which is folly, points out a fair broad way, ſaying, whoſo is ſimple let him turn in hither, Prov. ix. 16. but turn not in thither, for the dead are there, and her gueſts are in the depths of hell, verſ. 18. The Wiſdom of the Father, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, points but to you a narrow way, but it leadeth to life: and he is this day ſaying to you, 'Whoſo is ſimple, let him 'turn in hither,' verſ. 4. Come in then, renounce your own wiſdom, give up yourſelves to him, to be led and guided by him. Hear and your ſouls ſhall live.

Secondly, Sinners, do ye know that ye are guilty, and that ye can have no acceſs to an unatoned God? There was a breach made betwixt God and man by ſin. Juſtice demands a ſacrifice; an atonement muſt be made. The ſinner himſelf is unclean, he cannot be the prieſt, and he is not able to provide a ſacrifice, for the cattle on a thouſand hills are not ſufficient for a burnt offering. Wherefore Jeſus Chriſt became our Prieſt; his human nature was the ſacrifice; his divine nature the altar that ſanctified the gift; the wrath of God was the fire that burned the ſacrifice; the blood was carried in to the moſt holy place, when Chriſt aſcended into heaven, and ſat down at the Fathers right hand, to intercede for ſinners, upon the ground of his ſatisfaction. Now, here is the atonement; and we would have you to fall in with this device of ſalvation by a crucified Chriſt, renouncing your own righteouſneſs, that you may mount to heaven by the ladder of Chriſt's mediation. In the earthly paradiſe God ſet up a ladder by which all mankind might get up to the heavenly paradiſe. It was the covenant of works; a ladder able to bear the weight of all the world at once; but ſo contrived, that if but the leaſt pin in it were looſed, all would break together. All mankind mounted it, even the firſt Adam, and all his children in his loins; but he having looſed one pin thereof, in a moment the ladder broke, and he and all his fell down into a gulf of miſery, and an horrible pit, where they might ſee heaven afar off, but no way to get to it more. This dreadful break rejoiced the devils; it aſtoniſhed the angels; they ſaw that they could not mend it, nor make another, and they were wiſer than to attempt it. The Son of God ſaw there was none amongſt all the creatures to help, and therefore his own arm brought ſalvation. Another ladder is made, Jeſus Chriſt God-man, the Mediator betwixt God and men, the way to the Father, Gen. xxviii. 12. The foot thereof is ſet on the earth, for he is man; the ladder was ſet ſo low as ſinners might reach it; it was ſet very low, even in the lower parts of the earth, (Eph. iv. 9.) the region of death. The top of it reached to heaven, for he is God; the ladder is ſo high, that it can ſet the ſinner up to heaven. It can neither looſe nor break with the utmoſt weight upon it; for it is knit together with the blood of infinite value, ſhed to the utmoſt of what juſtice demanded, Heb. ix. 14. Come, ſinners, lay all your weight on it, and fear not. The firſt ladder could bear nothing but mens perſons; it could not bear one ſinner with a burden of guilt on his back, but it would break under him; but this will bear you, and your burden of guilt too, though it would be heavier than the ſand of the ſea. Ah! there are but few upon this ladder, we would compel you to come on. Have ye a mind to lie ſtill in the gulph? have you taken your laſt ſight of heaven? have ye bid an eternal farewell to glory? or have ye not done it? then why will ye not be compelled to come on? O come before the ladder be drawn up. I know what ye are thinking in effect, ye that will not be compelled to come on; ye are thinking, like a thief and a robber, to climb up ſome other way. I know what ye are doing; ye are doing one of two; ye are either mending the old ladder, and making the beſt ye can of the broken pieces, by your morality and legal walk; or ye are making a new one of your own, a ladder of uncovenanted mercy, truſting to the mercy of God, without uniting with the Mediator. But ſet ye the feet of them as low as ye will, God's juſtice will never ſuffer the tops of them to reach heaven. Lay your weight on them then, if ye will do no otherwiſe; venture your ſouls on them, venture eternity on them, and climb up; but know aſſuredly, though ye ſhould get up ſo high by them, as ye could knock at heaven's door, and ſay, Lord, Lord, open to us, there they ſhall fail you, there they ſhall break, and tumble you down into the loweſt hell, John xiv. 6.

Thirdly, Chriſt has got a kingdom from his Father, Pſal. ii. 6, 7, 8. but he has few real ſubjects. He has ſet up his ſtandard here this day, and we are come to compel you to come in, and ſubmit to him as your Lord and King. Ye are under ſtrange lords, and have long refuſed allegiance to your true Lord. O renounce all your idols now, and give yourſelves away to him, to be from henceforth his only, his wholly, his for ever. Come in now, and kiſs the Son, Pſal. ii. 12. Bow the knee to him; put the crown on his head, Cant. iii. 11. Open the everlaſting doors of your hearts, that the King of glory may come in, Pſal. xxiv. 7. If any poor ſoul be ſaying within itſelf, Alas! the armies of hell within my breaſt are not eaſily diſpoſſeſſed; it is true indeed; but yet I hope you are not ſo cloſely blocked up, but that intelligence may be got betwixt Chriſt and you; ye hear his offer to be your King, will ye give your conſent to it? I will aſk you but two queſtions to clear this matter. (1.) If you can do no more, yet will you give him your good-will of the Kingdom? Are you willing to part with your luſts, though you be not able to put them away? Though you cannot ſhake the yoke of bondage off your own neck, will you give Chriſt your good-will to take it off, and lay his own upon you? As a king he will ſubdue our iniquities, Micah vii. 19. (2.) Can your heart conſent to the abſoluteneſs of his government? He muſt be an abſolute monarch, his will in all things muſt be thy law. And why ſhould he not be ſo? for he can do no wrong, Pſal. xlv. 6, 7. Will you conſent that he model the kingdom in thy heart as he will? Shall he ſet up and caſt down there as he pleaſeth? have you no ſecret reſerves, no luſt that is but a little one, and muſt be ſpared; no prince of the blood of hell, that he muſt deal gently with for your ſake? If it be ſo, Come in, thou bleſſed of the Lord, wherefore ſtandeſt thou without? Thy conſent to him as he offereth himſelf, is thy coming in.

III. Sinners may come in. Know then ye have the Maſter of the houſe his good leave to come in. Were it not ſo, he would not ſend out his ſervants to compel you to come in. Nay, ſirs, he could keep his doors bolted againſt you, if it were not his will ye ſhould come in: and if ye would be ſo bold as to come and knock at the door, or offer violence to it, he could ſpeak a word that would make you fall backward. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt gives fair liberty to all of you, even the worſt of you, to come. Ye that are bearing the devil's mark in your fore-heads; ye openly profane perſons, that ſit as it were in the devil's high-ways: ye that are bearing his mark in your right hand, which ye can hide when ye pleaſe, ye vileſt hypocrites, who are hid about the devil's hedges: ye are all welcome for Chriſt's part, he will not caſt the door on your face. Surely there can be no leſs imported in his charge to compel you to come in. And therefore I would have you ſtep forward. Conſider, (1.) Is it nothing to you that ye have leave to come in? It was not ſo always. If before Chriſt was revealed, the ſinner had offered to have come in, he would have met with the flaming ſword of juſtice, that would have driven him back to his dungeon of miſery and darkneſs. If Chriſt had not been ground betwixt the upper and nether mill ſtones of the Father's wrath, he could not have been bread to ſinners, though they had been hungering after him. (2.) The fallen angels have not leave to come in, and never had ſince they went out, Jude ver. 6. If it were poſſible they could believe in Chriſt, and be content to come in to him, they would get the door caſt in their face; for they never got leave to come in. The door was barred on them, and the bar was never drawn, nor will ever, Heb. ii. 16. And God was no more debtor to us than to them. (3.) Be your caſe what it will, this is ſufficient to determine you to come in. If ye remain without, ye are ruined, and all the doors of hope are cloſed on you, except this, Acts iv. 12. The door is open, ye are not forbidden to come in, ye periſh if ye come not in; could we ſay no more, but it may be ye may get in, this might determine you to give it a fair trial, if ye would but act rationally. Laſtly, This leave to come in will not laſt always with you. 'When once the Maſter of the houſe 'is riſen up, and hath ſhut the door,' there will be no more leave to come in, Luke xiii. 25. They that are in hell this day, cannot get in though they would never ſo gladly; there is no paſſing of the gulph fixed betwixt Chriſt and them, Luke xvi. 26. The firſt Adam cloſed the door upon us, but there was a ſecond Adam to open it; if the ſecond Adam cloſe the door on us, there is not a third to open it, 2 Cor. iv. 3. But if our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt. The apoſtle here has reſpect to what he had ſaid of the vail on Moſes's face, chap. iii. 13. the vail ſpread over the Old Teſtament, ver. 14. but the goſpel removes this vail, ver. 16, 17, 18. But ſays he, if our goſpel alſo be vailed, it is vailed to them that are loſt: there is not another diſpenſation of grace to be expected to take off that vail. It is God's laſt grace to the world, Heb. i. 1, 2. The Lord has been making a feaſt for the world theſe five thouſand years, and now the laſt ſervice is on the table. The laſt ſhip for Immanuel's land is now making ready to ſail; therefore ye muſt put to ſea, now or never, Heb. x. 26, 27.

IV. Sinners are deſired to come in. They not only have leave to come in, but they are deſired by the Maſter of the houſe to come in. Ariſe then, ye worſt of ſinners, the Maſter calleth you. Ye are called, not to a funeral, but a feaſt; not to a priſon, but to the gueſt-chamber, where he may entertain you with all the delicates of heaven. If ye were not deſired, why would he ſend his ſervants to compel you to come in? and will ye refuſe when ye are deſired? Conſider, I pray you, (1.) It ill becomes you, vile worms to ſit his call. I am ſure he might be for ever happy in himſelf, though ye and I both were, where in ſtrict juſtice we ſhould be, in the bottomleſs pit. He needs none of us. What are we that he ſhould be pleaſed to trouble himſelf about us, whether we ſink or ſwim! The angels adore him, his Father honours him, and vile wretches, whom he invites, have the face to refuſe him whom the Father heareth always. (2.) There are many as good as you, whom he never deſired to come in. He does not call you becauſe he has none other to call, who might fill his houſe. He might remove this goſpel from you, and ſend it into the dark places of the earth, and compel the Pagans to come in. Should he do it, it is very likely his offers would be better entertained amongſt them, than amongſt us. Some divide the world into thirty parts, and find that nineteen of theſe are poſſeſſed by Pagans, ſix of them by Jews, Turks, and Saracens, and only five by Chriſtians; and of theſe five parts Chriſtian, many are Antichriſtian, lying yet under the darkneſs of Popery. And has the Lord choſen us out from among ſo many, to give us the invitation to come in, and ſhall we refuſe? Laſtly, How will ye look him in the face when ye appear before his tribunal, if ye will not come in now at his deſire? How will ye look back on rejected love? What will ye do when he comes in wrath to you, that will not come to him now, upon his call?

Object. But ſome will ſay, Is it poſſible that he calls me, even vile and wretched me? Anſw. We have general invitations clogged with no conditions, free offers made to all that will come, Iſ. lv. 1. Rev. xxii. 17. And the Lord expreſsly ſhews, that no vileneſs nor unworthineſs ſhall ſtop any that will come, Iſa. i. 18. Jer. iii. 1. and what would ye have more! We are ſent this day in our Maſter's name, to compel you all to come in, be your caſe what it will. And if that would perſuade you we ſhould come to you, one by one, and tell you, that it is you, and you, and you, that Chriſt calls to come in. But if ye believe our doctrine from the word, concerning the miſery of your natural ſtate, without hearing your name and ſirname in particular, why would ye require more in the doctrine concerning the remedy.

V. Sinners muſt come in. Compel them to come in. Sirs, ye not only may come, but ye muſt come, even the worſt of you. Ye are not only deſired to come in, but ye muſt not abide without. Conſider, Firſt, This is his commandment, that ye believe, 1 John iii. 23. Ye are peremptorily commanded to come in. God is peremptory with you, and ſo muſt we be peremptory with you too. Therefore I tell you, ye muſt come; and I charge you in his name to come in, and not ſit his peremptory command. Lay your hands to your hearts then, and ſee what ye will do; whether ye will ſtill abide without, and obey the devil, and your doubts, fears, and jealouſies of Chriſt, or come in upon God's command. Have ye any regard to the authority of God, have ye any reſpect at all to his command, then give a peremptory anſwer, within your own breaſts, juſt now, whether ye will come in or not. Are ye peremptory, that ye will not come, like thoſe ſullen deſperate ſinners, Jer. ii. 25. No, I have loved ſtrangers, and after them will I go; then what ſhall we ſay or do for you? Lord, compel them to come in. Oh! will ye harden yourſelves againſt the Lord; will ye ſtretch out your hand againſt God, and ſtrengthen yourſelves againſt the Almighty? For Chriſt's ſake, for your ſoul's ſake, recal that word.

Secondly, But if ye dare not be peremptory that ye will not come, then be peremptory ye will come; for your coming is ſo commanded, that it will admit of no excuſe. Thoſe that were firſt bidden to this ſupper, they would not come, but they ſent their excuſes; but were their excuſes ſuſtained? no; God would not take them off their hand, but paſſeth a peremptory ſentence againſt them, verſ. 24. None of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper. We dare admit no excuſes in this matter, bring them from whence you will, whether from the heaven above you, the hell within you, or the world about you; whether from God's greatneſs, your own vileneſs, or world's incumbrances. Whatever your caſe be, ye are commanded of God to come; and his commands are not to be diſputed, but obeyed. Wherefore, if ye will not be peremptory that ye will come, we muſt report to our Lord that ye will not come.

Thirdly, This duty is ſo peremptorily commanded, that ye muſt come, and come preſently; it admits of no delay. 'To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not 'your hearts. Now is the accepted time.' We dare not allow you a day, nay not an hour, to think on it, whether ye will come or not; leſt the next day, or the next hour, ye be caſt into hell, or a hell be caſt into you, for ſitting the offer made to you this moment, which is gone before I can name it. Wherefore delay no longer, but this moment open the everlaſting doors, that the King of glory may come in.

Fourthly, This is the duty God has commanded you; John vi. 29. This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent. Ye can do the Lord no greater pleaſure than to come in. Would ye exalt him this day? then come on his call, Hoſ. xi. 7. would ye put the crown on Chriſt's head? would ye make it a day of the gladneſs of his heart? then come in, Cant. iii. 11. It is a great eaſe for full breaſts to be ſucked: the breaſts of mercy and love are full; come, ſtarving ſinner, do him the pleaſure to ſuck the breaſts of his conſolations. This is the great comprehenſive duty: if ye do not this, ye do nothing. What mean ye to be nibbling at the works of God, neglecting this, which is the work. Ye are keeping your windows cloſed in the day-light, and ſetting up a candle here and there, within your houſe; yet there are terrible dark corners within the houſe ſtill; open your windows, I beſeech you, and let in the ſun (the ſun of righteouſneſs) and that will be inſtead of all, and better than all. Would ye, all at once, be wiſe, righteous and holy? then come in to Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 30. Ye that can do nothing, come to Chriſt, and ſo ye ſhall do all, Philip. iv. 13. Would ye honour God? would ye honour his law? then come to Chriſt. But if ye come not to Chriſt, do what ye will, ye do nothing. Should ye henceforth keep all the ten commands, but neglect this, all you do would get a black note of condemnation from heaven written on it. Remember, I pray you, that "he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father," John v. 23. All your other duties are but cyphers without this; and multiply them as ye will, the ſum in all will be but nought, if this duty do not ſtand upon their head.

Laſtly, It is a duty commanded, with certification of God's eternal diſpleaſure and wrath againſt thoſe that will not come: Mark xvi. 16. He that believeth not, ſhall be damned. Pſal. ii. 12. Kiſs the Son leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way. And therefore I, as an ambaſſador for Chriſt, do in his name, command and charge you, and every one of you, to come in, under the pain of God's diſpleaſure, under the pain of vengeance, even the Mediator's vengeance; certifying that if ye will not come, our Lord Jeſus will come out of heaven againſt you, and ye ſhall be ſlain before him, Luke xix. 27. To be ſlain, and die before Chriſt, who died to ſave ſinners, is a thouſand deaths in one; it is a hell upon a hell. But thoſe that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, even that Lord whoſe goſpel they have not obeyed, 2 Theſſ. i. 8, 9. Ah! would he be pleaſed but to confine his preſence to heaven, and only allow thoſe that now deſpiſe and ſlight him, the favour of being puniſhed from the preſence of the Lord; ah! would he but make their deſtruction come to them at ſome diſtance, would he dart the arrows of his wrath into them from afar; nay, but he will have a throne of juſtice in hell, that they may be puniſhed from the preſence of the Lord, who while in the world fled from him on a throne of grace in the goſpel. O conſider in time what ye do: no fire will burn ſo violently as that which breaks forth from the altar; no flame of wrath will pierce into a damned ſoul, like that which is blown up by the breath of a ſlighted Mediator.

VI. and laſtly, Sinners ſhall come in. Compel them to come in. Leaving ſecret things to the Lord, I muſt tell you, ſinners, Chriſt will not want as many as will fill his houſe. And ſtruggle as long as ye will, in ye ſhall come. His houſe ſhall be filled. The Mediator has bought the furniture of his houſe too dear to want any of it, and to leave ſo much empty room in it. I hope there are ſome here that are the purchaſe of blood, which men and devils will not get kept back from Chriſt. His Father has engaged by covenant, that his houſe ſhall be filled, Pſal. xxii. 30. They ſhall come, See Iſ. liii. 10, 11. Nay, is not Chriſt's hand at the hearts of ſome juſt now? Do not ſome of you find a moving of the iron gate of your hearts, towards an opening of it to Chriſt? Have you not felt ſomething within working to compel you to come in, are not ſome almoſt in already? Thruſt forward; there is no ſafety till ye be not only almoſt, but altogether Chriſtians.

Come in to Chriſt then, ye old people, that are bowing down to meet the grave. Ye have delayed long, delay no more. Though it is very rare, yet it ſometimes falls out, that a man is born when he is old, Joel ii. 28. Come in, ye of middle age. Are ye out of Chriſt in your beſt eſtate; Surely then your beſt ſtate is a bad ſtate, a miſerable ſtate. Ye are buſy providing for your families, but what are ye doing for your ſouls? Ye are laying up for old age, which, it may be, you will never ſee; what are ye laying up for eternity? Come in, ye young people; ye are too old to be out of Chriſt. Do not think religion is only for the hoary head, the wrinkled brows, and hollow eyes; there are more with green heads than with gray hairs in the grave. Therefore come in, and delay not. The older ye grow putting off the work of religion, your hearts will grow the harder to work upon. Come in, ye profane wretches, that are far from righteouſneſs; come, ye hypocritical profeſſors, that are not far from the kingdom of God; come, ye trembling ſouls, that are hard at it, and yet dare not come in. O why will ye not come in? I think it muſt be either becauſe ye will not, or becauſe ye dare not. I fear there are ſome amongſt us that will not come in; they have no mind to quit their luſts, they muſt follow their old courſes, coſt what it will; they ſee no beauty in Chriſt for which he is to be deſired. I ſhall ſay little more to ſuch. If ye be reſolute for ſin, hell, and death, and that no Chriſt, no heaven, no hell, ſhall keep you back from the broad way; who can ſtop you? But be it known unto you, and be it recorded in the black book of your conſciences, which ſhall be opened at the day of judgment, That ſalvation was in your offer this day, that we endeavoured to compel you to come in to Chriſt, but ye would not; and that therefore your blood ſhall be on your own heads.

As to you that dare not come in, why dare ye not after all ye have heard? are ye afraid to come in on Chriſt's call? dare ye not embrace his invitation? dare ye not obey the great command of God?

Object. But my ſins are innumerable, and moſt heinous; can there be any room for me? dare ſuch a vile and unworthy wretch as I come in? Anſw. If your ſins were each of them as big as a mountain, were they as numerous as the ſand of the ſea; yet the blood of Chriſt being the blood of the Son of God, is able to purge them away, 1 John i. 7. Lay over all your guilt and unworthineſs on him who is altogether lovely: ſooner ſhall the rocks ſink under the weight of a bird lighting down upon them, than that blood ſhall fail you. Remember none are compelled to come in, none are called, but the vile and unworthy, Matth. ix. 13. Should your diſeaſe keep you from the phyſician, dare ye not come to the fountain to waſh, becauſe ye are unclean? for whom is the fountain opened, but for unclean ſinners? The goſpel-ſupper, though a coſtly one indeed, was provided for none, but thoſe that were unworthy of a drop of water, and far more, unworthy of Chriſt's blood. Be aſſured, beloved, the queſtion betwixt Chriſt and you is not, Whether or not Chriſt will ſtoop ſo low as to waſh ſuch a foul ſoul in his own blood? that is a queſtion determined already, Iſ. i. 18. Zech. xiii. 1. But the queſtion that remains to be decided, is, Whether or not, after Chriſt has ſtooped ſo low as to be willing to do that, the vile unworthy creature will give him the affront of ſtooping in vain? What ſay ye to that queſtion? Ye have affronted the law of God; will ye affront the Son of God too, refuſing his offer? If vileneſs and unworthineſs could have kept ſinners out from Chriſt, never one of Adam's ſons had come in. Did not Chriſt find all the fair ones that are now in glory, lying in their blood, are there any now walking in white, but thoſe who were waſhed in the blood of the Lamb? Turn over the Bible, look into the hiſtory of ages that are paſt, ſee if ye can find any one that died at his door, who could not be admitted becauſe he was ſo vile, wretched, and unworthy.

Object. But there was never a caſe like mine. Anſw. There have been very bad caſes in Chriſt's hand, which he has cured; and never did the cure of any caſe put in his hand miſgive. What think ye of Mary Magdalen's caſe, out of whom he caſt ſeven devils? Mark xvi. 9. Was not Paul's caſe, who was a blaſphemer and a perſecutor, and yet found mercy, a caſe that may be compared with yours? 1 Tim. i. 13. Sure I am, the workings of ſovereign grace upon him, were deſigned to encourage the worſt of ſinners to come in, ver. 16. Manaſſeh, though he had the benefit of a religious education by his godly father, was an horrid idolater, a conſulter with the devil, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 6. a bloody murderer, 2 Kings xxi. 16.; yet he came in, and was received graciouſly, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 12. 13. And what do ye think of the caſe of Adam, who at once murdered all his children, ruined the ſouls of all mankind, and ſinned againſt greater light than ever ye could do? But let us yield it to you this once, that never one's caſe was like your's; and let us add to it, and never ſhall one be like it hereafter, it is ſo very bad: then I think ye have, as the penitent thief on the croſs had, an occaſion of glorifying our great Redeemer, peculiar to yourſelf, wherein none of the veſſels of glory have ſhared, or ſhall ſhare with you. Come in then, thou whoſe caſe is a marrowleſs caſe, whoſe caſe has no parallel; you have the advantage of an occaſion to honour Chriſt with the cure of a caſe ſo deſperate, that the like of it was never in his hands before. Remember not the former things, neither conſider the things of old, Iſa. xliii. 18.; come in to Chriſt with your new caſe, and behold, (ſays our Lord,) I will do a new thing, ver. 19. His blood has not yet gone ſo far as it can go. Grudge him not a new jewel in his crown of grace, that will ſhine brighter than any yet put into it. Come in, then, and take the place appointed for the chief of ſinners, deepeſt in the debt of free grace, if it be yet empty. I aſſure you, they that have come in already think it is not, but that they themſelves have filled it up. If it be indeed as thou ſayeſt, then they are miſtaken; come you in, and you ſhall get it.

Object. But, alas! I cannot believe, I cannot come in to Chriſt. Anſw. To clear your way in this matter; ſee that ye ſet yourſelves to come in to Chriſt in a promiſe. Chriſt is held forth to ſinners in the promiſes of the goſpel, Iſa. lv. 1. John vi. 37. Rev. iii. 20. and chap. xxii. 17. If ye would come to his ſeat, come to the promiſes; he is in the ſtill ſmall voice; ye will find the babe wrapped up in theſe ſwaddling-clothes. They that overlook the promiſe, and try to believe and come in to Chriſt, go the wrong way to work: that is like a woman's conſenting to marry a man, of whoſe conſent to take her ſhe has no declaration. But the goſpel promiſe is the contract ſent down from heaven, ſigned already with the Bridegroom's hand: do ye take and read it over, ſign it, by your heart's conſenting thereto; and then Chriſt is yours, and ye are his. But cloſe with Chriſt in the promiſe as a free promiſe, as indeed it is, Iſa. lv. 1. Rev. xxii. 17. Many bar the doors of the goſpel-promiſe with bars of their own making, and then they cry out and complain that they cannot enter in by them. O! ſay ſome, if I had ſo much love, repentance, and brokenneſs of heart, then I could believe. But I adviſe you to believe, that ye may get theſe things, Zech. xii. 10. Acts v. 31. Now, though the promiſe be written in the Bible only, it is as ſurely Chriſt's conſent to be yours, as if ye had a voice from heaven for it, yea and more ſurely. But you will ſay, I dare not meddle with the promiſe. Anſw. Then meddle not with Chriſt, but periſh; for there is no meddling with him, but in the goſpel-promiſe. But why is a drowning man ſo fearful, that he dare not catch hold of a cord, even a ſilver cord, thrown in to hale him to land? Nay, beloved, be not ſo fooliſh; though the promiſe be, in your eyes, like Moſes's rod, turned into a ſerpent; yet take it by the tail, and it will become a rod in your hand, Hoſ. xi. 10. The children ſhall tremble from the weſt; as the Iſraelites trembled after Saul, that is, followed him trembling, 1 Sam. xiii. 7. So then Chriſt's bride may ſign the contract with a trembling hand, love her Lord with a trembling heart, and follow him with trembling legs. And O that all of you would ſay, though it were with a trembling voice, Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God. If ſo, ye would not be in vain compelled to come in.

CHRIST the SAVIOUR of the World.

A

SERMON preached immediately before the Celebration of the Lord's Supper, at Ettrick, June 7. 1724.

1 JOHN iv. 14.

And we have ſeen, and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world.

JOHN, the beloved diſciple, in his epiſtles, is ſtill breathing love; love is the ſtring he delights peculiarly to harp upon: ſo he is either magnifying God's love to us, or preſſing our love to God and one another. And his darling ſubject, love, is no narrow one, but moſt comprehenſive; it comprehends both the goſpel and the law, both faith and works. The love of God to man, is the great doctrine of the goſpel, the object of faith; and love to God and to one another, is the great doctrine of the law of the ten commandments, and the object of holy practice. And there is a near relation between the two; God's love is the fountain, our love the ſtream; the former the original holy fire, the latter the flame kindled by it. Accordingly, in the text, there is a diſplay of the love of God, for moving us to love one another; the which diſplay of divine love is the ſubſtance of the goſpel.

Here then we have the goſpel, which all the apoſtles were in one voice to preach unto the world; We have ſeen, and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. And therein we may conſider,

1. The goſpel or glad tidings itſelf, viz. That the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Here is glad news to the world, Chriſt's miſſion. The promiſe of this miſſion was made to fallen Adam in paradiſe; believers under the Old Teſtament lived and died in the faith of it. But the apoſtles teſtified it as a thing performed; the Father ſent, or hath ſent the Son. The party ſent, is the Son of God, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; no other was fit for this miſſion. The party ſending, from whom he had his commiſſion, was the Father, the firſt perſon of the glorious Trinity. None of a lower dignity could ſend one of his dignity. The character in which he was ſent, is, the Son Saviour of the world. So the words are without any ſupplement; of which there is no need here. So Chriſt is ſaid to have come a teacher from God, John iii. 2. i. e. in the character of a divine teacher. As one is ſent ambaſſador to ſuch a court, that is, conſtituted by his prince ambaſſador to that court, and accordingly ſent away in that character; ſo Chriſt was conſtituted, nominated, and appointed by his Father Saviour of the world, and ſo ſent away into the world in that character. The world is the world of mankind indefinitely, ruined by Adam's ſin, John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. Therein God's love toward man appeared, Tit. iii. 4.

2. The certainty of this goſpel or glad tidings. All the apoſtles witneſſed with one mouth this great truth; and they witneſſed the ſame as eye-witneſſes, having ſeen the Saviour, and converſed with him, and read his commiſſion for that effect, and beheld Heaven's ſeal again and again ſet to it, in his miracles. And this matter of their witneſſing from their eye-ſight, was ſo much ſtood upon, that the apoſtle Paul, who was not called to be an apoſtle till after Chriſt's aſcenſion, was allowed firſt to ſee with his eyes, before he ſhould bear witneſs, Acts xxvi. 16.——I have appeared unto thee for this purpoſe, to make thee a miniſter and a witneſs both of thoſe things which thou haſt ſeen, and of thoſe things in the which I will appear unto thee.

DOCT. It is the great truth and teſtimony of the goſpel, that the Father has ſent his Son Jeſus Chriſt in the character of Saviour of the world.

In proſecuting of this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Take notice of ſome things imported in this teſtimony.

II. Open this character, Saviour of the world, in which Chriſt was ſent.

III. Apply.

I. I ſhall take notice of ſome things imported in this teſtimony.

1. The world needed a Saviour; otherwiſe one had not been provided for them by him who does nothing in vain. It was a ſick world, caſt into a deſperate illneſs by eating of the forbidden fruit; and needed a phyſician to cure the diſtemper, Matth. ix. 12. 'Jeſus 'ſaid unto them, they that be whole need not a phyſi-'cian; but they that are ſick.' It was a curſed world, ſtaked down under wrath by the ſentence of the broken law; and needed a Saviour to remove the curſe, and bring in the bleſſing, Acts iii. 26. 'God having raiſed 'up his Son Jeſus, ſent him to bleſs you,' &c. It was a loſt world, loſt to God, loſt to themſelves, loſt to all good, loſt and periſhing under the wrath of God; and it needed one to ſeek and ſave them, Luke xix. 10. 'For the Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave that 'which was loſt.'

2. None of inferior dignity to the Son of God could be the Saviour of the world. No man nor angel was able to ſuſtain the character of Saviour of the world: the work which lay to that office, was above the reach of the whole creation, Rev. v. 3. 'And no man in hea-'ven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able 'to open the book, neither to look thereon.' Here was a trial of the divine love to man; his caſe was hopeleſs and helpleſs from all the creatures: and it iſſued in that, 'God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten 'Son,' John iii. 16.

3. Chriſt was ſent Saviour of the world from heaven's proper motion. The plot to ſave man, was concerted entirely without him. The world did not meet and ſend one to the court of heaven, with a petition for a Saviour, that a Saviour was granted to their earneſt intreaties and ſupplications; but the Father, of preventing free love, ſent his Son Saviour of the world. The world's need ſpoke loud, but they themſelves were quite ſilent; and yet their needs ſpoke no louder than thoſe of the fallen angels: and ſovereign free grace heard the voice of man's need, while it ſtopt its ears to the voice of the fallen angels, Tit. iii. 4. 'But the kindneſs and 'love of God our Saviour toward man appeared.'

4. Chriſt is fully furniſhed for the ſaving of a loſt world. His being ſent in that character, ſpeaks his ability to anſwer it, Heb. vii. 25. 'Wherefore he is able 'alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God 'by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion 'for them.' There is no caſe to be found in the world but what there is a remedy to be found in Chriſt for. Whoſoever in the world ſhall die, they ſhall not die becauſe there was no help for their caſe in the Saviour, but becauſe they did not employ him, or put their caſe in his hand. The Saviour of the world, is certainly able to ſave the world; ſince he was ſent of God in that character.

5. laſtly, The ſalvation of loſt ſinners of the world of mankind, is very acceptable to the God and Father of our Lord Jeſus, as well as to himſelf, otherwiſe he had not ſent his Son Saviour of the world, 1 Tim. ii. 3, 4. 'For this is good and acceptable in the ſight of God 'our Saviour; who will have all men to be ſaved.' Hence it is called the pleaſure of the Lord, Iſ. liii. 10. ——The pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. So he is ſaid to make the marriage for his Son, and to ſend forth to bid to that marriage, Matth. xxii. Whence it is evident, that there is no impediment to the ſalvation of ſinners by Jeſus Chriſt, on Heaven's part; it is pleaſing to the Father, to his Son, and to his Spirit.

II. I ſhall open this character, Saviour of the world, in which Chriſt was ſent: and for that end inquire into two things. 1. In what ſenſe Chriſt is Saviour of the world. 2. What is the buſineſs committed to him as ſuch.

Firſt, In what ſenſe Chriſt is Saviour of the world. A Saviour is a name of honour, and a name of buſineſs. It is an honourable thing to ſave and help the miſerable; to be deſtined, appointed, and called to that employment; but the honourable poſt has buſineſs annexed to it; it will not do without activity, which ſucceſs is expected to attend, as in the caſe of a teacher, phyſician, and the like. Now one may be a ſaviour, even as a teacher or phyſician of a ſociety, two ways. (1.) In reſpect of office, as being called to and inveſted with the office of ſaving, teaching, or curing of that ſociety. And thus one is ſaviour, teacher, or phyſician of that ſociety, before ever he ſave, teach, or cure any of them. In this reſpect one may be called an official ſaviour, teacher or phyſician. (2.) In reſpect of the event and ſucceſs, as actually and eventually ſaving, teaching, and healing. As the former ariſeth from an appointment put upon ſuch a one; this ariſeth from the work he manageth in virtue of that appointment. In this reſpect one may be called an actual and eventual Saviour. Thus it is ſaid, Neh. ix. 27.——And, according to thy manifold mercies, thou gaveſt them ſaviours, who ſaved them out of the hands of their enemies. This premiſed we ſay,

1. Our Lord Jeſus is the actual and eventual Saviour of the elect only, in whoſe room and ſtead only he died upon the croſs, according to the eternal compact paſſed between him and the Father, in the covenant of grace, otherwiſe called the covenant of redemption; for theſe are not two, but one and the ſame covenant. Thus the apoſtle calls him the Saviour of the body, Eph. v. 23.

that is, of the elect, who make up the body, whereof he was appointed the head from eternity, and in whoſe name he contracted with the Father in the eternal covenant. And he is their Saviour eventually, as actually ſaving them, Matth. i. 21. ‘ And ſhe ſhall bring forth a ‘ ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus; for he ſhall ‘ ſave his people from their ſins.’ None but theſe will ever truly employ him as a Saviour, or put their caſe in his hand; and there are none of them, but will certainly employ him ſooner or latter, Acts xiii. 48.—‘ As ‘ many as were ordained to eternal life, believed.’ John vi. 37. ‘ All that the Father giveth me, ſhall come to ‘ me; and him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe ‘ caſt out.’

2. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the official Saviour, not of the elect only, but of the world of mankind indefinitely; ſo our text calls him Saviour of the world. Agreeable to which, God in Chriſt is called the Saviour of all men, but with a ſpeciality, the Saviour of them that believe, 1 Tim. iv. 10. The matter lies here: Likeas a prince, out of regard to his ſubjects welfare, gives a commiſſion to a qualified perſon to be phyſician to ſuch a ſociety, a regiment, or the like; and the prince's commiſſion conſtitutes him phyſician of that ſociety; ſo that though many of them ſhould never employ him, but call other phyſicians, yet ſtill there is a relation betwixt him and them; he is their phyſician by office; any of them all may come to him if they will, and be healed: So God looking on the ruined world of mankind, has conſtituted and appointed Jeſus Chriſt his Son Saviour of the world: he has heaven's patent for this office; and whereſoever the goſpel comes, this his patent is intimated. Hereby a relation is conſtituted betwixt him and the world of mankind; he is their Saviour, and they the objects of his adminiſtration: ſo that any of them all may come to him, without money or price, and be ſaved by him as their own Saviour appointed them by the Father.

That Chriſt is thus the Saviour of the world appears, if ye conſider, 1ſt, Scripture-teſtimony, which is plain. Our text expreſsly calls him ſo: and ſo do the believing Samaritans profeſs their faith in him, John iv. 42.——We have heard him ourſelves, and know that this is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world. You have the appointment of Heaven very plain thereanent, John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life; even as the brazen ſerpent lifted up on the pole in the wilderneſs, was the ordinance of God for healing to the ſtung perſons of the whole camp of Iſrael. Hence Chriſt's ſalvation is called the common ſalvation, Jude ver. 3.; a ſalvation which any of mankind-ſinners may lay hold on. So the Saviour's birth is ſaid to be glad tidings for all people, Luke ii. 10, 11.; which it could not have been, if he had not been a Saviour for all people. Wherefore he himſelf teſtifies, that he came to ſave the world, John iii. 17. God ſent not his Son into the world, to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be ſaved, chap. xii. 47. I came not to judge the world, but to ſave the world. This was his office; to ſave ſinners indefinitely; not this or that ſort of ſinners, but ſinners of mankind indefinitely, without exception, 1 Tim. i. 15. This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into the world to ſave ſinners: the loſt, Luke xix. 10. ‘ The Son of man is come to ſeek and to ſave ‘ that which was loſt; 2 Cor. v. 12. God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their treſpaſſes unto them. To the ſame purpoſe he declares himſelf the light of the world, namely, by office, John viii. 12. that whoſoever will employ him may have the light of life.

2*dly*, If it were not ſo, he could not warrantably be offered with his ſalvation to the world indefinitely, but to the elect only; more than he can be offered lawfully to fallen angels, who are not within his commiſſion as a Saviour. For the miniſterial offer can never lawfully carry the matter beyond the bounds of Chriſt's commiſſion from his Father. But Chriſt and his ſalvation may be warrantably offered to the whole world of mankind ſinners, with aſſurance that whoever of them will employ him to ſave them, he ſhall be ſaved: Mark xvi. 15, 16. Go ye into all the world, and preach the goſpel to every creature. He that believeth ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not ſhall be damned. Moreover, if it were not ſo, the unbelief of hearers of the goſpel, not elected, their not coming to Chriſt for ſalvation, could not be their ſin; for it can never be one's ſin not to do a thing he has no warrant for; not to employ one to ſave him, whom God never appointed to be his Saviour. So it is not the ſin of fallen angels, that they believe not in Chriſt for ſalvation, becauſe they are not within the Saviour's commiſſion, nor of thoſe who heard of Chriſt; becauſe his commiſſion was never intimated to them. But not believing in Chriſt the Saviour, is the ſin that ruins the hearers of the goſpel who do at all periſh, John iii. 19. And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil. Finally, if it were not ſo, the elect themſelves could never believe in Chriſt, till in the firſt place their election were revealed to them; which is contrary to the ſtated method of grace; for they can never believe on Chriſt for their ſalvation, till they ſee him to be a Saviour for them.

There are two things further to be remarked on this head.

1. The ground on which Chriſt might be conſtituted Saviour of the world by office. And that was the ſufficiency of the merit of his death and ſufferings: for though Chriſt died only in the room and ſtead of his elect, on the croſs ſuſtaining their perſons only, according to that, John x. 15. I lay down my life for the ſheep; yet the price paid for them, being of infinite worth, was ſufficient in itſelf to ſave the whole world. The bread provided for them, viz. a crucified Chriſt, was ſufficient to give life to and feed, not them only, but the whole world of mankind: and therefore he might be appointed Saviour of the world, John vi. 33. 51. The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. I am the living bread, which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he ſhall live for ever: and the bread that I will give, is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

2. The reaſon why he actually was conſtituted Saviour of the world. Among ſeveral reaſons that might be given for this, I ſhall only obſerve here this one, namely, That it was put upon him as a piece of honour, the reward of his great ſervice, in laying down his life for and inſtead of thoſe who were the objects of his Father's electing love, Iſ. xlix. 6. 8. And he ſaid, It is a light thing that thou ſhouldſt be my ſervant, to raiſe up the tribes of Jacob, and to reſtore the preſerved of Iſrael: I will alſo give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayſt be my ſalvation to the end of the earth. Thus ſaith the Lord, in an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of ſalvation have I helped thee: and I will preſerve thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people. The Father for that cauſe inveſted him with all power in heaven and earth, Matth. xxviii. 18. John v. 21, 22. As the Father raiſeth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even ſo the Son quickeneth whom he will. For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. And it was a reward ſuitable to his work.

Secondly, What is the buſineſs committed to him as Saviour of the world. Not to deſcend into particulars here, we may take it up in theſe two.

1. It is to ſave ſinners from their ſin, Matth. i. 21. ‘ Thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his ‘ people from their ſins.’ Satan ruined the world by bringing ſin upon them: thereby they were bound by the cords of guilt, the image of God in them was defaced, they were polluted and made loathſome, and ſhut up in the hands of a ſtrange lord. God has appointed Chriſt Saviour of the world, that the ſinners may come to him, and be delivered from their ſins. 1 John iii. 8. He that committeth ſin, is of the devil; for the devil ſinneth from the beginning. For this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might deſtroy the works of the devil. It was an inveterate diſeaſe, the cure of which was quite beyond the reach of any mere creature, as far as the raiſing of the dead is; ſo he was was appointed Saviour in the caſe, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. 'I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one choſen out of the people.'

2. It is to ſave ſinners from miſery, to free them from deſtruction, Hoſ. xiii. 9. 'O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but in me is thine help.' They are by ſin made objects of wrath, laid under the curſe of the broken law, liable to revenging wrath for time and for eternity; he is appointed to ſave them from all this, upon their coming to him, and employing him for that purpoſe, Iſ. xxxii. 2. And a man ſhall be as an hiding-place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land. Sin let in a deluge of miſeries on the world, which flow about the ſinner continually in greater or leſſer meaſure: he is a Saviour to dry it up to them, 1 Cor. i. 30. 'But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption.'

USE I. Of Information.

1. Behold here, and believe the great love of God to a loſt world, in providing a Saviour, and ſuch a Saviour, for them, even his own Son. The ſcripture ſpeaks of this in a very high ſtrain, John iii. 16. God ſo 'loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son,' &c. There was a man-love in God, Tit. iii. 4. But the kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared, a love of the kind, mankind. It has appeared in two eminent inſtances. 1. In ſecuring, by an irreverſible decree, the ſalvation of ſome of them. 2. In providing a Saviour for the whole of the kind, conſtituting his own Son Saviour to the loſt family of Adam indefinitely. Believe it with application to yourſelves. If upon this a ſecret murmur begins to go through your heart, But it was not for me; cruſh it in the bud, for it is a bud of hell. If you are not one of the devil-kind, but of ſinful mankind, it was for you. The Father gave Chriſt a Saviour for you, that if you would believe on him, you ſhould not periſh: he ſent his Son from heaven with full inſtructions and ample powers to ſave you, if you will believe. And is not this love? Believe it, and it will be the way to let you in to a ſight of more love.

2. Behold here a broad and firm foundation of faith for all and every one of you; that you may come to Chriſt, whatever your caſe is, and claim his righteouſneſs and his whole ſalvation for yourſelves; that you may betake yourſelves to him as the refuge appointed for you by the Father, from ſin and wrath, with as much freedom as a ſtung Iſraelite might have looked to the brazen ſerpent; that you may wholly truſt on him, that he will ſave you from ſin and wrath. For he was ſent of the Father Saviour of the world; and if by the Father's appointment he is Saviour of the world, he is by office your Saviour, and my Saviour, ſince we are members of that world of mankind: ſo that we may by faith claim his ſaving us from ſin and wrath: as a ſcholar bred in a place, may claim teaching of him who is appointed maſter of a free ſchool in that place; as thoſe of a congregation may claim preaching of their miniſter; and as the wounded in battle may claim healing of their own phyſician, who has a commiſſion to be phyſician to their regiment. For we teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son Saviour of the world.

3. Sinners living in their ſins, pining away, and about to periſh eternally in them, are without excuſe. For we teſtify, that the Father has ſent the Son Saviour of the world: John xv. 22. If I had not come, and ſpoken unto them, they had not had ſin: but now they have no cloke for their ſin. Sinners are deſtroyed with their living and raging luſts, they are run down with them as with running ſores, their ſouls are bleeding to death with them as with mortal wounds: in this caſe they hold on over the belly of their convictions; and they ſay, they cannot help it. One cannot help his ſwearing; another, his ſenſuality; another, his pride, paſſion, covetouſneſs, groſs ignorance, his old corrupt unrenewed heart. But the truth is, ye will not have it helped, John v. 40. Ye will not come to me that ye might have life. If ye cannot help it, ye have a Saviour can help it, if ye would employ him. Know it of a truth, if any of you ſhall periſh, and if ye go on in your ſins ye ſhall periſh, ye ſhall not periſh for want of a ſaviour. At the tribunal of God, the devils may ſay, We could not be ſaved from our ſins; for there was no Saviour appointed for us: the Pagans may ſay, We could not be ſaved; for though we were within the compaſs of the ſaviour's commiſſion, yet we never heard of it, it was never intimated to us. But what will ye get to ſay, for that ye are not ſaved from your ſins; when your ſaviour ſhall ſit judge upon you, and condemn you to ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire, for that you would have none of him, nor his ſalvation; ye would not be ſaved from your ſins, would not put your caſe in his hand; though he had his Father's commiſſion to be ſaviour of the world, and your ſaviour, and it was read to you, ye would not receive him as your ſaviour, but would rather die in your ſins than employ him?

4. Believers themſelves may be aſhamed and confounded, for that iniquity prevails ſo againſt them. Alas! it is a ſad ſign the Saviour is little employed among us. Little living by faith, makes little holineſs of life. O look to that ſin that ſo eaſily beſets you, that has ſo often wrecked your ſoul's caſe; believe you have a Saviour for it, and employ him.

USE II. For Trial.

Try whether the ſaviour of the world by office, is your actual ſaviour; whether or no he has ſaved you. Think not that Chriſt puts off his ſaving of ſinners till they come to heaven; true they are not completely ſaved till they be there; but if your ſalvation by Chriſt is not begun here you ſhall never get it there: Tit. iii. 5, 6, 7. Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy, he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt; which he ſhed on us abundantly, through Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour: that being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. And ye have no right before the Lord to his table, if he has not been a ſaviour to you actually and eventually, in having ſaved you from ſin and wrath initially, though not completely; for if it is not ſo, it is an evidence you have not received him as your ſaviour; for no ſooner is he employed by a ſinner, but he begins to ſave that ſinner.

Mark 1. If Chriſt is really begun to ſave you, ye will have the ſaved man's thoughts of ſin, and of the wrath of God. If a drowning man were pulled alive out of a water, or a filthy ſtinking puddle; and ſtanding at the ſide of it, looking to it after that gliff, what would be his thoughts of that water, that puddle, where he was over head and ears, and almoſt gone? Such will be your thoughts of ſin, and of the wrath of God. Ye will have awful and reverend thoughts of the wrath of God above all awful things: Heb. xii. 28, 29. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace whereby we may ſerve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. For our God is a conſuming fire. Matth. x. 28. Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul: but rather fear him which is able to deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell. Of all terrors it will be to you the moſt terrible. Thoſe in the ſtate of wrath, they are either ſo as they have loſt their ſenſes in it; they know not where they are, they are dreaming of ſome pleaſing place; and ſo they go on peacefully in their ſins, undiſturbed with thoughts of wrath: or elſe they have ſome terrible apprehenſions of it; but there is ſomething more terrible; and therefore they will rather ſin than ſuffer the hardſhips attending duty, yea attending mortification; or elſe their heart is fire-hot with the terror of the wrath of the Son of God, and in the mean time at leaſt key-cold of love and child like-affection to the God whoſe wrath it is. But the ſaved ſoul looks on it as of all things the moſt awful, but in the mean time with a child-like reverence of and affection to that God whoſe wrath it is.

Mark 2. Ye will have a tranſcendent eſteem of and love to your Saviour, 1 Pet. ii. 7. Unto you which believe he is precious. His conſcience-purifying blood, his ſoul-ſanctifying Spirit, will be more valuable to you than a thouſand worlds. Ye will deſire them above all things, pant and long after them, and ay more and more of them; and in compariſon of them, all the world will be but trifles in your eyes, which ye would be content to part with to gain them: Matth. xiii. 46. 'The merchant-man when he had found one pearl of great price, 'he went and ſold all that he had, and bought it.' Luke xiv. 26. 'If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple. Phil. iii. 8, 9. Yea doubtleſs, 'and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of 'the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord; for whom I 'have ſuffered the loſs of all things, and do count them 'but dung that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, 'not having mine own righteouſneſs, which is of the 'law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the 'righteouſneſs which is of God by faith.'

Mark 3. laſtly, Ye will be groaning under the remains of the diſeaſe of ſin ye are ſaved from; your conſcience will witneſs ye would fain be wholly rid of it, Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who 'ſhall deliver me from the body of this death!' Your ſouls will be longing for the complete ſalvation; that the enemies you ſee to day, ye may ſee no more for ever; that ye may get a complete victory over all your corruption: Rom. viii. 23. 'We ourſelves grone within ourſelves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body.

USE laſt.

Receive the Lord Jeſus, then, O ſinners, in that character wherein his Father ſent him, as the Saviour of the world, and your Saviour. Ye are loſt in your ſins, and loſt under the wrath of God, and the curſe of the law; come to him for his whole ſalvation. Employ him, put your caſe in his hand, as your Saviour by the Father's appointment; and ſlight him no more.

Motive 1. Conſider you need a Saviour. Your diſeaſe of ſin will ruin you, if ye be not ſaved from it. The guilt of it will ſtake you down under wrath, and the wrath of God will ſink you into hell. And while ſin keeps its dominion over you, be ſure the guilt is not removed: Matth. ix. 12. They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. Gen. ii. 17. But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou ſhalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eateſt thereof, thou ſhalt ſurely die.

Mot. 2. There is no Saviour beſides Chriſt, Acts iv. 12. Neither is there ſalvation in any other: For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved. All others are phyſicians of no value. All your own endeavours will not ſave you, nor any thing any creature can do for you.

Mot. 3. He is able to ſave you, Heb. vii. 25. 'He 'is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto 'God by him.' Whatever be your caſe, there is infinite merit in his blood to take away the deepeſt guilt, 1 John i. 7. 'The blood of Jeſus Chriſt his Son cleanſeth 'us from all ſin.' There is an infinite efficacy in his Spirit to ſanctify the moſt unholy, 1 Cor. vi. 11. 'And 'ſuch were ſome of you; but ye are waſhed, but ye are 'ſanctified, but ye are juſtified in the name of the Lord 'Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God.' If ye doubt it, ye diſhonour Chriſt, and his Father who ſent him, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. 'Then thou ſpakeſt in viſion to thy holy 'One, and ſaidſt, I have laid help upon one that is 'mighty; I have exalted one choſen out of the people.'

Mot. 4. He is willing to ſave you, Rev. xxii. 17. 'And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let 'him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, come: And whoſoever will, let him take the 'water of life freely.' The only thing wanting is your willingneſs to be ſaved, Jer. xiii. 27.——'Wo unto thee, 'O Jeruſalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when ſhall 'it once be?' There is no fear of being rejected if ye come, John vi. 37.——'Him that cometh to me, I will 'in no wiſe caſt out.' He has taken on him the office of Saviour of the world, and he cannot refuſe the buſineſs of it.

Mot. 5. laſtly, Ye muſt either receive him as your Saviour from ſin and wrath, according to his commiſſion from heaven; or ye will be, and be held refuſers of him for your Saviour, after his father has nominated and commiſſionated him for that effect. Conſider how ye will anſwer that before the judgment-ſeat.

Queſt. How ſhall I receive him, and employ him?

Anſw. By faith, by believing on him. Being convinced of your ſin and curſed ſtate, and deſiring to be ſaved from both, believe Chriſt is your Saviour by his Father's appointment; and ſo wholly truſt on him as a crucified Saviour, for his whole ſalvation, on the ground of God's faithfulneſs in his word.

The Neceſſity of SELF-DENIAL.

A SERMON preached on a Sacramental Occaſion, at Galaſhiels.

LUKE ix. 23.

And he ſaid to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me.

THey that are raſh and indeliberate in their ſetting away after Chriſt among his followers, will readily be found to break away from him again, and deſert him, ere they come to the end of the courſe. Therefore our Lord Jeſus fairly intimates here, how he is to be followed of all that would come to the end of the courſe with him; that men may count the coſt ere they begin to build; and lay their account with what they are to expect in his company, in the way to the kingdom. And in the words there is,

1. The caſe which this intimation refers to, If any man will come after me. It is not the caſe of coming to Chriſt, as if none might come to him, or believe on him, till once they have denied themſelves, and taken up their croſs daily: for as none can come after Chriſt in the ſenſe of the text, till once they have come to him: ſo none ſhall ever be able to reach theſe things, till once they have believed on him. But it is the caſe of coming after Chriſt; which is more than following him: and conſiſts of two parts, (1.) Following him in the way to the kingdom, upon which one is ſet by believing. This part of it our Lord points at, Luke xiv. 26. 'If any man come to me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple;' as it is plainly imported in the expreſſion. (2.) Coming in at his back into the kingdom; as the term to which Chriſt with his followers was moving; where he being ſet down, they alſo come in after him, and in his right. And this part of it is expreſſed, verſ. 24. 'For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: but whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, the ſame ſhall ſave it.'

2. What is neceſſary to that caſe, to one's following Chriſt in the way to, and coming in at his back, into the kingdom of heaven. Two things are neceſſary thereto. (1.) Self denial: Let him deny himſelf, otherwiſe he will not follow me in the way to the kingdom; for I deny myſelf, Rom. xv. 3. 'For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf; but as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me.' John v. 30. 'I can of mine own ſelf do nothing.——I ſeek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath ſent me.' The original word is very forcible, Let him deny away himſelf, like thoſe that deſert a party, to have no more to do with them, and content that all the world know it. They muſt deny themſelves as the Jews denied Chriſt, Acts iii. 14. But ye denied the holy One, and the juſt, and deſired a murderer to be granted unto you. And how that was, ye ſee John xix. 15. 'But they [the Jews] cried out, Away with him, away with him, crucify him.——We have no king but Cæſar.' Away with ſelf, crucify it; we have no king but Chriſt. They muſt deny themſelves, as they muſt deny ungodlineſs, Tit. ii. 12. denying its cravings, ſtarving it, till it dwindle away into nothing. (2.) Taking up the croſs daily, and following him with it on our back, Let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily; otherwiſe he will not come in at my back to the crown; for ſo I go to it with the croſs on my back, and that daily. The croſs is any trouble or adverſity which the Lord lays upon his followers.

Now, theſe things are neceſſary in this caſe, abſolutely neceſſary; otherwiſe we do not follow Chriſt in the way to the kingdom, but ſelf in the way to deſtruction: and ſo we cannot come in at his back to the kingdom, and there is no other way to get into it. They are univerſally neceſſary: If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf and take up his croſs daily, and follow me. Be who they will, never ſo delicate, dainty; they muſt lay their fair necks under this yoke, or periſh.

3. The parties to whom this intimation is made: He ſaid to them all. Peter gave the occaſion for this, by his raſhneſs in adviſing or wiſhing Chriſt might ſpare himſelf as to the croſs; for which he got a particular rebuke. But Mark tells us, that thereupon he called together the people, and his diſciples alſo, chap. viii. 34. And here he ſaid to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me. The matter nearly concerned them all, as well as Peter, the intimation was made to all accordingly.

DOCT. Whoſoever will follow Chriſt in the way to the crown, and come in at his back to the kingdom of heaven, muſt of neceſſity deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow Chriſt with it on his back.

Three things fall here to be conſidered. I. One's coming after Chriſt, which is the caſe put; II. One's denying himſelf; and, III. One's taking up his croſs and following Chriſt; which are the two things neceſſary in that caſe.

I. Firſt, We are to conſider the coming after Chriſt, which is the thing ſome do aim at, and all ſhould. For clearing of that, conſider,

1. Chriſt in the world was in the way to his kingdom, the kingdom of heaven. Luke xix. 12. A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himſelf a kingdom. As he was God every where preſent, he was there even while on earth, John iii. 13.——the Son of man which is in heaven, but, as he was man, he was but in his way to it. That was the joy ſet before him, which he had in view all along while he travelled through our wilderneſs-world.

2. Accordingly he was in the world, not as a native thereof, but as a ſtranger travelling through it, with his face always away-ward from it, home to his father's houſe. Therefore, though he was ſometime courted to ſet up for himſelf in it, he would not hearken to the ſolicitations to ſtay, and take his kingdom there. The Jews would have forced their kingdom on him, John vi. 15. but he fled from it, departing into a mountain, where he was nearer heaven, out of the din of the world. Satan offered him all the kingdoms of the world, Matth. iv. 8, 9. but he rejected his propoſal with indignation.

3. Our Lord Jeſus made his way to his kingdom through many bitter ſtorms blowing on his face in the world, and is now entered into it: Heb. xii. 2.——who, for the joy that was ſet before him, endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God. His life here was a life of ſorrows; but now he has reached the fulneſs of joy. Death wrought on him all along to the grave; now it has no more dominion over him.

4. There is no coming into that kingdom, for a ſinner, but at his back, in fellowſhip with him: John xiv. 6. 'I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me.' If we pretend to come into it otherwiſe, juſtice will caſt the door on our face, and tumble us down into the pit. He is the Captain of our ſalvation, that is on the head of the whole company of the ſaved: he is the door of the ſheep, and there is no entering but through him. So, If any man will come after me, is in effect, If any man will enter into the kingdom of heaven.

5. laſtly, There is no coming in at his back into the kingdom, without following him in the way: Pſal. cxxv. v. As for ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity. John xv. 6. If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and caſt them into the fire, and they are burned. He is the author, as well as the finiſher of our faith; and chief guide in the way, as well as the giver of the prize at the end of the race. Certainly the merit of Chriſt is effectual on none unto ſalvation, but thoſe whom it conforms to his example. If we have any ſaving part in his death, we will be conformed to him in his life. Wherefore, ſince Chriſt went to his kingdom, denying himſelf, and taking up his croſs, we muſt lay our account to go and do likewiſe, if we mind to be there.

II. Secondly, Let us then conſider briefly, one's denying himſelf to come after Chriſt. And,

1. It implies two things. It implies,

1ſt, That Chriſt and ſelf are contraries, leading contrary ways: If any man come after me, let him deny himſelf. Self is Chriſt's great rival in the world; and no man can ſerve the two maſters: he muſt either deny himſelf, and go after Chriſt; or he will deny Chriſt, and go after ſelf. There is no compromiſing the matter betwixt the two: for Chriſt is the leader of God's upſetting; ſelf of the devil's, when man fell off from God. Hence it implies,

2dly, That the ſelf to be denied, is our corrupt ſelf, the old man, the unrenewed part; for that only is contrary to Chriſt. And indeed it is not poſſible there can be any true ſelf denial but in ſound believers, regenerate perſons; in whom there is a renewed part, which is that which denies, and an unrenewed, which is that which is denied.

2. Wherein it conſiſts. It conſiſts in a holy refuſal to pleaſe ourſelves, that we may pleaſe God in Chriſt: for it is a denying of ourſelves in competition: and God is the competitor, whom the ſelf-denying Chriſtian prefers to himſelf, after Chriſt's example, Rom. xv. 3. For even Chriſt pleaſed not himſelf, &c. And it is God in Chriſt for whom a ſinner denies himſelf, as ſaith the text: for an abſolute God out of Chriſt being a conſuming fire, with which we can have no comfortable communion, the ſight of him frights away the ſinner, and cauſeth ſelf gather together all its ſtrength in its own defence againſt him; whereas the view of God in Chriſt, draws the ſinner to lie down at his feet and hope. Hence, in ſelf-denial there is,

1ſt, Faith and hope, as the neceſſary ſprings thereof: Phil. i. 29. For unto you it is given in the behalf of Chriſt,——to believe on him. Rom. xii. 12. Rejoicing in hope. Cut off theſe, and you cut off ſelf-denial; for the heart of man will never quit hugging of one's dear ſelf, till it get a God to reſt in; nor let go its grips of what it has, till it have hope of better.

2dly, A practical ſetting up of God as our chief end; and a bringing down ourſelves to lie at his feet: Pſal. lxxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon the earth that I deſire beſides thee. This is true converſion, whereby a man is brought back to his primitive ſituation, out of which he was turned by ſin, ſetting ſelf on the throne as his chief end, and laying the honour of God at its feet. The which unnatural ſituation all natural men are in; their whole life being one uninterrupted courſe of practical blaſphemy, making themſelves the chief end, and God the means.

3dly, An unlimited reſignation of ourſelves unto God in Chriſt: 2 Cor. viii. 5.——firſt gave their own ſelves to the Lord. Faith taking hold of God as our God, according to the meaſure of faith, the whole man is ſwallowed up in him; God is all, and we become nothing in our own eyes: the whole ſoul, the whole man, the whole lot, is reſigned to him.

4thly, A refuſing to pleaſe ourſelves in any thing in competition with God; but denying the cravings of ſelf, as they are contrary to what God craves of us: Tit. ii. 12.——'denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts.' And herein lies the exerciſe of ſelf denial, which there will always be occaſion for while we are here. We may take it up in two generals.

1. Denying our ſelf-wit, which is ready to crave of us a quite other belief and judgment, than God demands of us by his word and works: Prov. iii. 5. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own underſtanding. If we will come after Chriſt, we muſt in this caſe ſhut our own eyes, or refuſe to believe our own eyes. So did Abraham, Rom. iv. 17, 18.——'who againſt hope believed in hope,' &c. There are two caſes particularly wherein this ſelf-wit is to be denied.

(1.) In the caſe of truths revealed in the word, be they never ſo myſterious: 2 Cor. x. 5. Caſting down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itſelf againſt the knowledge of God, and bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Chriſt. The want of this is cauſing many unhumbled men make ſhipwreck of the faith at this day, to ſap the foundations of Chriſtianity in gratification of their ſelf-wit. But the grace of God will make the greateſt wits and profoundeſt ſcholars receive revealed truths like a bairn, if ever it touch their hearts: Luke xviii. 17. 'Verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, ſhall in no wiſe enter therein.'

(2.) In the caſe of wants, crooks, and hardſhips that we find in our lot. God in his providence ſays, That trial, croſs, &c. is beſt for you; ſelf-wit ſays, It is very bad; and thinks it ſees well, how that work of God might be mended, and made far better. And thus many walk in a courſe of contradiction to the judgment of God declared in his works of providence. Holding faſt by ſelf-wit, they will not quit their opinion of the matter to him. That is walking after ſelf-wit.

Denying our ſelf-will, which is ready to thwart with the will of God. Therefore we are taught to pray, (Mat. vi. 10.) 'Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.' If we come after Chriſt, we muſt take God's will for our will, ſaying with him, (Matth. xxvi. 39.) 'Not as I wilt, but as thou wilt.' There are two caſes wherein we are particularly to deny our ſelf-will.

(1.) In the caſe of duty, that we may comply with the will of God's command, however croſs it may lie to our inclination; Rom. vii. 22. 23. For I delight in the law of God, after the inward man. But I ſee a law in my members, warring againſt the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of ſin, which is in my members. God's will muſt be a ſufficient reaſon for our practice, and we muſt put the knife to the throat of all our contrary inclinations, Tit. ii. 12. 'denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts.

(2.) In the caſe of our lot, that we may comply with the will of God's providence, Acts xxi. 14.——'ſaying, The will of the Lord be done.' He that made us muſt be allowed to manage our lot and condition; we calmly and contentedly ſubmitting our will to his, readily embracing what he carves for us. There is reaſon for it, Job xxxiv. 33. 'Should it be according to thy mind? he will recompenſe it, whether thou refuſe, or whether thou chuſe.'

And this denying our ſelf-wit and ſelf-will, muſt extend to three kinds of things.

1. To our civil comforts; ſuch as, our outward peace, worldly ſubſtance, liberty, and credit, and the like: all which muſt be laid at the Lord's feet, to do with them as he will, take them from us, or continue them with us, if ſo be we will come after Chriſt: Luke xiv. 26. 'If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple.'

2. To our natural enjoyments, as health, eaſe, relations, even life; all which alſo muſt be laid at the Lord's feet, to be diſpoſed of as he will, not as we will, Luke xiv. 26. forecited.

3. To things of religion; not truſting in our own management for them, but depending wholly on the Lord, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. 'Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain;' nor making ourſelves the chief end of them, but the honour of God, even as in all things elſe, 1 Cor. x. 31. Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of God.

And here two things are of ſpecial conſideration. One is, That when we refuſe to gratify our will, on ſome carnal motive that may feed ſome ſpiritual luſt, as is the caſe in Popiſh auſterities, that is not the Chriſtian ſelf-denial; but a gratifying of ſelf in one thing, by denying it another: and that is a bias the heart is ready to ſlip aſide to. Another is, That there is a denying of ourſelves even in ſpiritual things; for there is nothing wherein ſelf may not mix while we are here. This was called for at Mary's hand, John xx. 17. Jeſus ſaith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet aſcended to my Father, &c. It was exerciſed by Paul, Phil. i. 23, 24. I am in a ſtrait betwixt two, having a deſire to depart, and to be with Chriſt; which is far better: nevertheleſs to abide in the fleſh is more needful for you. Spiritual benefits are ever to be deſired; but even in theſe things there muſt be an awful regard to the will of God. Say, 'Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven.'

Uſe 1. Is it ſo that there is no coming after Chriſt but in the way of mens denying themſelves? then religion is no eaſy buſineſs, and there are few like to ſee heaven. It is not a way wherein men can be allowed that latitude and ſelf-indulgence, which moſt men cannot want. And they do but deceive themſelves, who pretend to faith, or to have come to Chriſt, that are not exerciſed to deny themſelves.

2. See and conſider, communicants, what ye are to lay your account with in coming after Chriſt, which, in communicating at his table, ye ſay ye are reſolved on: Lay your account with the ſtruggle againſt ſelf; giving up with ſelf-wit, and ſelf-will: and lay your account with your croſs.

3. See a weighty errand ye have at the Lord's table, with reſpect to denying yourſelves, and taking up your croſs. Ay, ſay ye, we are to bind ourſelves ſolemnly to theſe duties. I will not deny but ye are. But I doubt ye know your errand well anent theſe things, if that be the main part of it: that ſhould be, how to get ſtrength for theſe duties, and to get a ſealed poſſeſſion of Chriſt and the promiſes for that effect. And believing is the way to attain that.

(1.) The more firmly ye believe on Chriſt, and apprehend God as your God in him, the more will ye be in caſe to deny yourſelves, and take up your croſs.

(2.) It is by believing we at firſt become new creatures, 2 Cor. v. 17. If any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſſed away; behold, all things are become new. Eph. ii. 10. For we are his workmanſhip, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works. And it is by believing that the new man grows. And ſo it is by it that there is a principle of ſelf-denial, and by it one is ſtrengthened to the exerciſe thereof.

(3.) laſtly, In this duty deny yourſelves, and depend on the Lord.

III. Thirdly, We come now to conſider one's taking up his croſs, and that daily, and following Chriſt. Without this none can come after Chriſt to the kingdom of heaven, and in the way thereto. They who mind to come after him to mount Zion, muſt go as Simon the Cyrenian went after him to Calvary, Luke xxiii. 26. bearing his croſs.

We offer the import of this clauſe in theſe following things.

1. God will lay down the croſs to every one that minds for heaven, that they ſhall have nothing ado but to take it up, John xvi. 33.——'In the world ye ſhall 'have tribulation.' They ſhall not need to make croſſes to themſelves, nor to go out of their way to ſeek a croſs: God will lay it down at every one's door. He had one Son without ſin, but no ſon without the croſs, Heb. xii. 8. But if ye be without chaſtiſement, whereof all are partakers, then are ye baſtards, and not ſons. And God lays down the croſs to be taken up by us; when it is brought to that, we muſt either ſuffer or ſin, Heb. x. 35. 'Caſt not away therefore your confidence, 'which hath great recompence of reward.'

2. He will lay it down daily to the followers of Chriſt, that they may have a daily exerciſe in taking it up, and bearing the croſs of the day, Matth. vi. 34.——'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.' A change of croſſes may be got, but there will be no end of them as long as we are here. Our wilderneſs-ſtation may be changed indeed; but it will be but for another wilderneſs-ſtation, till once we are over Jordan: Pſal. lxxiii. 14. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning.

3. We muſt not be chuſers of croſſes. Every one muſt take up his own, allotted to him by ſovereign wiſdom, that is the beſt judge what croſs fits us beſt. We are ready to think, we could bear another croſs better than that which is laid before us: but that is but a deceit of the heart, that longs for ſhifting the preſent croſs; and ſpeaks a want of ſelf-denial. But to ſtrike the bottom out of this humour of picking and chuſing croſſes, know, that if God mind to take a particular trial of you for heaven and eternal life, and there be any one thing wherein, of all things, ye are leaſt able to be touched, God will chuſe your croſs for you in that very thing: ye will be ſure to be touched in the ſore heel, and get rubs where ye are leaſt able to abide them. And it is highly reaſonable the trial ſhould be there, when the competition is betwixt God and ſelf. Mark x. 21.——'One 'thing thou lackeſt; go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou 'haſt, and give to the poor; and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven; and come, take up the croſs, and follow me.'

4. We muſt not trample on the croſs, and ſtep over it, but take it up: Heb. xii. 5.—'My ſon, deſpiſe not 'thou the chaſtening of the Lord.' The ſullen manlineſs and Roman courage wherewith ſome bear their croſſes, is the produce of ſelf-will, not of ſelf-denial; and ſpeaks contempt of God, not ſubmiſſion to him. When Heaven is our party, it becomes us to ſtoop, and not to make our faces like flint, leſt God be provoked to daſh us in pieces.

5. Yet neither muſt we faint at the ſight of the croſs; for at that rate we will not be able to take it up: Heb. xii. 5.——'Nor faint when thou art rebuked of him.' It is unbelief cauſes that fainting, whiſpering in to the ſoul at the appearance of the croſs, Now, ye will never be able to bear that: and when that is received, the hands hang down, and the knees become feeble: and then the ſoul is next door to going out of God's way for relief, Heb. xii. 12, 13. 'Wherefore lift up the hands 'which hang down, and the feeble knees: and make 'ſtraight paths for your feet, leſt that which is lame be 'turned out of the way, but let it rather be healed.' But know ye it for a truth, There is no croſs whatſoever ſo heavy, but we may get it borne acceptably: there is an allowance of proportionable ſtrength made for it, to be fetched in by faith, 2 Cor. xii. 9. And he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee; for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me. Phil. iv. 13. I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.

6. As we muſt not go off the road of duty to ſhift the croſs, ſo we muſt not ſtand ſtill till it be rolled out of our way, but take it up and go forward. It is eaſy going off the way, but not eaſy coming on again. There are quagmires of ſin and ſorrow on every ſide of the croſs, where the ſhifters of it may come to ſtick, 1. Tim. vi. 9. 'But they that will be rich, fall into temptation, and 'a ſnare, and into many fooliſh and hurtful luſts, which 'drown men in deſtruction and perdition.' And to follow Chriſt in the ſummer of proſperity, and deſert him in the winter of adverſity, ſpeaks ſelf-love, not the love of Chriſt to be predominant in us; and will ſhew us to be time-ſervers, not ſervants of Chriſt: Job xvii. 9. 'The righteous alſo ſhall hold on his way, and he that 'hath clean hands ſhall be ſtronger and ſtronger.'

7. We muſt take up no more for our croſs, than what God lays down; not what Satan and our own corruptions lay to it: it will be our wiſdom, to ſhovel that off in the firſt place, and we will take up the croſs the eaſier. God lays down barrenneſs to Rachel for her croſs, Satan and her own corrupt heart lay a killing weight upon it. Gen. xxx. 1. 'And when Rachel ſaw 'that ſhe bare Jacob no children, Rachel envied her 'ſiſter: and ſaid unto Jacob, Give me children, or elſe 'I die.' And then ſhe is like to die in taking it up. O how often do men lay over-weights on their croſs, and then complain they are not able to heave it! indeed we are for the moſt part in the miſt about our croſſes, and then mole-hills appear mountains; but when the croſs is cleared of what is laid to it, the naked croſs will be found light; and he, has it half up, that has it to carry, 2 Cor. iv. 17. 'For our light affliction, which 'is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more ex'ceeding and eternal weight of glory.'

8. But however heavy the croſs be, we are not to refuſe it. Our very life, which of all worldly things is deareſt to us, muſt be laid at the Lord's feet, and we ready to part with it for Chriſt. The croſs was an inſtrument of death, and that a moſt ſhameful and painful one; and the neceſſity of taking it up, ſays, that every true follower of Chriſt muſt be content to be a martyr; and will be ſo, either in action or affection. Luke xiv. 26. If any man come to me, and hate not——his own life, he cannot be my diſciple.

9. We muſt yoke with the croſs willingly and ſubmiſſively: God can lay it on us, whether we will or not; but he will have us to ſtoop, and take it up on us: James i. 2. 'My brethren, count it all joy when ye fall 'into divers temptations.' When, by the providence of God, we fall into them, we muſt not be like the untamed bullock, to whoſe neck the yoke muſt be forced; but like the camel that bows down on his knees, till the burden is laid on him, Lam. iii. 29, 30. 'He putteth 'his mouth in the duſt, if ſo be there may be hope. He 'giveth his cheek to him that ſmiteth him, he is filled 'full with reproach.' So did Eli, 1 Sam. iii. 18. ——'He ſaid, It is the Lord; let him do what ſeem'eth him good.' This is done by a Chriſtian ſubmiſſion of our will to the will of God in the matter.

10. We muſt bear it, going evenly under it, till the Lord take it down. It is what belongs to the Lord, to take it off; it is our part to take it up. There muſt be an exerciſe of patience, in our coming after Chriſt, Luke xxi. 19. 'In your patience poſſeſs ye your ſouls.' And patience muſt have her perfect work, enduring to the end, James i. 4.

11. laſtly, We muſt follow Chriſt with the croſs on our back. The example of Chriſt's holy life, is the compaſs by which we muſt ſteer our courſe, if ever we get to the ſhore of Immanuel's land, 1 John ii. 6. He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked. And the hardſhips of the way through the croſs, will not excuſe our going out of the way. However we be put to ſuffering, we muſt ay be doing in imitation of Chriſt.

Uſe. O Chriſtians, communicants, and whoſoever of you mind for the kingdom of heaven, lay your account with the croſs; take it up meekly, and bear it after Chriſt. Think it not ſtrange concerning the fiery trial. The croſs is a kindly name to a chriſtian: be reconciled to it. For that end conſider,

1. The neceſſity of it, in virtue of the divine appointment: If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me. They that caſt out with the croſs, do in effect caſt out with heaven. Though the way of the croſs is a rough way, yet it is the high way, the only way to it. The fiery trial by the croſs, is that whereby God tries what metal is fit to be made a veſſel of glory, and what not: and it is a dreadful thing to be caſten here as baſe metal, Jer. vi. 29, 30. The bellows are burnt, the lead is conſumed of the fire, the founder melteth in vain: for the wicked are not plucked away. Reprobate ſilver ſhall men call them, becauſe the Lord hath rejected them.

2. Chriſt bore the croſs before you, for your ſake; and ſhall it be ſuch a frightful thing for you to bear it after him for his ſake? If ye would partake of his crown, will ye refuſe your part of his croſs; Rom. viii. 17.—— 'If ſo be that we ſuffer with him, that we may alſo be 'glorified together.' It is highly reaſonable Chriſt's followers be like him in the way to the kingdom, as well glorified with him in it. If the head bore a croſs, it were unbecoming the members to go without one. When he was a man of ſorrows, can his followers expect to be men of joys here? Will the world that was a ſtepdame to him, be a natural mother to you?

3. Conſider the relation your croſſes and troubles have to the croſs of Chriſt, O believers.

(1.) They are the croſs ſet up again to Chriſt, upon which his members are now ſuffering, Col. i. 24. 'Who 'now rejoice in my ſufferings for you, and fill up that 'which is behind of the afflictions of Chriſt in my fleſh, 'for his body's ſake, which is the church.' And the croſs piercing his members, cannot miſs to touch the head, Iſa. lxiii. 9. In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his preſence ſaved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them, and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old. Zech. ii. 8. For thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts; After the glory hath he ſent me unto the nations which ſpoiled you: for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. This view of the croſs, in which Chriſt himſelf appears on it with us, may render it more lovely.

(2.) They are Chriſt's croſs to you, as he left it. Chriſt in perſon took up the croſs, and there was a curſe in it when he took it up: he takes off the curſe, and leaves it; and bids you take it up next. O believer, the tree is left thee, but the curſe is away; the nails are left, but the venom they were dipt in is away. Though bulls ſhould puſh you, the horns wherewith they puſhed him are cut off. Though croſſes of all ſorts ſhould meet together in your caſe; the ſoul and life which the fiery law breathed into them, is gone.

(3.) They grow out of the croſs of Chriſt. Ye will, may be, not expect the Chriſtian's bitter troubles among the fruits of Chriſt's croſs; but miſtake it not: they muſt either be bleſſings or curſes. Curſes they are not, Gal. iii. 13. 'Chriſt hath redeemed us from the curſe of the 'law, being made a curſe for us;' therefore they are bleſſings; and if bleſſings, from whence elſe can they drop? Eph. i. 3. 'Bleſſed be the God and Father of 'our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who hath bleſſed us with all ſpi'ritual bleſſings in heavenly places in Chriſt.' It was by the blood of his croſs he procured the covenant-bleſſings to his people, and the croſs among the reſt, Pſal. lxxxix. 30.——33. If his children forſake my law, and walk not in my judgments; if they break my ſtatutes, and keep not my commandments; then will I viſit their tranſgreſſions with the rod, and their iniquities with ſtripes. Nevertheleſs my loving-kindneſs will I not utterly take from him, nor ſuffer my faithfulneſs to fail. We might welcome the croſs in this view.

4. The croſs is for the deſtruction of the old man, not of the new man. It is a croſs to our corruptions, that is much needed: but no real grace ever yet died by the croſs. As the candle ſhines brighteſt in the night, and the fire burns keeneſt in a keen froſt; ſo grace has ordinarily thriven beſt under the croſs. It is indeed a croſs to our corrupt will, that never goes right while it gets head: it is a croſs to particular luſts, that ſhould be mortified, Gal. v. 24. 'And they that are Chriſt's, have 'crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts:' and both theſe need to be croſſed.

5. It has been the lot of the ſaints in all ages. And there is no ſhifting of the croſs, if we will go out by the footſteps of the flock. Yea, and ordinarily they that have been moſt dear to God, have drunk deepeſt of the bitter cup; the moſt eminent for piety and uſefulneſs, as Job; for piety and parts, as Heman and Paul; for divine manifeſtations made to them, as Jacob and David.

6. laſtly, Public perſecution for the cauſe of Chriſt, is what moſt now alive never ſaw, far leſs felt; though our fathers had a long and dark night of it. But the way to heaven is ſtill the ſame; and therefore no wonder God is making up that want another way in the caſe of his people; and what trial formerly he took of them, by perſecutors, priſons, and gibbets, he is taking the ſame upon the matter of them now, by other means.

I will conclude by giving you ſome helps to bear the croſs.

Fifthly, 1. Look on yourselves as strangers on earth; and keep your eye on Christ, as he went through the world; and upon heaven, as your home, where only ye expect your rest.

2. Quit not faith's gripe of the promise of through-bearing: Isa. xliii. 2. When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they ſhall not overflow thee: when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt; neither ſhall the flame kindle upon thee. Believe firmly, that Chriſt lays on no croſs, without allowance of ability for acceptable bearing it; plead and look for it.

3. Laſtly, Set the croſs in the light of the word, and look in through it, till ye ſee the pleaſure in it that Paul affirms us from his experience to be within it, 2 Cor. xii. 10. 'Therefore I take pleaſure in infirmities, in 'reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes 'for Chriſt's ſake: for when I am weak, then am I 'ſtrong.' Why, (1.) There is a pleaſure in a man's ſeeing himſelf ſtanding a candidate for glory, on his trials for heaven. (2.) In ſeeing a gracious God croſs our corrupt inclinations; in ſeeing the thieves on the croſs, and the hand of God darting one arrow after another into their heart. (3.) In ſeeing ourſelves paſs the mountains, where we ſee the marks of Chriſt's own footſteps before us. Such a paradiſe there is, within the thorn-hedge of the croſs.

The Old and the New Man in Believers.

A

SERMON preached on a Sacramental Occaſion, at Maxton, in the Year 1729.

Rom. vi. 6.

Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin.

THE ſanctification of ſinners is no leſs a myſtery than their juſtification; the former ſpringing out of the croſs of Chriſt unto them, through the intervention of faith knitting the ſinner to a crucified Chriſt, as well as the latter. Hence the apoſtle having aſſerted the inſurance of the ſanctification of believers, that they ſhall certainly walk in newneſs of life, ver. 4. in the likeneſs of Chriſt's reſurrection, ver. 5. i. e. as Chriſt, during the forty days after his reſurrection, lived in the world after a new manner, very different from his manner of life in it before his death, brings the ground of it from the croſs of Chriſt, in the words of the text. In which we have,

1. The ground inſuring holineſs of life in believers united to Chriſt, Our old man is crucified with him. This ſecures their holineſs of life, in ſuch manner as the drying up of the fountain doth the drying up of the ſtreams.

(1.) The ſtate the fountain of ſin is in believers, Our old man is crucified with him. This ſuppoſeth that Chriſt was crucified; that in believers there is a twofold man, a new man, and an old; for while he ſaith, our old man, he intimates that the old man is not the whole man, as in the irregenerate. The new man is the new creature of grace in the believer, or he as renewed. This old man is the fountain of ſin in his heart and life.

Now, the ſtate it is in is a ſtate of crucifixion; it is nailed to the croſs, which is a ſtate of death. And its crucifixion is a concrucifixion with Chriſt, Gal. ii. 20. 'I am 'crucified with Chriſt.' In ſo far as the believer is by faith united to Chriſt, his old man is nailed to the croſs of Chriſt, to fare here as Chriſt fared: and that was heavy fare.

(2.) The iſſue of this ſtate of the fountain of ſin in believers. It is twofold.

1*ſt*, The final iſſue, That the body of ſin might be deſtroyed. The old man is the body of ſin, being a complication of the ſeveral ſinful luſts oppoſite to the holy law; as the body is of members competent to the human frame. Now, the final iſſue of this ſtate of the old man, the body of ſin, is its deſtruction and utter ruin. Crucifixion is not preſent death indeed, but it is ſure and certain death. Pilate would have chaſtiſed Chriſt, and releaſed him, Luke xxiii. 16. but the Jews would have him crucified, for that would carry him quite away from among them: even ſo the old man is not to be corrected and amended, but deſtroyed quite and clear.

2*dly*, The intermediate iſſue, That henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin: that from the moment of our union with Chriſt we ſhould not ſerve ſin any more, voluntarily living in it, and giving up ourſelves to it as its ſervants, to live and act for ſatisfying of it, as we did before. The old man may live long on the croſs, before he be deſtroyed; but then his hands and feet cannot ſerve him as they did before, there are nails driven through them; he may move them indeed, but then it is with pain and difficulty. So was it with Chriſt; he behoved to recommend his mother to the care of his beloved diſciple John, for that his own hands and feet were not at liberty to act and go for her as formerly.

2. The certainty concerning this ground, Knowing this. It is not a matter of uncertain hope, but known for truth. It could not be known by ſenſe; no bodily eye could diſcern our old man on the croſs with Chriſt; not yet by rational deduction from natural principles; for the whole myſtery of Chriſt is ſuper-natural. Therefore it is known by faith upon divine teſtimony; it is a concluſion of faith to be laid down for invigorating us in all our endeavours after holineſs of life, and to be firmly held and ſtuck by, in all our ſtruggles with the old man, as ever we would deſire to make head againſt him.

That I may touch the ſeveral purpoſes of this text, I ſhall offer them in ſeveral doctrines to be briefly handled.

Doct. I. There is in believers united to Chriſt a new man, a holy principle; and an old man, a fountain of ſin.

I. Why the holy principle and the corrupt nature in believers are called the new and old man?

1. They are called men becauſe each of them poſſeſſeth the whole man, though not wholly. There are by this means two I's in every believer, Rom. vii. 15. For that which I do, I allow not; for what I would, that do I not; but what I hate, that do I. There is not one part of the man that is in Chriſt, but grace has a part of it: as in the twilight there is light over all, and darkneſs over all too, the darkneſs being mixed in every part with the light. So my renewed part is I, a man having an underſtanding enlightened, a will renewed, affections ſpiritualized, uſing my body conform; but my unrenewed part is I too, having an underſtanding darkened, a will rebellious, affections corrupted, and uſing my body accordingly.

2. They are called the new and old man, for two reaſons.

(1.) Becauſe the new nature is brought in upon the corrupt principle, which was the firſt poſſeſſor. The corrupt nature is of the ſame ſtanding with ourſelves from the conception and birth, and had all its alone till our union with Chriſt by faith. And then only came in the new nature, and that made the former old.

(2.) Becauſe of their different originals: the one being in us from the corrupt firſt Adam, the other from the holy ſecond Adam. So the believer looking on the corruption of his nature, may call fallen Adam father; and on the new creature in him, he may call Chriſt father. The ſecond Adam coming after the firſt, made the firſt old; ſo the produce of them in us, is the old and new man accordingly.

II. How the believer comes to be thus ſplit in two, two men. This is done by virtue of his union with Chriſt, from whence ariſeth a communication of grace to him from Chriſt, 1 Cor. i. 30. But of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made unto us wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption. Concerning which two things are to be noted.

1. That in the moment of one's union with Chriſt by faith, there is communicated to him out of the fulneſs of grace in the man Chriſt, a meaſure of every grace in him, as the wax impreſſed receives every point in the ſeal, John i. 16. 'And of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace.' Eph. iv. 13. Till we all come——unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt. And thus is the new creature formed, being a new man perfect in parts, entire or having all its members, no grace totally wanting.

Hence it is that the new man is formed immediately after Chriſt's image, ſo that it is the very picture of the man Chriſt, as Eve was of Adam. Therefore the forming of it is ſaid to be the forming of Chriſt in the believer, Gal. iv. 19.

2. That yet there is not then, nor during this life communicated to the believer a full meaſure of any grace, 1 Cor. xiii. 9. 'For we know in part.' So all the graces being imperfect, though they remove ſin as far as they go, they cannot fill up the room in any part mind, will, or affections. And thus is there an old man left in the believer ſtill, Rom. vii. 14. which is the image of the firſt Adam, from whom the corruption compoſing it is derived.

USE 1. Hence ſee, that the believers life while here cannot miſs to be a ſtruggling life, Gal. v. 17. For the fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and the Spirit againſt the fleſh: and theſe are contrary the one to the other; ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would. The believer is like Rebekah in another caſe, the two men ſtruggle in him; and like the two armies in the Shulamite.

2. See here the riſe of the peace and eaſy life of it moſt men have. The fleſh in them has no competitor. In the ſtate of glory, grace has all, ſo there is a perfect peace: in the ſtate of nature, corruption has all; ſo there is peace too; except what is marred by the ſtruggle between the fleſh in one part luſting, and the fleſh in another part fearing, as in Balaam, 2 Pet. ii. 15. 'who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs,' compared with Numb. xxii. 18. If Balak would give me his houſe full of ſilver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do leſs or more. Whereas the ſtruggle in the believer is betwixt the fleſh and Spirit in the ſame part, nilling and willing the ſame thing of their proper motions, Rom. vii. 15, 16. forecited.

DOCT. II. The old man in believers is a body of ſin, an entire body lacking none of its members. Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death?' This appears from the account of it already given. As we derive every grace from the ſecond Adam in our regeneration, ſo every corruption from the firſt Adam in our natural generation.

USE 1. This may ſerve to humble believers, when they are at their beſt. There is an entire body of ſin in them while they are here. Do they excel in any grace; yet there is in them a member of the old man oppoſite to it, as paſſion in meek Moſes. Have they every grace in them? They have every corruption too, though every one does not appear, more than every grace. Therefore they have need to watch againſt all ſin whatſoever; for there is never a ſnare in the ill world, but there is a member of the old man ready to fall in with it, Col. iii. 5. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanneſs, &c.

2. No wonder the believer grone being burdened, having a whole body of ſin carrying about with him. And they that grone not under it, are certainly all fleſh; no new man in them. If ye belong to Chriſt, ye cannot want an errand to him for ſanctification. Ye have a body of ſin to lay before him, for killing virtue from him againſt it.

DOCT. III. The old man in believers is crucified with Chriſt. This bears two things.

I. Chriſt was crucified. He not only died for us, but died for us the curſed, painful, ſhameful, lingering death on the tree of the croſs; which we are met to commemorate. Chriſt was put to this death for us, rather than another kind of death.

1ſt, That the firſt ſin that let in all ſin into the world, might be the more clearly read in the puniſhment. When ye conſider the awful and tremendous diſpenſation of the Son of God, the ſecond Adam, hanging naked on a tree, and dying there at great leiſure in exquiſite pain; can ye miſs to ſee the fiery wrath of God againſt the ſin of that naked pair in paradiſe, pleaſuring themſelves in the fruit of the forbidden tree, and in an inſtant defacing the image of God in them?

2dly, That the whole world might ſee, what a low and hard ſtate Chriſt took on him, putting himſelf in our room. We were bond-men under the curſe, and Chriſt took on him our ſtate of ſervitude, and that under the curſe, becoming a bond-man for us under the curſe, Philip. ii. 7. 'He took upon him the form of a ſervant.' Hereof the death on the croſs was the ſign and badge, being the puniſhment of ſlaves, and accurſed in the law. And to make way for this circumſtance, the Jews were ſubjected to the Romans.

USE 1. Remember a crucified Chriſt, enter this night deep into the thoughts of the Son of God hanging, groaning, dying on a croſs for us. Admire the matchleſs love in it. Behold the ſeverity of divine juſtice againſt ſin in it. Prize the ſalvation ſo dearly bought, and receive it with thankfulneſs.

2. Think not ſtrange, if ye have a crucified life in the world. If ye are Chriſtians, followers of Jeſus, why ſhould ye think ſtrange of it, to be thus conformed to your head?

II. The old man in believers is crucified together with him. Here we are to enquire how it is crucified with him; which take in the following particulars.

1. Chriſt hung on the croſs as a public perſon, a re-

preſentative of his ſpiritual ſeed. For he was the ſecond Adam ſuffering, as the other the firſt Adam ſinning. So that as they ſinned in Adam, they ſuffered in Chriſt; the law having them all on the croſs in Chriſt their repreſentative, Gal. ii. 20. 'I am crucified with Chriſt.'

2. Chriſt hanging on the croſs had the body of all their ſins upon him, your old man and my old man. They were on him by the imputation of the guilt of them, though not inherent in him, 2 Cor. v. 21. For he hath made him to be ſin for us, who knew no ſin; that we might be made the righteouſneſs of God in him. Therefore our old man is ſaid to be crucified, not in him, but with him.

3. While he was hanging on the croſs, he was meritoriouſly doing away the guilt of them, and conſequently the power, pollution, and very being thereof; inaſmuch as the guilt being removed, theſe muſt ceaſe of courſe. For the ſtrength of ſin is the law, whereby it ſtakes down the ſinner under the curſe, 1 Cor. xv. 56.

4. The ſinner being united to Chriſt by faith, the merit and virtue of Chriſt's ſuffering on the croſs is actually applied to him. So that, his guilt being removed, there is a reigning principle of grace planted in him, going through the whole man, whereby the dominion of ſin is broken, Rom. vi. 14. and the pollution removed ſo far as that new man goes, Tit. iii. 5. So that the believer is an image of Chriſt on the croſs, full of grace in him, and of ſin on him; but the former working off the latter.

USE 1. See then, O communicants, that the crucifying of the old man, the body of ſins in you, depends entirely on your uniting with Chriſt by faith. The ſacrament is appointed to ſeal and ſtrengthen that union. Therefore your great buſineſs at the table ſhould be, cloſely to knit with a crucified Chriſt. The more of that, the more will the death of ſin be haſtened on. And they that aim not at the deſtruction of ſin in their communicating, while they pretend to remember a crucified Saviour, forget the end of his crucifixion, viz. that the body of ſin being crucified with him might be deſtroyed.

2. The old man in believers, is in a ſtate of death, though not dead outright. It is crucified with Chriſt. It may move and ſtir in them, and vehement ſtruggles it may make, as a dying man ſtruggling with the mortal diſeaſe: but whatever efforts it make, it is on the croſs, whence it ſhall not come down till it breathe out its laſt.

2. The practice of religion is painful work; and Chriſtians muſt not think it ſtrange, that oft-times they are pained to the heart in it. The ſaints in glory have no pain in their work; for the old man is deſtroyed in them; but the ſaints here have an unrenewed part; and that is on the croſs, and cannot but pain them. There are right eyes in them to be plucked out; the man has a painful ſtruggle in denying himſelf, croſſing his own inclinations, wreſtling againſt his own fleſh and blood. Providence thruſts a ſpear into the old man's ſide, by piercing trials and troubles; it breaks his legs by cutting diſappointments from many airths, to forward his death. This cannot be but painful.

4. The old man is long a dying out; for crucifying is a lingering death. There muſt be an exerciſe of patience in the Chriſtian courſe; for there may be many a battle ere the complete victory be got. Many a wound the old man will take ere he fall; and after he is worſted again and again, he will get up and renew the battle, till he get the final ſtroke from the Lord's immediate hand.

It is a grave queſtion, Why doth the Lord ſuffer the old man of ſin to dwell in his people, after their converſion? Why is not ſin quite expelled at the firſt entry of grace? Our text affords one weighty reaſon for it, viz. That the members may be conformed to the head. Chriſt did not put off him the body of our ſins that by imputation lay on him, at his very firſt encounter with it; nay, he had a grievous ſtruggle with it for the ſpace of three hours on the croſs, till he himſelf got the firſt fall, dying by its hand on the croſs. Nay, if we reckon rightly, it lay heavy on him the ſpace of thirty-three years; only upon the croſs was the heat of the battle, which ended in his death and burial, whereby he put it off quite and clean. So ſince imputed ſin was on Chriſt the head all his life, inherent ſin is left in believers the members all their life. The old man is crucified with him.

DOCT. IV. By virtue of the croſs of Chriſt, the old man in believers ſhall certainly be deſtroyed quite and clean at length. Here we may enquire,

I. What deſtruction is that, that is certainly abiding the old man in believers? It is an utter deſtruction of it, with all effects of it, all marks and veſtiges of it, all belonging with it to the old Adam.

1. The old man himſelf ſhall be deſtroyed, utterly deſtroyed, out of all that are Chriſt's; ſo that though he has many a time trode them like a field of battle, there ſhall not be in them the leaſt print of his feet to be diſcerned, Heb. xii. 23.—'The ſpirits of juſt men 'made perfect.' The day will come, when there ſhall not be the leaſt guilt of it on them, to draw a frown from their Father's face againſt them, Iſ. xxxiii. ult. The people that dwell therein, ſhall be forgiven their iniquity; when it ſhall have no power to prevail over them in the leaſt; nay, when it ſhall no more have an indwelling in them, Heb. xii. 23. forecited; but ſhall be utterly caſt forth as an abominable branch. So the new man ſhall poſſeſs all alone, without a competitor for ever.

2. The ſinful vile body derived from old Adam, which brought him down from Adam to us, Pſal. li. 5. and continues to the end the beſt friend he has in believers, ſhall be deſtroyed for his ſake. The ſoul ſhall leave the ſinful fleſh to be carried into the grave, where it ſhall rot and conſume, till it return to the duſt again, ſo as not the leaſt lineament of old Adam's image or likeneſs ſhall be diſcerned on it. And Chriſt will take the ſame duſt thus purified, and form it anew after his own likeneſs as ſecond Adam, Philip. iii. 21.

3. The viſible heavens that covered him, and this earth that bore him, and furniſhed fewel to his luſts, ſhall for his ſake be ſet on flames, and reduced to aſhes, 2 Pet. iii. 10. But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat, the earth alſo and the works that are therein ſhall be burnt up. Compare Gen. iii. 17. Curſed is the ground for thy ſake. So that it ſhall no more for ever be to be ſaid, There is the earth where the old man ſome time lived, and there the heaven that gave him light and air. But Chriſt will make new heavens and a new earth for the new man, 2 Pet. iii. 13. Nevertheleſs we, according to his promiſe, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs.

4. laſtly, All that ſhall remain of him, ſhall be buried in hell, Rev. xx. 14. 'And death and hell were caſt in'to the lake of fire.' Old Adam brought in the old man into the world, and he ſpread his poiſonous efficacy over all; ſo that look where ye will, ye ſhall not ſee in all this world that in which there is not ſin, or ſome effect of ſin. But then all ſhall be gathered from off believers, and from off the now groning creatures, and caſt into the lake of fire; ſo that there ſhall not be the leaſt ſin, nor effect of ſin, without the boundaries of hell.

II. When will the old man be thus deſtroyed? You will eaſily conceive, from what is ſaid, that deſtruction will have two periods.

1. At the death of the believer, and not till then. Till then the child of God muſt wreſtle on with it; for ſo did Chriſt with it as imputed to him, till death ſet him free. It is a grave queſtion, How come believers to die being freed from the curſe of the covenant of works? Anſwer, They die in conformity to Chriſt their head; that as death came in by ſin, ſin may go off by death.

It is not dying that does it indeed; for ſin goes through death in [illegible] that are out of Chriſt, not moved from off them for all that death can do. But at death, Chriſt gives the redding ſtroke betwixt the new and old man, kills the old man outright, as 2 Sam. i. 10. And he does it, by letting in a full meaſure of every grace from himſelf into the believer, which takes up the whole man wholly; and ſo the old man is gone in a moment, as the darkneſs upon the ſun's diſplaying his beams over all.

2. At the end of the world. Then comes the utter abolition of all veſtiges of it out of hell.

III. The certainty of it. It is even as ſure as the death of Chriſt could merit its deſtruction, and as the end of his death cannot be fruſtrated, as he roſe again from the dead free from the imputed guilt of it, and ſits in heaven to-day without ſin ſo much as imputed to him.

USE. Let the ſaints then take courage, and renew the battle vigorouſly with the old man; for the victory will undoubtedly fall to their ſide. And as for you that are ſtill for keeping the old man's head and heart hale; as ye do interpretatively deſire none of Chriſt's croſs, it is an argument ye have as little ſaving intereſt in it.

DOCT. V. In the mean time, till the old man be deſtroyed quite and clean by virtue of the croſs of Chriſt, by virtue of the ſame croſs, the believer ſhall not be a ſervant to the old man more. That is the preſent piece of freedom from it the believer has.

1. The believer has heartily given up with him for a maſter. Some time he ſaid, as Exod. xxi. 5.——'I 'love my maſter,——I will not go out free.' But now he hates him mortally, and would fain be altogether free at any rate, Rom. vii. 24. 'O wretched man that 'I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this 'death!' The very being in the houſe with the old man is a burden.

2. He will get no work, but forced work, off his hand more, Rom. vii. 15. 'For that which I do, I allow 'not,' &c. He will not yield his members to the old man voluntarily, as before, chap. vi. 13. Neither yield ye your members as inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs unto ſin. He that will never get work with whole good-will at his hand more, but half-will at moſt.

USE. This writes death to ſuch as have given their hand to Chriſt at his table, and are ready to go back into the ſervice of their luſts. If from henceforth ye enter not into a ſtruggling life againſt ſin, ye have not felt the virtue of Chriſt's croſs.

DOCT. VI. ult. Believers ſhould go out againſt the old man in acts of holineſs, in the faith that he is a crucified man; i. e. Believe your old man is crucified with Chriſt, and in this belief beſtir yourſelf againſt him in the uſe of appointed means. If you believe it not, how can your hands be ſtrong, having all to do your alone? But believe it firmly, and it will make you as a giant refreſhed with wine.

WORM JACOB threſhing the MOUNTAINS.

A

SERMON preached on a Sacramental Occaſion.

ISAIAH xli. 14, 15.

Worm Jacob——thou ſhalt threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, and ſhalt make the hills as chaff.

RELIGION is a myſtery, and the truly religious are a myſtery too. They are a myſtery to the world, 1 John iii. 1.——'The world knoweth us not;' yea to themſelves, ver. 2.——'It doth not yet appear what we 'ſhall be.' That is a matter not of ſight and feeling, but of faith. There are many odd connections, which folk would think contradictions and impoſſibilities, in their character. See a cluſter of them, 2 Cor. vi. 9. 10. As unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chaſtened, and not killed; as ſorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things. That is a ſtrange connection, an old man and a new man in one man; but none more ſtrange and ſurpriſing, than this in the text: A worm threſhing the mountains; and that not ridiculouſly, without effect; but moſt efficaciouſly, beating them ſmall. In theſe words we have two things.

1. What the church and people of God are. They are named by him who miſnames none, Worm Jacob. Their name from their nature is a worm; they are poor, weak, deſpiſed creatures, ready to be cruſhed by the foot of every paſſer-by: yet worm Jacob; believing, praying, wreſtling worms, as he was.

2. What they ſhall certainly and infallibly do, Threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, &c. I find interpreters generally underſtand by mountains, the great and lofty potentates of the earth, ſetting themſelves againſt the church. And no doubt theſe were in the prophet's view; but the view was not confined to them only. God's bringing down the Babylonian monarchy at their prayers, and the victories afterward of the Maccabees over their enemies, cannot reaſonably be ſuppoſed to complete the intent of this prophecy. We muſt needs look to the kingdom of Chriſt for it; of which there is plainly an account, ver. 17. 18, 19. Compare Dan. ii. 34. 35. And we muſt carry on our view, all along to the end of time, Rev. ii. 26. 27.; the rather that it is the manner of the prophet, to wrap up in one expreſſion, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal deliverance; the deliverance from Babylon, which was temporal, being the firſt and neareſt in view, Iſa. xxvi. 19. 'Thy dead 'men ſhall live,' &c.; but not terminating it. Here then we may conſider,

(1.) What worm Jacob has to encounter or yoke with, mountains and hills, whoſe weight is ſufficient to cruſh millions of him; difficulties quite diſproportionable to his ſtrength, as a mountain to that of a worm.

(2.) The ſucceſs of this ſo very unequal match. The mountains ſhall not cruſh the worm; but the worm ſhall threſh the mountains, as one does a ſheaf of corn with repeated ſtrokes. They did not in thoſe days threſh their corn with flails, as we do; but tread it out with the feet of men or beaſts, or elſe by drawing a kind of cart, drag, or ſledge over and over it, called in the text a threſhing inſtrument. I do not find the word here denoting the action of the worm, and rendered threſhing, applied at all to the drag: but as it formally ſignifies to tread out, as rendered Hoſ. x. 11. ‘ Ephraim is as an heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn;’ as appears from Iſa. xxv. 10. For in this mountain ſhall the hand of the Lord reſt, and Moab ſhall be trodden down under him, even as ſtraw is trodden down for the dunghill. So it is applied to a ſelf-moving creature, man, Micah iv. 13. ‘ Ariſe and threſh, O daughter of Zion;’ or beaſt, Jer. l. 11. Here lies the myſtery then, uniting the two notions of the ſelf-mover and the inſtrument, that the worm ſhall tread out the mountains, as one would do a mole-hill. And if ye ſay, Alas! ſuch a treader! what weight has it? I will make (ſays the Lord) the feet or belly of the worm like a new-ſhod threſhing drag for them, that ſhall tread out the higheſt and rockieſt of them all, to purpoſe.

(3.) The degree and pitch of the worm's ſucceſs againſt thoſe mountains; it ſhall beat them ſmall, till they be like duſt, as the word is uſed, Deut. ix. 21.; or like chaff: ſo that they ſhall be blown away with the wind, and no veſtige of them remain.

(4.) The inſurance of this ſucceſs of the worm. Who could inſure it, but the mighty God? He has done it. Jeſus Chriſt, Jehovah, the moſt high God, and worm Jacob's Kinſman-redeemer, hath, by his word of promiſe, engaged his almighty power on the ſide of the worm againſt the mountains. Let not the worm fear or doubt the ſucceſs. A worm ſeconded by Jeſus Chriſt, will be an overmatch for all the mountains and hills ſetting up their heads from earth or hell.

DOCT. The myſtery of grace carried on by Jeſus Chriſt in his church and people, is like a worm's threſhing the mountains, infallibly to iſſue in its threſhing them away quite and clean. Briefly, Worm Jacob ſhall threſh the mountains, and threſh them away quite and clean.

Here we ſhall conſider,

I. The character of the ſubject wherein this myſtery of grace is carried on by Jeſus Chriſt.

II. The myſtery of grace carried on in them by Jeſus.

III. I ſhall account for this myſtery, worm Jacob threſhing the mountains of difficulties in his way, and threſhing them away quite and clean.

IV. Apply.

I. Firſt, I ſhall conſider the character of the ſubject wherein this myſtery of grace is carried on by Jeſus Chriſt. It is in worm Jacob, denoting the church in general, and every believer or true member thereof in particular: for of theſe the church conſiſts, as in the text, verſ. 14. without the ſupplement, Fear not, thou worm Jacob, ye men of Iſrael. One would think, that one deſigned to be a threſher of the mountains, ſhould be a party of a ſignally great and ſwelling character, a hero, a giant, or if there were any thing could carry the character higher: but on the contrary, it is very low, ſurprizingly low, worm, worm Jacob. This character points at theſe five things eſpecially, in the caſe of the people of God. It points them out as,

1. Weak creatures, really weak for the encounters they muſt make, as a worm for a mountain. God himſelf gives them this name of extreme weakneſs; therefore they muſt be ſo in very deed. They have weak heads, hearts, hands, for the work they are called to. Not only does the firſt grace find them really weak, but the after ſupplies of grace alſo, Heb. xi. 34.—— ‘ Out of weakneſs were made ſtrong.’

2. Humbled ſouls, truly ſenſible of their own weakneſs. By nature they were ſwelling vipers, but by grace they are humbled worms. And,

1ſt, Habitually humbled, in reſpect of their ſtate: as the creeping worm, whoſe nature it is to go on its belly. So the humble and the gracious are equivalent terms, Pſal. xxxiv. 2, 3. My ſoul ſhall make her boaſt in the Lord: the humble ſhall hear thereof, and be glad. O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. There is a law-work followed with goſpel-grace, wrought on them; iſſuing in a thorough humiliation, breaking down their natural ſelf conceit, tumbling down their towering imaginations about themſelves which they had in their ſtate of blindneſs, bringing them, in their own eyes, from the conſiſtence of mountains to that of worms; and convincing them, they are, have, and can do, nothing, Luke xv. 17. 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.

2dly, Actually humbled, in reſpect of their frame. As the worm ſtill retains its creeping gate, at the mountain, as in the valley: ſo God's people, at difficulties to be happily ſurmounted, ſtill keep up the ſenſe of their utter emptineſs, and weakneſs for them, 2 Cor. iii. 5. Not that we are ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves: but our ſufficiency is of God. If the worm Jacob begin to ſwell again, he will be ſo unwieldy that he will threſh no mountains, till he fall anew, 1 Cor. xv. 10. 2 Cor. xii. 11.

3. Deſpiſed creatures. As the lofty mountains overtop the crawling worm, ſo doth the carnal world contemn worm Jacob, Pſal. xxii. 6. ‘ But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people; and cxxiii. 4. Our ſoul is exceedingly filled with the ſcorning of thoſe that are at eaſe, and with the contempt of the proud.’ Though they may value worm Jacob, for his gifts which he has in common with themſelves; they will never value him for his grace, that leaves them ſtill as a worm in their ſight. What of religion lies beyond the reach of the natural man, they deſpiſe; the Chriſtian entertainment on words and promiſes, they deſpiſe, as we do the duſt the worms lick up; the Chriſtian way of doing in faith, they deſpiſe, as we do the crawling of the worm: Like Sanballet, when he mocked the Jews, ſaying, What do theſe feeble Jews? will they fortify themſelves? will they ſacrifice? will they make an end in a day? will they revive the ſtones out of the heaps of the rubbiſh, which are burnt? Neh. iv. 2, 3.

4. Yet united to Jeſus Chriſt. Though a worm, yet worm Jacob. Our Lord Jeſus himſelf is of the worm-family, Pſal. xxii. 6. viz. worm Jacob, Pſal. xxiv. 6. ‘ This is the generation of them that ſeek him, that ſeek thy face, O Jacob.’ Compare Iſ. xlix. 3. ‘ Thou art my ſervant, O Iſrael, in whom I will be glorified.’ This intimates an union between him and them as his worm brethren, Heb. ii. 11. Being lowered and humbled to the condition of the worm, they are knit to and built on him by faith, Luke vi. 48.

5. laſtly, Daring adventurers, daring wreſtlers, Worm Jacob ventured on him that formed the mountains, and wreſtled with him, and prevailed too, Gen. xxxii. 24. Hoſ. xii. 4. What wonder to find him then venturing on the mountains themſelves? He muſt have the bleſſing, and muſt be forward whatever mountains be in the way. I proceed to,

II. The ſecond thing to be conſidered, namely, The myſtery of grace carried on in them by Jeſus Chriſt. We may take it up in theſe two.

1. An apparently hopeleſs encounter they are led to by him: worm Jacob threſhing the mountains. What a hopeleſs-like encounter is a worm threſhing a mountain! ſo hopeleſs-like are the encounters the people of God have to make in their way to the eternal reſt. Theſe threſhers are certainly threſhers in hope, 1 Cor. ix. 10. But the naked eye cannot diſcover the ground of hope in it: it is faith only which ſhews it hopeful, while ſight repreſents it as a hopeleſs caſe; and therefore they muſt cloſe their eyes, and threſh in faith, as Abraham did, Rom. iv. 19, 20.

We take up this hopeleſs-like encounter in five things.

1*ſt*, The Lord lays in his people's way, mountains of difficulties quite above their ſtrength; difficulties which they look to, as a worm to a mountain before it, 2 Cor. i. 8. For we would not, brethren, have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Aſia, that we were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength, inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life. However plain the way to hell be, the way to heaven will be a mountainous way, in the experience of all that travel it: they will never want mountains in their way, till they come to the hill of God.

2*dly*, They muſt not go about the mountains in their way, ſhifting the difficulties which the Lord calls them to, but they muſt make their way over them, threſhing them down, Micah iv. 13. Ariſe and threſh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs braſs, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people, &c. If they offer to go about one mountain, they will be ſure to meet with a higher in their aboutgate. Peter tried it, denying his Maſter, and found it ſo; encountering another as high above the former, as the anger of God is above that of the creature; and which was like to cruſh him, as we may ſee from Matth. xxvi. 75. 'He went out, and wept bitterly.'

3*dly*, Therefore Worm Jacob falls a threſhing the mountains, combating the difficulties which the Lord lays in his way. He puts on a brow for a bargain, and reſolutely beſtirs his weak hands and feet, thruſting forward maugre all oppoſition, Gen. xxxii. 26. Matth. xi. 12. For there is a ſpirit in Worm Jacob, more daring and venturous than ever was in any unbelieving hero; a ſpirit for threſhing mountains, while they did but ſcatter molehills, Numb. xiv. 24. Prov. xvi. 32.

4*thly*, They continue the combating of difficulties reſolutely and patiently. Threſhing is a continued action, conſiſting of repeated ſtrokes. It takes ſome time to threſh a ſheaf; how much more to threſh a mountain? It is the ruin of many, that they are not able to endure: if a ſtroke or two would do the buſineſs, they would bring their matters to a good account; but they have no heart to be threſhers. 'But let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing,' James i. 4. 'He that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved, Matth. xxiv. 13.

Laſtly, Worm Jacob has many mountains to threſh. One would be enough, we would think, for the worm; but there is a plurality of them. The truth is, this world is full of mountains to the people of God; and when they have threſhed one, they will have another to fall to, till they be out of this mountanious country. Having paſſed one difficulty, they will get another to grapple with, till they be within the gates of the city. So they muſt have a threſhing life time of it, till they come there.

2. A ſurpriſing ſucceſs: even as ſurpriſing as a worm's threſhing and beating the mountains ſmall to duſt, and threſhing them away. Such will be the iſſue of the encounter which the people of God now have with their difficulties in their way through the world; for which the text is plain. We take it up in theſe two. They will have,

1*ſt*, Partial ſucceſſes in their way, very ſurpriſing; ſurpriſing to others and to themſelves: Pſal. cxxvi. 1, 2. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with ſinging: then ſaid they among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them. What mountains of difficulties were in David's way to the kingdom! He threſhed long at them, and they never appeared to give way; nay he was like to be cruſhed with them, ſaying, 'One day I ſhall periſh by the hand of Saul.' But ſee the ſurpriſing ſucceſs, Pſal. xviii. intituled, 'A Pſalm of David, in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul:' wherein, after recapitulating the various difficulties he had to encounter with, he particularly mentions the happy deliverances he met with, and the ſurpriſing manner of the ſame. Some mountains God's people are kept threſhing at all their days, particularly the mountain of corruption; and they never fall quite down till death. But, as a pledge for the time to come, God makes ſome mountains now and then fall down before the worm Jacob; wherewith he is ſurpriſed, and tranſported with wonder, how it has come to paſs: Mark xvi. 4. 5. And when they looked, they ſaw that the ſtone was rolled away;—and they were affrighted.

2*dly*, A total ſucceſs at the end of their way, which will ſwallow them up in ſurpriſe and eternal wonder: 1 John iii. 2. Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be: but we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him; for we ſhall ſee him as he is. When the myſtery is finiſhed, the web cut out, it will appear an admirable piece. There will not be left then the leaſt veſtige of all the mountains that ſtood between heaven and them; the threſhed mountains will then be blown away with the wind; and they will lay by the flail as an inſtrument they have no more uſe for.

Object. But have not others as well as worm Jacob, mountains of difficulties in their way, which they become maſters of too at length? Anſw. This world is ſo mountainious, that none can get through it without meeting mountains in their way: carnal men make a ſhift to creep through ſome of them; but they can threſh none of them, as Worm Jacob doth; they want his head-ſtaff, John xv. 5. 'Without me ye can do nothing.' They creep into others of them, and neſtle in them; the mountains of their corruptions which in a ſpecial manner ſtand between heaven and them; and at length they will be eternally buried under them.

Uſe 1. Here is a touchſtone for trial of true Chriſtians, and worthy communicants, worm Jacob threſhing the mountains.

1*ſt*, They have a heart and ſpirit for threſhing of mountains in their way to heaven. They are peremptory and reſolute to break through them, without exception, as men that muſt be there, muſt not periſh: Matth. xi. 12. The kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent taketh it by force.' Though they have long threſhed in vain to their own ſenſe, they are reſolute to hold on; like Paul 'preſſing toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Chriſt Jeſus,' Phil. iii. 14. This caſts the delicate and ſoft-hearted in this caſe, that are not for threſhing of mountains: they are for the eaſier taſks, but have no heart nor hand for that. Theſe I think are the fearful, Rev. xxi. 8. like the unbelieving ſpies and people in the wilderneſs. Take heed here, how ye ſtand diſpoſed.

(1.) To a vain world; whether there is in you a heart to row againſt that ſtream or no; Rom. xii. 2. 'Be ye not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind,' &c. If ye have no heart for it, but muſt go along with it; be ye young or old, ye are no good Chriſtians, Gal. vi. 14.——'The world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world.' And young communicants leaving that gap open, make naughty and worthleſs old ones after.

(2.) To the ſin that moſt eaſily beſets you. Have you no heart to threſh that mountain? ye have not the ſpirit of Worm Jacob, who is one that keeps himſelf from his iniquity, Pſal. xviii. 23.; and ye will be buried under it at length: like the young man, who was grieved at Chriſt's diſcourſe about ſelf-denial and the croſs, and went away from him, and never returned, Mark x. 21, 22.

(3.) To the crook in your lot. Have you no heart to ſet yourſelves to a Chriſtian bearing it, but muſt needs have it evened to your mind? ye have not the ſpirit of Worm Jacob; for the Lord has ſaid, ‘If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me.’ Matth. xvi. 24.

2*dly*, Yet they are but worms in their own eyes, an unequal match for the leaſt of the mountains; 2 Cor. iii. 5. We are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves, but our ſufficiency is of God. This caſts the proud legaliſt that minds nothing but binding himſelf to duty, reckoning himſelf man enough for the duties of Chriſtianity.

The ſum of this mark is, The Chriſtian communicant is reſolute and peremptory for doing all, yet convinced that he is ſufficient for nothing.

Uſe 2. Here is likewiſe a ground of full comfort to ſuch. Let not the height, rockineſs, nor bulk of mountains diſcourage thee; nor yet the felt unſucceſsfulneſs of thy attempts hitherto. God has ſaid it, ‘Worm Jacob, thou ſhalt threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall.’ Be not afraid; only believe.

Uſe 3. laſtly, Here is, moreover a ſtrong inducement to all to come to Chriſt: he will make you ‘threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall.’ Come ye that are wandering on the mountains of vanity, like to be worried, on the mountains of prey, neſtling in the mountain of corruption, unable to get over the mountains of difficulty before you; come to Chriſt, and ye ſhall threſh the mountains and beat them ſmall, and ſhall make the hills as chaff.

III. Thirdly, I ſhall account for this myſtery, worm Jacob, threſhing the mountains of difficulties in his way, and threſhing them away quite and clean, How can this be?

1. God has ſaid it, and therefore it cannot fail; ‘Thou ſhalt threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, and make the hills as chaff.’ Compared with Numb. xxiii. 19. God is not a man, that he ſhould lye; neither the ſon of man he ſhould repent, hath he ſaid, and ſhall he not do it; or hath he ſpoken, and ſhall he not make it good? He ſpeaks things into being, and they muſt ſtart out of the womb of nothing or not-being at his word which calls them forth, Rom. iv. 17. There is as much for worm Jacob's threſhing and beating away the mountains, as there was for making the world, and all the mountains in it, Pſal. xxxiii. 9. ‘He ſaid and it was,’ Heb. Shall not his word that ſaid them into being, be as effectual to ſay them away again? Thus ſaith the Lord, is enough to enſure the accompliſhment of the hardeſt things propheſied.

2. The glory of his grace, which is the great deſign of the whole myſtery of God, neceſſarily requires it. What does he intend by the myſtery of Chriſt, but the glory of his grace? Eph. i. 6. to ſhew the exceeding riches of it, chap. ii. 7. Therefore he has choſen the way that leads ſtraight to that point, Rom. iv. 16. Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace. The worm is deſpicable in itſelf; but being the ſubject of glorious grace, if it ſhould miſcarry in its attempts, the glory of grace is ſunk, as the precious loading with the ſhip caſt away. Wherefore, that his grace may be glorified, if it be in a worm threſhing mountains, thoſe mountains muſt needs be threſhed away by that worm. Though that ſacred fire be but like a ſpark, in the midſt of a ſea of corruption, it muſt not only be preſerved in, but dry up that ſea quite and clean.

3. By an unalterable decree, there muſt be a conformity betwixt the little worm and the great worm Jacob, the little one's Kinſman-redeemer; Rom. viii. 29. ‘For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt-born among many brethren.’ Now, the great worm, the man Chriſt, a worm and no man, Pſal. xxii. 6. has encountered mountains, and threſhed them away. Where are the four monarchies, the moſt towering mountains that ever ſet up their heads on the earth? The chief worm Jacob has threſhed them away to chaff, which is away with the wind, Dan ii. 35. The mountains ſtood before him through the world, with all the faſtneſs that human learning and the power of the ſword could give; but by his few fiſhermen he threſhed them away; and the prophecy is fulfilled, Pſal. lxxii. 16. There ſhall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the firſt fruits thereof ſhall ſhake like Lebanon, and they of the city ſhall flouriſh like graſs of the earth. Now many mountains ſtand before the little worm: but where will that conformity to heaven's beloved pattern be, if they alſo do not threſh them away.

4. The little worm Jacob is in reality but a member of the great one, Jeſus Chriſt. Take away that, and worm Jacob is as inſignificant for threſhing of mountains, as any worm that crawls on the earth, John xv. 5. ‘Without me ye can do nothing.’ Fix that, and worm Jacob has a kind of derived omnipotence, verſ. 7. ‘If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye ſhall aſk what ye will, and it ſhall be done unto you.’ Phil. iv. 13. ‘I can do all things through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me.’ And it is fixed: ſo their threſhing is Chriſt's threſhing, Col. i. 24. And ye may well allow Chriſt's threſhing away mountains, with a little finger of his body. If with the finger of God he caſt out devils, with the leaſt of his fingers he may caſt down mountains.

5. laſtly, All the mountains that ſtand before worm Jacob, are burnt mountains; ſo they are far eaſier to threſh than one would think. The mountain of the Babyloniſh monarchy ſtood before worm Jacob, and barred his way ſeventy years: at length God ſets fire in the bowels of it, and makes it a burnt mountain; and then bids worm Jacob threſh, and it flies away with the wind: Jer. li. 25. Behold, I am againſt thee, O deſtroying mountain, ſaith the Lord, which deſtroyeſt all the earth, and I will ſtretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain. By the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, all the mountains that ſtand between worm Jacob and heaven are burnt mountains. Chriſt has gone through the bowels of them with his fire, undone their conſiſtence, burnt the rocks to lime; they are nothing now but the ſhape of mountains, with a thin ſcorched ſurface: they will give way at the threſhing of worm Jacob, like the apples of Sodom, that being touched go to duſt between one's fingers: Micah ii. 13. ‘The breaker is come up before them: they have broken up, and have paſſed through the gate, and are gone out by it; and their King ſhall paſs before them, and the Lord on the head of them.’ Nahum iii. 12. ‘All thy ſtrong holds ſhall be like fig-trees with the firſt-ripe figs: if they be ſhaken, they ſhall even fall into the mouth of the eater.’ Compare Iſa. xxvi. 19. ‘Thy dead men ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe: awake and ſing, ye that dwell in the duſt: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth ſhall caſt out the dead.’ Hoſ. xiii. 14. ‘I will ranſom them from the power of the grave: I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction; repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes.’

Inf. 1. The ſtruggles of the church with all her adverſaries, will have a ſurpriſingly comfortable iſſue at length. As weak as ſhe is, and as ſtrong and numerous as they are, ſhe will infallibly have ſucceſs, ſurpriſing ſucceſs, againſt them, attending the encounter with them: Micah. iv. 11, 12, 13. ‘Now alſo many nations are gathered againſt thee, that ſay, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither underſtand they his counſel: for he ſhall gather them as the ſheaves into the floor. Ariſe and threſh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs braſs, and thou ſhall beat in pieces many people: and I will conſecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their ſubſtance unto the Lord of the whole earth.’ And as to the preſent ſtate of the church, learn, 1*ſt*, It is not at all ſtrange, nor will it make the caſe of this church hopeleſs, that prodigiouſly high mountains, higher than our fathers ſaw, are raiſed up againſt her, overtopping worm Jacob, and threatening to cruſh him: mountains of national guilt of forty years gathering, laid upon the top of the mountains of guilt raiſed by our fathers: profanity overflowing, and become faſhionable; a conſpiracy carried on in the houſe of her friends, againſt the grace of Chriſt, and ſerious godlineſs, to palm upon us refined Heatheniſm for Chriſtianity; the foundations ſtruck at, mountains of damnable hereſies and blaſphemies againſt the perſon of Chriſt, and divine authority of the ſcriptures; and the advanced learning of the age improved to theſe monſtrous ends. But,

2*dly*, Aſſuredly theſe mountains will be brought down, though we have all ground to expect, that multitudes ſhall be cruſhed to death with threſhing judgments for bringing them down; yet neither the one nor the other ſhall cruſh worm Jacob, but he ſhall ſee them all blown away with the wind.

3*dly*, It is worm Jacob ſhall threſh and beat them ſmall: a believing, praying, wreſtling, though deſpiſed remnant, will bring them down; though they ſtand immoveable againſt all the merely rational and politic methods uſed againſt them.

Inf. 2. They are not for heaven, that are not for threſhing away the mountains in their way to it. As,

1*ſt*, Such as are not exerciſed unto godlineſs; that pretend to believe, but trouble not themſelves with the work of mortification, letting theſe mountains ſtand unmoleſted: Gal. v. 24. ‘They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, with the affections and luſts.’ Whatever kindred ye pretend to worm Jacob, if you had any thing of his nature, ye would threſh, in mortification.

2*dly*, Such as are partial in their obedience, that are not for threſhing the mountains in their way without exception, Mark x. 21, 22. Such a luſt they are content to ſacrifice, but there is a darling one to be ſpared: any trouble they would bear, but only ſuch a one as God lays before them, they can never think to lay their fair neck under that yoke: that is to ſay, they will ſcatter the molehills, but have no heart to venture on the mountains.

3*dly*, Backſliders, that fall a-threſhing, but give over before the mountains begin to give way, or be beaten ſmall; (Heb. x. 38.;) they draw back their hand, Luke ix. 62. Theſe are like thoſe that came out of Egypt, but fell in the wilderneſs through their unbelief, thinking there was no making it againſt the Anakims.

Inf. 3. laſt, Serious ſouls ſenſible of their weakneſs, but reſolute to combat whatever difficulties are between them and heaven, be the iſſue what it will, ſhall certainly be bleſſed with ſurpriſing ſucceſs, to their own eternal wonder. The worm ſhall threſh away the mountains.

I would ſay to ſuch, Go on and proſper: threſh on, worm Jacob, thou ſhalt beat them ſmall.

1. Threſh on the mountains of oppoſition that ſtand in your way, from earth or hell; thou ſhalt get through them all at length; and thou ſhall ſtand on the ſea of glaſs having the harp of God; and ſhalt ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; juſt and true are thy ways, thou King of ſaints, Rev. xv. 2, 3.

2. Threſh on the mountain of troubles, trials, and afflictions. Let none of them, be they never ſo high and formidable, prevail to ſeparate betwixt your God and you; they will be beat to duſt at length, and blown away from before you; Rev. vii. 9. 10. 14. ‘After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, ſtood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Salvation to our God which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.——Theſe are they which came out of great tribulation, and have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.’

3. Threſh on the mountain of corruption, indwelling ſin; threſh on every height therein, particularly that top of it that is the ſin that eaſily beſets you; infallibly ye will get it down at length. Paul ſaw this while he was threſhing it, Rom. vii. 24, 25. O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death! I thank God, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord.

Say not, Alas! I am weak, my threſhing will be in vain. No, though you have no more ſtrength for them, than a worm for a mountain, it will not be in vain. God will have theſe mountains threſhed by worms.

But thou wilt ſay, Alas! I have threſhed long without ſucceſs. Anſw. Threſh on; there muſt be patient enduring ere the mountain fall, Heb. vi. 15. ‘After Abraham had patiently endured, he obtained the promiſe:’ but there is an oath mediating betwixt the promiſe and its accompliſhment that it cannot fail, ver. 17, Gr. Mind the walls of Jericho. Have ye not had a partial ſucceſs ſometimes? be ſure then of the total. So it is with Jeſus himſelf, Heb. ii. 8. ‘Thou haſt put all things in ſubjection under his feet. For in that he put all in ſubjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we ſee not yet all things put under him.’

The laſt mountain to be threſhed away is death, and ye ſhall beat that ſmall too, 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55. ‘When this corruptible ſhall have put on incorruption, and this mortal ſhall have put on immortality, then ſhall be brought to paſs the ſaying that is written, Death is ſwallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory?’

After all, it is a mighty wonder, worm Jacob threſhing the mountains. But the threſhing worm is ſhod from heaven, and ſo is fitted to threſh. Three things this threſhing inſtrument is ſhod with. (1.) A word of command, calling to the work. (2.) A word of promiſe, ſecuring the ſucceſs. (3.) The uſe of means of Heaven's appointment for reaching the end. If any of theſe be wanting, there will be no threſhing the mountains away: a plain inſtance we have in the rationaliſts of the age laying aſide the doctrine of a crucified Chriſt, and ſubſtituting in the room thereof the dry and ſapleſs doctrines of Heatheniſm; which God will never countenance to renew the hearts or reform the lives of any, as being contrary to the appointment of Heaven for that purpoſe. But worm Jacob, influenced by the command of God, excited by the promiſe of ſucceſs, and uſing the proper means, ſhall threſh the mountains, and beat them ſmall, and ſhall make the hills as chaff.

The Caſe of PETITIONERS at the COURT of HEAVEN conſidered;

O R,

The Neceſſity of praying always, and not fainting.

Two SERMONS, preached on a Sacramental Occaſion at Maxton, July 15. and 16. 1727.

LUKE xviii. 1.

And he ſpake a parable unto them, to this end, that men ought always to pray, and not to faint.

THE time of this life is the time of trial; only in the life to come is full eaſe to be expected. Now is the warfare, and partial victories; the complete victory comes not till death. If we muſt have our portion of goods in hand preſently, and cannot wait, we will ſoon be through it, and have nothing when we need moſt. If we mind for heaven then, we muſt be reſolute, ſet a ſtiff heart to a ſtay brae, and hold forward whatever ſtorms blow in our face, as we ſee in the words of the the text. Wherein we have,

1. The Lord's inſiſting to teach his diſciples, And he ſpake a parable unto them, &c. That the relative them refers to his diſciples, appears by the continued connection of theſe words with the diſcourſe from chap. xvii. 22. And he changes in it his manner of teaching, making a practical improvement in a parable, of what he had before taught them in plain ſtyle. Gr. Now he ſpake alſo a parable unto them, to impreſs the leſſon the more lively, both on their minds, memories, and affections.

2. The new leſſon he taught them, That men ought always to pray, and not to faint; that there would be a neceſſity of their praying always, and not fainting. The diſcourſe whence it is inferred, among other things bears, (1.) That their comforts ſhould be leſs than they were then, verſ. 22. 'And he ſaid unto the diſciples, 'The days will come when ye ſhall deſire to ſee one of 'the days of the Son of man, and ye ſhall not ſee it.' (2.) Their temptations more, verſ. 23. 'And they ſhall 'ſay to you, See here, or ſee there; go not after them.' (3.) That the world would be long in deep ſecurity, and they long in deep diſtreſs, ſo that they might be in hazard of giving it over; ſee verſ. 26.—33. (4.) That the Lord would come to them at length, and make all right; but when or where they are not to know.

Now, to direct them how to carry in ſuch a difficult ſituation, he ſpeaks the following parable; the ſcope and ſum of which comes to this, That men ought always to pray, and not to faint. So he tells them, (1.) The courſe they muſt hold, blow the wind as it will: they muſt always pray; not that they muſt be always on their knees, but they muſt keep a habitual courſe of praying. (2.) What they muſt beware of; they muſt not faint. The word ſignifies a ſuccumbing or yielding under the preſſure of evils or hardſhips, as one ſinking under a burden, or giving over by reaſon of the badneſs of the way, Eph. iii. 13. and is well rendered fainting, for the apoſtle explains it by being looſened, Gal. vi. 9. becauſe in fainting or ſwooning the nerves are looſed, relaxed, or unbended, and ſo activity is gone. So whatever hardſhips are met with, we muſt not be ſo cut-wearied with them, as to give over. (3.) The neceſſity of this; men ought or muſt needs always pray and not faint. If we give over, we are gone; if we faint, and break off our courſe, all is loſt.

DOCT. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt has kindly intimated to all that have buſineſs at the court of heaven, the neceſſity of ſo managing themſelves, that they ſtill hang on there, and not faint, whatever entertainment they meet with during the dependance of their proceſs.

In this doctrine there are three heads to be conſidered.

I. Our Lord's kind intimation of this way of his Father's court.

II. The way of the court of heaven, in tryſting petitioners with ſome hardſhips, during the dependence of their proceſs.

III. The duty of the petitioners, to hang on, and not faint, whatever they meet with.

IV. Apply.

I. The firſt thing to be conſidered, is, Our Lord's kind intimation of this way of his Father's court. And here we would ſhew, 1. The import of Chriſt's making this intimation to petitioners there; and, 2. The weight and moment of this intimation.

Firſt, I ſhall ſhew the import of Chriſt's making this intimation to petitioners at his Father's court.

1. The darkneſs that is naturally on the minds of poor ſinners, with reſpect to heaven's management about them. We may ſay as Jer. v. 4. 'Surely theſe are poor, 'they are fooliſh; for they know not the way of the 'Lord, nor the judgment of their God.' The obſcureſt ſhepherd from the remoteſt corner, would know more of the king's court, if he had buſineſs there, than the wiſeſt mortals naturally know of the way of the court of heaven. Dark clouds are about the ſovereign manager to us: 'his way is in the ſea, and his path in the great 'waters, and his footſteps are not known.' Even Job, that had been a long hanger on about the court of heaven, knew little of the way of it, and behoved to have a new leſſon of it, Job xxxviii. 1, 2. Then the Lord anſwered Job out of the whirl-wind, and ſaid, Who is this that darkeneth counſel by words without knowledge?

2. Chriſt's good-will to the ſinner's buſineſs going right there: Exod. xxviii. 29. 'And Aaron ſhall bear 'the names of the children of Iſrael in the breaſt-plate 'of judgment, upon his heart, when he goeth in unto 'the holy place, for a memorial before the Lord continually.' He ſhews it by his concern for their right managing it: he knows they are unacquainted with the manner of the court of heaven, and ſo are in hazard of marring their own buſineſs: and therefore he is concerned to let them on the road to get a good anſwer. The poor ſoul that is ſometimes at the brink of groning and giving it over, is moved to ſtart back from that precipice, and grone and look up again. Whence is that, but from Chriſt's ſecret making of this intimation to them by his Spirit? Rom. vii. 26. Likewiſe the Spirit alſo helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we ſhould pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itſelf maketh interceſſion for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

3. That our Lord ſees ſinners are in hazard of fainting from the entertainment they may meet with during the dependence of their proceſs, Heb. xii. 3. He knows their frame, the haſtineſs of their ſpirits, John vii. 6. how apt they are to take delays for denials, and be diſcouraged with what is deſigned only for their trial. Therefore he opens and forwarns them of the manner of the court, Iſa. xxviii. 16. 'He that believeth ſhall not 'make haſte.'

4. They that ſhall hang on, and not faint, ſhall come ſpeed at length. Luke xviii. 6, 7, 8. 'And the Lord 'ſaid, Hear what the unjuſt judge ſaith. And ſhall not 'God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night 'unto him, though he bear long with them? I tell you 'that he will avenge them ſpeedily.' It is not poſſible that the ſoul continuing reſolute to go to no other door, but hanging on at Chriſt's door to make its grave there, if it be not let in, can be ſhut out always, John vi. 37. ——'Him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.' Wilful faith, that will be forward in face of killing and ſlaying, Job xiii. 15. will get all its will at length, Mat. xv. 28. 'Then Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid unto her, O 'woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as 'thou wilt.'

Secondly, The weight and moment of this intimation. This will appear, if it is conſidered in a four-fold light.

1. Jeſus Chriſt who makes it, has experienced it in his own caſe. The man Chriſt, the head of the church had the moſt important buſineſs at the court of heaven that ever came before it; viz. for through-bearing in a work on which his Father's glory, and the ſalvation of an elect world, depended. And he was often in prayer; he ſpent a whole night in it, Luke vi. 12. But ſee his experience of this manner of the court, Pſal. xxii. 1, 2. 'My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? 'why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the 'words of my roring? O my God I cry in the day-time, 'but thou heareſt not: and in the night ſeaſon, and 'am not ſilent. And lxix. 1, 2, 3. 'Save me, O God, 'for the waters are come in unto my ſoul. I ſink in 'deep mire, where there is no ſtanding: I am come 'into deep waters where the floods overflow me. I am 'weary of my crying, my throat is dried: mine eyes 'fail while I wait for my God.' Now, if this was the manner with the great Petitioner, how can we expect it ſhould fare otherwiſe with us? nay, God in his dealing with Chriſt the Head, ſet down a pattern to be followed thereafter in his dealing with the members, Rom. viii. 29. For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt born among many brethren. Compare verſ. 28. And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.

2. He is the great Prophet of heaven, whoſe office it is to reveal the manner of the court to poor ſinners. He is fitted for it, as being on all the ſecrets of it, which the moſt favourite angel cannot dive into, John i. 18. Therefore we may be very ſure, this is the manner of the court; and that thoſe who will manage their buſineſs at it otherwiſe, will be ſure to mar it.

3. He is the only interceſſor there, the Father's Secretary, the Solicitor for poor ſinners there. There is never a petition received at the throne of grace, but what is preſented by him; nor graciouſly granted there, but through his interceſſion, Rev. viii. 3, 4. nor an anſwer graciouſly returned, or an order iſſued out for the ſinner's relief, but it comes through his hand, John v. 22. 'For the Father judgeth no man; but hath committed 'all judgment unto the Son.' Who then can doubt of the neceſſity by him intimated? and who muſt not ſee the kind aſpect that the Interceſſor's hinting this to the petitioners has on their buſineſs?

4. He is himſelf the hearer of prayer. The angels are called to worſhip him, Heb. i. 6. Stephen in his moſt ſerious moments, when he was neareſt heaven, prays to him, Acts vii. 59. a plain evidence, that he is true God, the Father's equal, the Supreme, the moſt high God; for it is written, Deut. x. 20. Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God: him ſhalt thou ſerve, and to him ſhalt thou cleave, and ſwear by his name. Compare Matth. iv. 10. Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. Pſal. lxxxiii. 18. That men may know, that thou whoſe name alone is Jehovah, art the Moſt High over all the earth. And the ſcripture condemns ſerving thoſe that are not by nature gods, Gal. iv. 8. Therefore Chriſt is God by nature, true God, neceſſarily exiſtent, independent, God of himſelf, though not a Son of himſelf: but the divine eſſence being eternally and neceſſarily communicated from the Father to the Son, the Fathers communicating it, and the Son's receiving it, are equally glorious. Since then he is the hearer of prayer, that makes this intimation, it is equivalent to a promiſe, that prayers ſo managed ſhall certainly come ſpeed at length; as appears from Iſa. xlv. 19. I ſaid not unto the ſeed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain.

II. The ſecond thing to be conſidered, is, The way of the court of heaven, in tryſting petitioners with ſome hardſhips during the dependance of their proceſs. Here I ſhall give you, 1. A ſwatch of that way; and 2. Some reaſons of that way, whereby to account for it in a ſuitableneſs to the divine perfections.

Firſt, A ſwatch of that way in a few particulars. Though the Lord ſometimes gives his people very quick diſpatch, Iſa. lxv. 24. 'And it ſhall come to paſs, that 'before they call, I will anſwer, and whiles they are 'yet ſpeaking, I will hear,' yet it is very uſual to try them another way.

1. Oft-times there is a deep ſilence from the throne, Matth. xv. 23. and that even when the petitioner is crying with the greateſt earneſtneſs, and crying inceſſantly, Pſal. xxii. 1, 2. and is at the point of being overwhelmed for want of help, Pſal. cxliii. 7. yet no voice to be perceived, no motion appearing towards the petitioner's relief.

2. Oft-times they get a very angry-like anſwer. The woman of Canaan got a couple of them, one on the back of another, Matth. xv. 24. 26. 'But he anſwered and 'ſaid, I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the 'houſe of Iſrael.——It is not meet to take the children's 'bread and to caſt it to dogs.' It is very ordinary for Heaven's petitioners to hear ſome Sinai thunders, when they are on mount Zion; to come in a low and heavy caſe to the throne, and to go away laid lower than they came. So going with their petitions to the throne of grace, they are teazed there to purpoſe, and many a foul ply of their heart and life is opened out to them, and they come back with a breaſt full of convictions, Judges x. 10.——14.

3. Many a time at the ſight of the King on the throne they falter and their ſpeech fails, that they cannot get words to tell what they would be at, Pſal. lxxvii. 3, 4. Hence many broken ſentences in their petitions, which yet are underſtood well enough in heaven, the blanks being filled up with groans, Pſal. vi. 3. Rom. viii. 26, 27.

4. Diſappointed expectations are a piece of very ordinary entertainment there, Jer. viii. 15. We looked for peace but no good came: and for a time of health, and behold trouble. Hope may be raiſed, and yet be deferred, till it make a ſick heart. Theſe diſappointments may meet the petitioner over and over again, Cant. iii.

1, 2. By night on my bed I ſought him whom my ſoul loveth: I ſought him, but I found him not. I will riſe now, and go about the city in the ſtreets, and in the broad ways I will ſeek him whom my ſoul loveth: I ſought him but I found him not. If ye aſk, How long the courſe of them may laſte? I know of no term fixed for them but one, and that one is enough for faith, Pſal. ix. 18. 'For 'the needy ſhall not always be forgotten: the expecta'tion of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever.' And if ye go to another door than the Lord's, the courſe of your diſappointments will have no end.

5. Many a time looking for an anſwer, providence drives a courſe apparently juſt contrary to the granting of their petitiin; ſo is fulfilled that, Pſal. lxv. 5. 'By 'terrible things in righteouſneſs, wilt thou anſwer us, 'O God of our ſalvation.' And it may be ſo ſtunning, as to require much faith, not to take that for the final anſwer, as if God had ſaid, 'Speak no more to me 'of that matter;' and yet the wheel of providence may be but fetching a compaſs to come to the point deſired. Thus the ſunk ſpirits of the Iſraelites were raiſed in hope, Exod. iv. 31. 'And the people believed; and when 'they heard that the Lord had viſited the children of 'Iſrael, and that he had looked upon their affliction, 'then they bowed their heads and worſhipped.' But the very firſt thing that comes after that, chap. v. is, that they are in worſe condition than ever, their bondage is more intolerable; which made Moſes's faith all ſtagger, verſ. 22, 23. And Moſes returned unto the Lord, and ſaid, Lord, wherefore haſt thou ſo evil entreated this people? why is it that thou haſt ſent me? for ſince I came to Pharaoh to ſpeak in thy name, he hath done evil to this people; neither haſt thou delivered the people at all.

6. laſtly, Oft-times the Lord, inſtead of eaſing the petitioner, lays new burdens on him, Jer. viii. 15. 'We 'looked for peace, but no good came; and for a time 'of health, and behold trouble.' Inſtead of curing the old wound, there are new ones given. So that ſometimes the waters come in on every ſide, and compaſs the poor ſoul: and yet the Lord, though he ſee it meet to give the ſinner ſuch a gliff, may have no mind he ſhould drown for all that, Pſal. cxvi. 3. 'The ſorrows of death 'compaſſed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon 'me: I found trouble and ſorrow.' Verſ. 6. 'The 'Lord preſerveth the ſimple: I was brought low, and 'he helped me:' and lxxxviii. 17. 'They came round 'about me daily like water, they compaſſed me about 'together.' So it was in Job's caſe.

Uſe 1. Whoſoever of you would manage your buſineſs ſucceſsfully at the court of heaven, on this occaſion, put on reſoluteneſs to hang on about the Lord's hand, and not to faint, till ye get it to a happy iſſue. And, 1ſt, Lay the great buſineſs of ſalvation cloſe to heart, let it be your main buſineſs; the ſecuring of your ſaving intereſt in Chriſt, now when you have this ſolemn occaſion of both the word of the covenant, and the ſeal of the covenant together; not knowing if ever ye may have ſuch a favourable occaſion again. Time goes away, death is haſtening on, it is dangerous to delay. If ye be indifferent in the buſineſs, ye will never hang on.

2d'y, Lay it down for a concluſion, Ye muſt have Chriſt, or ye periſh. Pinching need makes men importunate: If ye feel not that, ye will ſoon weary and never bring the matter to a good iſſue, John vi. 67, 68. 'Then ſaid Jeſus unto the twelve, Will ye al[illegible]o away? 'Then Simon Peter anſwered him, Lor[illegible]o whom 'ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.' All doors elſe ſeen cloſed, will make the ſinner hang on at Chriſt's door.

3dly, Embrace Chriſt in the great promiſe of the goſpel, believing the promiſe: taking a dead gripe of it, never to part. It is held out to you and every one of you, Heb. iv. 1. 'Let us therefore fear, leſt a promiſe 'being left us of entering into his reſt, any of you ſhould 'ſeem to come ſhort of it.' It is the report from heaven to be believed, Iſ. liii. 1. Without faith there is no eviting of fainting, Pſal. xxvii. 13. I had fainted, unleſs I had believed to ſee the goodneſs of the Lord in the land of the living.

4thly, Take an eternal farewell of the vain world, and deceitful luſts; reſolving, that, come what will, ye will hang by Chriſt in the promiſe, if ye ſhould die there; ſaying with Job, chap. xiii. 15. Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him. None come aright to Chriſt but they that come reſolutely.

Laſtly, Be not haſty, but reſolve to wait in expectation, ſetting no time to the Lord's comforting you, Iſa. xxviii. 16. 'He that believeth ſhall not make haſte.' Micah vii. 9. 'I will bear the indignation of the Lord, 'becauſe I have ſinned againſt him, untill he plead my 'cauſe, and execute judgment for me: he will bring 'me forth to the light, and I ſhall behold his righteouſ'neſs.' If all thy life long ſhould paſs uncomforted, peace and comfort in the end is well worth waiting on.

Uſe 2. Be not ſurpriſed, nor offended at the way of God, though in your addreſſes to the throne ye meet with apparent harſh entertainment. They have ſeemed to themſelves to be boaſted away, who taking the buffet, have got the bit too by waiting on, like the woman of Canaan, Matth. xv. 21.——28. The importunity of faith, that is, a continued truſt in the promiſe, and an inceſſant uſe of the means, will prevail.

Secondly, I ſhall give you ſome reaſons of that way, whereby to account for it in a ſuitableneſs to the divine perfections.

1. This way is taken with petitioners in the court of heaven; for thereby God is glorified, and his attributes more illuſtrated than otherwiſe they would be. In this view of it, Paul welcomes it in his own caſe, though it was hard to ſenſe, 2 Cor. xii. 9. And he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in mine infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me. God treating his people thus, diſplays his wiſdom, in guiding the broken veſſel ſafely through many rocks and ſhelves to land without ſplitting; that afterwards they are made to ſay, None elſe but he could have done it, Iſ. ix. 6. 'His name ſhall be called Won'derful, Counſellor;' his power, in ſupporting them under a preſſure, that otherwiſe they would ſink under, 2 Cor. i. 8, 9. 'For we would not, brethren, have you 'ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Aſia, 'that we were preſſed out of meaſure, above ſtrength, 'inſomuch that we deſpaired even of life; but we had 'the ſentence of death in ourſelves, that we ſhould truſt 'not in ourſelves, but in God which raiſeth the dead;' his grace, mercy, and goodneſs, in ſeaſonable interpoſings thereof, when their foot is ready to ſlip, Pſal. xciv. 18. When I ſaid, my foot ſlippeth: thy mercy, O Lord, held me up. 2 Cor. xii. 9. forecited.

2. Hereby the ſtate of petitioners is tried, and a plain difference conſtituted between hypocrites and the ſincere, Matth. xxiv. 13. 'He that ſhall endure unto the 'end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.' God's petitioners in the groſs are like Gideon's army, Judges vii. far more than are to be truſted. So God brings them down to theſe waters of trial; and there is a heap of them that muſt have a fill preſently, or they faint, cannot go forward; ſo they are ſet off, like the men that bowed down on their knees to drink, Job. xxvii. 10. Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he always call upon God? Others are diſpoſed to endure hardneſs, without fainting, like the men that lapped; and they are kept as meet to have their petitions granted at length, Luke xviii. 7. And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him, though he bear long with them?

3. Hereby the graces of believing petitioners are tried, both as to the reality and ſtrength of them; particularly their faith and patience, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7. Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations. That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. James i. 12. Bleſſed is the man that endureth temptation: for when he is tried, he ſhall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promiſed to them that love him. Our Lord takes great pleaſure in the faith and patience of his people, and therefore he puts them ſore to it in theſe points, like the woman of Canaan, Matth. xv. that they may have occaſion to exert them vigorouſly. Sometimes they meet with ſuch a ſhock that they are foundered in them: anon there is a ſecret breathing, and they get to their feet again, and act more vigorouſly than before, like a giant refreſhed with wine, Jonah ii. 4. ‘Then I ſaid, I am caſt out of thy ſight; yet I will look again to thy holy temple.’ Hereby they have a double benefit; they ſee the reality of their faith and patience better than in a calm, and the ſtrength of them more than they could have expected, and withal that they are other things than efforts of natural abilities, no more to be their product, than roſes of the deſart: Rom. v. 3, 4, 5. ‘And not only ſo, but we glory in tribulations alſo, knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope: and hope maketh not aſhamed, becauſe the love of God is ſhed abroad in our hearts, by the holy Ghoſt which is given unto us.’

4. Hereby believers are humbled, and taught that they hold of free grace. The exalting of grace is the great deſign of the whole contrivance of the goſpel. Therefore faith is made the turning point in it, the hinge of it as to us; Rom. iv. 16. ‘Therefore it is of faith, that it might be by grace; to the end the promiſe might be ſure to all the ſeed.’ Therefore this method is uſed in the diſpenſation of Heaven's favours according to it, Deut. viii. 2. ‘And thou ſhalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee theſe forty years in the wilderneſs, to humble thee, and prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldſt keep [illegible] commandments, or no.’ They that buy with their money muſt be ſerved preſently; but beggars muſt be content to wait on. There are powerful remains of a legal ſpirit in the beſt, kything in requiring ſupply for their needs, with little ſenſe of their unworthineſs; and in a diſpoſition to fret, if they be not quickly anſwered. It takes much hewing to bring down theſe; to empty the man of himſelf, and to let him ſee that God is no debtor to him for any thing, great or ſmall.

5. This way is taken from the honour of the word, Pſal. cxxxviii. 2.——Thou haſt magnified thy word above all thy name. There are many letters of God's name, but this Bible is the capital letter of it: and there is not one diſpenſation of providence, that magnifies the Bible more than this. It is even the thing that bears the head above, and keeps the heart from fainting, in this caſe, Rom. xv. 4. ‘For whatſoever things were written aforetime, were written for our learning; that we, through patience and comfort of the ſcriptures, might have hope.’ This treatment at the court of Heaven ſends the petitioner to the records, which gladden his heart, finding that it has been the ancient way of the court; and in a deſart way it is no ſmall comfort to the traveller, to find a track, and the print of ſome's feet before him. It makes him mark narrowly, and greedily catch at a word; and to diſcover a treaſure, where many a time, when he went over it before, he ſaw nothing.

6. laſtly, It is taken to make them long to be home. God's children are in this world, young heirs that are abroad out of their Father's country: they ſend their letters, and draw their bills on their Father, and while they are ſpeedily anſwered, at every turn, they live at eaſe in the ſtrange country, and are not ſolicitous to be home: but their father cures them of that, letting them at length write over and over again, without an anſwer; and ceaſing to anſwer their bills: and then they long to be home.

III. The third thing to be conſidered, is, the duty of the petitioners to hang on, and not to faint, whatever they meet with. We may view it in theſe things following.

1. They muſt never lift their proceſs from the court of heaven, John vi. 67, 68.——‘Lord, to whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.’ It was Saul's ruin, that when God anſwered him not, he went to a witch; and the unbelieving Iſraelites, when they heard of the giants of Canaan, that they would be back to Egypt again, Numb. xiv. 4; and it is the ruin of many, when they find not the ſweet in religion that they expected, to go back to the world and their luſts, that will anſwer them, they think, ſooner. But whatever be your ſore, ye ſhould proteſt that it ſhall run for you, till the Lord put forth his own healing hand, and that ye will not go to another for cure, Lam. iii. 49, 50. Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaſeth not, without any intermiſſion: till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven.

2. They muſt never give over praying, but pray always. They that will pray about the time of a communion, and afterwards leave it off by degrees, will loſe all their pains, and prove themſelves to be hypocrites, Job xxvii. 10. ‘Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? will he always call upon God?’ And Satan ſometimes plies diſtreſſed ſouls to give up with it, as what they may ſee they will do no good with, for that God will not hear them. But that is a deceit of hell which ye muſt never yield to; no not though God ſhould continue to anſwer you not a word; nay, not though your attempting to pray, ſhould ſeem to ſerve for nothing but to ſet Satan a raging againſt you; for it is God's command, That men pray always. There is leſs ill in miſmanaging of prayer than giving it over altogether; for that is tamely to yield ourſelves to Satan's will. And though ye may be in ſuch confuſion, as to take the devil's whiſpers within you for your own voice, God will carefully diſtinguiſh the two, and not lay that to your charge wherein ye are pure ſufferers. And continuing to pray, ye are in the way of duty, wherein ye may expect God will hear and pity at length.

3. They muſt inſiſt on their tabled petitions, while their need remains, whatever entertainment they ſeem to meet with, as the woman of Canaan did, Matth. xv. If ye inſiſt not, ye will be conſtructed to have fallen from it; but importunity will ſpeed at long-run, Luke xi. 8. I ſay unto you, Though he will not riſe and give him, becauſe he is his friend: yet becauſe of his importunity, he will riſe, and give him as many as he needeth. And indeed, need continuing to pinch, and the petitioner giving over his crying for ſupply, is fainting with a witneſs.

Caſe. But may it not be that the Lord may ſay, Speak no more to me of this matter? Anſw. It is true it may be ſo, as the Lord did to Moſes, Deut. iii. 26. ‘But the Lord was wroth with me for your ſakes, and would not hear me: and the Lord ſaid unto me, Let it ſuffice thee, ſpeak no more unto me of this matter.’ But in that caſe I conceive, (1.) The Lord ſhews his people they do not need that thing; let it ſuffice thee, or thou haſt much, or enough. And to quiet Moſes in this caſe, he gave him a ſight of the land from Piſgah, ver. 27. (2.) The help of the Spirit as to praying in that particular is withdrawn. There is an embargo laid on them in that point. Speak no more unto me of this matter.

4. They muſt carry all their incident needs in new petitions, to the ſame throne of grace, where the former petition may have been long lying, and ſtill unanſwered; and ſo purſue all together. The latter muſt not drive out the former, nor the former keep back the latter. It is one of the ways how the Lord keeps his people hanging about his hand without fainting, by ſending them ſeveral loads above their burden: which loads he takes off ſoon at their requeſt; and ſo makes them go under their burden the more eaſily. Theſe ſhort incident proceſſes, that get a ſpeedy anſwer, confirm their faith and hope in waiting on for the anſwer of the main. I believe it will be found, that the Lord's children who have had the moſt tedious proceſs before the throne, have not wanted experience of very quick diſpatches in the time, Iſa. lxv. 24. 'And it ſhall come to paſs, that before they call, I will anſwer, and whiles they are yet ſpeaking, I will hear.'

5. They muſt continue in the faith of the promiſe, never quit the gripe of it; but truſt and believe, that it ſhall certainly be accompliſhed, though the wheels of providence ſhould ſeem to drive out over it and in over it, Rom. iv. 19, 20, 'And Abraham being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body now dead, when he was about an hundred years old, neither yet the deadneſs of Sarah's womb. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief; but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God.' Providence is not our Bible; the works of God may be very various, but the word of promiſe is always the ſame, it is never moved. Ye have a very poetical paſſage, Pſal. xviii. 7. and downwards. I think it proceeds upon this view, That though all the confuſions of the univerſe cannot move the promiſe; yet if hills, earth, fire, waters, heavens, were all ſtanding before it to hinder its accompliſhment, it would move them all out of their places, and make its way through them.

6. They muſt keep up hope of the thing promiſed over the belly of all improbabilities, 1 Pet. i. 13. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be ſober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. Faith opening the door of the promiſe, hope ſees the bleſſed anſwer, to the petition lying at the King's hand, however long it may be ere it be tranſmitted. That is very pleaſing to God, Pſal. cxlvii. 11. 'The Lord taketh pleaſure in thoſe that hope in his mercy.'

7. laſtly, If at any time they begin to faint, they muſt wreſtle againſt it, that they go not quite away, Heb. x. 35. 'Caſt not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompence of reward.' If faith and hope fail, ſo will patience: but ye muſt ſet yourſelves to believe over the belly of ſenſe, and hope againſt hope.

Uſe, Chriſtians, communicants, and whoſoever of you would have your buſineſs go right in heaven, go from this place reſolute to hang on about the Lord's hand, and not to faint, whatever you have met with, or ſhall meet with from that airth. Have a horror of fainting, giving over, or going back to another door. Conſider,

1. If ye faint and give it over, your ſuit is loſt, ye have given up with it. And,

1*ſt*, If your ſuit be the main thing, the eternal well-being of your ſoul, which is what we all pretend to, then your ſoul is loſt, Heb. x. 38. 'If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him.' Be reſolute in religion, as ever you would not be eternally loſt; for none will get to heaven but thoſe that have a brow for a bargain, to yoke with difficulties in the way, and go through them. It is a concerning word, Rev. xxi. 8. But the fearful, and unbelieving,—ſhall have part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone: which is the ſecond death. I think it has a view to the fearful and unbelieving diſpoſition that kept the Iſraelites out of Canaan, Numb. xiii. 33. and xiv.

2*dly*, If it be a temporal mercy, ye may get it, but the foyſon will be out of it, at leaſt till ye repent of your fainting, Pſal. cvi. 15. 'He gave them their requeſt, but ſent leanneſs into their ſoul.'

2. If ye hold on, and faint not, be your on-waiting never ſo long, it ſhall not be in vain, Matth. xxiv. 13. 'He that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.' Gal. vi. 9. Let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due ſeaſon we ſhall reap, if we faint not.' God will never put thoſe away empty from him, that hang on, and will not go without the bleſſing.

3. He is well worth the waiting on. (1.) Though he is infinitely above us, he has waited long on us. (2.) The longer you are called to wait for a mercy, ye will readily find it the more valuable when it comes. The promiſe uſes to go longeſt with the biggeſt mercy: witneſs the promiſe of Chriſt, while many leſſer promiſes brought forth. (3.) His time will be found the due time, Gal. vi. 9. the beſt choſen time for the mercy's coming; witneſs the time of Iſaac's birth. (4.) Ye ſhall be ſure of ſome bleſſed of-fallings, while ye wait on, Pſal. xxvii. 14. 'Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thine heart: wait, I ſay, on the Lord.' and cxxxviii. 3. 'In the day when I cried, thou anſweredſt me; and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul.' Ye ſhall be ſure of ſome pledge of a good anſwer, Jer. lii. 31, 32.

4. laſtly, They have waited long, that have loſt all, by not having patience to wait a little longer, Exod. xxxii. 1 Sam. xiii. 1. 10. Therefore let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing, James i. 4. for in due ſeaſon ye ſhall reap, if ye faint not, Gal. vi. 2.

PETITIONERS at the COURT of HEAVEN encouraged.

O R,

The happy iſſue of praying always, and not fainting.

TWO SERMONS, preached on a Sacramental Occaſion at Galaſhiels, Auguſt 12. and 13. 1727.

LUKE xviii. 8.

I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily.

AT a late occaſion I ſpoke to the ſcope of this parable from verſ. 1. The parable itſelf we have verſ. 2.——5. the doctrine of it, verſ. 6, 7. In the text we have the doctrine of it repeated, amplified, and confirmed.

1. The doctrine of the parable is here repeated, He will avenge them. Our Lord had already laid it before his diſciples, verſ. 7. in very ſtrong terms: for it is a point upon the belief of which very much depends: particularly his people's praying always, and not fainting, q. d. God will certainly hear them at length; therefore theſe muſt hang on about his hand crying, and not faint.

1*ſt*, Conſider the parties for whom this benefit is ſecured to them. It refers to verſ. 7. and ſo the parties are, they that cry unto God night and day; and what that is, appears from the ſcope; it is even to pray always, and not to faint; which I have already explained. So they who having laid petitions for ſupply of their needs before the Lord, do hang on and inſiſt without fainting and giving over, are aſſured of a happy iſſue of their proceſs, however tedious it may be. This is good news to petitioners at the court of heaven, though their anſwer may have been ſo long delayed, that it ſeems as if they would never be heard: this may make them renew their ſuit and purſue as a giant refreſhed with wine.

Object. But it is expreſsly reſtricted to the elect; therefore, though I hang on never ſo long, I am, may be, none of God's elect, and therefore can have no encouragement from it. Anſw. The ſcope of the parable looks to men indefinitely, verſ. 1. 'That men ought always to pray, and not to faint;' and the term elect is no reſtriction of the cries that are to be heard, as if there were ſome that cry day and night unto God, that are elect ones: and others that cry day and night unto him, that are not elect ones. No: but the crying of the elect day and night in the ſenſe of the text, is propoſed as an evidence of eternal election: it is inferred from their ſo crying that they are elect ones, and therefore ſhall ſurely be heard. Q. d. The unjuſt judge heard a woman he had no regard for, becauſe ſhe came continually to him: how much more will a juſt God hear thoſe that are coming continually to him, ſince they are ſurely his choſen ones, elſe they would certainly give it over, and go to another door?

2dly, The benefit ſecured for them, He will avenge them; that is; agreeable to the general ſcope, he will hear them at length to their full ſatisfaction; their proceſs ſhall have a happy iſſue. But it is expreſſed by avenging of them, to intimate, (1.) That all the grievances that God's children labour under, and which ſend them crying to God for relief, ariſe from their adverſaries, temporal or ſpiritual, without them or within them. (2.) That they are not able to rid themſelves of their adverſaries, but muſt grapple with their burden till another hand take it off. (3.) That God will not only deliver them, but ſhew them juſt vengeance on the ſprings of their grievance.

2. The doctrine of the parable amplified, I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily. Though they think they are put to wait long, yet matters being weighed in an even balance, they ſhall have a quick return of their prayers.

3. The confirmation of the whole, I tell you. Our Lord Chriſt gives his word for it.

The doctrine from the firſt verſe was, That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt has kindly intimated to all that have buſineſs at the court of heaven, the neceſſity of ſo managing themſelves, that they ſtill hang on there, and not faint, whatever entertainment they meet with during the dependance of their proceſs. And, in purſuance of the ſame ſcope from the 8th verſe compared with the firſt, I obſerve the following.

DOCT. To move them that have buſineſs at the court of heaven, ſtill to hang on there, and not to faint, whatever hardſhips they meet with during the dependance of their proceſs, our Lord Jeſus hath expreſsly intimated, that ſuch petitioners ſhall certainly be heard to their hearts content, and that ſpeedily, in reality, however tedious their proceſs may ſeem to them for the time. Briefly, Jeſus Chriſt has given his word for it, that ſuch petitioners at the court of heaven as will hang on, and not faint, ſhall certainly be heard to their hearts content, and that ſpeedily.

In handling of this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. What is that treatment petitioners may meet with at the court of heaven, under which they will be in hazard of fainting.

II. Why petitioners are in hazard of fainting from ſuch treatment at the court of heaven.

III. Wherefore the Lord gives ſuch treatment to any of his petitioners.

IV. What is the import of this intimation made for this end.

V. The certainty of ſuch petitioners being heard at length.

VI. How they ſhall be heard to their hearts content.

VII. How it ſhall be ſpeedily, notwithſtanding of the long delay.

VIII. Apply.

I. Firſt, I ſhall ſhew what is that treatment petitioners may meet with at the court of heaven, under which they will be in hazard of fainting. I mentioned ſeveral particulars at another occaſion; I offer now only three things in general.

1. The weight and preſſure of their heavy caſe itſelf, whatever it is, may be long continued, notwithſtanding of all their addreſſes for help, Jer. viii. 20. The harveſt is paſt, the ſummer is ended, and we are not ſaved. They may come again and again to the throne of grace, with their burden on their back, and as often carry it away with them. And that is faintſome work. A ſhort trial, though it be ſharp, is but running with the footmen; but a long continued one is contending with horſes, apt to run one out of breath, Pſal. vi. 3. 'My ſoul is alſo 'ſore vexed: but thou, O Lord, how long?'

2. There may be no appearance of relief, Pſal. lxxiv. 9. We ſee not our ſigns, there is no more any prophet, neither is there any that knoweth how long. A glimpſe of an appearance of relief, though yet afar off, would be like a cordial to the weary attendants, howbeit their night may have been long and dark, and yet no ſign of day-break to be diſcerned. The petitioners are apt to faint, who, though they often liſten, can hear no voice; though they look oft to the throne, can diſcern no moving toward their relief, Pſal. cxix. 123. 'Mine eyes 'fail for thy ſalvation, and for the word of thy righte'ouſneſs.'

3. They may get incident weights laid on them, as a load above their burden, Pſal. lxix. 26. 'They perſe'cute him whom thou haſt ſmitten, and they talk to 'the grief of thoſe whom thou haſt wounded.' Theſe are like drops poured into a full cup, ready to cauſe it run over: like ſmart touches on a broken leg, inclining one readily to faint.

II. The ſecond thing to be ſpoke to, is, Why petitioners are in hazard of fainting from ſuch treatment at the court of heaven. Four things concur to it.

1. Natural weakneſs, Iſa. xl. 6. 'All fleſh is graſs, 'and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the 'field.' On this very view the Lord pities his children, Pſal. ciii. 13, 14. We have weak backs, eaſily bowed down under a heavy burden, Pſal. xxxviii. 6.; weak hearts, ſoon damped, where God ſhews himſelf our party; weak heads, and are ſoon brought to our wits end; weak hands, that can do little for ourſelves at a pinch; and weak knees, ready to bow, and let us go to the ground, after long hanging on.

2. Conſcience of guilt, Pſal. xxxvii. 5, 6. 'My wounds 'ſtink, and are corrupt: becauſe of my fooliſhneſs. I 'am troubled, I am bowed down greatly; I go mourn'ing all the day long. Guilt is a mother of fears, and fears cauſe fainting. The ſinner goes to God with his pinching caſe, he is not anſwered: preſently there is a quarrel apprehended, the man knows he is a criminal, and the guilty conſcience whiſpers in his ear, 'There 'is no hope.'

3. Unacquaintedneſs with the methods of ſovereignty, Pſal. lxxvii. 19. 'Thy way is in the ſea, and thy path 'in the great waters, and thy footſteps are not known.' The myſteries of the management of providence have perplexed ſaints of the firſt magnitude, as Aſaph, Jeremiah, &c. We are apt to meaſure God's way by our own, which occaſions much fainting in trials: whereas they differ as far as heaven and earth, Iſa. lv. 8, 9.

4. A ſtrong bias to unbelief, and walking by ſenſe, goes contrary to our duty and intereſt, 2 Cor. v. 7. We are apt to be impreſſed more with what we ſee and feel in providence, than what we hear from the word. And whereas we ſhould expound providence by the promiſe, the word being our rule, and ſo get the cordial virtue of it; we expound the promiſe by providence, and ſo put ourſelves in hazard of fainting: Luke xxiv. 20, 21. 25, 26. The chief prieſts and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him. But we truſted that it had been he which ſhould have redeemed Iſrael: and beſide all this, to-day is the third day ſince theſe things were done. Then he ſaid unto them, O fools, and ſlow of heart to believe all that the prophets have ſpoken! Ought not Chriſt to have ſuffered theſe things, and to enter into his glory?

III. The third thing to be conſidered, is, Wherefore the Lord gives ſuch treatment to any of his petitioners.

Firſt, Negatively.

1. It is not for mere will and pleaſure. Satan will be ready to ſuggeſt this, and poſe the party with ſuch queſtions as theſe, For what uſe is all this delay? what glory comes to God by it? what profit comes to you by it? Good folk may liſten over much to it. But it is a lie, that it is for mere will and pleaſure, Lam. iii. 33. 'For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.'

2. It is not becauſe he has no pity on you, nor concern for you under your burden; though Zion, by the ſuggeſtion of Satan, may entertain that jealouſy of her God, which he flatly refuſes, Iſa. xlix. 14, 15. 'But Zion ſaid, The Lord hath forſaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me. Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.' Whatever the Lord's way be with thee, it is an eternal ſcripture-truth, God is love, 1 John iv. 16. gracious and full of compaſſion, Pſal. cxi. 4. And it is apparent even in this caſe, in that it is not worſe with thee, Lam. iii. 22. and that thou art always getting new ſupports under thy burden, ver. 23.

3. It is not to ſignify to you, that you ſhould give it over, and trouble him no more with your petition; as the haſty unbelieving heart is ready to take it, and to give over duty becauſe there is no ſenſible appearance of ſucceſs, Jer. xx. 9. I ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name. He has ſignified his will to be the quite contrary, 1 Theſſ. v. 17. 'Pray without ceaſing;' and our Lord ſpoke this parable to prevent that miſconſtruction.

4. laſtly, It is not becauſe he is reſolved not to hear you at any rate, cry as long as ye will. Satan will interpret it that way to you, and there is too much liſtening to it, Hab. i. 2. 'O Lord, how long ſhall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not ſave!' He has promiſed the contrary, Pſal. l. 15. 'Call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver, and thou ſhalt glorify me.' Our Lord aſſures you of the contrary in the text.

Secondly, But poſitively, in general,

It is for holy, wiſe, becoming ends; it is neceſſary for his glory and your caſe. Believe that on the credit of the word, Deut. xxxii. 4. He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he. There is not one random ſtep in his whole way, Lam. iii. 33. There is a neceſſity for what he does.

Object. I cannot ſee how my caſe requires it, or what glory God can have by it. Anſw. You are no competent judge of what your caſe requires, and therefore you ſhould leave that to the Lord, Pſal. xlvii. 4. 'He ſhall chuſe our inheritance for us.' Jer. x. 23. 'O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in man himſelf: it is not in man that walketh, to direct his ſteps.' If you are ſick, you leave it to your phyſician how to order your caſe; if your affairs are perplexed, and you have a plea at law, you leave it to your lawyer: and when you have a proceſs at the court of heaven, will ye not leave it to your God?

Ye are as little competent judges of what glory God can have by ſuch and ſuch a management. God can raiſe glory to himſelf, where ye can ſee nothing but diſhonour to him; and he will have it, Rom. xi. 36. For —— to him are all things. Believe that, and leave the way of raiſing it to himſelf. The ſeed of glory to God in Job's trial, neither he nor his friends generally ſaw for a long time: yet it ſprung up fair at length, and flouriſhed to this day.

But particularly,

1. It is for the honour of the man Chriſt. It contributes to it,

1ſt, In that thereby the petitioners are conformed to his image, in the ſuffering part thereof. He met with that treatment at the throne, Pſal. xxii. 1, 2. My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? why art thou ſo far from helping me, and from the words of my roaring? O my God, I cry in the day-time, but thou heareſt not; and in the night-ſeaſon, and am not ſilent. And for a reward of his bearing it, it is appointed it ſhould be the way of the court ever after. And therefore none of God's children ſhall miſs to ſhare of it, in greater or leſſer meaſure, ſoon or late, Rom. viii. 29. 'For whom he did foreknow, he alſo did predeſtinate, to be conformed to the image of his Son.'

2dly, Thereby he gets the more employment as the great Interceſſor, and is more earneſtly applied to than otherwiſe he would be. Longſome pleas give the advocates much ado; and longſome proceſſes at the court of heaven bring much buſineſs to the Mediator, and ſo much honour.

3dly, It affords him the moſt ſignal occaſion of diſplaying his power in combating with and baffling the old ſerpent, next to that he had on the croſs, 2 Cor. xii. 9. 'And he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee: for my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Moſt gladly therefore will I rather glory in mine infirmities, that the power of Chriſt may reſt upon me.' Here Satan and a weak creature is yoked, Heaven ſtanding by and looking on. The poor creature has a burden on his back, he cries, Lord, take it off, and cries again, but no anſwer: Satan takes the advantage, works againſt him to make him faint: but the combat is maintained, and Satan is baffled, through ſecret ſupport conveyed to the ſinner from Jeſus.

2. To ſhew who are meet to be heard, and who not; who have a due value for the mercy petitioned for, and the God in whoſe hand it is. Iſrael wandered in the wilderneſs till all the deſpiſers of the pleaſant land, and unbelievers of the word, dropt off, and Caleb and Joſhua, who followed the Lord fully, were brought in. The fainting petitioners either deſpiſe the mercy, by dropping it; or God himſelf, by carrying their proceſs to another.

3. To magnify the promiſe. Satan, in man's ſtate of innocence, bent his main force againſt the threatening, to ſhake man's faith of it. Now he bends his main force againſt the promiſe, to make poor ſinners quit their gripes of it. In ſuch a caſe there is a ſolemn ſtruggle about it; faith holds, and the devil draws. The believer ſees he is gone if he quit it; it is his all; and therefore, though the floods overflow, he ſtrives to keep the gripe.

4. laſtly, To keep up the mercy, till that time come, that, all things conſidered, will be the abſolutely beſt time for beſtowing it, John xi. 14, 15. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead. And I am glad for your ſakes, that I was not there (to the intent ye may believe,) nevertheleſs, let us go unto him.

Uſe 1. Know then, that trifling and careleſs management will not daunt the court of heaven. Deep earneſt yourſelves in, reſolved not to take a nay-ſay. Be ſincere, prepare and vigorouſly preſs your ſuits. This may encourage ſinners to come to Chriſt, and to put their caſe in his hand, and hang on. Particularly backſliders, and whoſoever are foreboding no good to themſelves from him, may be encouraged by this doctrine.

IV. The fourth thing to be ſpoke to, is, What is the import of this intimation made for this end? It is imported, That ſinners are ready to take delays at the court of heaven for denials. Satan and their own unbelieving hearts tell them they are ſo. And therefore in oppoſition to this, and to prevent the miſtake, our Lord expreſsly gives his word that it is not ſo.

2. That importunity and reſolute hanging on, and repeated addreſſes for the ſupply of the ſame need, are very welcome and acceptable to Chriſt and his Father. There is no fear of exceſs here; the oftener ye come, the more reſolute ye are in your hanging on, the more welcome. The interceſſor will not weary of your putting your petitions in his hands, nor his Father of taking them out of his.

3. That the faith of being heard at length, is neceſſary to keep one hanging on without fainting, Pſal. xxvii. 13. 'I had fainted, unleſs I had believed to ſee the good 'of the Lord in the land of the living.' Petitioners indifferent whether they be heard or no, may continue their cuſtomary prayers without the faith of being heard; but if men be in deep earneſt with their petitions, they will never eſcape fainting without faith, Rom. iv. 18, 19, 20.

4. That the hearing to be got at length at the court of heaven, is well worth the waiting on, be it never ſo long. It will more than counterbalance all the fatigues of the proceſs, that is kept longeſt in dependance. And the faith of this ſhould be kept up, to keep the petitioner from fainting.

V. The fifth thing in the method is, The certainty of ſuch petitioners being heard at length. Here it is neceſſary to repeat what was ſaid of the duty of hanging on, and not fainting, that we may ſee who they are that are ſuch petitioners. Now, that ſuch petitioners will be heard, is beyond peradventure, however long they get to wait on, if ye conſider,

1. They are doubtleſs God's own children, elect believers, whatever they think of themſelves, Luke xviii. 7. 'And ſhall not God avenge his own elect, which 'cry day and night unto him, though he bear long 'with them?' If they were not ſo, they could never take ſuch treatment at God's hand, and yet ſtill hang on about it, John viii. 35. The ſervant abideth not in the houſe for ever: but the Son abideth ever. And will not God hear the cries of his own children at length? Certainly, he will. The begun reſemblance to their elder brother muſt be complete, 2 Tim. ii. 11. 12. 'It is a 'faithful ſaying, For if we be dead with him, we ſhall 'alſo live with him: if we ſuffer, we ſhall alſo reign 'with him,' &c.

2. The nature, name, and promiſe of God, join to inſure it. He is good and gracious in his nature, Exod. xxxiv. 6.—9. He has bowels of mercy more tender than a mother to her ſucking child, Iſ. xlix. 15. He is the hearer of prayer, Pſal. lxv. 2. and will he not anſwer that part of his name? will he not hear his own children; and hear them after they have cried long, and ſtill continue crying? He has bound himſelf by promiſe, Pſal. l. 15. 'Call upon me in the day of trouble; 'I will deliver thee, and thou ſhalt glorify me:' and cii. 17. 'He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, and not 'deſpiſe their prayer.' And will he not perform this his promiſe?

3. Such prayers are the product of his own Spirit in them, and therefore cannot miſs to be heard, James v. 16. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. Ye ſay, ye have cried ſo long, and no anſwer; and therefore your petitions appear to be the product of nature, not of the Spirit of God. But I ſay, according to the word, ye have cried ſo long and no anſwer, and yet continue crying, and have not fainted, and given over, but ſtick by it reſolutely: therefore your petitioning is not the product of nature, but of the Spirit. For nature's praying is a pool that will dry up in a long drought; but the Spirit of prayer is the laſting ſpring, John iv. 14. If thou art ſtrengthened to hang on, and not faint, it is a token Heaven's hand is at thy upholding; as was the caſe with David, Pſal. cxxxviii. 3. 'In the day when I cried, thou anſweredſt me, 'and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul.'

4. Our Lord Jeſus has given his word on it, and ſo has impawned his honour they ſhall be heard, I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily. Now, he is the interceſſor at the court of heaven, and his interceſſion is never baulked there: ſo the honour of the Mediator, and his people's being heard, are in one bottom to ſink or ſwim together; and he is able to ſecure his own honour: and does not that make ſure work of your being heard? I proceed to ſhew,

VI. Sixthly, How they ſhall be heard to their heart's content.

1. They ſhall at length ſee that their prayers have been accepted. I do not ſay they ſhall be at length accepted, but they ſhall ſee they have been ſo. Many cannot think thoſe prayers are accepted, that do not come ſoon back with anſwers. But that is a miſtake; for the petitions of thoſe that hang on, and faint not, proceeding from that diſpoſition, are accepted inſtantly, though many years ſhould run ere the anſwer come back, 1 John v. 14. 'And this is the confidence that we have 'in him, that if we aſk any thing according to his will, 'he heareth us.' God does with his wreſtling childrens petitions, as a father with letters ſometimes ſent from his ſon in a far country; he reads them with pleaſure and affection always as they come to his hand, and lays them by in a ſhuttle to be all anſwered at the moſt convenient time: Matth. xv. 28. 'Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be 'it unto thee even as thou wilt.'

2. They ſhall get an anſwer of their petitions to their heart's ſatisfaction, Matth. xv. 28. forecited. Pſal. ix. 18. 'The needy ſhall not always be forgotten: the expectation of the poor ſhall not periſh for ever.' God will tell out to them according to the promiſe, in anſwer to their prayers; ſo that they ſhall change their wreſtling note, and ſay, I love the Lord, becauſe he hath heard my voice, and my ſupplications, Pſal. cxvi. 1. and look on what they have met with as bearing the ſignature of the hand of a prayer-hearing God. Their burden ſhall be taken off, and they ſhall have their petition in kind, or equivalent, to their heart's content, 2 Cor. xii. 9. 'And 'he ſaid unto me, My grace is ſufficient for thee: for 'my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.'

3. They ſhall be fully ſatisfied as to the long delay and the whole ſteps of the procedure, however perplexing they were before, Rev. xv. 3. And they ſing the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: juſt and true are thy ways, thou king of ſaints. Standing on the ſhore, and looking back to what they have paſſed through, they will be made to ſay, 'He hath done all things well;' and they will ſee that none of it could have been wanting.

4. They ſhall get it with increaſe according to the time they waited on, and the hardſhips they ſuſtained during the dependance of the proceſs. The fruit of the promiſe, the longer it is a-ripening, the more bulky it is. Abraham and Sarah waited for the promiſed child till they were coming into extreme old age, the very next ſtep to death, Gen. xviii. 11. but they got with it an addition of the renewing of their age, Gen. xxi. 7. and xxv. 1.

5. Laſtly, Their ſpiritual enemies that flew thick and ſtrong about them in the time of the darkneſs, ſhall be ſcattered at the appearance of this light, 1 Sam. ii. 5. 'They that were full, have hired out themſelves for 'bread; and they that were hungry, ceaſed: ſo that the 'barren hath born ſeven, and ſhe that hath many chil'dren, is waxed feeble.' Formidable was Pharaoh's hoſt, while the Iſraelites had the Red-Sea before them; but when they were through the ſea, they ſaw the Egyptians dead upon the ſhore, Exod. xiv. 30. Such a heart-ſight ſhall they that hang on, and faint not, get of Satan and all his black bands. I proceed to ſhew,

VII. Seventhly, How it ſhall be ſpeedily, notwithſtanding of the long delay.

1. It ſhall be ſpeedily in reſpect of the weight and value of it when it comes: ſo that the believer looking on the return of his petition, with an eye of faith perceiving the worth of it, may wonder it is come upon ſo ſhort on-waiting. This view of it the apoſtle takes, 2 Cor. iv. 17. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. And ſo ſays Zophar, Job xi. 16. 'Thou ſhalt 'forget thy miſery, and remember it as waters that paſs 'away.'

2. It ſhall come in the moſt ſeaſonable nick of time it can come in, Gal. vi. 9. when it may come to the beſt advantage for the honour of God and their good: and that which comes in the beſt ſeaſon, comes ſpeedily. 'To every thing there is a ſeaſon;' ſo fools haſte is no ſpeed. Times and ſeaſons are in the Lord's hand, and all his works are beſt-timed, Deut. xxxii. 4. and will abide the ſtricteſt examination, Eccleſ. iii. 14.

3. It ſhall come as ſoon as they are prepared for it, Pſal. x. 17. 'Thou wilt prepare their heart;' and if it ſhould come ſooner, it will be over ſoon. And it may take long time to prepare for it; there may be many a leſſon to learn, much working on their will may be neceſſary, ere they be prepared for it.

4. It ſhall not tarry one moment beyond the due and appointed time, Hab. ii. 3. Though it tarry, wait for it, becauſe it will ſurely come, it will not tarry: it will not linger, poſtpone, or put off beyond that due time. Whatever way the wheel of providence be driving, it is a wheel within a wheel, and ſo needs ſpend no time in turning about.

5. Laſtly, It will be ſurpriſing, as a glaring light to one brought out of a dungeon, though he was expecting it. No doubt the church was expecting the end of their captivity in Babylon, toward the end of the ſeventy years; yet ſuch was the change, it was ſurpriſing, they were like men that dreamed, Pſal. cxxvi. 1.

Uſe 1. Let all know that it is not in vain to ſeek the Lord. God's truſt is better than the world's hand-payment. Though waiting on at the court of heaven may be longſome, yet it is a ſure way to get our wants ſupplied.

2. All ye that have now ſet your faces heavenward, profeſſing your reſolution to forſake ſin and the world, and to hang on about the Lord's hand for all; do not look back, turn not away from him, Heb. x. 38. If any man ſhall draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him. Remember it is he that endures to the end ſhall be ſaved.

3. Think it not ſtrange if ye meet with treatment at the hand of the Lord, whereby ye may be in hazard of fainting. He loves to try his followers. But be reſolute to hang on about his hand, come what will, and ye will be ſure to ſpeed at length.

4. Ye that are going away mourning from this communion becauſe of a hiding God, and a hungry meal ye have got; do not deſpond; but enquire into the cauſes, mourn over them, and renew your addreſſes to the throne vigorouſly; and what ye miſſed in public, ye may get in ſecret.

5. Laſtly, Ye that are under any preſſure, who have been long toſſed with tempeſts and not comforted, nor have any appearance of comfort ſhewing itſelf; comfort yourſelves with the words of the text, believing it, while ye can have no comfort from the appearance of providence; and be reſolute in hanging on, and faint not. And ye have Chriſt's word for it, your caſe ſhall have a happy iſſue, though never ſo deſperate-like.

And whoever would be kept from fainting, and animated to hang on about the Lord's hand, believe that hanging on ye ſhall certainly be heard at length to your heart's content. For ſo hath our Lord ſaid, I tell you that he will avenge them ſpeedily.

The STRENGTH of Chriſt illuſtrated in the WEAKNESS of his People.

Two Sermons, preached on a Sacramental Occaſion at Galaſhiels, July 31, and Auguſt 1, 1731.

2 COR. xii. 9.

For my ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs.

IN the Lord's leading his people through the wilderneſs of this world, there are many myſteries of providence which are too high for them fully to comprehend; ſo that, after the narroweſt ſcrutiny into them, they muſt conclude as Pſal. lxxvii. 19. 'Thy way is in 'the ſea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footſteps are not known.' But the light of glory hereafter will ſatisfy their ſenſe as to all the particular ſteps therein; and till that time come, there is a light of the word that may ſatisfy faith as to the general deſign of them; and the text has a beam of ſuch light in it.

In the words,

Firſt, Obſerve the connection pointing to the myſtery this beam of light was ſent to clear; For, &c. That we may ſee what this aims at, we muſt look back to the preceeding account; where we find, (1.) Paul wrapt up into the third heavens, while yet alive, ver. 2. (2.) The ſame Paul quickly after in a kind of hell upon the earth; where, inſtead of the pleaſurable glance and taſte of the happineſs of the heavenly ſociety he had got, he finds himſelf yoked in cloſe combat with the devil, ver. 7.; whom if he did not ſee with his eyes, he certainly felt the weight of his hands upon his body and ſpirit: for I think there is no reaſon to recede from the literal ſenſe of the text. (3.) Paul praying again and again in this humble ſituation, to be brought out of it, ver. 8. For this thing I beſought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. (4.) The anſwer given to his prayer, whereof the text is a part. And here is, 1*ſt*, The preciſe anſwer to his petition, My grace is ſufficient for thee. Wherein there is, (1.) Something implied, viz. That the Lord was not minded to give the ridding ſtroke as yet, but the combat behoved to continue longer, and how long he was not to know. (2.) Something expreſſed, viz. That he had ſuch a ſecond, that there ſhould be no fear of the iſſue, 'My grace is ſufficient for thee.' Now, 2*dly*, Our text is the juſtifying reaſon of this anſwer; not of the expreſſed part of it, the ſufficiency of the Lord's grace; but the implied part, the divine conduct in letting the battle go on, though by this time it was with 'confuſed noiſe, and garments 'rolled in blood.' q. d. Paul, be not ſtumbled at this, I have a becoming deſign in ſuffering it to go on, and not giving the deciſive ſtroke as yet.

Secondly, The beam of light clearing this myſtery in the general he ſaith, My ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Wherein is ſet forth,

1*ſt*, An amicable yoking of divine ſtrength and creature-weakneſs. There was indeed here a moſt powerful evil ſpirit, yoked in a hoſtile manner with weak fleſh and blood; ſo that had they two, without any interpoſition from heaven, been left to diſpute it, the former had torn the latter in a thouſand pieces. But there was an inviſible divine hand with the weak party, that ſupported it againſt the ſtrong.

2*dly*, The illuſtration of the glory of the divine ſtrength by this conjunction with creature-weakneſs; My ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs. Where,

1. Conſider whoſe is this ſtrength. It is the Lord's, to whom Paul prayed, ver. 8, 9. and that was the Lord Chriſt, ver. 9. To whom Paul prayed, in this combat with Satan, it being he who by his office was to bruiſe the ſerpent. Whereby it appears, that he is true God, God by nature, as being the object of divine worſhip, and the ſubject of ſovereign divine power, Col. ii. 9. 'For in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily.'

2. What his ſtrength is. It certainly comprehends the ſtrength of his grace lodged in him as Mediator, but is not confined to his moral perfections, but takes in the whole divine power, whereby he is able to do all things for the weak creature, whatever its weakneſs be: for the words are general.

3. One of thoſe fields wherein it exerts itſelf, viz. weakneſs. It exerts itſelf in the ſtrong, both in heaven and earth; and without it the ſtrongeſt would be weak as water. But on this earth there is occaſion for its exerting itſelf in the weak, in their weakneſs; working in, by, and with the real weakneſs and felt weakneſs of the creature.

4. With what advantage it exerts itſelf in the creature's weakneſs; it is made perfect there. There is a twofold perfecting of a thing; one real, by adding to it ſomething that it wanted to complete it; and the power of Chriſt being infinite, is not capable of that: another manifeſtative, whereby that which was vailed before comes to be diſcovered, like the ſun getting from under a cloud. Thus Chriſt's ſtrength is made perfect in weakneſs: it ſhines forth the more illuſtriouſly there, that it doth as it were appear alone, unmixed with creature-ſtrength.

DOCT. The ſtrength and power of our Lord Chriſt, being perfected or illuſtrated in the weakneſs of the creature, ſufficiently clears the diſpenſation of his keeping his people, ſo long as he really doth, ſtruggling in circumſtances of weakneſs in this world.

In handling this doctrine, I ſhall

I. Conſider this diſpenſation.

II. The matter clearing it.

III. Apply.

I. Firſt, We ſhall conſider this diſpenſation. The Father has committed all judgement into the hand of the Son; Chriſt the Mediator has the charge of conducting all his redeemed ones through the world, to the promiſed land, John v. 22. Iſa. lv. 4. And here is his conduct in that matter, this is the ſtated courſe of his diſpenſations, keeping them long ſtruggling in circumſtances of weakneſs. And here conſider, Firſt, The place of it. That is only this world. It begins with them as ſoon as, believing on him, they reſign themſelves to his conduct: it continues with them all along after while they are on the way: but when he has them at home in heaven, that diſpenſation is for ever laid aſide as to them. It has no place but in this lower world. Paul, from the time he became a Chriſtian, had a continued ſtruggle, till he was wrapt up to the third heaven, Rom. vii. 24. While he was there in that caſe, it intermitted. But when he came back again, he even fell into it anew; and the firſt bruſh of it was a moſt fearful one.

Secondly, The nature of it; which we may take up in theſe two.

1*ſt*, He obliges them to a ſtruggle, Matth. xi. 12. 'The kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the 'violent taketh it by force.' They are not to expect an eaſy paſſage through the world to the promiſed land; but muſt truſt him their deſired eaſe till they come to their journey's end. They are obliged to it.

1. In that he lays great pieces of work to their hand, doing work, ſuffering work. He will not have them to be idle: every day will call up its own piece of work, that unleſs they fall aſleep, they will find their hands filled every day. And if at any time they do fall aſleep, when they awaken again, they will find their work increaſed on their hand.

2. In that he ſuffers them to meet with great oppoſition. The wind of providence from heaven, often blows ſtrong in their face for their trial, Gen. xxii. 1. The wind of temptation from hell, and oppoſition from that airth, never fails, and at times riſes very boiſterous, and becomes tempeſtuous, as in the apoſtle's caſe here, verſ. 7. Mean while they muſt not run in from their work, and take a houſe till it turn calm, but muſt hold on their way. This conſtitutes the ſtruggle, Eph. vi. 12. For we wreſtle not againſt fleſh and blood, but againſt principalities, againſt powers, againſt the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, againſt ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places.

2*dly*, Yet, though he obliges them to this ſtruggling life, he, in the depth of his wiſdom, keeps them in circumſtances of weakneſs: and theſe circumſtances of,

1. Real weakneſs: whereby it comes to paſs, that they really want within themſelves a ſufficient ſtock of ability, to manage their work, and grapple with and force their way through the oppoſition made them in it. He himſelf owns this to be the way of his managing his people, that he keeps them from hand to mouth, John xv. 5. 'Without me ye can do nothing.'

2. Felt weakneſs. They are not man enough for their work, and he makes them ſenſible it is ſo, 2 Cor. iii. 5. 'Not that we are ſufficient of ourſelves to think 'any thing as of ourſelves; but our ſufficiency is of 'God.' So that both builders and bearers about the temple of the Lord, are obliged with one voice to ſay, Except the Lord build the houſe, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchmen waketh in vain, Pſal. cxxvii. 1. And if at any time they loſe this ſenſe of their weakneſs, it is his way to leave them to their own weight, till catching a fall, the ſmart bring them to themſelves to a ſenſe of their weakneſs; as in Peter's caſe.

More particularly, our Lord keeps his people while here,

1ſt, Always in circumſtances of natural weakneſs; and theſe,

1. Of pure natural weakneſs, a weakneſs that is inwrought with human fleſh, though at its prime, Iſ. xl. 6. 'All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field.' The witneſſes hereof are, the need of meat, drink, ſleep, &c. wherewith the tabernacles of clay muſt daily be underpropped. Even this makes God's children objects of their Father's pity, Pſal. ciii. 13, 14.

2. Of ſinful natural weakneſs; not that he brought them under ſuch weakneſs, but he ſuffers them to lie under it. There are remains of the corruption of nature in them all, which makes them a company of poor groning weaklings, Rom. vii. 24. Grace has got in indeed, but corruption is not quite got out. The Canaanites are left in the land, and they are not able to clear the land of them. And this corruption of nature hath a bias in each of them, to ſome particular evil, according to their various tempers and circumſtances, 'the ſin that eaſily beſets them,' Heb. xii. 1.

2dly, Often in circumſtances of accidental weakneſs, through a variety of afflictions, trials, and temptations, weakening their bodies, or weakening their ſpirits, or weakening both together, as in Paul's caſe here. The particulars of this kind are too numerous to enter into the detail of: phyſicians and divines have filled books with them reſpectively.

Thirdly, The difficulty caſting up about this diſpenſation. There is a twofold knot here.

1. The firſt lies in that he can put them out of thoſe circumſtances of weakneſs, yet he keeps them in them. The former cannot be queſtioned, ſince his divine power could have perfected them in the moment of converſion, both naturally and morally: what he will do to their ſouls at death, to their perſons at the reſurrection, he could have done in the moment of their union with him. The latter is manifeſt from the experience of his people in all ages and places of this world.

2. The ſecond lies in the conſequences of this diſpenſation. The weak things act weakly, leaving the marks of their weakneſs on all they do, and grone under the whole. Here the creature's hardſhips and preſſures are the eaſieſt part; but the ſin, and diſhonour to God that eventually attends them under this diſpenſation, ties the knot ſtraiteſt, and makes many a weary look for the deliverance.

II. Secondly, We are to conſider the matter clearing this diſpenſation; which is, That the ſtrength and power of Chriſt is illuſtrated in the weakneſs of the creature. And here we would ſhew, 1. Wherein the ſtrength of Chriſt is illuſtrated in the way of this diſpenſation; and, 2. The becomingneſs thereof.

Firſt, Wherein the ſtrength of Chriſt is illuſtrated in the way of this diſpenſation.

1. In ſupporting them under their weakneſs, 2 Cor. i. 8, 9, 10. The more ready the houſe is to fall, the more does appear the efficacy of the prop that holds it up. The diſpenſation of providence towards ſome of the ſaints, in ſupporting them under their preſſures, is a train of wonders: the diſpenſation of grace ſupporting them all, is a continued miracle, in that the ſpark of grace is not extinguiſhed, in the ocean of corruption wherewith it is encompaſſed in themſelves and others, and put in agitation by the powers of darkneſs.

2. In doing great things by them, weak and contemptible as they are. How illuſtriouſly ſhines the power of Chriſt in making worm Jacob threſh the mountains, Iſa. xli. 14. 15. weak creatures victorious over all the power of the enemy? It is in ſuch Chriſt chuſes to ſet forth his God-like ſtrength, his divine power, 2 Cor. iv. 7. When he ſet forth with his goſpel in the world, Satan had the power of the ſword, and the learning in the world, on his ſide; but Chriſt, by a few illiterate fiſhermen, Paul excepted, carried his point againſt Satan with his ſwords-men and book-men too.

3. In ſtrengthening them out of weakneſs, Heb. xi. 34. How often is their caſe, when at the weakeſt, neareſt to a ſtrengthening; and the fainting ſaint becomes like a giant refreſhed with wine, by a touch of Chriſt's hand, a word from his mouth! Iſ. xl. 29. 'He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength.' Amos v. 9. 'The Lord ſtrengtheneth the ſpoiled againſt the ſtrong, ſo that the ſpoiled ſhall come againſt the fortreſs.' Paul ſpeaks his uſual experience of this, 2 Cor. xii. 10. Therefore I take pleaſure in infirmities, in reproaches, in neceſſities, in perſecutions, in diſtreſſes for Chriſt's ſake: for when I am weak, then am I ſtrong. He gives ſtrength for a particular effect: when the work comes to the ſetting to, it comes, according to Matth. x. 19. When they deliver you up, take no thought how, or what ye ſhall ſpeak: for it ſhall be given you in that ſame hour what ye ſhall ſpeak: when the work is done, it goes. So the timing and continuance of it, ſpeaks whence it comes, that it is not home-bred, but heaven-bred.

4. laſtly, In bringing the weak things, through all their difficulties, ſafe home at long run, Pſal. lxxiii. 24. O wonderful counſellor, that will guide ſuch a weak company, through all their ſnares, to glory! how muſt the power and ſkill of the Pilot ſhine, in bringing ſuch broken and ſhattered veſſels, amidſt ſo many rocks and ſhelves, in a tempeſtuous ſea, ſafe to land! Sure, whatever doubts remain now with them about this diſpenſation, when they ſet their foot on the ſhore, they will ſing the ſong of Moſes and of the Lamb, and ſay of his whole diſpenſations, He has done all things well.

Thus do ſhine forth in this diſpenſation,

1. The ſtrength of the wiſdom of Chriſt, and it writes his name in legible characters, The wonderful counſellor. What wiſdom but divine could conduct ſuch a company of weaklings, under ſuch circumſtances of weakneſs, through all the powers of the enemy, ſo as to loſe none of them? Mark that connection, Iſa. xl. 28.—31. 'Haſt thou not known? haſt thou not heard that the everlaſting God, the Lord, the creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary? there is no ſearching of his underſtanding. He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might, he increaſeth ſtrength. Even the youths ſhall faint and be weary, and the young men ſhall utterly fall. But they that wait upon the Lord ſhall renew their ſtrength, they ſhall mount up with wings as eagles, they ſhall run and not be weary, and they ſhall walk and not faint.'

2. The power of his hand, which eminently exerts itſelf here. To do great things by mighty inſtruments is the way of the creatures: but to do great things by weak and contemptible means, is the way of Chriſt, becauſe he is GOD. To overthrow mountains by earthquakes, is the work of God in nature: but to make a worm threſh mountains ſmall as duſt, is his work in grace.

3. The power of his grace, 2 Cor. xii. 9. Here it appears an immortal ſeed; and to be, in its meaneſt lodging; the heart of a weak creature, impregnable: whence? Not from its own nature, as ſuch a created quality, evident from Adam's caſe: but that it is the grace of Chriſt, communicated out of his fulneſs, and thereby fed as from a continual ſpring, John iv. 14. The water that I ſhall give him, ſhall be in him a well of water ſpringing up into everlaſting life.

4. Laſtly, The ſtrength of Chriſt's intereſt in heaven, which procures the weak ones ſo many pardons, keeps them in the ſtate of favour with God, and in end gets them, notwithſtanding of all their weakneſs and worthleſſneſs, ſet up veſſels of glory in the upper houſe.

Uſe 1. Hence we proclaim Jeſus Chriſt a fit ſupport for all weak ones to draw to: come to him then, ye weak creatures that his power may be diſplayed in you, to his honour, and your good.

There are other weak ones than the ſaints, though none ſo ſenſible of their weakneſs as they. Strangers to Chriſt, ye are weak, dead-weak, however ſtrong in your conceit. To convince you that feel it not,

1. Are ye brought out of the ſtate wherein Adam left you? No, ye are not. Then ye are weak, Rom. v. 6. For when we were yet without ſtrength, in due time Chriſt died for the ungodly: not only weak bodies, but weak ſouls, notwithſtanding of all your natural and acquired abilities. And it is owing to the lowneſs of your caſe, that ye are not ſenſible of it.

2. What head can ye make againſt diſeaſe or death? 1 Cor. xv. 55, 56, 57. what ſtrength for that encounter? Iſ. xl. 6. All muſt die, ſay ye; but the ſaints through Chriſt are proof againſt the ſting of it; but what ſafeguard againſt it have ye?

3. Are your own legs able to bear you before the tribunal of God? No, ſure, Pſal. cxliii. 2.——'In thy 'ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified.' Why ſeek ye not then for ſhelter under the covert of blood? I ſay then,

1ſt, Inſenſible ſinners, come to a ſenſe of your weakneſs, and under the ſenſe of it come to Chriſt. Without it ye will not.

2dly, Senſible ſinners, let not your weakneſs ſcare you from Chriſt, but rather prompt you not to delay coming, Matth. ix. 12. 'They that be whole need not 'a phyſician, but they that are ſick.' They will periſh in their weakneſs that come not.

Let all conſider, that whoever they be in whom the ſtrength of Chriſt's grace ſhall not be diſplayed, in a ſtate of union with him, the ſtrength of his hand will be diſplayed againſt them for ever, in a ſtate of ſeparation from him, 2 Theſſ. i. 8.

Uſe 2. Communicants may hence be directed in their approach, to come under a ſenſe of their weakneſs, to receive the ſeal of God's covenant inſuring the ſtrength of Chriſt to be forthcoming for them under all their weakneſs. And all that are minded for heaven, may learn to ſet themſelves to ſubmit to this diſpenſation, and to lay their account to live by faith, not by ſenſe, till they get home.

Secondly, The becomingneſs of this conſtitution. It will appear worthy of God, and therefore in reaſon ſhould be ſatisfying to the creature, if ye conſider,

1. That the man Chriſt is now in heaven, and will be to the end of the world, Acts iii. 21. But by this means his divine power is, for his glory, ſtill illuſtrated in the world. While he was on the earth, he did now and then let out a beam of his divine glory: but he was nevertheleſs put to an ignominious death in it; and his enemies gave out, that he was ſwallowed up in death as other men. But by this means there is a continual proof of his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and divine power, kept up and to be kept up in the world to the end, in that continued diſplay of his ſtrength in the weakneſs of his people, 2 Cor. iv. 11. 'For we which live, are alway de-'livered unto death for Jeſus ſake, that the life alſo of 'Jeſus might be made manifeſt in our mortal fleſh.' Conſider, 1ſt, His divine power had a vail caſt over it, when he was on earth, Phil. ii. 7. and in his ſufferings, crucifixion, death, and burial, he appeared in human weakneſs, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. Is it not worthy of God then, that now, when he is in heaven, his divine power ſhould ſhine forth in its turn in the world; and that there ſhould be a ſcene of human weakneſs, wherein it may to the greateſt advantage diſplay itſelf?

2dly, This diſplay of the ſtrength of Chriſt in the weakneſs of his people, appears full to their conviction: and the more weak they are, they ſee it the more clearly while it is exerted in them; as contraries appear beſt by another's ſide. And thus the glory of the power of Chriſt continually ſhines in the world, in the eyes of them who feel it.

3dly, While there is a people in the world compaſſed about with much weakneſs, yet profeſſing their dependence on the ſtrength of Chriſt, and they are accordingly ſtrengthened, in many inſtances at leaſt, to the conviction of beholders: this is a ſufficient objective evidence of the power of Chriſt to the world, ſufficient to extort a confeſſion of it from them, as Pſal. cxxvi. 2. Then ſaid they among the heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them, Iſa. lxi. 9. Their ſeed ſhall be known among the Gentiles, and their offſpring among the people: all that ſee them ſhall acknowledge them, that they are the ſeed which the Lord hath bleſſed; or to leave them inexcuſable. Hence, in all times of perſecution, the ſupport from heaven that confeſſors and martyrs had, hath brought numbers over to their ſide, ſo that the blood of the martyrs uſually proved the ſeed of the church.

Hence I conclude, That this conſtitution and method of providence and grace on the church on earth, is a glorious device worthy of God, for diſplaying the glory of Chriſt. There, where he was ſome time covered over with ignominy, reproach, and diſgrace, as weak and contemptible, a worm and not a man; a reproach of men, and deſpiſed of the people, is his glory diſplayed, Pſal. xxii. 6.

2. It is agreeable to the method of divine procedure in other things, and ſo makes the divine conduct to be of a piece. Wherein we may obſerve, that it is God's ordinary way, 1. To carry on great works by degrees, and not immediately to bring them to their perfection. So the world was made, firſt, a confuſed dark maſs of earth and water, and then ſtep by ſtep formed, and finiſhed. Was the old creation a work of time, for the more full manifeſting of the power of God? It is congruous, that the new creation ſhould be ſo too, for illuſtrating the ſtrength of Chriſt, in and by whom it is done. (2.) From ſmall and contemptible beginnings to raiſe the moſt eminent works, and by moſt unlikely and unpromiſing means to do great things; becauſe the power of God appears the more clearly in ſuch a ſituation. From Abraham's body in a ſort dead, and Sarah a barren woman, whoſe womb by age was deadened too, he raiſed a nation like the ſtars for multitude, continuing to this day: and looking to their beginning, we ſee Iſaac an only ſon, him on an altar, his throat ready to be cut; and the firſt-fruits of them long in ſlavery in Egypt, and when delivered, wandering forty years in a wilderneſs. How congruous is it, then, that the innumerable multitude that ſhall at length ſtand on the mount Zion above, round about the throne, in white robes, and palms in their hands, ſhould be brought thither from lying among the pots, and ſtraggling long in the wilderneſs?

3. Particularly, it is agreeable to the divine procedure in the caſe of Chriſt himſelf. And that, (1.) In the conſtitution of his perſon as God-man; wherein infinite power and creature-weakneſs met together as attributes of one and the ſame perſon; he who, being true man, was capable of being crucified through weakneſs, being alſo the mighty God, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. Now, if the divine power was lodged with creature-weakneſs in Chriſt perſonal, how congruous is it that the ſame divine power ſhould be illuſtrated in the weakneſs of his myſtical members? (2.) In the conduct of providence about his perſon. The moſt ſignal diſplay that ever God made of his power, was by the man Chriſt and in him, 1 Cor. i. 24. being Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdom of God. By him as God he made the world at firſt, but by him as God-man he redeemed the world; the laſt a greater work than the firſt, as the giving his own Son was more than the ſpeaking of a word. But how was this work brought about, but by ſubjecting of him to a number of weakneſſes for his lifetime in this world, concluded at length with his death? And in theſe the divine power ſent forth its moſt radiant beams, and by them reared up the new creation. Shall it then be thought ſtrange, that as Chriſt was in the world, Chriſtians ſhould be even ſo too? or that, ſince the power of God was illuſtrated in the weakneſs of the man Chriſt, the ſame divine power in the perſon of Chriſt ſhould be illuſtrated in the weakneſs of his people, while they are here in this world?

4. laſtly, This diſpenſation tends to the heightening of the glory of the victory of the Son of God againſt the devil. That proud apoſtate ſpirit roſe in rebellion againſt God; and, having ſeduced man, ſet up a kingdom in the world in oppoſition to God's. Againſt him the Son of God, for his Father's glory, and the recovery of fallen man, proclaimed war in paradiſe, Gen. iii. 15. 'I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and 'between her ſeed and thy ſeed; it ſhall bruiſe thy head, 'and thou ſhalt bruiſe his heel;' and, for his more ſhameful defeat, encounters him in human nature, a weak one in compariſon of the more powerful angelic nature, whereof Satan was; and illuſtrates his ſtrength againſt him, in the weakneſs of that nature, as in his natural body, ſo in his myſtical body. The heat of the battle was on the croſs, where he was crucified through weakneſs, yet triumphed over him. The battle is carried on in his myſtical members laden with weakneſſes, yet even in them alſo he defeats him; and ſets them off the field conquerors, one generation after another, without the loſs of a man. It will laſt till the end of the world: and then Chriſt's victory with his weak men will be complete, Satan with his party being chained down under everlaſting darkneſs. So there will be no more occaſion for Chriſt's illuſtrating his power in weakneſs; conſequently, there ſhall no more for ever be a weak one among Chriſt's party; all their weakneſſes come then to an end.

USE 1. This may be of manifold uſe in the Chriſtian life.

1. As an oracle to ſatisfy ſerious inquirers anent the whole of the divine conduct about believers, and particularly to two difficult queſtions.

1ſt, Why the Lord leaves ſin in the regenerate? Why, though they pant long, and breathe after perfection, yet they cannot reach it; though they would buy their freedom from ſin with ten thouſand worlds if they had them, and the bondage of a body of ſin cleaving to them makes them long for cold death, to ſet them free, yet they muſt wreſtle on with it. See what may ſatisfy. It is that the power of Chriſt may be illuſtrated in your weakneſs; therefore it is that the wheels of his chariot tarry.

2dly, Why the Lord keeps his people under long and ſore afflictions? The reaſon is the ſame. Satan might be too hard for the Chriſtian, in a perfect calm of providence about him: yet our Lord will give the Chriſtian a diſadvantageous poſt in a thicket of afflictions and trials, therefore called temptations, James i. 2. and Satan having that advantage of the ground, ſhall be ſuffered to attack him, and yet be baffled; to the greater glory of the ſtrength of Chriſt, and ſhame of the enemy.

2. As a way mark, to direct us, if we mind for heaven, unto the King's highway to it; that is, the way of faith, and not of ſenſe, 2 Cor. v. 7. Whatever ſweet cluſters of ſenſe the Lord may allow any of his people for their refreſhment by the way: the life of ſenſe is certainly reſerved for heaven, where all weakneſs is put off. The life of Chriſtians here is a life of believing, hoping, patient waiting, in a courſe of doing, ſuffering, ſtruggling, and wreſtling, where Chriſt's power is illuſtrated in their weakneſs.

3. As an interpreter of Chriſt's mind anent the actings of grace in his people. The carnal world deſpiſes theſe actings as things of no value. A look of a weak creature to Chriſt, a groan to him for help, believing of a promiſe, hoping in his word, ſome confidence in him that he will at length appear for them, are but trifling things in their eyes. And in the eyes of believers themſelves, except when they are bound up for them, they are but of ſmall value, hardly worth their own notice, far leſs Chriſt's; eſpecially conſidering that they are ſo weak, and ſo long a time intervenes between them. But certainly Chriſt notices them all, and looks on them as very precious, elſe his diſpenſation, whoſe end is to draw them out, had never been choſen by him, 1 Pet. i. 7. That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt. Cant. iv. 9. Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my ſiſter, my ſpouſe; thou haſt raviſhed my heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

4. As a cordial to ſupport, with the proſpect of a happy event, all the followers of Chriſt, 1ſt, Under their own perſonal weakneſs and preſſures. He that has brought them under them to illuſtrate his own ſtrength in them, will ſurely make a ſhining morning follow their darkeſt night.

2dly, Under the low caſe of the church, whether in point of corruption or perſecution. Though ſhe be either of theſe ways brought to death's door, ſhe cannot die out: for Chriſt will not let her fall ſo low, but for the clearer manifeſting of his divine ſtrength in her recovery. The utmoſt point of hopeleſſneſs is the uſual ſignal for Chriſt's exerting his power for his people: Deut. xxxii. 36. For the Lord ſhall judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants; when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left.

5. laſtly, As a perſuaſive to Chriſtians, with a holy ſubmiſſion of ſpirit to this diſpenſation, reſolutely to wreſtle on, till the Lord have fully ſerved the ends of his glory by all their weakneſſes. This bids us, 1ſt, Stoop to the diſpenſation, and not quarrel; and after he has thus far diſcovered to us the deſign of it, to crucify all our how's and why's on the matter; and that both with reſpect to our ſpiritual and bodily weakneſſes.

2dly, Reſolutely to keep up the ſtruggle, to get forward in the way the Lord calls us. What though we be weak? the works of the Chriſtian life are not to be laid aſide, but we are to ſtretch out the withered hand, that his ſtrength may be perfected in our weakneſs.

Whoſo thus ſtruggle reſolutely, and yet ſtoop humbly to the diſpenſation, ſhew their concern for his honour, inſomuch that they are pleaſed his ſtrength ſhould be diſplayed in their weakneſs. Thus honouring him here, he will honour them in the other world.

The beſt Security againſt the DAY of WRATH.

A Sermon, preached before the celebration of the Lord's Supper, at Ettrick, June 7. 1713.

HEB. xi. 28.

Through faith he kept the paſſover, and the ſprinkling of blood, leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born, ſhould touch them.

SOlomon tells us, Prov. xxii. 3. 'A prudent man 'foreſeeth the evil, and hideth himſelf: but the 'ſimple paſs on and are puniſhed.' We may be ſure there is a ſad and trying time abiding the world. God will have his day when the world has got theirs. Of this there is no great ground to doubt, that there is a ſad and trying time abiding th[illegible] the laſt occaſion of this nature we h[illegible] to be giving the word to cut up the cumber-ground fig-tree of the church of Scotland; yet beyond hope, he has let it alone another year. But let us take heed; there may be more depending on the iſſues of the digging and dunging this year than we are aware of. It has got deep very deep ſnegs already, and the axe is ſtill lying at the root. And therefore I think we have the duty of this day, this communion-day, in the text; and that is, that we make it a hiding day under the covert of blood, for time and for eternity; as Moſes did in the like caſe.

God had long ſat ſtill, and his enemies had been provoking him; now he was riſen up, and was begun to reckon with them: and, after ſeveral leſſer ſtrokes, the warning is given, that the ſoor ſtroke was at hand. What does Moſes, with other believing Iſraelites, in this trying time?

1. He goes to his duty, in a ſealing ordinance, and makes a covenant with God by ſacrifice; he kept the paſſover, &c. He ſaw that he and his Iſraelites deſerved the ſtroke, as well as the Egyptians; that God would have a ſacrifice off both their hands; that the deſtroying angel ſhould either find blood on their houſes, or ſhed blood on them. Then ſays Moſes, Let the Egyptians do as they will, the lamb ſhall be our ſacrifice this night; we will ſprinkle the blood on our houſes. So they kept the paſſover, Gr, made; not that he gave a being to it, inſtituting it at the command of God, though that was true; but it is an Old Teſtament expreſſion, 2 Chron. xxxv. 1. well rendered he kept, i. e. celebrated this holy ordinance, whereof we have an account, Exod. xii. The paſſover was a lamb ſlain and eaten by the Iſraelites, a ſacrament of the old covenant of grace. The apoſtle ſpeaks of the ſprinkling of blood, as a diſtinct thing; for though it was the blood of the paſcal lamb, yet it was not uſed in the after paſſovers, after they left Egypt. The lamb repreſented Chriſt; and the ſprinkling of the blood, the believing application of his.

2. He managed this duty rightly. He had need; for there was much depending on it. He did it believingly, through faith. I may not ſtand on the detail of the actings of Moſes's faith in this matter. Only I will give an inſtance of it both theſe ways, ver. 1. 'Now faith is 'the ſubſtance of things hoped for, the evidence of things 'not ſeen.' The object of faith is twofold. (1.) Things that have a being, but fall not under our ſenſe. So Moſes's faith was to him the evidence of things not ſeen; i. e. the ſpiritual inſtrument whereby he diſcerned and applied that in the ordinance which his eye could not ſee. He ſaw Chriſt in it, and the grand contrivance of ſalvation: and by the ſame mean he applied him. What elſe could give eaſe to a guilty ſinner whoſe eyes were opened? And therefore, notwithſtanding of Pharaoh's rage againſt him, and that they were all to march the next day, and that there was to be ſuch a dreadful ſtir in Egypt that night, he keeps his temper, and goes about his duty. (2.) Things that have no being but in the promiſe. So his faith was to him the ſubſtance of things hoped for; i. e. the ſpiritual inſtrument whereby he aſſured himſelf, that the deliverance which was not yet done, ſhould certainly be performed; and ſo the future deliverance was to him thereby as preſent. And our faith muſt act both theſe ways, if we manage this ſacrament aright.

3. He had a particular view in his managing of it; leſt he that deſtroyed the firſt-born, ſhould touch them. He ſaw there was a bloody time at hand, that God was to make the moſt dreadful time in that land that ever they ſaw with their eyes. The deſtroying angel was to paſs through the land of Egypt that night, to ſmite all the firſt-born both man and beaſt. He was afraid of the leaſt touch of that angel armed with vengeance, knowing it would cruſh him as a moth. Therefore he takes the bleſſed opportunity which the Lord had put into his hand, to ſecure himſelf and his people; flying in under the covert of blood, to be hid in the day of the Lord. He does not gather his people together to ſtand to their own defence; that would not do, they muſt go into their houſes, and lie at the feet of mercy. To cloſe the windows, bar the doors, &c. will not do it; but the blood of the lamb on the door-poſts will. Therefore he ſprinkles that blood for that very end.

DOCT. The believing management of the ſacrament of Chriſt's body and blood, is the beſt ſecurity for a ſinner againſt the day of wrath.

In handling of this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. What is that believing management of the ſacrament of Chriſt's body and blood, which is the beſt ſecurity for a ſinner againſt the day of wrath.

II. What ſecurity this will be againſt the day of wrath.

III. Confirm the doctrine.

IV. laſtly, Make application.

I. Firſt, I ſhall ſhew, what is that believing management of the ſacrament of Chriſt's body and blood, which is the beſt ſecurity againſt the day of wrath. We will be helped to a view of this, by conſidering the ordinance pointed at in the text.

1ſt, The Chriſtian and communicant that would manage this ordinance ſo as he may be ſecured againſt the day of wrath, muſt have his bunch of hyſſop ready; that is, he muſt have faith, by which alone that blood can be ſprinkled on the ſoul. An unbeliever can never believingly manage this or any other ordinance; for there can be no acting without a principle. Faith is the hand that muſt receive the atonement, that transfers the guilt on the head of our great ſacrifice, the feet whereby we flee into the city of refuge, and the hand that draws the cover from wrath over our heads, and ſigns the covenant of peace betwixt us and an angry God.

2*dly*, He muſt believe his own deſert of wrath, that he himſelf deſerves to fall amongſt them that fall. Blood on the door poſts proclaimed them guilty, as well as blood in the houſes of the Egyptians did them. He muſt ſit down at this table under a ſenſe of ſin, and deſert of wrath; acknowledging, that he deſerves rather to be led to the altar for a ſacrifice for vengeance to feed upon, than to ſit down at the table to feed on this coſtly ſacrifice. If ye be this day to be marked with the ſign of ſalvation, ye will be ſenſible ye have hung the ſign of deſtruction before your own doors; and while others in the view of wrath on the land, are dealing all the cauſes of wrath about them, ye will ſmite on your breaſts, ſaying, with the publican, Luke xviii. 13. 'God ' be merciful to me a ſinner;' a ſelf, a land, a church deſtroyer.

3*dly*, He muſt, with an eye of faith, diſcern the ſacrifice, and the virtue of it, ſeeing that in the ordinance which a carnal eye cannot diſcern; as Exod. xii. 26, 27. 'And it ſhall come to paſs, when your children ' ſhall ſay unto you, What mean you by this ſervice? ' that ye ſhall ſay, It is the ſacrifice the Lord's paſſover, ' who paſſed over the houſes of the children of Iſrael in ' Egypt, when he ſmote the Egyptians, and delivered ' our houſes.' The apoſtle tells us, how the ſpiritually blind bring wrath on themſelves, inſtead of ſecuring themſelves againſt wrath, 1 Cor. xi. 29. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himſelf, not diſcerning the Lord's body. And here faith will ſay two things.

1. Faith will look in through the ordinance, and ſeeing Chriſt in it, will ſay, There is a hiding place from wrath, John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſin of the world, Eph. ii. 14. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us. The believer will ſee the grand device of ſalvation in a crucified Redeemer: He will ſay, There is the Lamb that was ſlain to turn away the deſtroying angel; the Lamb of God, that is, the Lamb which God himſelf hath provided, as he did the ram in the thicket; Jehovah-jireh, (i. e. God will provide,) ſaid Abraham's faith long ago, Gen. xxii. 14.

2. Faith will look more narrowly yet, even through the hiding-place itſelf; and where the fearful unbeliever ſees many faults, the believer will ſee none, but ſay, ' He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come ' unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them,' Heb. vii. 25. There is a bottom on which I may venture for time and eternity; there is a ſufficient ſhelter, blow the ſtorm from what airth it will. There will be ſafety there when the Lord in anger will rain ſnares on a generation of his wrath: it will be ſafe there when the waters of Jordan ſwell to the brim. In a word, he will believe, (1.) that Chriſt is the appointed refuge againſt wrath; and, (2.) that he is a ſafe refuge, and that there is no other.

4*thly*, He muſt dip his bunch of hyſſop in the baſon where the blood of the Lamb is. Chriſt is our paſchal Lamb, 1 Cor. v. 7. the covenant is the baſon wherein the blood of the Lamb is poured, Heb. xiii. 20. and the cup the New Teſtament. The believing communicant will lay hold on the covenant made by ſacrifice, that he may be ſafe in the day of wrath, Pſal. l. 3, 4, 5. God offers himſelf to the ſinner in the covenant; now muſt the man ſay, I am the Lord's. The marriage of the Lamb is come, the Bridegroom has given his conſent already, and he exhibits himſelf in the ſacrament; and the ſoul by faith preſents itſelf, and they join hands and hearts at once. The Judge of the earth appears in the quality of a Bridegroom; and ſo they take him and are ſafe.

5*thly*, He muſt ſprinkle this blood, make an effuſion of it; apply it by faith, and receive the atonement. He muſt not ſtand afar, and ſay, I dare not meddle with that blood, though others may: I dare not lay my foul fingers on it. He muſt not ſit down at the table, and only bathe himſelf in tears; not daring to bathe himſelf in the blood of a Redeemer. Call that what ye will, God will call it unbelief with a witneſs; and ye will riſe even as clean as ye would come out of mire, notwithſtanding ye would pretend to throw yourſelves into it for waſhing. Therefore ye muſt touch, take and apply that holy thing: ſay, this blood is for me, my peace, my pardon, my ſanctification, &c. and on it I venture my all for time and eternity. Heaven and earth are witneſſes, that it is offered even to vile me; and let them be witneſſes alſo, that I embrace the offer, and that it is mine, and that I muſt be found under the covert of it in the day of wrath, Gal. ii. 20. 'Who loved me, and gave himſelf for me.'

6*thly*, He muſt ſprinkle it on the lintel and ſide-poſts, only, not on the threſhold. Look with an eye of faith on it as precious blood; and ſprinkle it over your whole man, above you, on every ſide; only not under your feet, Deſpiſe it not; conſider that awful word, Heb. x. 29. Of how much ſorer puniſhment ſhall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant wherewith he was ſanctified, an un[illegible] thing, and hath done deſpite unto the Spirit of grace [illegible] the blood of God the price and ranſom of precious ſouls, the foundation of all the precious promiſes. But wrath from heaven hangs over your head, and over the land: ſprinkle it above you, over your heads; take that blood for your ſconce, ſhelter, and defence. Satan will attack you on every ſide, and may be his hounds will be let looſe on you: therefore ſprinkle it on every ſide; and by all means on your weak ſide. Ye have weak heads, and weak ſides; this blood is for all.

7*thly*, He muſt not ſprinkle it only on the back of the door, but on the outſide, the lintel and ſide poſts, that the angel may ſee it. The Lord is coming to call the land to a ſad account, and examine every one who ought them. On with your mark this day, on your foreheads. Antichriſt's followers may take his on their forehead or right hands, to ſerve a turn: but not ſo Chriſt's, Rev. xiv. 1. 'And I looked, and lo, a Lamb ' ſtood on the mount Zion, and with him an hundred ' forty and four thouſand, having his Father's name ' written in their foreheads.' Your precious faith within muſt ſhine forth in an open profeſſion, 2 Cor. iv. 13. 'We alſo believe, and therefore ſpeak.' Ye muſt not think to quite your profeſſion, come what will come; but liſt yourſelves this day among Chriſt's witneſſes in the world, in Scotland, willing to ſeal your teſtimony with blood: Rev. xii. 11. 'And they overcame him by ' the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony: and they loved not their lives unto the death.'

1. The ſubſtance of Chriſt's teſtimony; and that is holineſs. The world with one voice is telling a lye of God, That he is a God that delights in wickedneſs; that folk may be happy with him in heaven, and come there, ſome ſay, in the way of profanity, or formality. Ye muſt give your teſtimony againſt this; and for holineſs; that God is holy, and that there is no coming nor likeneſs to him, but in holineſs; and this by a ſtrict and holy walk, over the belly of the example of the world and your own luſts. This was the ſubſtance of the ſaints teſtimony from the time of the righteous Abel, Gen. iv. 7. to this day, Rev. iii. iv. and xiv. 4. This is the ſubſtance of our covenants, national and ſolemn league; and will be the ſubſtance of the teſtimony of the Lord's people to the end of time.

2. The neceſſary appendages of the teſtimony; and theſe are twofold.

(1.) The revealed truths of God made known to you.

Ye muſt bear witneſs to theſe, whoever run them down; the truths of doctrine, Prov. xxiii. 23. Buy the truth and ſell it not. Mark viii. 38. Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels. This land is under the bond of a covenant to the maintenance of the truth of doctrine: and till the Lord raiſe up the ſpirits of his people to renew that covenant together, ye muſt ſeal the covenant for that effect at the Lord's table. If ye quit the truth of doctrine known to you, ye quit the ſubſtance of the teſtimony; for it is 'the doctrine which is according to godlineſs,' 1 Tim. vi. 3. It is the channel in which the ſanctification of ſinners, the great end of divine revelation does run, Gal. iii. 2. This only would I learn of you, Received ye the ſpirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith.

(2.) The inſtituted ordinances of God which ye have received. Ye muſt bear witneſs to theſe, though our beautiful houſe ſhould be laid in rubbiſh, and mens ordinances and inſtitutions ſet up in their room. We are under a covenant for the pure ordinances, and againſt mens ordinances. And ye muſt bear teſtimony to theſe divine ordinances: for ſo far as ye quit them, ye quit the ſubſtance of the teſtimony; for they are the means appointed of God for the ſanctification of an unholy world. When we come to heaven, we will ſtrive with no body for Preſbytery againſt Prelacy, for the ſimplicity of goſpel worſhip againſt idolatry and ſuperſtition; for then the end, holineſs is obtained, and we have no more need of the means. But we are not there yet: and therefore we muſt contend for theſe ordinances of God; we muſt not lay by our ſtaff, ere we arrive at our journey's end. Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damaſcus, may be pleaſanter rivers than Jordan; but dipping in them will not cure us of our leproſy; for they want one thing Jordan has, a word of divine appointment. Prelacy and ceremonies make a greater figure in the eye than purity and ſimplicity; but they are not means of holineſs; God never made them, and men cannot make them ſo. Accordingly we have found them curſed trees of mens planting, under whoſe ſhade piety went always to wreck, and profanity grew.

8thly, He muſt feed on the body and blood of Chriſt. Faith muſt taſte, and feed, and reliſh the ſweetneſs of Chriſt, and of every part of Chriſt; unite the ſoul with him, and ſo draw virtue, ſap, and ſtrength from him, to ſtand before the Lord; the tempter and an evil world without, and luſts within. And I am ſure, if faith be in exerciſe, it will take up a crucified Chriſt, as fit for this, as the eating of a lamb was to ſtrengthen for work or travel. And,

1. Ye muſt take and feed on a whole Chriſt; Chriſt in all his offices. As your prophet. A day of wrath is a day, wherein many miſtake their way, ſtumble into by paths, and fall into error. But, ſays the believing communicant, I renounce my own wiſdom and wit; and take this Chriſt to be my guide; and he has promiſed to guide me even unto death. A day of wrath is a day of ſad challenges, of revenging ſtrokes of juſtice; but here is my prieſt, I ſhelter under his righteouſneſs. Such a day is a day of fearful attacks from the devil, the world and the fleſh; but I take him to be my king, and rely on his promiſes.

2. Ye muſt eat with the bitter herbs of repentance and ſorrow for ſin. If faith be ſtirring in thy heart, it will make a hole in your heart, though like a rock otherwiſe, Zech. xii. 10. And I will pour upon the houſe of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the Spirit of grace and of ſupplication, and they ſhall look upon me whom they have pierced; and they ſhall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only ſon; and ſhall be in bitterneſs for him, as one that is in bitterneſs for his firſt born. Thou wilt ſorrow for thy own ſins, and the ſins of the land that bring on wrath; for the diſhonour done to Chriſt by yourſelf and all ranks, Ezek. ix. 4. 'And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go through the midſt 'of the city, through the midſt of Jeruſalem, and ſet a 'mark upon the foreheads of the men that ſigh and 'that cry for all the abominations that be done in the 'midſt thereof.' Hab. iii. 16. 'When I heard, my 'belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: rottenneſs entered into my bones, and I trembled in 'myſelf, that I might reſt in the day of trouble.'

3. Ye muſt eat in a departing poſture; turning your backs on the world and your luſts, and ſetting your face ſtedfaſtly to Immanuel's land. Ye muſt this day go to that table, joining yourſelves to the Lord, reſolute to ſave yourſelves from this untoward generation, Acts ii. 43. that if Chriſt mind to leave the land, ye will not ſtay behind, but go with him, and follow him whitherſoever he goes. If ye can but have him preſent with you in the furnace of affliction, in exile, priſon, or blood, ye are content. For this end ye muſt take hold of him never to part.

II. The ſecond thing propoſed, was, to ſhew what ſecurity this will be againſt the day of wrath.

1ſt, Thus ye will be ſecured from eternal wrath. When the great day of wrath comes, and all the enemies of God are before him in one body on the left hand, ye will be on the right. Ye will ſtand with Chriſt on the field, till ye ſee with him the backs of all his enemies, while they are driven with horrible roarings into the bottomleſs pit. And when they are cloſed up there under the load of everlaſting wrath, ye ſhall get your crowns on your heads, and palms in your hands, and help to make heaven ring eternally with your Hallelujahs.

2dly, In a day of wrath upon the land; though the ſtorm blow never ſo hard, ye ſhall have a manifold ſecurity. Though ye muſt not promiſe yourſelves ſecurity from trouble, yet,

1. Ye ſhall be kept from mixing with the generation of God's wrath. Ye are to ſet up the partition-wall this day betwixt you and them; do it firmly, and aſſuredly in the heat of the wrath it ſhall ſtand. Build ye the partition wall, and God will build the protection-wall, Pſal. xii. 7. Thou ſhalt keep them, O Lord, thou ſhalt preſerve them from this generation for ever. There are two generations in the world, the righteous and the wicked; thoſe who fear God, and thoſe who fear him not: but they are ſeparate parties, oppoſite to one another; and they ſhall never mix. I confeſs, the two parties at this day are too near one another in the church of Scotland. They are like the toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, part of clay, and part of iron; yet iron is not mixed with clay, Dan. ii. 41. 43. But fire congregat homogenea, &c. And when God kindles his fire, it will make men of like natures run together, and make the ſeparation greater; and the one generation may be leſs bulky, but nothing leſs worth; and the other generation more bulky, but leſs worth.

2. 'It may be, ye ſhall be hid in the day of the Lord's 'anger,' Zeph. ii. 3. May be God may hide you in heaven ere then, as he has been doing with many eminent miniſters and Chriſtians of late, taking them away from the evil to come. Or he can hide you under heaven, for the earth is the Lord's: and though men allow you not a hole to hide your head in, he can give you a broad place, whether they will or no. Though it be a very open place, he can draw a curtain over you, where the ſharpeſt ſighted enemy ſhall not ſee through. He has an inviſible lock and key on every place, where the moſt reſolute and quick-ſighted ſearchers ſhall not be able to open the door, and ſee who is therein.

3. Ye ſhall not be ſtraitened for proviſion, though it be a ſcarce time, Pſal. cxlii. 5. I cried unto thee, O Lord, I ſaid, Thou art my refuge, and my portion in the land of the living. Though it may be hard to get a ſermon without, ye ſhall have two preachers within. (1.) The boſom-preacher will be with you, that has his pulpit in the breaſt; that is a good conſcience, one of the ſweeteſt preachers that ever opened a mouth, that fills all his hearers with joy, 2 Cor. i. 12. ‘ Our rejoicing is this, the teſtimony of our conſcience,’ &c. (2.) The heart-preacher, that has his pulpit in the heavens; that is, Chriſt himſelf by his Holy Spirit, who is always a ſucceſsful preacher, whoſe hearers are ever taught to profit; Pſal. xxxii. 8. ‘ I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee, in the way which thou ſhalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.’ He will ſbe to you as a little ſanctuary. And theſe will carry you through till ye come to your journey's end.

4. Though the weight of common calamity ſhould bruiſe you, yea, and cruſh you, there ſhall no evil touch you, Job v. 19. (1.) No evil that is an only evil; mercy ſhall always be predominant in thy cup. (2.) The evil ſhall be taken out of the evils that come on thee. So that (ver. 22.) ‘ at deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh: neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the earth.’ Thou ſhalt ſay as Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 55. ‘ O death, where is thy ſting? O grave, where is thy victory? There ſhall be no more curſe.’ God ſhoots poiſoned arrows at his enemies, but none of theſe at his friends. The ſerpent ſhall be unſtinged. May be thou wilt think, ere all be done, thou feeleſt a ſting; but aſſure yourſelf it will be but a bee-ſting, that goes only ſkin-deep, Matth. x. 28. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul, &c. (3.) The evils that may come on thee, ſhall be turned to good, Rom. viii. 28. ‘ And we know, that all things work together for good, to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpoſe.’ Every ſtone thrown at thee, ſhall turn a precious ſtone; and the moſt croſs wind ſhall drive thee to thy harbour.

III. The third thing propoſed, was, to confirm the doctrine. And here only two things may be noticed.

1*ſt*, He that thus manageth this ordinance, unites with Chriſt the great peace maker; Chriſt is his: his ſecurity is in him, for Chriſt is in him, Gal. iv. 19. he cannot die. His blood is ſprinkled on his people, and that marks them for the Lord. The father has given all into his hand; and now though he be a lion to others, he is a lamb to them; and ſo he will not hurt them himſelf: a lamb, a male of the firſt year, in his prime; not a bone broken, in his full ſtrength, though ſacrificed for them; therefore he is able to defend them, and will not let his enemies hurt them: ſlain and roaſted with fire, therefore juſtice has no more to crave of them; without blemiſh, and therefore can cover all theirs.

2*dly*, He gets all this ſealed under the broad ſeal of heaven in this ordinance. Herein the covenant of peace between God and ſinners, is ſealed in both hands; and all theſe, and much more, are promiſes and articles of the covenant. And what greater ſecurity can ye imagine in this world?

IV. Fourthly, I proceed to the application.

USE I. For information.

1*ſt*, The ſlighters of this ordinance, eſpecially at ſuch a time, are great fools, and deſpiſers of their own mercy. Some remain in their groſs ignorance, and have no ſuch eſteem of it, as to ſet them on to get knowledge. Some live in their profanity; and having no mind to be abridged of their ſinful liberty, have ſlighted all theſe, and, it ſeems, will ſlight them to the laſt. Some, if the leaſt demur be made about their admiſſion, if but ſpoke to about amending what is a reproach to the goſpel in their converſation, preſently caſt it off, and enqnire no more about it. And ſome that formerly have ſat down at that table, caſt at that and other ordinances altogether. Well, Sirs, I muſt tell you, ye are ſlighters of your own mercy; and the ſlight redounds to Chriſt himſelf, whoſe ordinance it is, and will lie heavy on your ſouls if ever your eyes be opened. The day of wrath will either rouſe and bow, or break your careleſs, proud, and preſumptuous ſpirits. Thoſe things may ſerve to blind your conſciences now, that will fall off like fig-leaf covers, when God comes to call you to an account for your opportunities of grace.

2*dly*, The miſmanagers of this ordinance are great fools, who ſit down at the Lord's table, but communicate not believingly. They do the outward work, but it is not in faith; they bring no faith, no ſenſe, no diſcerning, &c. and ſo inſtead of ſecuring themſelves againſt the day of wrath, do mark themſelves out for wrath. Ah miſerable work, for men to turn the food of their ſouls into poiſon; ſo to manage the treaty of peace with God, that they part greater enemies than before! The ſin of mock-covenanting, and unworthy communicating, will be a dreadful item in the day of wrath, here and hereafter.

USE II. Of Exhortation.

1*ſt*, Ye that are not communicants, ye are in hazard of the day of wrath as well as others, though ye ſit not at that table. Will ye by faith embrace the ſacrifice exhibited there; receive and ſprinkle the blood, the covenant ſealed there.

2*dly*, Communicants, manage this work ſo as ye may be ſecured againſt the day of wrath. All of you, flee into Jeſus Chriſt as the city of refuge; and make ſure work, and lay down your meaſures for time and for eternity.

Motive 1. Conſider that there will certainly be a great day of wrath upon the world. Our God will come. The day is coming wherein the dead ſhall be raiſed, and all ſhall be ſiſted before the tribunal. Eternal wrath will then ſweep away all that ſhall be found out of Chriſt at that day. Where will ye then appear, O ſlighters and deſpiſers of Chriſt?

Mot. 2. We have all imaginable grounds to look for a day of wrath againſt this church and theſe lands. The plague is begun already as to this poor church; her beauty is defaced; we have all left God, and he has left us in great meaſure: we have broken off from God, and are broken among ourſelves. There is much of the carved work of Zion broke down already; and we have all ground to expect a root ſtroke to the whole of the covenanted work of reformation. Matters are brought to that paſs, that our lands can hardly miſs to be a field of blood. The ſins of the late times are like the iniquity of Baal-peor, which kindled the anger of the Lord againſt the congregation of Iſrael, and brought on a plague amongſt them; and the iniquity of thoſe times has not been ſuitably mourned over to this day. A ſpirit of apoſtaſy and declining is on the growing hand amongſt all ranks; the cry of our ſins is gone up to heaven; and, notwithſtanding of all the alarming diſpenſations of the day, there is a viſible hardneſs and ſtupidity on the generation, and the ſpirit of prayer is reſtrained, that we cannot ſee how we can eſcape. Prepare then to meet your God; and how will ye do it but in Chriſt?

I would only ſay two things.

(1.) Seeing the glorious goſpel-light has ſo ſhined among us, and that contempt of it and of religion does ſo appear in the ſight of the ſun, and a profane ſpirit does ſo much rage, it is very like God will have a particular eye for evil on the profane contemners of religion amongſt us.

(2.) Seeing there is ſome ground to think that we ſhall yet have glorious days, it is like God will ſhovel out of the way many, that their eyes ſhall never ſee it; and that it will make a ſad ſcattering among formal profeſſors, ſtrangers to the life of godlineſs.

Mot. 3. Conſider Chriſt is now offering himſelf and the covenant of peace to us. It is time to be going when the Lord is riſen up, and is drawing out his armies againſt us; to tremble when the lion roars. Come then, leſt ye mourn at the laſt, and ſay, How have I hated inſtruction, and my heart deſpiſed reproof? and have not obeyed the voice of my teachers, nor inclined mine ear to them that inſtructed me?

I cloſe with two or three words of advice to thoſe that reſolve ſo to manage this ſacrament, as that they may be ſecured againſt the day of wrath.

(1.) Let not the thoughts of wrath prevail to darken your view of the love of Chriſt in the goſpel and in this ordinance. Particularly, aſſure yourſelves if ye be willing to be the Lord's, and take him for your God, the white ſide of the cloud is to you; and that though God were to deſtroy the whole land from off the face of the earth, if there were but one ſoul who ſhould take ſhelter in the covenant of peace, he ſhould be welcome.

(2.) As ye give yourſelves to the Lord, ſo give your families too. Take all yours that way, and lay them over on him, and leave them with him for the evil day.

(3.) Let it be your main concern to get ſtrength to be carried cleanly through; that ye be not led away with the ſins and ſnares of the evil time, and ſo fall from your ſtedfaſtneſs.

(3.) laſtly, Be not peremptory and particular as to what otherwiſe may be your portion of common calamity; but leave that on the Lord. Only in this be particular, that the ſting of the curſe muſt be taken away, and therefore that ye muſt put yourſelves in the bottom of the everlaſting covenant, and give yourſelves to Chriſt as the great ſteerſman through the ſea of this world, leaving that to him what weather ye ſhall meet with in your voyage to Immanuel's land.

Thus I have delivered my meſſage to you from the Lord, as that which I judged was God's mind and call to you at this day. I deſire to venture myſelf for time and eternity on this bottom; and it is my requeſt to you that ye will take this method this day for your ſecurity againſt the day of wrath. And if I ſhould never have another occaſion of this nature to ſpeak unto you, I would leave it with you, That this and this only, is the way to be ſecured againſt the day of wrath.

The Sin of People's FORSAKING GOD, and BETATING themſelves to the CREATURE in his Stead;

A N D

The Wretchedneſs of this Exchange.

Several Sermons, preached at Ettrick, in the year 1725.

JER. ii, 13.

For my people have committed two evils: they have forſaken me the fountain of living waters, and hewed them out ciſterns, broken ciſterns, that can hold no water.

THIS text is uſhered in with a ſtrange preface, wherein the heavens are called to ſtand in amaze, to be filled with horror, and to dry up. Why, what is the matter? the ſin and folly of Iſrael. My people have committed two evils, &c. In which words there is,

Firſt, A general charge againſt them: they have done two evils, two ill things. Why, two is not many: Yea; but they are two leading ill things, two mother-evils. They are two fountain-ſins, each of them caſting out their thouſands, as a fountain doth her waters. They are enough to overwhelm them with ſins and ſorrows. And the evils are the greater that they are my people, in covenant with me, that have done them. It is not the iſles of Chittim, nor Kedar; but Iſrael.

Secondly, A particular condeſcenſion on theſe evils, theſe fountain-evils.

1ſt, Deſerting God: They have forſaken me, left me, and gone away from me. I am their King and Lord, and they have ſhaken off their ſubjection to me; their Head and Huſband, and they have run away from me. I am their confederate, who took them into covenant with me; and they have broken the bands, and burſt the yoke. I am their God in covenant, whom they have forſaken.

2dly, Taking up with the creature. They have betaken themſelves to the creature in my room and ſtead. They have hewed them out ciſterns, broken ciſterns, that can hold no water. Heb. for to cut out, &c. Thus they have made an exchange. They have left me to go to them; like traiterous ſubjects, caſting off their rightful lord, for an uſurper; an unfaithful wiſe, deſerting her huſband, for her adulterer; a wretched creature, deſerting his God, for an idol. So here,

1. There is ſomething ſuppoſed. It is ſuppoſed.

(1.) That Iſrael was no more ſelf-ſufficient than any other people under heaven. They were not able to ſatisfy themſelves from themſelves; they were as much in need of ſupply for the ſatisfaction and reſt of their hearts as ever a thirſty man was of drink to refreſh him. And as proud as they were, they behoved to hang on about ſome door or other for their ſupply; either God's or the creature's.

(2.) That, in this their neceſſitous caſe, God took them home to his houſe, as one would take in a beggar in rags, and ſet him down with the children; and told them, they ſhould not want, if they would ſtay with him, Deut. xxxii. 10. 'He found him in a deſart land, and 'in the waſte howling wilderneſs; he led him about, 'he inſtructed him, he kept him as the apple of his 'eye.' He called them his people, took them into the covenant, and ſet them down at the fountain-head, the well-ſpring of mercy and goodneſs.

2. There is ſomething expreſsly declared. It is ſo declared,

(1.) That Iſrael had made a wilful exchange of his condition, caſt himſelf out of God's houſe, into the devil's common again; changed his glory, for that which will not profit; forſaken the God that took him in, and gone back to the empty creature, where he was before.

(2.) That Iſrael had ſinned and played the fool egregiouſly in making this exchange. And accordingly his ſin and folly is here proclaimed. And,

1. Iſrael was a holy people; but the text proclaims them a ſinful people with a witneſs. Their forſaking him the fountain of living water, and betaking themſelves to broken ciſterns, are ſignal evils. There is a heap of evil in each of them. They could not have made a worſe choice, to the diſhonour of God, and to make his name to be blaſphemed among the Heathen. So they affronted their God.

2. Iſrael was a wiſe people; but the text proclaims them fools with a witneſs; that were as blind to their own intereſt, as they were unfaithful to God's honour. Mens wiſdom or folly appears in their bargains: let us ſee what a blind exchange they had made. They had exchanged,

1*ſt*, A ſpring-well for ciſterns. A ciſtern is a hollow place cut out in the earth, in wood, or ſtone, for receiving of and keeping rain water, or water otherwiſe put into it; whereas the fountain or ſpring hath the water from itſelf. God in Chriſt is the fountain, all-ſufficient in himſelf. All the creatures are but ciſterns: if there is no water brought into them from heaven, or from the ſpring, they are dry. Who then would exchange a fountain for a ciſtern? Living are ſpringing.

2*dly*, A fountain made ready to their hand, for ciſterns that were to be hewed out. Happineſs is ready in God for us, and we need only to draw out by faith the waters of conſolations. But O what hard work is it to hew out the ciſterns of created enjoyments! It is deſirable to have comfort ready. Who then will be ſo fooliſh, as to exchange a fountain made ready to their hand, for ciſterns that require much labour to hew them out?

3*dly*, One ſpring-well, ſufficient for all their needs, for many ciſterns. There is no one ciſtern that will do one's buſineſs: when the man has hewed out one ciſtern, the water is lacking and unpleaſant there, and he muſt hew out another, and ſo on. And thus the ſoul once forſaking God, becomes reſtleſs; there is no end of ciſterns. It is a great conveniency, to have what we need in one place, and not to be obliged to go here and there for it. Who then would forſake God, the fountain of all bleſſings, and betake themſelves to the creatures, which though tried one after another, cannot ſupply their wants?

4*thly*, Freſh and ſweet waters of the ſpring, for the dead unſavoury waters of the ciſterns, i. e. ſpringing waters bubbling up through the earth, cool, and freſh, for the ſtanding, ſtinking waters of the ciſterns. Who then will be ſo fooliſh, as to forſake the living waters and betake themſelves to the ſtinking waters of the ciſterns?

Laſtly, A ſpring-well, for broken and cracked ciſterns, that let the water through them, and cannot hold it in. So that when the man comes to drink at his ciſtern for his thirſt; behold there was a crack in the ciſtern, and the water is all gone; and there is nothing left but ſediment, mud, and mire.

The ſcope and ſubſtance of theſe words may be taken up in theſe two doctrines.

DOCT. I. Forſaking of God in Chriſt, and betaking one's ſelf to the creature in his ſtead, are two ill, ſignally ill things.

DOCT. II. To forſake God in Chriſt, and take the creature in his ſtead, is a wretched exchange.

I return to the firſt of theſe, viz.

DOCT. I. Forſaking of God in Chriſt, and betaking one's ſelf to the creature in his ſtead, are two ill, ſignally ill things.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, we ſhall conſider the two branches of it ſeparately, viz. 1. The forſaking of God in Chriſt; and, 2. The betaking one's ſelf to the creature in God's ſtead.

Firſt, As to the firſt of theſe ill things, the forſaking of God in Chriſt, we ſhall conſider,

1*ſt*, The object forſaken.

2*dly*, How ſinners forſake God in Chriſt.

3*dly*, Why they forſake him.

4*thly*, The ill of this practice.

Laſtly, Make application.

I. Firſt, We ſhall conſider the object forſaken. It is not ſimply God, but God in Chriſt; for the object in the text, is the fountain of living waters to ſinners, to refreſh them, and ſatisfy their ſouls: but God out of Chriſt, an abſolute God, is a conſuming fire to them. We can no way, according to the ſcripture, conceive of God, as a fountain of living waters to us, but in Chriſt Jeſus, Zech. xiii. 1. 'In that day there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin, and for uncleanneſs.' John iv. 10. 'Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, if thou kneweſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldſt have aſked of him, and he would have given thee living water.' It is true, there is an infinite fulneſs of goodneſs, mercy, and grace, in the nature of God; but to ſinners it would have been a ſealed fountain for ever, had not the Mediator interpoſed. So there is,

1*ſt*, A forſaking of God ſimply as God. Thus Adam, falling from his integrity, forſook God, ſhaking off the yoke of obedience to his Creator. This was a horrid evil, and it lies on all men in their natural ſtate. They are in a ſtate of deſertion, having left God, Eph. ii. 12. At that time ye were without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world. The firſt covenant-tye is no longer able to hold them with him. In this ſenſe, the Pagans have forſaken God, who never heard of Chriſt.

2*dly*, A forſaking of God in Chriſt. And thus only his viſible church and people called by his name, are capable of forſaking him; as the texts hints. He becomes their God in a viſible church-ſtate, bidding them welcome to all his fulneſs, for the ſupply of their needs, and making over the ſame to them in the goſpel-offer; they profeſſing their acceptance, by receiving the ſeal or ſeals of his covenant.

So the God forſaken by the hearers of the goſpel, muſt be conſidered,

1. As God in our nature, for communion with guilty us, Matth. i. 23. Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name EMMANUEL, which, being interpreted, is, GOD WITH US. We could have no communion with an abſolute God: the rays of his majeſty would have burnt us up; as fire does the dry ſtubble. But he clothed himſelf with our nature, that he might be a refreſhing ſpring to us, 2 Cor. v. 19. 'God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf,' &c. The rock of ages was found in our wilderneſs, and there he was ſmitten with Moſes's rod, and the waters guſhed out, the living waters, for us. He tabernacled among us.

2. As God in our nature, ready to communicate his fulneſs to us, for making us happy in time and eternity, John iv. 10. forecited. The ſpring is not to dig now; it is digged already, and running, that 'whoſoever will, may take of the water of life freely,' Rev. xxii. 17. The invitation is given out, to come and drink, John vii. 37. All the ſaints have drunk, but the ſpring is running as much as ever for us.

3. laſtly, As a God we have profeſſed to betake ourſelves to for our happineſs, Jer. xvi. 19. O Lord, my ſtrength and my fortreſs, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles ſhall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and ſhall ſay, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

We have found the ſcorching thirſt that hath ſeized us, through the diſorder brought into our ſouls by Adam's fall; and have profeſſed to look for our relief in God only; and ſo have ſit down by the well.

II. The ſecond thing on this head is, How ſinners forſake God in Chriſt? Sinners forſake him,

Step 1. Lowering their eſteem of him, the value and honour they had for him ſinking low, Pſal. l. 21. Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thyſelf. It is the high eſteem of Chriſt that brings ſinners to him; and as that ſinks, they will go away, John vi. 68. ‘Simon Peter anſwered him, Lord, to whom ſhall we ‘go? thou haſt the words of eternal life.’ The myſtery of Chriſt is ready to be deſpiſed by proud nature, becauſe there is no ſeeing of the glory of it without a peculiar light. Hence God in Chriſt is a ſtumbling-ſtone to the blind world, Math. xi. 6. Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. And a ſtroke in the eye, whereby one ſees no beauty in him, leads here.

Step 2. The heart's falling off its reſt in him, and turning reſtleſs, ſo that the fulneſs of a God cannot quiet it, Iſa. xxx. 15. In returning and reſt ſhall ye be ſaved, in quietneſs and in confidence ſhall be your ſtrength? If the wife begin to harbour a diſcontent as to her huſband, ſhe is in a fair way to forſake him: and the heart that cannot be content with the fountain, will forſake it, to hew out ciſterns for itſelf; when the view of the broad covenant, with all its benefits, is not ſufficient to lay bands on the heart, and make it to ſay, ‘This is all my ‘deſire,’ 2 Sam. xxxii. 5. it is as good as gone from the Lord.

Step 3. Ceaſing to cleave to him by faith, and letting go believing grips of the promiſe, Heb. iii. 3. Take heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. It is by faith one depends on and hangs about him for happineſs and ſatisfaction. It is the hand by which his children hold him, Cant. iii. 4. It is the eye which they are to keep on him for the ſupply of all their wants, Iſa. xlv. 22. While they do ſo, they are ſafe; and the fountain will ſpring forth to them; as in the caſe of Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 26. when he ſaid, ‘I will not let thee go, except thou ‘bleſs me;’ and in the caſe of the Syrophenician woman, Mark vii. 24.——30. But as ſoon as they let down their hands, and keep their eyes no more upon him for their ſupply, they are forſaking him. In the next place, they will be found,

Step 4. Looking out ſome other way, for ſomething to reſt their hearts in. And then they are on their way away from him, Heb. iii. 12. Unbelief ſays, One may long wait at this fountain, ere he get wherewith to quench his thirſt: then he begins to think of hewing out ciſterns. It ſays the promiſes of a reſt are but fair words, not to be truſted to; then they are for returning back to Egypt again; and think they muſt ſeek a ſeen good, Pſal. iv. 6. There be many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good? Thus the reſtleſs heart, giving over to ſeek its reſt and ſatisfaction in God, goes to the creature to find in it what it cannot find in God.

Step 5. Growing remiſs in duties, and ſlighting opportunities of communion with God; a form of duties may be kept up, but the heart is away, what avail they? Cant. iii. 1. By night on my bed I ſought him whom my ſoul loveth; I ſought him, but I found him not. Prayer is poſted over; for it is for faſhion's cauſe, rather than from faith or hope of gaining thereby, that they ſeek him at all: and by their coldriſeneſs in their addreſſes, they court a denial. At ſermons, they are not all there, their heart is away after ſome one idol of jealouſy or other, like thoſe ſpoke of, Ezek. xxxiii. 31. ‘And they come ‘unto thee as the people cometh, and they ſit before ‘thee as my people, and they hear thy words, but they ‘will not do them; for with their mouth they ſhew ‘much love, but their heart goeth after their covetouſ‘neſs.’ Satan ſtrikes in, picks up the word as it is ſown, and fills their hearts otherwiſe, Prov. v. 14. ‘I ‘was almoſt in all evil, in the midſt of the congregation ‘and aſſembly.’ And Sabbaths become a burden, like thoſe who ſaid, ‘When will the new moon be gone, ‘that we may ſell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may ‘ſet forth wheat?’ Amos viii. 5.

Step 6. Having no regard to pleaſe him in their ordinary walk, Ezek. xxiii. 35. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, Becauſe thou haſt forgotten me, and caſt me behind thy back, therefore bear thou thy lewdneſs and thy whoredoms. Hence they are in no concern to acknowledge God in their ways, to ſeek counſel of God in particular caſes, and to carry along with them a regard to his glory in all things; but are like the princes of Iſrael, Joſh. ix. 14. that ‘took of the Gibeonites ‘victuals, and aſked not counſel at the mouth of the ‘Lord.’ So, if they do a good thing, it is not becauſe it pleaſes God, but becauſe it pleaſeth themſelves: and if they do evil, and are touched for it, it is not becauſe it is diſpleaſing to him.

Step 7. Laying aſide the word for a rule, and regulating themſelves by another ſtandard, Pſal. cxix. 53. Horror hath taken hold upon me becauſe of the wicked that forſake thy law. Satan ſhuffles in the courſe of the world, the voice of the multitude, inſtead of the Bible in their hand: and it is enough for them that they ſee a throng in the way before them, though they hear not the voice behind them, ſaying, ‘This is the way, walk ‘ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye ‘turn to the left,’ Iſ. xxx. 21. But God ſpeaks to us by his word, and binds us to it, Iſ. viii. 20. ‘To the law, ‘and to the teſtimony,’ &c. and it is the appointed means of communion betwixt God and us; the rule of our obedience, and muſt be the reaſon of it; and it is the appointed channel of influences, Iſa. lix. 21. ‘As ‘for me, this is my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord: ‘My ſpirit that is upon thee, and my words which I ‘have put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy ‘mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeed, nor out of ‘the mouth of thy ſeed's ſeed, ſaith the Lord, from ‘henceforth and for ever.’ So whoſo forſake the word, forſake God.

Step 8. Forſaking his people for their companions, Prov. xiii. 20. He that walketh with wiſe men, ſhall be wiſe: but a companion of fools ſhall be deſtroyed. Like as it is with the ſinner returning unto God, he turns his back on the world lying in wickedneſs, and forſakes his former companions in ſin, Pſal. xlv. 10. for there is no going in the way of life otherwiſe, Prov. ix. 6. ſo men forſaking the Lord, are ready to forſake his people. Indeed men may keep by God's people, and yet forſake God; but none can forſake the people of God, and not forſake God himſelf; more than they can throw off a living body, and yet hold by the head.

Step 9. Forſaking ordinances, and the communion of ſaints therein. Ordinances are the tryſting places for the meeting betwixt God and ſinners; he walks in the midſt of the golden candleſticks: he will account himſelf forſaken by people's turning their back on the tryſting place where he is to be met with. Mark Heb. x. 25, 26. Not forſaking the aſſembling of ourſelves together as the manner of ſome is; but exhorting one another. For if we ſin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins. He hath ſent out his meſſengers with awful certification, Luke x. 16. ‘He that heareth you, heareth ‘me; and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me; and he ‘that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me.’ Therefore ſays Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 13. ‘O Lord, the hope ‘of Iſrael, all that forſake thee, ſhall be aſhamed, and ‘they that depart from me, ſhall be written in the earth, ‘becauſe they have forſaken the Lord, the fountain of ‘living waters.’ It is an ill ſign in a wife, when ſhe is not to be found in the houſe of her huſband; and of one forſaking God, when his feet are giving up treading his courts.

Step 10. laſtly, Throwing away the form of religion, caſting off the maſk, and giving the ſwing to their luſts. Thus the forſaking of God is compleated, 2 Pet. ii. 22. But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and, the ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire. Then the devil re-enters with ſeven worſe than himſelf, into where he had gone out. Thus men come to the end of this wretched road. Yet even in this caſe all are not alike. Some give up themſelves to ſome one abomination or other; others give up themſelves to all manner of abomination that come in their way, ſwimming in a ſea of wickedneſs, as the former in a pool. Some again continue indifferent as to others yet in the way of God; others are poſſeſſed with a rancour and ſpite againſt the way of God, and thoſe that follow it; ſo in times of peace, they are cruel mockers, and will do any ill turn they can; and in time of the church's trouble, will turn downright perſecutors.

III. The third thing is, Why they forſake him? how it comes they do ſo?

1. There is a natural bent to apoſtacy in all men; ſaints and ſinners, Hoſ. xi. 7. And my people are bent to backſliding from me: though they called them to the Moſt High, none at all would exalt him. In ſaints it ſtirs, and often carries them very fearful lengths, as it did in Peter: in ſinners it reigns, and ſo may carry them the full length. This woful ſet of heart is natural to us, Gen. viii. 21.——'The imagination of man's heart is evil 'from his youth.' Our hearts, by Adam's fall, have got a bias to departing from God: there is need to take heed to it.

2. Many were never truly joined to the Lord, though they ſeemed to be ſo: ſo having never knit with him, no wonder they fall away from him, 1 John ii. 19. 'They 'went out from us, but they were not of us; for if 'they had been of us, they would no doubt have con-'tinued with us; but they went out, that they might 'be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us.' Profeſſors ſtrangers to ſaving faith, in whom dwells not the Spirit of God, but of the world, lie fair to make apoſtates, Heb. x. 39. 'But we are not of them that draw 'back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the 'ſaving of the ſoul.' An error in the taking up of religion, often makes it come to a ſorry and ſhameful account at the long-run; men building without a foundation, Luke xiv. 28, 29, 30.

3. They often have ſome idol of jealouſy ſecretly reſerved, when they are at their beſt; and that upon a proper occaſion does the buſineſs; like the young man in the goſpel, that went away from Chriſt grieved, becauſe he had great poſſeſſions, Mark x. 22. It was not without reaſon that Pharaoh would have Iſrael leave their cattle; for then he knew this would bring them back again. One ſon of a ſtranger was the death of Gideon's ſeventy ſons. One luſt unmortified, and ſecretly ſpared, will be the death of a thouſand good motions and inclinations. That proves the man's ſnare. So Judas's covetouſneſs was ſometimes peeping out, while he was following Chriſt; at laſt it broke out like a flood, and carried him quite away to betray his Maſter.

4. Their not preſſing in to the ſweet of religion, in an experimental feeling of the power of it. It is not for nought that exhortation is given with ſo much earneſtneſs, Pſal. xxxiv. 8. 'O taſte, and ſee that the 'Lord is good!' Experience is the beſt way to keep a ſinner with God; he feels how good it is to draw near to God, Pſal. lxxiii. 28. Diſappointment cauſes forſaking, as in the caſe of Iſrael in the wilderneſs. And they who preſs not in to the inner court of religion by faith, hope, and diligence, but ſatisfy themſelves with the form of it, cannot miſs theſe fatal diſappointments.

5. The want of a living principle of grace in the heart, that may bear out in all changes of one's condition, Pſal. lxxviii. 37. For their heart was not right with him. It fares with ſinners as with ſprings and pools; when there is a ſhower from the clouds, the pools are full; but then when drought comes, the pool dries up, there being no ſpring in it. But the ſpring-well bears out then as at other times. The newneſs of religion ſerves people a while, to keep the affections aſtir: but when that is over, and there is no living principle of grace, the affections are loſt, and religion turns unſavoury. They cool like a ſtone taken from the fire, and wither like a branch that takes not with the ſtock.

6. Unwatchfulneſs. Thereby men are ſtolen off their feet, Prov. iv. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the iſſues of life. Conſidering that we have a deceitful heart within, an inſnaring world without, and a buſy devil going about us, no man can keep his feet without watching. By unwatchfulneſs there is a breach made in one's caſe, the conſcience is defiled, and the heart is deadened, Eccleſ. x. 18. 'By much 'ſlothfulneſs the building decayeth, and through idle-'neſs of the hands the houſe droppeth through;' and no care being taken to make up the gap, it grows ſtill wider and wider: a ſtrangeneſs gets in betwixt God and the ſoul; and that not being removed, they even wear out of acquaintance.

7. A conceit of being able to live without him, Jer. ii. 31. O generation, ſee ye the word of the Lord: have I been a wilderneſs unto Iſrael? a land of darkneſs? wherefore ſay my people, we are lords, we will come no more unto thee?

8. laſtly, Ill company carries many away from God, 1 Cor. xv. 33. 'Be not deceived: Evil communications 'corrupt good manners.' Joaſh kept the way of God as long as his good tutor Jehojada lived; but when he was gone, and he fell into the ill company of the princes, he went quite wrong, 2 Chron. xxiv. 17, 18. Many an apoſtate has inſnaring company made; and therefore we find God's people reſolute to cleave to the Lord, will beware of it, as of a peſt houſe, Pſal. cxix. 115. 'Depart from me ye evil doers; for I will keep the 'commandments of my God.'

IV. The fourth thing here is, The ill, the ill of ſin that is in forſaking God in Chriſt.

1. It is a downright perverſion and deſerting of the end of our creation. As God is the firſt cauſe of all things, ſo he is the chief and laſt end, whereunto all ought to have a tendency, Rom. xi. 36. 'For of him, 'and through him, and to him are all things.' When God made man, he gave him a diſpoſition to bend towards him in all things, as his chief end; when he remade the world in Chriſt, he ſet ſinners on the ſame way again, Pſal. cv. 4. 'Seek the Lord, and his ſtrength; 'ſeek his face evermore.' To forſake him then, is quite contrary to our chief and laſt end. And for a man to forſake God, is as much oppoſite to the order eſtabliſhed in things at the creation, as if the ſun ſhould leave his giving light, and the earth its yielding its fruit to men: as if the fire ſhould go downward, and the waters run upward; and the whole courſe of nature ſhould be turned upſide down.

2. There is in it a ſetting up another in the room of God; therefore it is the firſt command, 'Thou ſhalt 'have no other God.' For what is the forſaking of God, but going away from him to another? there is no mids: for ſeeking ourſelves inſtead of God, is a deifying of ſelf. So the ſcripture points it out as ſpiritual adultery, Ezek. xvi. 32. and idolatry, Phil. iii. 19. See it then as a pulling down of our Sovereign Lord God from his throne over us, and ſetting up a creature in his room, to pay it that homage which we owe to him alone.

3. Fearful ingratitude, for the greateſt mercy and kindneſs, Jer. ii. 2. 12. Thus ſaith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindneſs of thy youth, the love of thine eſpouſals, when thou wenteſt after me in the wilderneſs, in a land that was not ſown. Be aſtoniſhed, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very deſolate, ſaith the Lord.

God has condeſcended to vail himſelf with our fleſh, that he might keep communion with us, with the ſafety of his honour; God was in Chriſt, that he might be a refreſhing fountain to a ſtarving world; he has brought us to him by the goſpel, to drink of the waters of his conſolations, while many of the world have the fountain ſealed to them. What monſtrous ingratitude muſt it be for us to forſake him! Jer. ii. 31. forecited.

4. Notorious unfaithfulneſs to our kindeſt Head and Huſband, Jer. ii. 20. 'For of old time I have broken 'thy yoke, and burſt thy bands, and thou ſaidſt, I will 'not tranſgreſs: when upon every high hill, and under every green tree, thou wandereſt, playing the harlot.' We cannot forſake him, but we muſt be falſe to our profeſſion, our ſolemn vows and engagements. Our forſaking of him is treachery with a witneſs, caſting off the ſtrongeſt bands taken on us with our conſent, to abide with him and cleave to him. It is an aggravation that is not in the devil's deſerting him, nor the Pagans.

5. Notorious unfaithfulneſs to our own intereſt, and folly with a witneſs. It was a pertinent anſwer which Peter gave, John vi. 68. 'Lord, to whom ſhall we go? 'thou haſt the words of eternal life.' It were good for ſinners under temptation to forſake God, to propoſe it to themſelves, and ſtay till they get a ſatisfying anſwer. Will men forſake one they are with, if they cannot do better, or as well, with another? But we can never do well with any other, 1 Sam. xii. 21. Turn ye not aſide from following the Lord; for then ſhould ye go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. Nay, whatſoever we go to, from God, will do us hurt, and not good, Ezek. xxix. 7. It is taking poiſon, leaving wholſome food. So that forſakers of God ſin againſt themſelves, cutting the throat of their own intereſt, Prov. viii. 36. 'But he that ſinneth againſt me, 'wrongeth his own ſoul: all they that hate me, love 'death.'

6. An affronting of God before the world, caſting diſhonour on him, bearing falſe witneſs againſt him, Jer. ii. 31. 'Have I been a wilderneſs unto Iſrael? a 'land of darkneſs? wherefore ſay my people, We are 'lords, we will come no more unto thee?' That bears the language of their deſerting to have been, that God had been to them as a wilderneſs. Forſakers of God are as the ſpies that brought up an ill report on the good land, Rom. ii. 34. 'For the name of God is blaſphemed among the Gentiles through you.' What muſt the world ſay, ſeeing God's people forſake him, but that it is in vain to ſerve him, and that there is not that ſatisfaction and comfort to be found in him, that the word ſays there is?

7. A practical commendation of the way of the world, contemning God, and ſeeking their happineſs in things that are ſeen, Prov. xxviii. 4. They that forſake the law praiſe the wicked: but ſuch as keep the law, contend with them. Deſerters of God do not only ceaſe to give a teſtimony againſt the world lying in wickedneſs, but give teſtimony for them, as if 'they only were the people, and wiſdom would die with them.' And thus they fly in the face of the teſtimony of God in his word.

8. It is a ſinning againſt the remedy of ſin, and makes one's caſe very hopeleſs, Heb. x. 26. 'For if we ſin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the 'truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins.' When man forſook God as God and his God in the firſt covenant, there was a way found for bringing him back to God, 2 Cor. v. 19. 'God was in Chriſt, reconciling the world unto himſelf, not imputing their 'treſpaſſes unto them:' but if men ſhall forſake God in Chriſt, there is not another way to be expected for ſalvation. If the ſinner fall at the Mediator's door, he muſt lie there, there is none to take him up. This is the laſt method of ſalvation; thoſe who ſpurn it, cannot eſcape periſhing.

9. Laſtly, It is an opened ſluice for all other ſins. So the ſin being as it were a mother ſin. The man that forſakes God, he expoſes himſelf a prey to all temptations, to be picked up by the firſt finder, Prov. xxvii. 8. As a bird that wandereth from her neſt: ſo is a man that wandereth from his place. He breaks off from communion with God in ſanctifying, guiding, and ſtrengthening influences; his ſoul being withdrawn as a pipe laid ſhort of the fountain. He caſts off his guide and protector in the wilderneſs; and no wonder to find him in all evil, who forſakes the fountain and only ſpring of goodneſs.

USE 1. Then let us be deeply humbled in the ſenſe of our departures from the Lord, which we have had at any time in our life, Jer. ii. 19. Thine own wickedneſs ſhall correct thee, and thy backſlidings ſhall reprove thee: know therefore and ſee, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, ſaith the Lord God of hoſts. How often have our hearts been found in this way, gadding after other lovers? Behold the wickedneſs, ingratitude, and unfaithfulneſs in it. What great lengths have we often gone, in affronting our God before the world, and cauſing his name to be blaſphemed; Matth. xviii. 7. Wo unto the world becauſe of offences: for it muſt needs be that offences come: but wo to that man by whom the offence cometh. It may be humbling to us, 1ſt, That we live in a land infamous for apoſtaſies; a covenanted land ſolemnly married to God, but which in a national capacity did forſake her covenanted God, purſuing even to death ſuch as durſt not go in to the national apoſtaſy. It is like, when God ſhall raiſe the proceſs againſt the land for theſe things, it will be terrible, eſpecially to thoſe that are ſtill forſaking him.

2dly, We live in a generation that is faſt apoſtatizing, not going but running away from God. The ſluice of untenderneſs is opened among all ranks, wickedneſs abounds; the current is ſo forcible, that it is taking away many, one after another, with it, ſtripping them of their form of godlineſs; driving them into ſinful courſes that once a day would have ſaid, 'Am I a dog, that I ſhould 'do ſuch things?' And it is hard for any to keep their feet.

Let us be humbled under our own and the generation's forſaking of God, conſidering the diſhonour to God thereby, and the danger to ourſelves.

2. Beware of and watch againſt the beginnings of forſaking of God. We may apply that, Prov. xvii. 14. 'The beginning of ſtrife is as when one letteth out 'water; therefore leave off contention, before it be 'meddled with.' When the ſoul begins to decline from God, it is hard to ſay where it may ſtop: but one ſtep ſtill makes way for another. I doubt not there are many, who when they firſt left God, going out of his way, they did not think to have been ſo long away from him as they have been; nor to have gone ſo far as they have gone. And it would have been a terror to them then, to have thought that they ſhould run the length they are now at. But it is eaſier holding off the firſt ſtep, than off the ſecond, and ſo forward; for men are like thoſe going down a precipice, that cannot ſtop till they be at the bottom. Therefore watch againſt the beginnings; and 'let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall.'

3. Ye that are far on, ſtop, and go no further; 1 Pet. iv. 4. For the time paſt of our life may ſuffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, &c. Hold in time, leſt ye run to the utmoſt, and lie at the end of it a ſacrifice to your own wilfulneſs. God is calling you to return, and promiſing to take you home again, Jer. iii. 22. 'Return, ye backſliding children, and I will heal your 'backſlidings.' Are not your conſciences convinced, that it was better with you before ye went away, than it is now? ſay then as Hoſ. ii. 7. 'I will go and return to 'my firſt huſband, for then it was better with me than 'now.' Proceed not then in your courſe, for to make ill worſe. Why will ye ruſh on, 'as the horſe ruſheth 'into the battle?' Jer. viii. 6.

4. laſtly, Forſakers of God, return, return; whatever lengths ye are gone, whatever ſtep ye are in, return to God in Chriſt.

1*ſt*, Return by faith, and let the marriage-covenant betwixt Chriſt and you be renewed. There is acceſs for it yet, Jer. iii. 1. 'Thou haſt played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to me, ſaith the Lord.' Many a time matters are gone ſuch a length betwixt Chriſt and ſinners ſolemnly eſpouſed to him, that there muſt be as great a ſolemnity to the agreement and coming home again, as there was to the firſt taking them in: Rev. xix. 7. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herſelf ready.

2*dly*, Return by repentance, Jer. xxxi. 19. Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was inſtructed, I ſmote upon my thigh: I was aſhamed, yea, even confounded, becauſe I did bear the reproach of my youth. Return with the bluſh in your face, the tear in your eye, grief and ſorrow in your heart, your hand ſmiting on your breaſt, and the rope of humiliation about your neck, for your going away. Rake through your departures, ſearch your ways, and be converted from them. Many times matters go ſuch a length in people's forſaking the Lord, that there muſt be a going over the road of converſion again, in the ſeveral ſteps of it, as at firſt, Matth. xviii. 3. 'Except ye be converted, 'and become as little children, ye ſhall not enter into 'the kingdom of heaven.' There muſt be new conviction, compunction, humiliation, &c.

Motive 1. If ye will continue to forſake God, he will forſake you utterly, 1 Chron. xxviii. 9. We may ſay, God does not quite forſake us, though we have forſaken him: he is ſtill doing us good, filling our hearts with food and gladneſs. But that will not laſte always ſo; the God that now follows us with mercy, will forſake us too, and give up with us, 2 Chron. xv. 2. 'The Lord is 'with you, while ye be with him; and if ye ſeek him, 'he will be found of you; but if ye forſake him, he will 'forſake you.'

Mot. 2. Heavy will be your caſe, if God ſhall forſake you, Hoſ. ix. 12. 'Yea, wo to them when I depart from 'them.' It is compriſed there in a word of two letters; but men and angels cannot ſufficiently unfold the import of it. Saul got a taſte of it in this world, and what a dreadful weight was it on him? 1 Sam. xxviii. 15. 'And Saul anſwered, I am ſore diſtreſſed: for the Phi'liſtines make war againſt me, and God is departed from 'me, and anſwereth me no more, neither by prophets, 'nor by dreams.' How much more dreadful will it be in another world?

Mot. 3. It is a hell by choice; and when it comes to be felt in its vigour, it will be nothing the eaſier, but the hotter, that it was your own choice. The ſentence of damnation runs in theſe terms, 'Depart from me, ye 'curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and 'his angels,' Matth. xxv. 41.

Now men will not ſtay with him, they will be away. The ſending of them to hell, will be a giving of them their will; a forcing them to that in a penal way, which is now their ſinful choice.

Mot. 4. laſtly, The Lord calls you to return, and is courting you to come back. He needs us not; but he ſees that we are ruined if we do not come back.

SECONDLY, As to the ſecond evil, The betaking one's ſelf to the creature in God's ſtead.

In ſpeaking to this, let us conſider,

1*ſt*, The object taken up with in God's ſtead.

2*dly*, How ſinners take up with the creature in God's ſtead.

3*dly*, Why ſinners take up with the creature in God's ſtead.

4*thly*, The ill of this practice.

Laſtly, Improve the doctrine.

I. Firſt, Let us conſider the object taken up with in God's ſtead. It is the creature: A ſorry exchange, Rom. i. 25. 'They changed the truth of God into a lie, and 'worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Cre'ator.' It has two names in ſcripture, a negative and a poſitive one.

1*ſt*, It is not God, Deut. xxxii. 21. 'They have 'moved me to jealouſy with that which is not God.' This is the name of all the ciſterns of the whole creation, choſen in God's room. Whatever it is, whatever excellency be conceived in it, it is a not-god. They take it for a god, and ſo they take it for what it neither is nor can be; and ſo they cheat themſelves. We may take up this name in theſe two ſyllables.

1. It cannot ſatisfy, Iſa. lv. 2. 'Wherefore do ye 'ſpend money for that which is not bread? and your 'labour for that which ſatisfieth not?' There are a great many empty ſpaces in the hungry heart, and it cannot fill them up. God's name is All-ſufficient, Gen. xvii. 1. Heb. q. d. that which is commenſurable. Hereby he is diſtinguiſhed from all not-god; none of them all will meaſure out, nor all of them together, with the neceſſities of any of us.

2. It cannot profit, 1 Sam. xii. 21. And turn ye not aſide: for then ſhall ye go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain. Whatever not-god one betakes himſelf to, it can not only do him good enough, but it can do him no good, Jer. ii. 11. 'Hath 'a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? 'but my people hath changed their glory, for that which 'doth not profit.' Yea, it can do him no good, even though it were a whole world gained, Matth. xvi. 26. 'For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole 'world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give 'in exchange for his ſoul?' Paul was not out in his reckoning, when he ſaid, (Phil. iii. 8.) Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord;—and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt. A ciſtern of one's own hewing out for the fountain, is not only ſcant of water, but the little that is of it is naught.

2*dly*, It is the world, 1 John ii. 15.; the great bulky vanity, Eccleſ. i. 2.; the paſſing world, 1 John ii. 17.; the preſent evil world, Gal. i. 4. that there is a curſe upon, whereby it is doomed to be burnt to aſhes, and ſo can neither laſte, nor ſatisfy in the time it does continue. It is a name conſiſting of three ſyllables.

1. The luſt of the fleſh, 1 John ii. 16. i. e. things grateful to the vile body. There is nothing in it for a pure holy ſoul, but what is noiſome to it; as appears from the entertainment it gave to Chriſt. But the vile world affords for the vile body; the pleaſures of eating and drinking, of fleſhly luſts, luxurious eaſe. It has wherewith to gratify the ſenſes, of touching, taſting, and ſmelling. And though the Lord is for the body, 1 Cor. vi. 13. and can and will gratify its ſenſes more than ten thouſand worlds; yet men forſake God, and take up with the world, and its luſts of the fleſh.

2. The luſt of the eyes, 1 John ii. 16. i. e. things grateful to the covetous eye, Pſal. iv. 6. 'Who will 'ſhew us any good?' There is nothing in it for the ſingle eye but grievouſneſs, which makes them cry, Hab. i. 3. and makes it a weary land. But it has fewel for feeding the vitiated luſting eye; it affords ſilver and gold, houſes and lands, farms and merchandize, cloaths and ornaments, pompous and gaudy ſights and ſhows, huſbands and wives, children and ſervants, &c. And though there is a perfection of beauty in God in Chriſt, while he is repreſented as fairer than the ſons of men, and altogether lovely, Cant. v. 16.; yet he is forſaken for the luſt of the eyes the world affords; while in the mean time it never ſatisfies the eye, Eccl. i. 8.

3. The pride of life, 1 John ii. 16. i. e. things grateful to the vain mind. There is nothing in it for the pure mind, but what is vain, or elſe vile, 2 Cor. v. 4. 'For we that are in this tabernacle do grone, being bur-

‘ dened.’ Phil i. 23. ‘ For I am in a ſtrait betwixt ‘ two, having a deſire to depart, and to be with Chriſt; ‘ which is far better.’ But it affords abundant entertainment for the vain mind; airy honours, credit, reputation, and eſteem for this and the other fancied or real excellency in a perſon; a variety for entertaining the muſical, light, or malicious ear; airy caſtles enough, for the fancy to rove up and down in at large, in vain projects, and vile deſires, and dreaming enjoyments; and enough to buſy the curious, while they live, if they were to live as long as Methuſelah, that with all their learning and reſearches they ſhall never come to the end of. In God in Chriſt are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, Col. ii 3 full ſatisfaction for the mind, 1 John iii. 2. But he is forſaken for the world's pride of life, that will fall in a moment like the foam on the water, Hoſ. x. 7.

II. Secondly, Let us conſider, How ſinners take up with the creature in God's ſtead. This is done by ſetting the heart on the creature, giving it the chief or ſupreme room in the heart, which is due to God only. And ſo men take up with the creature in God's ſtead. The ſteps of it are theſe.

Step 1. Raiſing their eſteem of and value for the creature, till it come to overtop their eſteem of God in Chriſt, like Eve with reſpect to the forbidden fruit, Gen. iii. 6. Men looking on the creature, are often as one ſtanding looking over a precipice, till the head growing giddy, they fall over. Thus Achan came to forſake God for the wedge of gold, Joſh. vii. 21. The creature grows more and more bulky and glorious; and the beauty of a God in Chriſt is more and more vailed; till in end the ſoul gives the preference to the creature, and determines it is beſt for it. Now the unhappy match is begun, and the ſoul is in a fair way to go off to the creature.

Step 2. Bending their chief deſire towards the creature, Pſal. iv. 6. to obtain it, and the ſatisfaction they apprehend is to be found in it. The heart goes after it on the wings of deſire, the ſoul flying after it as a ravenous bird on its prey, Prov. xxiii. 5. So the heart is boiling hot upon it, and grows cold towards God, as Eſau, Gen. xxv. 30, 32. Then the man is making away to it as faſt as he can.

Step 3. Embracing and knitting with it in chief love, 2 Tim iv 10. So Demas looſed his gripes of Paul and the goſpel, and faſtened his gripes on the world. It gets more of his love than God in Chriſt, and all the riches of Chriſt. He looks for his happineſs from it, thinks he would be happy if he could be maſter of what is in it; and ſo he cleaves to it in love, till the love of God is extinguiſhed in his heart, 1 John ii 15. And thus the man has betaken himſelf to it inſtead of God, and the fatal new match is made up.

Step 4. Seeking a reſt for their heart in it, Matth. xi. 28. Come unto me, all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. The man has a reſtleſs heart in his breaſt, that is gaping for ſomething to ſatisfy it; and he carries it away to the creature, to reſt there; to the ciſterns, to drink there. And there he ſucks at the breaſts of the world's conſolations, the conſolations of God being now taſteleſs with him.

Step 5 Truſting in it, and having their chief dependence on it, notwithſtanding of the curſe pronounced againſt ſuch truſt, Jer. xvi 5, 6. It is their prop that ſupports them, the pillar they lean on. Happy had they been, if they had had ſuch truſt to God as they give to the creature. Though it frowns on them, they truſt it will yet ſmile, and they will wait on: it has diſappointed them often, and yet with the greateſt confidence they will promiſe on its head. God's promiſes, that might be deferred but never failed, they can truſt nothing to; but the deceitful promiſes of the world they truſt in.

Step 6. Uſing their chief and moſt earneſt endeavours for it. Their truſt in it is backed with endeavours conform: they ſpare no coſt, to get out of the creature what they are ſeeking, Iſ. lv. 2. Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not? They will ware their money on their luſts, and what is better than either gold or money, they will ſpare no pains; they will labour for it: they will labour in the very fire, and that to wearineſs, Hab. ii. 13. It is not the ſinner's fault, that he gets not ſatisfaction in the creature: if it were in it, he would ſurely have it out of it. Mean while, as is his truſt and dependence on God, ſo are his endeavours that way; his truſt nothing, and his endeavours languid.

Step 7. Rejoycing moſt in their enjoyment of it, and delighting moſt in it. It is no more God, but the creature that is the man's chief joy, 1 Tim. iii. 4. Lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God. The joy of the corn and wine, the crop and cattle, is more to them than the light of the Lord's countenance. They can reliſh no other joys but what are carnal: let the world ſmile, the heavens may lower for them, they can be eaſy; and reign as kings without God, if the kind world will but ſet a fading crown on their head.

Step 8 Sorrowing moſt of all for the want of it, under the frowns of it, 2 Cor. vii. 10.——The ſorrow of the world worketh death. They can bear the frowns of the God that made them better than the frowns of the creature: for the latter has more of their heart than the former. Though God's diſpleaſure is burning againſt them for forſaking him, that is not their grief; it will not mar their joy in the world, but their joy in the world will be an antidote againſt it: Hoſ. xii 7, 8. ‘ He ‘ is a merchant, the balances of deceit are in his hand: ‘ he loveth to oppreſs. And Ephraim ſaid, Yet I am ‘ become rich, I have found me out ſubſtance; in all ‘ my labours they ſhall find none iniquity in me, that ‘ were ſin.’ But all the joys of the goſpel will not weigh down their ſorrows from the creature, Exod. vi, 7, 8, 9.

Step 9. Still cleaving to it, under never ſo many diſappointments from it; not forſaking it, but trying another mean, when one miſgives: Iſa. lvii. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way; yet ſaidſt thou not, There is no hope: thou haſt found the life of thine hand; therefore thou waſt not grieved. When their expectations in God were deferred, they ſaid, ‘ Why ſhould ‘ we wait on the Lord any longer?’ and ſo they forſook him. But do they treat the creature ſo? No indeed; but when it razes their hope in one thing to the very foundation, they ſhift about from one creature to another, but never come back to God; when one ciſtern runs dry, they go to another, but return not to the fountain.

Step 10, laſtly, Following the creature whitherſoever it goes, even quite over the hedge of the law of God: Eccleſ. x. 8. He that diggeth a pit, ſhall fall into it; and whoſo breaketh an hedge, a ſerpent ſhall bite him. The man that has betaken himſelf to the creature, he may hold within the compaſs of lawful enjoyments, and periſh by them, Matth. xxiv 38, 39. ‘ For as, in the days ‘ that were before the flood, they were eating and ‘ drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, untill the ‘ day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not till ‘ the flood came, and took them all away; ſo ſhall alſo ‘ the coming of the Son of man be’. But the ſinner diſappointed of the ſatisfaction expected in lawful things, takes at length the liberty of unlawful; like a beaſt, that, having ate up all to the red earth within his paſture, breaks over the hedge; and eats up that which is not allowed. Thus the ſinner is come to the laſt ſtep, giving himſelf the ſwing in his luſts.

III. The third thing is, Why ſinners take up with the creature in God's ſtead.

1. Becauſe the heart of man is naturally wedded to the creature; and that bond not being truly broken, it is apt to return upon occaſion to its natural bias. Adam ſinning left God, and joined the creature: ſo there is the natural bond, theſe is the object that gets our firſt love. Hence, though the ſinner ſeem to join himſelf to the Lord, he is apt to return to the creature; and will do it, if the power of grace prevent it not, Hoſ. xi. 7. And my people are bent to backſliding from me; though they called them to the Moſt High, none at all would exalt him.

2. Becauſe man's corrupt nature finds a ſuitableneſs and agreeableneſs in the creature to itſelf, Iſa. lvii. 10. foreceited. Corrupt luſts, which otherwiſe muſt ſtarve, find an agreeable entertainment in the creature, an entertainment they can reliſh or ſavour, while they cannot ſavour the things of God, Rom. viii. 5. Even as a ſwine brought into a palace, will get back into an unclean place, where it will get mire and dirt which it cannot get there.

3. Becauſe the creature takes by the eye and other ſenſes: God and his favour are the object of faith, which is rare in the world. Men are naturally much addicted to ſenſe, and apt to be led thereby, and are moſt feelingly touched by objects of ſenſe; while it requires the exerting of a ſupernatural power on them, to raiſe in them the faith of things inviſible. Hence the natural cry, Pſal. iv. 6. 'Who will ſhew us any 'good?' And therefore God gives his people a ſpiritual ſenſation to balance it, verſ. 7. 'Thou haſt put 'gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time that their 'corn and their wine increaſed.'

4. Becauſe the creature promiſeth a preſent good, whereas the greateſt things of God are reſerved to another world. Though God does offer great things in hand to the ſinner, Pſal. xix. 11. yet the greateſt is in hope: but the world's good is offered as a preſent good; as that which is ſoon rotten is ordinarily ſoon ripe too, and contrariwiſe. Hence the ſinner, making the compariſon, looks on the ſpiritual good as the bird in the buſh, on the temporal as the bird in hand, and ſo gripes to it, letting the other go.

5. Becauſe, by the power of a ſtrong deluſion, conveyed into the nature of man by the ſerpent in paradiſe, they expect a ſatisfaction and happineſs in the creature Gen. iii 5, 6. It is repreſented to them in a magnifying glaſs, as the forbidden fruit was to our firſt parents, and ſo ſtrongly is this hope rivetted in them, that though they meet with thouſands of diſappointments, yet ſtill in new hopes they renew their endeavours to extract it out of them, Iſa. lvii. 10. 'Thou art wearied in the 'greatneſs of thy way; yet ſaidſt thou not, There is 'no hope.'

6. laſtly, Becauſe they muſt needs betake themſelves to ſomething without themſelves, not being ſelf-ſufficient: ſo having loſt God, they fall of courſe to the creature in his ſtead, Eph. ii. 12. At that time ye were without Chriſt, being aliens from the commonwealth of Iſrael, and ſtrangers from the covenants of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world: compared with ver. 3. Among whom alſo we all had our converſation in times paſt, in the luſts of the fleſh, and of the mind. The ſun being gone down on them, they ſet up their candles to enlighten their darkneſs, and compaſs themſelves about with their own ſparks. When the prodigal wanted bread, he fed on huſks: when bread was not in Samaria, aſſes heads and doves dung were uſed.

IV. The fourth thing is, The ill of this practice, taking up with the creature in God's ſtead; the ill of ſin in it.

1. It is an egregious wrong done to God, and his infinite excellency, Jer. ii. 11. 'Hath a nation changed 'their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people 'have changed their glory, for that which doth not 'profit.' To take up with the creature in God's ſtead, is to affront him, caſt diſhonour on him, and, as far as lies in us, to ungod him. To pull down the king from his throne, and to put a beggar from the dung-hill upon it; to pull down the ſun from the firmament, and ſet up in its room a twopenny candle; the angels from their ſeats, and ſet glow-worms in their ſtead; would be no ſuch injury, as here: for the diſtance betwixt theſe is but finite; but that betwixt God and the creature is infinite.

It is a heap of practical blaſphemies againſt God, and vilely miſrepreſents him as if he were not,

(1.) The chief good. He is originally good, and the fountain of all goodneſs that is to be found in any creature, Matth. xix. 17. 'There is none good but one, 'that is God.' Therefore he is the chief good. But this practice ſays, the creature is better than he; elſe why do men take up with it in his ſtead? What is our choice, in a plurality of things, one of which we may have, will always be reckoned the beſt in our judgment.

(2.) All-ſufficient. He declares himſelf all-ſufficient in himſelf, and to his creatures, Gen. xvii. 1. There is enough in him to make all the world of men, yea, a thouſand worlds of men happy; for his perfections are infinite. But the taking up with the creature in his ſtead, ſays, There is not enough in him for us. If it is not ſo, why do not we hold by him? if there is enough for us in a God, why are we found at the creature's door? if the fountain is not dry, why at ciſterns?

(3.) The moſt lovely. God is the perfection of beauty and excellency; for whatever is lovely in the creature, is a ray of beauty darted from him, James i. 17. 'Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, 'and cometh down from the Father of lights.' Every thing has its ſpots; only he is altogether lovely, Cant. v. 16. ſo he is fairer than the ſons of men. Pſal. xlv. 2. and nothing is ſo deſirable. But the taking up with the creature, gives the lye to this teſtimony. If the water is ſweeter in the fountain than in the ciſtern, why is the ciſtern choſen inſtead of the fountain?

(4.) Communicative, willing to impart of his goodneſs to his creatures, Matth. xxv. 21. He has parted with his own Son for us, and is willing with him to give us all things, Rom. viii. 32. And this is the teſtimony of the goſpel of God. Yet ſinners by this practice give it out, that all this is falſe; that they muſt needs take up with the creature, ſince the Creator locks up himſelf from them.

2. It is a wrong done to the creature, as being a putting it out of its proper place. It is a rape committed upon it, a violence done thereto, which makes it grone, Rom. viii. 21, 22. When Rachel put her huſband in God's ſtead, he complained bitterly of it, ſaying, Gen. xxx. 2. Am I in God's ſtead, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb? So did the King of Iſrael, when the King of Syria, he thought treated him ſo, 2 Kings v. 7. 'Am I God, (ſaid he,) to kill and to make alive, 'that this man doth ſend unto me to recover a man of 'his leproſy?' So would the whole creation complain of men, if they had a mouth to ſpeak. It expoſes the creature to the fire of God's jealouſy, Ezek. xxiv. 25. As there is not a readier way to break a bow, than to overbend it; ſo there is not a readier way to ruin the creature, than to make an idol of it. Nothing ſits ſafe that ſits in the ſeat of God.

3. It is a wrong done to the whole generation of the ſaints. Aſaph takes notice of this in his caſe, Pſal. lxxiii. 12, 13, 14, 15. Behold, theſe are the ungodly, who proſper in the world, they increaſe in riches. Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chaſtened every morning. If I ſay, I will ſpeak thus; behold, I ſhall offend againſt the generation of thy children. As it affronts their God, it grieves them to the heart; as it declares them to have made a fooliſh choice, it diſhonours them, and proclaims them fools. Thus they ſadden the hearts of thoſe whom God has not made ſad; and hold them for fools, whom he accounts wiſe.

4. laſtly, It is an egregious wrong to the ſinner's own ſoul, putting the arranteſt cheat upon it that one is capable to do, Prov. viii. 36. 'But he that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own ſoul; all they that hate me, love death.’ It is the putting one in the hand of the ſoul, for an end it will never be able to anſwer. God ſays, He will be for a God to the ſinner; but, behold, the ſinner ſays to his own ſoul, Let the creature be for a God to thee. This is, inſtead of bread, to give a ſtone; inſtead of a fiſh, to give a ſerpent.

USE. Then have a horror of taking up with the creature in God’s room and ſtead: look on it as a ſignal evil, and tremble at the very thoughts of it. And,

1. Look back on your guilt of that kind, and repent. O what of this idolatry has there been, and is there among us? See it, and be convinced and humbled under the ſenſe of it.

(1.) Has not ſome creature or other had your chief affection ſet upon it? 1 John ii. 15. ‘Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. How warmly have your hearts been carried towards it, while nothing for God but cold riſe love, languiſhing deſires? &c. The heart has been like a common inn, ſo thronged with ſtrangers, that there was no room for the Maſter.

(2.) Have you not ſerved the creature more than God? Rom. i. 25. Ye have all been at pains for the world, and to ſerve that intereſt: but ſo long as ye have lived, what have ye done for God and his intereſt? Alas! are there not many who ſet themſelves in oppoſition to it? and at beſt they think they do very well if they do not act againſt it; but how few ſet themſelves to advance it? Do ye ſerve the creature ſo? No. Then do ye not ſerve the creature more than the Creator?

(3.) Has not your greateſt care been to pleaſe another rather than God? yourſelves, your luſts, this and the other perſon whoſe favour ye have valued, rather than a God in Chriſt? Gal. i. 10. ‘For do I now perſuade men, or God? or do I ſeek to pleaſe men? for if I yet pleaſed men, I ſhould not be the ſervant of Chriſt.’ How often have ſinners pleaſed themſelves and others, at the expence of God’s high diſpleaſure; and made their way to their own pleaſure, over the belly of all the intimations of the pleaſure of God to the contrary?

Look back on theſe things, ſee how ye have ſet up another in God’s ſtead: be aſhamed, lothe yourſelves, mourn, and repent for theſe things.

2. Reform; pull down your idols of jealouſy; whatever it is that has had God’s room with you, caſt it down from the throne, and ſet it in a low place at his footſtool, Hoſ xiv 3. Aſhur ſhall not ſave us, we will not ride upon horſes, neither will we ſay any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: for in thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy. Reſtore the throne to our Sovereign Lord, reduce the uſurper; let a God in Chriſt command, and let all things elſe be at his diſpoſal, and modelled according to his will and pleaſure, 2 Cor. x. 5.

3. laſtly, Watch, and beware of any creature’s ſtepping in at any time in the room of God, Prov. iv. 23. ‘Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the iſſues of life.’ Keep a jealouſy of this ſort over your hearts at all times; for there is a propenſity in it to fall into this courſe; and it will be off to the creature, if ye do not guard againſt it: and in ſpecial at ſome times, particularly,

(1.) When the Lord delays to anſwer. This is a time when the unbelieving heart being in a haſte, is ready to make its addreſs to the creature inſtead of God, that it may do for the man what God defers to do. This was the ruining thing to thoſe in the wilderneſs. God was not like to bring them into Canaan, and therefore they were for going back to Egypt. Reſolve ye with the church, Lam. iii. 49, 50. ‘Mine eye trickleth down, and ceaſeth not, without any intermiſſion; till the Lord look down, and behold from heaven.’

(2.) When the creature courts, and the world ſmiles, Prov. i. 32. For the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, and the proſperity of fools ſhall deſtroy them. We are ready to hang by a frowning world; how much more dangerous is it when it ſmiles on us? Many have been hugged to death thereby. When therefore things go according to your wiſh, take heed ye be not ruined, as the ſcum the higher it riſes, the ſooner it runs over and is loſt.

DOCT. II. To forſake God in Chriſt, and take the creature in his ſtead, is a wretched exchange.

For clearing of this doctrine I ſhall take it up in theſe four points.

POINT I. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain for a ciſtern.

POINT II. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain made ready to our hand, for a ciſtern that remains to be hewed out by ourſelves.

POINT III. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain for many ciſterns.

POINT IV ult. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain, for cracked and broken ciſterns that can hold no water.

I return to the firſt of theſe, viz.

POINT I. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain for a ciſtern. This is a wretched exchange, if ye conſider,

1. The water in the ciſtern is all borrowed water, that in the fountain is from itſelf. Mark x. 18. ‘There is none good but—God:’ none good eſſentially, underivedly, but God himſelf. All the ciſterns of created enjoyments muſt be filled from God as the fountain, or elſe remain empty. The fountain has a ſpring in itſelf, the ciſtern none. If God communicate not to the creature, it is ſapleſs and foyſonleſs. The whole creation ſhines with borrowed light. Whatever ſweetneſs is in any perſon or thing created, it is a drop from the fountain, from God. Would one exchange the ſun for the ſtars?

2. The water muſt needs be ſweeter and freſher in the fountain, than in the ciſtern. Who would not drink rather from the ſpring, than from a veſſel of water within the houſe? the enjoyment of God in Chriſt is far ſweeter than the whole creation can afford: Pſal. iv. 6, 7. ‘There be many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Thou haſt put gladneſs in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and their wine increaſed.’ Every thing is beſt in God as in the fountain. Heaven’s riches, the riches of Chriſt, are better than worldly riches, which are but a ſtream from the other, Pſal. civ. 24. ‘O Lord, how manifold are thy works; in wiſdom haſt thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches.’ The beauty of Chriſt ſurpaſſes all created beauties, Pſal. xlv. 2. ‘Thou art fairer than the ſons of men. The knowledge of Chriſt is more excellent than all other knowledge, Phil. iii. 8. Yea doubtleſs, and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord;——and do count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt. The comfort of the creature is often unſavoury, in God it is ever ſweet.

3. The water in the ciſtern is no more but a certain meaſure; in the fountain it is unmeaſurable. Whatever perfection or goodneſs is in any creature, there is an end of it which one may reach unto, Pſal. cxix. 96. ‘I have ſeen an end of all perfection; but thy commandment is exceeding broad.’ But God’s perfections are infinite, there is no end of them. So in all created things there is a want, and therefore the heart cannot find true reſt in them: but in God there is no want, the heart may reſt in him, Heb. iv. 3. ‘For we which have believed, do enter into reſt.’ No creature is commenſurable to the boundleſs deſires of man’s heart; but God is: ſo ſinners may be happy for ever.

4. The water in the ciſtern is moſtly very ſcanty: the fountain is ever full. There is a want in the creature at its beſt; it cannot ſatisfy the deſires of the heart of man, If. lv. 2. ‘ Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that ‘ which is not bread? and your labour for that which ‘ ſatisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ‘ ye that which is good, and let your ſoul delight itſelf ‘ in fatneſs.’ But even what may reaſonably be expeced from it, oft-times cannot be had from it: it ſinks far below the meaſure of what it promiſes; ſo that often it is as Hag. ii. 16.——‘ When one came to a heap ‘ of twenty meaſures, there were but ten: when one ‘ came to the preſs fat, for to draw out fifty veſſels out ‘ of the preſs, there were but twenty.’ But there is a perpetual fulneſs in a God in Chriſt, that one can never come amiſs to him, if he ſhould come never ſo oft. How wretched an exchange muſt it then be, to exchange the fulneſs of a Godhead for the empty creature?

5. The water of the ciſtern is always dreggy; the fountain clear and pure. Hence the end of the one is ſorrow, but the end of the other not ſo, Prov. x. 22. The bleſſing of the Lord it maketh rich; and he addeth no ſorrow with it. There is a thorn of uneaſineſs in the ſofteſt bed one can make to himſelf in the whole creation; and the faireſt roſe wants not its prickles. Lawful enjoyments leave behind them a ſting in the heart; and the more comfort one has in them, the more bitter is the parting with them, which cannot be evited. Unlawful ones leave a ſting in the conſcience, which will ſting through eternity, if bitter repentance prevent it not, Prov. v. 8. ‘ Remove thy way far from her, and ‘ come not nigh the door of her houſe.’ See If. l. 11. ‘ Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compaſs your‘ ſelves about with ſparks; walk in the light of your ‘ fire, and in the ſparks that ye have kindled. This ‘ ſhall ye have of mine hand, ye ſhall lie down in ſorrow.’ A devil of covetouſneſs, uncleanneſs, &c. rages in ſome; but bitter will be the dregs of it. But whoſo hold by a God in Chriſt, ſhall ſwim in joy unſpeakable for ever.

6. laſtly, The water of the ciſtern is ſoon dried up; the fountain, never. A few days or years will put an end to all our lawful and unlawful comforts in the creature. A touch of the hand of God, by ſome heavy diſeaſe on the body, may ſoon make the now healthieſt incapable of comfort either of theſe ways. And if ſuch ſhould ſpend their days in health and wealth, the moment they go to the grave, the candle will be put out, and they will pay for their folly by everlaſting bitterneſs. But a God in Chriſt will be an eternal ſpring of comfort to thoſe that are his.

USE. See the wretchedneſs of this exchange, and repent that ye have made it. The reſult of it in end will be,

1. Cutting diſappointment, Luke xii. 19, 20. And I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. But God ſaid unto him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee: then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided? No body forſakes God for the creature, but they think to better their condition thereby; but that is impoſſible; therefore they muſt be diſappointed, and their expectations fruſtrated, Iſa. xx. 5, 6. ‘ And they ſhall be afraid and aſhamed of Ethio‘ pia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory. And ‘ the inhabitant of this iſle ſhall ſay in that day, Behold, ‘ ſuch is our expectation, whither we flee for help to ‘ be delivered from the king of Aſſyria; and how ſhall ‘ we eſcape?’ They may get an offputting for a while with the creature to which they betake themſelves in God's ſtead; but the day will come when they ſhall complain of it, as Job vi. 15. My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brook, and as the ſtream of brooks they paſs away.

2. Bitter remorſe, Prov. xxiii. 32. ‘ At the laſt it ‘ biteth like a ſerpent, and ſtingeth like an adder.’ What comfort had Judas of his thirty pieces of ſilver, when he ſaw the end? the rich man of his faring deliciouſly every day, when in hell he lift up his eyes? Since there is a God and a judgment to come, he will certainly make thoſe who ſwill down the cup of ſin with ſo much pleaſure now, wring out and drink the dregs thereof too at long-run, Pſal. lxxv. 8. ‘ For in the hand ‘ of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red: it is ‘ full of mixture, and he poureth out of the ſame; but ‘ the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring ‘ them out and drink them.’

POINT II. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain made ready to our hand, for a ciſtern that remains to be hewed out by ourſelves. The wretchedneſs of this exchange does appear, in that,

1. The fountain is always ready for us, the ciſterns often are unready. There is acceſs at any time to be had unto God through Chriſt, by faith, Pſal. xlvi. 1. ‘ God is our refuge and ſtrength, a very preſent help ‘ in trouble.’ The man that came to his friend at midnight, had acceſs and was ſerved of all he wanted, Luke xi. 5.——8. God in Chriſt is that friend, and he will help early, Pſal. xlvi. 5. But the creature is an unready help; ſo that the man's caſe is often paſt cure, ere help can be had from that airth.

2. The fountain is made ready for us by another hand, the ciſterns muſt be prepared by our own, Zech. xiii. 1. In that day there ſhall be a fountain opened to the houſe of David, and to the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, for ſin and for uncleanneſs. Jeſus Chriſt has opened the fountain of the divine fulneſs, that we may come to it and drink. It is ſet wide open in the goſpel, John vii. 37.—‘ Jeſus ſtood, and cried, ſaying, If any man thirſt, ‘ let him come unto me, and drink.’ Adam's ſin ſtopt all the wells of creature comforts to us: ſo that we find much ado to get them ſo far opened, as thence to get a little to quench our thirſt: and O what pains it coſts men to open them again!

3. At the fountain one has nothing ado but to drink, John vii. 37. but it is no little pains that is neceſſary to fit out the ciſtern for us. It is a labour, If. lv. 2. ‘ Wherefore do ye ſpend——your labour for that ‘ which ſatisfieth not?’ Matth. xi. 28. ‘ Come unto ‘ me all ye that labour:’ and oft times a weary labour, Hab. ii. 13. ‘ Behold, is it not of the Lord of hoſts, ‘ that the people ſhall labour in the very fire, and the ‘ people ſhall weary themſelves for very vanity?’ For the ciſterns muſt be hewed out, as out of a rock: and this hewing work is the work that fills moſt mens hands all the days of their lives, till death make their tools drop out of their hands. Hewing work is,

1. Hard and ſore work. But no hewing is harder than hewing out ciſterns of creature-comforts in God's ſtead. Others may rack the whole body; but this racks the ſoul and conſcience always, and ſometimes the body too, Hab. ii. 13. forecited. How is the heart racked with anxious deſires and impetuous luſtings! the mind racked to contrive how to gratify them: the executive faculty, how to bring it to paſs; and the conſcience, to make way over its belly for them; and the body itſelf treated in the purſuit, as they would be loth to treat their beaſt? Pſal. vii. 14. ‘ Behold, he travel‘ leth with iniquity, and hath conceived miſchief, and ‘ brought forth falſehood.’

2. Longſome work, that one comes but little ſpeed in. The truth is, it is ſo longſome, that it is never at an end with men, till either God's grace reaching the heart cauſe one give it over as vain work, or elſe death drag him away from it, Job xv. 20. ‘ The wicked man ‘ travelleth with pain all his days, and the number of ‘ years is hidden to the oppreſſor.’ It is a curſed work that one can never by their labour get to the end of. The wordly man muſt ſtill be hewing, Eccleſ. iv. 8. There is one alone, and there is not a ſecond; yea, he hath neither child nor brother; yet there is no end of all his labour, neither is his eye ſatisfied with riches, neither ſaith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my ſoul of good? this is alſo vanity, yea, it is a ſore travel. The ſenſual man muſt be hewing, to pleaſe his fleſhly luſts, Prov. xxiii. 35. “They have ſtricken me, and I was not ſick; they have beaten me, and I felt it not; when ſhall I awake? I will ſeek it again. The proud man muſt be hewing, till he get his neſt ſet among the ſtars, Obad. verſ. 4. though ere he gets there juſtice will throw him down.

3. Weary work on theſe accounts; ſore and long toil, and that many times for nought, makes weary work, Hab. ii. 13. forecited. O it is an ungrateful world men ſet their hearts on, that cauſeth them to go many a foot to no purpoſe. It is a hard rock, the creature, to work upon, where many a ſtroke is given for no effect. The man is thirſty, and he hews, but he can get no water, Iſa. lvii. 10. ‘Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way.’ Many a man has much toil, and weary on-waiting, to get his own ſoul ruined, Jer. ix. 5. The miſchievous man wakes while others ſleep, Pſal. xxxvi. 4. The murderer, the adulterer, and the thief, wake alſo, Job xxiv. 14, 15, 16.

Three things make this work about the ciſterns ſuch a hewing work.

1. The emptineſs of the creature, brought into it by man's ſin. There is an original emptineſs in it, which took place in the ſtate of innocence, that it could never afford a reſt to the heart of man. There is an accidental emptineſs in it by ſin; the ſcripture calls it vanity, Rom. viii. 20. that it cannot now afford the ſatisfaction it ſometimes could have given, being like an empty huſk, a dry and parched ground, in compariſon of what it once was, Pſal. cii. 26. Now here lies the caſe: There is leſs in the creature now, than ſome time there was; yet mens hearts eagerly ſeek out of it, and expect from it, more than ever was in it. When then men in theſe circumſtances fall a-hewing at it, how can it miſs to be hard, longſome, and weary work?

2. The curſe lying upon it for man's ſin, Gen. iii. 17. This has ſo locked up the little comfort that is in it, that it is made hard work to get at it. Hence ſo many diſappointments, ſo often falling ſhort of the comfort that otherwiſe it might really give. Thus, whereas God in Chriſt is an opened fountain, the creature is a ſealed ciſtern many times, Mal. ii. 2. If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory to my name, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I will even ſend a curſe upon you, and I will curſe your bleſſings: yea, I have curſed them already, becauſe ye do not lay it to heart. And no wonder one find hard work in breaking through Heaven's ſeal on the creature.

3. laſtly, The oppoſition from heaven the ſinner muſt lay his account with in this work of his. It is a work which is againſt God, and God will be againſt it, and it is hard to kick againſt the pricks, Acts ix. 5. Providence may let the man thrive in it a while, as the builders of Babel did: but they ſhall be ſenſible at length of God's working againſt them, Hoſ. ii. 6. ‘Therefore behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns, and make a wall, that ſhe ſhall not find her paths.’ They ſhall plant, and God ſhall pluck up; build, and he ſhall deſtroy; they ſhall beautify, and he ſhall blaſt; fill their ciſterns, and he empty them. They may find God working againſt them, and the effect of it on their wicked hearts may be, to cauſe them to hew the more forcibly and eagerly, as if they would carry on their work in ſpite of oppoſition from heaven: but aſſuredly God ſhall daſh them to pieces that contend with him, 1 Sam. ii. 9, 10. He will keep the feet of his ſaints, and the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs; for by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail. The adverſaries of the Lord ſhall be broken in pieces, out of heaven ſhall he thunder upon them.

USE. Sinners, then lay by your work of hewing out ciſterns to yourſelves in God's room and ſtead. Ye are at a great deal of work in ſeeking to get the ſap and foyſon of the creature, in lawful and unlawful enjoyments, for a meal to feed your hungry hearts; and neglect God in Chriſt. Repent, and come drink of the fountain ready to your hands, and ceaſe your hewing.

Motive 1. Conſider, it is unbleſſed work, Pſal. cxxix. 6, 7, 8. ‘Let them be as the graſs upon the houſe-tops, which withereth afore it groweth up: wherewith the mower filleth not his hand; nor he that bindeth ſheaves, his boſom. Neither do they which go by, ſay, The bleſſing of the Lord be upon you: we bleſs you in the name of the Lord.’ God never ſet man to it; but Satan and the corrupt heart, and they are cruel maſters, that fill the hand with ſelf-ruining work. You cannot look to God for a bleſſing on it.

Mot. 2. It is vain and fruitleſs work, where ye will never get worth the pains and coſt wared on it, Iſa. lv. 2. Wherefore do ye ſpend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which ſatisfieth not? Ye are ſeeking out of the creature what is not in it; ye are waring your all upon it, and the coſt will quite overgo the profit, Matth. xvi. 26. ‘For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?’ Hard work may be the better borne that has a proportionable advantage following it: but ſee the emblem of this, Hab. ii. 13. ‘Behold, is it not of the Lord of hoſts, that the people ſhall labour in the very fire, and the people ſhall weary themſelves for very vanity?’

Mot. 3. Ye have found it heavy work already; why will ye inſiſt when God calls you to leave it?

(1.) Have ye not in your hewing given many a fruitleſs ſtroke? ſought, and found nothing? Yea we may ſay as Iſa. xxvi. 18. ‘We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind, we have not wrought any deliverance in the earth, neither have the inhabitants of the world fallen:’ having been like thoſe hewing at a rock, where no impreſſion could be made.

(2.) Have not the chips in your hewing flown out upon you, to your wounding? Inſtead of the good and comfort ye have ſought from the creature, ye have got hurt by it, Ezek. xxix. 7. When they took hold of thee by the hand, thou didſt break, and rent all their ſhoulder: and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakeſt, and madeſt all their loins to be at a ſtand. Where ye have expected your greateſt comfort, thence has ariſen your greateſt croſs; where the ſoundeſt reſt, there greateſt vexation.

(3.) Have ye not often found, that all your ciſtern could hold when ye got it, was not worth the pains ye had been at in hewing it out? How often has your comfort in the enjoyment of the creature, ſunk vaſtly below the expectation ye had of it?

(4.) Has not one touch often broke your ciſtern all in pieces, after ye had been at all pains in hewing it out; and ſo ye have in a moment loſt all your expectation together, with all your pains? How many fine projects for this world do miſgive, juſt when one is looking for the fruit of them? Sometimes a little providential incident, or a piece of one's own miſmanagement, breaks all to pieces.

Mot. 4. laſtly, How will ye anſwer it, that ye are at ſo great pains for the ciſterns, and will not be at pains to go to the fountain? Men refuſe not to labour, to hew for the creature; but they will be at no tolerable pains for the enjoyment of God. O how well might it be with men, if they would be at as much concern to ſeek their happineſs in God, as they are at in ſeeking it in the creature! But the opened fountain is ſlighted, while the ciſtern is hewn out of the hard rock.

POINT III. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain for many ciſterns. When one forſakes God, and betakes himſelf to the creature, as a man with one God; no, he cannot: he muſt have a plurality, a variety, a multitude of them, in his room: becauſe,

1. None of them are ſufficient, but all of them defective. All-ſufficient, is a name peculiar unto God alone, Gen. xvii. 1. not communicable to the whole creation, in which, Eccleſ. i. 15. That which is crooked cannot be made ſtraight ; and that which is wanting, cannot be numbered. So the man muſt needs have a ſecond to make up the want of the firſt, and a third to make up the want of the ſecond, and ſo on without end. This labours under one defect, that under another ; ſo there is no reſt in any of them.

2. There is ſomething diſagreeable and vexing in them all, Eccleſ. i. 14. 'I have ſeen all the works that 'are under the ſun : and behold, all is vanity and vex'ation of ſpirit.' There are ſome prickles in the faireſt roſe, except the Roſe of Sharon ; ſome thorn of uneaſineſs in the ſofteſt bed, except the bed of the covenant, the true Solomon's. Did ever any thing bear ſo much delight, but it had withal ſomething to fret you, in it or attending it? the agreeableneſs of it is ſeen afar, but when one comes near, he is made to feel the vexation too. So recourſe muſt be had to one ciſtern, to put away the bitter taſte or unſavourineſs of another.

3. They enlarge their appetite, but do not ſatisfy it, Hab. ii. 5. Yea alſo, becauſe he tranſgreſſeth by wine, he is a proud man, neither keepeth at home, who enlargeth his deſire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be ſatisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeth unto him all people. The more men drink of the ciſterns for ſatisfaction, the more they would drink. As one draught of ſalt water makes a neceſſity of another, ſo the gratifying of a luſt doth but open its mouth wider : as is evident from the caſe of thoſe, who having once given themſelves looſe reins, nothing can prevail to bind them up, till the grace of God change them. They go from ill to worſe.

Now, this is a wretched exchange ; for,

1. The acceſs to one fountain is far more ready than to many ciſterns. He that has but one door to go to for ſufficient ſupply, is certainly in better caſe than he that muſt go to many ; ſo he that has the fulneſs of a God to ſatisfy himſelf in, is in circumſtances a thouſand times better than he who muſt go from creature to creature for that end. In God you would find happineſs, as corn in a heap ; whereas in the creature, you have it to pick up here and there, as corn that is ſown abroad.

2. The water is better that is altogether in one fountain, than that which is parted into many ciſterns. United force is ſtrongeſt ; and that which is ſcattered, the farther it is ſcattered abroad, it is the weaker. So the conſolations of God are mighty, as liquor kept together in one veſſel : while the comfort of the creature is comparatively weak, as water ſpilt on the ground.

3. It is with greater eaſe of mind that one may apply to the one fountain, than to the many ciſterns. The multitude of the ciſterns to go to for what we need, fills the heart with much perplexity, and diſtracting cares ; while the oneneſs of the fountain creates eaſe, Jer. xvii. 5.—8. O what eaſe has the man that goes to God's door for all, in compariſon of him who begs at the doors of the creatures, ranging up and down among them !

USE. Repent then of this folly, and take the one fountain inſtead of your many ciſterns ; go to one God inſtead of the multitude of created things.

Motive 1. This will contract your cares now ſo diffuſive, leſſen your labour, and ſpare you many a weary foot.

Mot. 2. Ye ſhall find enough in God, that ye ſhall ſee no neceſſity of ſeeking any happineſs without him, John iv. 14. ; more than ſhall ſupply the want of the corn and wine, Pſal. iv. 7. ; that ſhall be commenſurable to your whole deſire, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

Mot. 3. laſtly, Heap up as many ciſterns as ye can, they ſhall never do for you what the one fountain can, they ſhall never make you eaſy or ſatisfied.

POINT IV. ult. Forſaking of God for the creature, is an exchanging of a fountain, for cracked and broken ciſterns that can hold no water. A ciſtern as a ciſtern holds but little ; the broken ciſterns ſpills the little put into it. Every created comfort is a ciſtern containing little at beſt ; but withal it is cracked and broken, that it cannot keep the little it has at any time.

1. At its beſt it is cracked ; has ſuch rifts in it, as that it begins to loſe of the little that is in it. There is a powerful mixture of corruption in the beſt of perſons in this world, whereby no body wants ſome remarkable defect : and in the beſt of things there, there is a defect with reſpect to the heart of man.

2. At length it is broken in pieces. Being always cracked, it is eaſy broken. All perſons here are liable to death, all things to corruption or deſtruction, whereby they become uſeleſs as to our comfort, Matth. vi. 19. Lay not up for yourſelves treaſures upon earth, where moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and ſteal. Theſe ciſterns can hold no water for us.

So this exchange is a wretched one ; for,

1. The fountain is always certain to go to, the ciſterns always uncertain ; and worldly men here quit certainty for uncertain hope. It is certain, we can never come amiſs to God ; but as for the creature, it is ſo uncertain, that there may be nothing in it all but mud and mire, when we come to drink.

2. The fountain is laſting ; the ciſterns being broken, guide as we will, will laſte but ſhort while. God is an everlaſting fountain of comfort ; the creature is but for a time, and draws to an end. The whole univerſe is a cracked veſſel, and in a little time it will be all in pieces by the general conflagration.

USE. Come away then from the broken ciſterns of the creature, to the fountain of happineſs in God. Seek no more your happineſs in any thing below the ſun ; but ſeek it in a God in Chriſt.

The Birth, Gift, Government, and glorious Names of Jeſus Chriſt, as Saviour of Sinners.

Several Sermons preached at Ettrick in the years 1725 and 1726.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder: and his name ſhall be called, Wonderful, Counſellor, The Mighty God, The Everlaſting Father, The Prince of Peace.

THESE words bear a joyful intimation or declaration of a great privilege afforded to the children of men; in which the prophet himſelf ſhares as one of them, and ſo is the more feelingly touched with it; and therefore God has employed men to preach Chriſt to men, that the glad tidings may be brought by ſuch as have equal need of and intereſt in them with themſelves. For unto us a child is born, &c.

The words are thus plainly connected with the preceeding; for the diſcovery of which we muſt look back to ver. 2. where the prophet ſpeaks of the light of the goſpel breaking up in a dark world by Jeſus Chriſt, as is clear from Matth. iv. 12.——16. See the caſe of ſinners before Chriſt appears to them: they are all in darkneſs, in a blind, uncomfortable, and dangerous condition. (1.) Some are walking in that darkneſs; they are beſtirring themſelves for happineſs, and to mend their condition, but they ſee not their way. Such were the Jews, and all formaliſts. (2.) Some ſitting in that darkneſs, thickeſt darkneſs, pining away in their ſin, and not aiming to mend their condition, but like condemned malefactors in a dungeon. Such were the Gentiles, and all profane, carnal perſons, having no view but to this world's happineſs.

Chriſt coming unto them, their darkneſs is diſpelled. They that walk, ſee light which they ſo much wanted; it breaks up to them in their way. Thoſe that ſit, it ſhines in on them, makes its way into their dungeon. Both ſee where they are, and how to get their condition mended, how hopeleſs ſoever it was.

The effect of this light or ſaving illumination by means of the goſpel, ver. 3. Thou haſt multiplied the nation, and not increaſed the joy: they joy before thee, according to the joy in harveſt, and as men rejoice when they divide the ſpoil. (1.) The increaſe of the church, by the enlightened ſinners coming to Chriſt: As where a light is ſtruck up in darkneſs, all gather about it. (2.) Great joy. Some indeed, viz. the unbelieving party among the Jews, had no more joy in it, than owls have in the ſun's ſhining; they grudged it, and fretted at it. And ſo do the enemies of Chriſt's kingdom at the ſucceſs of his goſpel. But to the ſpiritual nation of believers, the joy is great on that occaſion. Chriſt's new friends on their coming in, and his old friends whom they join, rejoice together; the former on the happy change of their condition, the latter on the increaſe of the family.

This joy for the greatneſs of it is compared, (1.) To the joy of the harveſt, when people get the corn happily cut down and gathered in. (2.) To the joy of a victorious army when the battle is over, and they are dividing the ſpoil of their enemies. A goſpel-harveſt wherein ſinners are repeated and gathered in to Chriſt, a goſpel-victory over the devil, and dividing the ſpoils, are moſt joyful times; as much more joyful than theſe, as ſouls are more precious than ſheaves of corn, or the precious things of the world.

The cauſe of this joy, is a great deliverance or ſalvation brought about to the nation, verſ. 4. 'For thou 'haſt broken the yoke of his burden, and the ſtaff of his 'ſhoulder, the rod of his oppreſſor, as in the day of Midian.' They were under a burdenſome yoke: that is, the yoke of the law as a covenant of works, binding them to obedience under pain of the curſe: now that is broken, and they rejoice on that account. They were obliged to carry heavy burdens on their ſhoulders, by a ſtaff over their ſhoulder, as the Levites carried the ark; that is, they were under the power and dominion of ſin, as real drudges to it in the ſeveral luſts thereof, as thoſe who, to the worſt of maſters, never want the burden-bearing ſtaff off their ſhoulder: now that is broken and they joy. They were under a rigid exactor, a tyrant ſwaying a ſcepter over them; that is, they were under the power of the devil: now his ſcepter is broken, he has loſt his power over them; and they joy.

How quickly was it done? Heb. Thou haſt made to knap aſunder. The yoke, ſtaff, ſceptre, were broken with a touch, ſuddenly and freely; and that by means very unlikely in the eye of ſenſe, as in the day of Midian, when Gideon with his three hundred men, holding lamps in their hands, and breaking the pitchers, and blowing with trumpets, but fighting none, routed Midian quite, Judg. vii. So Chriſt overcame the devil, by his dying on the croſs, and the preaching of the goſpel by a few fiſhermen moſtly.

The perfection of it ſhall be ſuch, that the yoke, ſtaff, and ſceptre ſhall become a burning and fewel of fire, verſ. 5. it ſhall be abſolute; or rather the knapping aſunder ſhall become a burning.

Now in the text, the prophet leads us to the author of all theſe great events; and anſwers the queſtion, How can theſe things be done, and done in favour of us poor ſinners? For unto us a child is born, &c. ſays he. The events are indeed great beyond expreſſion, but ſo is the author of them. There is a great deliverer working this great deliverance, viz. the Meſſias, Jeſus Chriſt; of whom only it can be underſtood, and the ancient Jews did underſtand it. And herein we have,

1ſt, His relation to us. Wherein he is held forth, (1.) As a child born to us, viz. as Samſon was to Iſrael, born to be our deliverer, Judg. xiii. 5. brought into the world on that very occaſion. (2.) As a ſon given to us, given of the Father as a gift ſuitable to our neceſſity. (3.) As one upon whom the management of the ruined affairs of loſt ſinners is devolved, in order to retrieve them.

2dly, The incomparable excellency of this our relative. He is a Child, a Son, a Governor, quite extraordinary. Hear his name ſhewing his nature and perfections. We cannot comprehend his glorious excellencies; he is Wonderful; we may ſee and wonder at them, but can never fully reach them. For wiſdom, he is the Counſellor, with whom the Father took counſel, and whom he has appointed the Counſellor of poor ſinners in their moſt perplexed caſes. For power, he is The Mighty God, to whom nothing is too hard to do. For continuance, he is The everlaſting Father, abiding for ever and ever: ſo that, through the whole of time, and through eternity, his wiſdom and power ſhall be forthcoming. And then for meekneſs, and acceſſibleneſs to poor rebel-ſinners, though he be a Prince, he is the Prince of peace, ſpeaking, working, granting peace, yea he died for peace. A wonderful one!

Thus much for a general view of the words; to be in our progreſs more particularly explained.

The expreſſion may be obſerved to be full of holy exultation. The prophet expreſſeth himſelf in a triumphant manner on this ſubject. In his days Chriſt was not come; but he ſaw him in the promiſe, by faith: and he ſpeaks of him with as great certainty as if he had been come. He ſaw the need the world had of him, he felt the need he himſelf had of him; he believed him to be given to loſt ſinners for a Saviour, a Saviour in whoſe hand no one's caſe could miſcarry; and that he was given to himſelf among others: Therefore he cries out as in a rapture, To us a Child is born, to us a Son is given, &c. Q. d. "O my loſt brethren, ſons of "Adam, to us a Child is born, to us a Son is given," &c. Hence obſerve this

DOCT. Felt concern in the glad tidings of the goſpel, fills one with warm affection towards them. It is that ſame way in other things; where one's own dear intereſt is concerned, he will be much concerned about that thing; as in the caſe of partners in trade, where there is a good market.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. Wherein this felt concern lies.

II. What is the warm affection which that felt concern fills with.

III. laſtly, Apply,

I. Firſt, Wherein does this felt concern lie? It lies in theſe two.

1. Felt need of the benefit of the goſpel, Prov. xxvii. 7. 'To the hungry ſoul every bitter thing is ſweet.' When an indemnity is proclaimed, the man that is not liable to the laſh of the law, has no great moving of heart about it; but it makes the condemned man's heart leap within him for joy, Matth. ix. 12. 'They 'that be whole need not a phyſician; but they that are 'ſick.' While men are not ſenſible of their ſin and danger, the goſpel will be taſteleſs and unſavoury to them; but no ſooner are the ſinner's eyes opened, but it will be ſweeter than the indemnity proclaimed to rebels can be.

2. Felt liberty of acceſs to the benefit of it, with others, To us, ſays the prophet. While a man ſenſible of his need of an indemnity, yet finds himſelf excepted in it; that it is for others, but not for him; this ſtrikes a damp in him, he cannot rejoice in it. And unbelief prevailing ſo far as to ſay, 'There is no hope,' will ſuck the ſap out of the goſpel tidings to you.

II. What is the warm affection that felt concern fills with? It is,

1. A warm affection of joy in it. They rejoice in it that it is ſo, That to us a Child is born, to us a Son is given, even though that they have not as yet a ſpecial ſaving intereſt in him, Matth. xiii. 44. The kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. The ſick will joy in the tidings of a phyſician able and willing to cure them, even before they are actually cured; and ſenſible ſinners believing they may have acceſs to Chriſt, will joy in that.

2. A warm affection of deſire, actually to partake of the benefit. The ſinner's felt need tells him, he muſt go to Chriſt, as felt liberty of acceſs tells him that he may go. And both inflame his deſire.

USE 1. The reaſon why the goſpel is ſo very taſteleſs to moſt of the hearers of it, is, they do not feel their own concern in it. They believe not the doctrine of the law, nor the doctrine of the goſpel neither, with application to themſelves. They are either under the plague of ſtupidity and inſenſibleneſs of their need, or elſe under the plague of unbelief and hopeleſs. The news of a good or ill market affects them, for they ſee their concern in either: but they are not affected by either the threatenings of the law, or the joyful tidings of ſalvation in the goſpel.

2. Labour to ſee your intereſt in the goſpel, if ever ye would be brought to reliſh it, and entertain it. You need this Saviour, without him ye are undone: ye may have this Saviour; if ye miſs him, it is your own fault. Your great intereſt for eternity lies in this goſpel, however ye entertain it.

CHRIST preſented to Mankind-ſinners.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

Unto us a Child is born.——

THIS is the firſt part of the glad tidings ſo much affecting the prophet. The world waited long for Chriſt's coming into it; and here the prophet gives the news, that long looked for is come at laſt. The Child is born. The word rendered child is a name of the ſex, a man child, and is juſt a lad, a lad child; ſuch was our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. It is a name common to the young of the male ſex, competent to them whenever they are born, and continuing with them during their younger years, till they be grown men. The word rendered born, doth ſignify more, even to be ſhewed or preſented born. It is a cuſtom ſo natural, that it has ever been in the world, that when a child is born and dreſſed, it is preſented or ſhewed to its relations, for their comfort. So Machir's children were preſented to Joſeph their great-grand father, and on that occaſion given him on his knees, Gen. l. 23. and Ruth's ſon to Naomi, Ruth iv. 17. So ſays the Prophet, This wonderful Child is preſented, viz. to his relations. And who are theſe? He has relations in heaven; the Father is his Father, the Holy Ghoſt his Spirit, the angels his ſervants: but it is not theſe who are here meant. It is to us, the ſons and daughters of Adam; we are his poor relations; and to us as his poor relations on earth, ſons of Adam's family, whereof he is the top branch, this child is preſented born, for our comfort in our low ſtate.

DOCT. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is upon his birth preſented unto us mankind ſinners as his relations.

In ſpeaking to this preſenting of Chriſt as a born Child, I will ſhew,

I. What is preſuppoſed in it.
II. To whom he is preſented.
III. How he is preſented.
IV. The import of his being preſented to us.
V. Wherefore he is preſented to us on his birth.
VI. laſtly, Apply the doctrine.

I. I ſhall ſhew what is preſuppoſed in it. It preſuppoſeth,

1. The birth of Chriſt was expected and looked for. The church his mother, Cant. iii. 11. had an early promiſe of it, Gen. iii. 15. And it was in virtue of that promiſe he was conceived and born; all mankind beſides, by another word, viz. Gen. i. 28. 'Be fruitful, 'and multiply, and repleniſh the earth.' Though Mary his mother, in a proper ſenſe, was no longer than ordinary big with him; yet the church, his mother in a figure, was big with him from that time, Gen. iii. 15. for about four thouſand years. Many a time the delivery was looked for; and ſhe was in hazard of thinking it a falſe conception, it was ſo long a coming forward. Kings and prophets looked and longed for the day, Luke x. 24. I tell you, that many prophets and kings have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them: and to hear thoſe things that ye hear, and have not heard them. The whole church of the Old Teſtament alſo longed for Chriſt's day, Cant. viii. 14. 'Make haſte, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or 'to a young hart, upon the mountains of ſpices.'

2. Chriſt is now born. The happy hour of the long-looked for birth is come, and the Child is come into the world. Angels proclaimed it, Luke ii. 10, 11. 'And 'the angel ſaid unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring 'you good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all 'people. For unto you is born this day, in the city of 'David, a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord. The fathers, kings, and prophets were in their graves, who died in the faith he would be born: and now it is come to paſs. He was really born; a little Child, though the Mighty God; an Infant, not one day old, though the Everlaſting Father. Wonderful birth! ſuch as the world never ſaw before, nor ever ſhall ſee again.

3. Some have been employed to preſent this Child to the friends and relations; and they are ſtill about the work. O honourable employment! more honourable than the office of preſenting a new-born prince of the earth, to a king his father. Joſeph and Mary had the office of preſenting him to the Lord, Luke ii. 22. But who has the honour of preſenting him to us? Why,

(1.) The Holy Spirit has the office of preſenting him internally to us, 1 Cor. ii. 2. 4. 'For I determined '(ſays Paul) not to know any thing among you, ſave 'Jeſus Chriſt, and him crucified. And my ſpeech, and 'my preaching, was not with enticing words of man's 'wiſdom, but in demonſtration of the Spirit, and of 'power.' And by him his Father preſents him to us, Matth. xvi. 17. And Peter anſwered and ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the ſon of the living God. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Barjona: for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. Thus ſinners have him preſented to them in his heavenly glory, ſo as they get a broad ſight of him, ſuch as is to be had on earth by faith, John i. 14. 'The Word was made fleſh, and dwelt amongſt 'us; and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only 'begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.'

(2.) Miniſters of the goſpel have the office of preſenting him to us externally, in the ſwaddling-cloaths of word and ſacraments. They are employed to preſent believing ſinners to Chriſt, 2 Cor. xi. 2. For I have eſpouſed you to one huſband, that I may preſent you as a chaſte virgin to Chriſt; and to preſent Chriſt to ſinners, to be believed on. They come with old Simeon, with the holy Child Jeſus in their arms in goſpel-ordinances, Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. and ſay with John the Baptiſt, John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the ſin of the world.

4. laſtly, This Child is actually preſented to us on his birth. Few, if any, were witneſſes to his birth, it was ſo very mean and low in its circumſtances: but that there might be no doubt of his being born, he has been and ſtill is preſented to multitudes, Gal. iii. 1.

II. To whom is Chriſt preſented?

1. Negatively, He is not preſented to the fallen angels: he was not born for them, they are none of his relations, Heb. ii. 16. 'For verily he took not on him 'the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of 'Abraham.' Their houſe was originally more honourable than the houſe of Adam: but Chriſt has put an honour on the houſe of Adam above the houſe of angels. The holy angels are his ſervants, the evil angels his executioners; but holy men are his brethren.

2. Poſitively, He is preſented to mankind-ſinners, thoſe of the houſe of his father Adam. To them is the voice directed, John i. 29. 'Behold the Lamb of God,' &c. To us a child is born, Luke ii. 10, 11. He was firſt preſented to the Jews, ſhewed to Iſrael, John i. 31. but then to all the world indifferently, of whatſoever nation, Mark xvi. 15. Hence, from the uttermoſt parts of the earth, ſongs are heard, upon occaſion of ſhewing him born to them, his glory appearing unparallelled, Iſ. xxiv. 16. Particularly,

(1.) He is preſented to the viſible church, even to all and every one of them. There are indeed many in the world to whom he is not preſented; they have neither heard his voice or fame, nor ſeen his ſhape repreſented in the word: but wherefoever the goſpel comes, there Chriſt is preſented to every perſon as born to them, Acts xiii. 26. Men and brethren, children of the ſtock of Abraham, and whoſoever among you feareth God, to you is the word of this ſalvation ſent. He is now bodily in heaven indeed; yet really, though ſpiritually, in the word and ſacraments, preſented to ſinners, and ſeen by faith; though the moſt part will not behold him.

(2.) He is preſented effectually to all the elect. Chriſt is revealed in them, Gal. i. 15, 16. Hence they believe on him; and ſo it is with all them, however others entertain him, Acts xiii. 48.——'As many as were ordain'ed to eternal life, believed.' They are all as Paul was, in a ſenſe, choſen to ſee the juſt one: and their ſeeing him with a ſpiritual eye, makes them willing to part with all, and purchaſe the field and treaſure, and the one pearl.

Uſe. Since Chriſt is preſented to us as a child born, then ſee well how you entertain the honour done you, in the Prince of peace being upon his birth preſented to you. Some at this ſeaſon pretend to honour his birth, by obſerving a day they count for it. But where is the divine appointment of that day? is it not like Jeroboam's feaſt? 1 Kings xii. 33. So he offered upon the altar which he made in Bethel, the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had deviſed of his own heart; and ordained a feaſt unto the children of Iſrael, and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incenſe. And can men ſoberly think, that their feaſting, eating, and drinking, as uſual on that day, does indeed honour Chriſt? But,

1. Embrace him, with old Simeon, in the arms of faith. Knit with him, open your heart to him.

2. Kiſs the Son, receiving him as your Lord, and King, and God.

III. How is Chriſt preſented? He is preſented,

1. In the preaching of the goſpel, Gal. iii. 1. 'O 'fooliſh Galatians, who hath bewitched you that you 'ſhould not obey the truth, before whoſe eyes Jeſus 'Chriſt hath been evidently ſet forth, crucified among 'you?' To whomſoever the goſpel comes, Chriſt is preſented to them, as being in the word of the goſpel to be diſcerned by faith, Rom. x. 6, 7, 8. 'But the righte'ouſneſs which is of faith, ſpeaketh on this wiſe, Say not in thine heart, Who ſhall aſcend into heaven? (that is, to bring Chriſt down from above;) or, Who ſhall deſcend into the deep? (that is, to bring up Chriſt again from the dead;) but what ſaith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: that is the word of faith which we preach.' In the word the Bridegroom's picture is drawn, in his birth, life, and death, &c. in his willingneſs and ability to ſave, &c. It is the looking-glaſs held before their eyes, in which they may ſee him, 2 Cor. iii. 18. But we all, with open face, beholding as in a glaſs the glory of the Lord, are changed into the ſame image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord.

2. In the adminiſtration of the ſacraments. As in the word he is preſented to the ears, in the ſacraments he is preſented to the eyes. In them there is a lively repreſentation of Chriſt bleeding and dying on the croſs for ſinners: This is my body, &c. Though he is not corporally preſent in the ſacraments, yet he is really and ſpiritually ſo, to the faith of believers, which realizeth inviſible things, Heb. xi. 1. 'Faith is—the evidence of things not ſeen.' And glorious views are to be had of him there, Luke xxiv. 35. 'And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread.'

3. In the internal work of ſaving illumination. The Spirit of the Lord not only gives light, but ſight, to the elect; not only opens the ſcriptures to them, but opens their eyes, and reveals Chriſt in them, Gal. i. 15, 16. This is that demonſtration of the Spirit Paul ſpeaks of, which is the immediate antecedent of faith, 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. forecited: without which no man will believe. This is the finding of the treaſure, the one pearl, Mat. xiii. 44. 46.

IV. What is the import of his being preſented to us? It bears,

1. Our ſpecial concern in his birth. The birth of Chriſt concerns us nearly; why elſe is he preſented to us? The holy angels had a concern in it, as ſervants of the family, to carry the tidings of it; the fallen angels found themſelves concerned in it, as a birth that would be the ruin of their intereſt in the world: but we have a peculiar intereſt in it, as the birth of a Saviour to us, Luke ii. 11. the bringing in of a better hope.

2. Our relation to him. He is preſented to us as his relatives. Sinners of mankind have a common relation to Chriſt; a relation to him, in reſpect of his nature he aſſumed, the human nature, Eph. v. 30. 'For we are members of his body, of his fleſh, and of his bones:' a relation to him in reſpect of his office: he is born the Saviour of the world, and therefore our Saviour, John iv. 42.——'This is indeed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world.' 1 John iv. 14.——'The Father ſent the Son the Saviour of the world.' He was born to ſave ſinners, to 'ſeek that which was loſt,' &c. therefore our Saviour, our ſeeker.

3. An owning of our relation to him. The preſenting of him to us upon his birth, is an open teſtimony given of our being related to him. Though we are poor and naughty relatives, he is not aſhamed to own us, nor does our unworthineſs make him diſown us, Heb. ii. 11.——'He is not aſhamed to call them brethren.' He is born for our help, to raiſe up again Adam's broken family; and ſince he comes to help and ſet us up again, the more, and needy, and worthleſs we are, the more honour redounds to his name at length.

4. laſtly, The comfortableneſs of his birth to us. Children are preſented on their birth to their relations, for their comfort; and ſo is Chriſt to ſinners of mankind. Never was there ſuch a comfortable birth in the world as this. The whole world of mankind-ſinners was born in ſin, never ſo much as one of them all miſſed the contagion; and ſo are born children of wrath. By this means the whole world was ſitting in a moſt miſerable and deplorable caſe, when Chriſt, as a public perſon was born with a ſinleſs, holy human nature.

V. Wherefore is Chriſt preſented to us on his birth?

1. That we may ſee the faithfulneſs of God in the fulfilling of his promiſe. The promiſe of Chriſt was an ancient promiſe, the accompliſhment whereof was long delayed: but now we ſee it is performed in its time; and thence may conclude, that all the reſt of the promiſes depending thereon, ſhall be fulfilled in their ſeaſon.

2. That we may rejoice in him. The very birth of his forerunner was to be a joy to many, Luke i. 14. how much more his own? The angels ſang for joy at the birth of Chriſt, Luke ii. 13, 14. And he is preſented to us, that we may join them in their ſong; for it is matter of great joy, Luke ii. 10, 11. And whoſoever ſee their danger by ſin, will rejoice on Chriſt's being preſented to them, as a condemned man on the ſight of the Prince, by whom he is to obtain a pardon.

3. That we may look on him, ſee his glory, and be taken with him, John i. 14. For this cauſe ſinners are often invited to look unto him, Iſa. xlv. 22. 'Look unto me, and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the earth.' Cant. iii. 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold King Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his eſpouſals, and in the day of the gladneſs of his heart. The looking on the forbidden fruit has ſo vitiated the eyes of mankind, that the things of the world appear as in a magnifying glaſs; and there is no getting a right view of them, till we behold Jeſus in his glory.

4. laſtly, That we may acknowledge him in the character in which he appears, as the Saviour of the world and our Saviour. For he is preſented as a young prince, to be acknowledged heir to the crown. The Father has made choice of him to be the Saviour of the world by office, and given him to us for our Saviour, and preſents him accordingly for our acknowledgment.

USE. I exhort you then to believe, that Chriſt is on his birth preſented to you as his relations. And if ye enquire what is your duty on that occaſion? I anſwer,

1. Embrace him cordially, Pſal. xxiv. 7. 'Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting doors, and the King of glory ſhall come in.' Old Simeon, when he was preſented in the temple, took him in his arms with full ſatisfaction of ſoul, Luke ii. 28, 29. He is now in heaven as to his bodily preſence; but he is preſented to you in the goſpel, embrace him by faith, with the heart believing on him for all his ſalvation, renouncing all other ſaviours for him, betaking yourſelves to him for all, for a reſt to your conſciences and your hearts.

2. Kiſs him, Pſal. ii. 12.; with a kiſs of love; giving him your hearts, 'My ſon, give me thine heart;' with a kiſs of honour, honouring him in your hearts, lips, and lives; and with a kiſs of ſubjection, receiving him as your Lord, King, Head, and Huſband.

3. Bleſs him: his name, Pſal. xcvi. 2. Bleſs his name. He is God bleſſed for ever. But we are to bleſs him, as we bleſs God, declaratively, proclaiming him bleſſed, Pſal. lxxii. 17.; praying from the heart, that his kingdom may come, Pſal. lxxii. 15.

4. Worſhip him. So did the wiſe men of the eaſt, Matth. ii. 11. He is the everlaſting God, therefore to be adored, Pſal. xlv. 11. 'He is thy Lord, and worſhip thou him;' thy Huſband, thy King, thy God. Worſhip him with internal worſhip, conſecrating your whole ſouls to him; and worſhip him with external worſhip.

5. laſtly, Preſent unto him gifts. So did the wiſe men, Matth. ii. 11. Make a gift of your hearts to him, Prov. xxiii. 26.; of yourſelves wholly, 2 Cor. viii. 5.; to glorify him in your ſouls, and bodies, your ſubſtance, your all.

CHRIST, the Son of GOD, gifted to ſinners.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——Unto us a Son is given.——

THIS is a ſecond part of the glad tidings which did ſo much affect the prophet. And therein Chriſt is propoſed, (1.) As a Son. This is not to denote the ſex; that was done already in the former part. But it denotes a Son by way of eminency, fairer than the ſons of men. Our Lord Jeſus was the Son of God from eternity, he became the Son of Mary in time, Luke ii. 7. According to his human nature, he was the Son of Mary; but he is not in reſpect of that nature called the Son of God, though even in that reſpect he was a Son quite extraordinary. For as he was man, he was without Father, Heb. vii. 3. and as he is the Son of God, he was begotten of the Father, John i. 18. But as he was man, he was not begotten at all; and he has brethren, Heb. ii. 11. Therefore he is not called the Son of God in reſpect of his human nature. Now, in the preceeding clauſe, he is propoſed as a Son in reſpect of his human nature, being called a lad-child born: therefore here he is called a Son, as the Son of God in reſpect of his divine nature. And thus he is held forth to us here as God-man, with two diſtinct natures. (2.) As a Son given to us. The Father has made a free gift to us poor ſinners, of his own Son, for remedy of our miſery. As our miſery was great, ſo the gift is fully proportioned to it, being the greateſt that heaven had to afford, or the world could receive.

DOCT. The Son of God in man's nature, is given to us poor ſinners for remedy of our miſery.

Here let us conſider,

I. The gift itſelf.

II. The Giver.

III. The party to whom he is given.

IV. laſtly, Apply the doctrine.

I. Firſt, Let us conſider the gift itſelf. Many precious gifts have come from heaven to earth, yea all we have is Heaven's gift, James i. 17. 'Every good gift, 'and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down 'from the Father of lights.' But this is the great gift. On this head, let us conſider, 1ſt, What this gift is.

2dly, Wherein it appears and comes to us.

3dly, What a gift it is.

FIRST, Let us conſider what this gift is. It is,

1. A perſon. Perſons are more excellent than things, in their ſeveral kinds. All a man hath he will give for his life; a ſoul is more precious than a world. So this gift is more precious than the whole world. Whatever thou wanteſt, if thou have Chriſt, thou art better than to be emperor of the world; if thou haſt him not, thou haſt nothing that can compenſate that want.

2. A divine perſon. This gift of God is God, John i. 1. In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. O what a gift muſt God himſelf be! it is therefore an unſpeakable gift, 2 Cor. ix. 15. The poſſeſſor of this gift muſt needs be bleſſed, Pſal. cxliv. 15. Happy is that people whoſe God is the Lord. Here is a myſtery, a divine perſon gifted to poor ſinful perſons. God has given angels to be miniſtering ſpirits to his people, Heb. i. 14.; but we will ceaſe to wonder at that, when this comes in view.

3. The ſecond perſon, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, John iv. 10 'Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, If thou knew-'eſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, 'Give me to drink; thou wouldſt have aſked of him, 'and he would have given thee living water.' The third perſon, the Holy Spirit, is alſo given to poor ſinners, Luke xi. 13.—'How much more ſhall your heaven-'ly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that aſk him?' But here it is the Son that it is given, and the gift of the Spirit follows thereupon. Man, by creation the ſon of God, fell out of God's family; and the beloved Son of the Father is given to bring him in again. He was pitched upon; for he only could be both ſent, and ſend the Spirit, according to the manner of working of the adorable Trinity.

SECONDLY, Let us conſider, wherein this gift appears and comes to us. Thoſe who ſend gifts, precious gifts, to others, wrap them up in ſomething that is leſs precious. And a treaſure ſent in earthen veſſels, is the method of conveyance of the beſt gifts from heaven to earth. And the Son of God being the gift, was ſent vailed and wrapped up in our nature, (1 Tim. iii. 16.) to us. The Son becomes a lad-child, born of a woman. This vail laid over the gift ſent to poor ſinners, was,

1. Leſs precious than the gift itſelf. The human nature of Chriſt was a created thing, his divine nature uncreated. What diſproportion is between the clay and potter, the creature and the Creator; that was between the vail and the gift wrapped up in it. Hence it was like a moſt precious pearl, ſent in an earthen pitcher; which uſes not to contain ſuch a precious thing. Therefore the world received him not, becauſe they perceived him not, ſeeing only the vail, a few only excepted, Mark iv. 11. Unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all theſe things are done in parables. Nay, the gift was never clearly ſeen, till the pitcher it was in was broken in pieces, by his death; and the ſhells gathered up, by his reſurrection, and new caſt; and ſet up in the upper houſe, by his aſcenſion.

2. Howbeit, it was a cleanly thing. Though men ſend their precious gifts in ſome coarſe thing, yet it will always be cleanly; they will not ſend their gifts in a foul thing. The human nature of Chriſt, though infinitely below the dignity of his divine nature, yet was a holy thing, Luke i. 35.—'That holy thing which 'ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of 'God.' His ſoul was holy, and his body too, perfectly holy; without the leaſt ſtain or ſpot, Heb. vii. 26. Such an High Prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparated from ſinners. This gift could not have remained in a vail, having the leaſt ſpot of ſin, more than flaming fire in a tainted cloth, which it would preſently burn up. Now, this gift appeared and was ſent to us in the vail of human nature.

(1.) That it might be capable of the treatment it behoved to undergo for our relief. It behoved the Son of God to ſuffer, Luke xxiv. 26. 'For without ſhedding 'of blood there could be no remiſſion:' therefore he behoved to be incarnate, and to appear in our fleſh. He put on our nature, as his ſuffering attire, as priſon garments; and ſo the gift was, as it were ſent us in a winding ſheet; and the Son, the Lord of life, came down, as it were, in a ſuit of dead-cloaths of our fleſh; becauſe he was to die in it. Howbeit, this ſuit of our fleſh is not now laid aſide, but turned into a ſuit for the court, being no more mortal, but immortal, bright, and ſhining more glorioully than the ſun: ſo that the gift now appears through it, and will for ever, moſt illuſtriouſly. A pledge hereof was given in his transfiguration, Mat. xvii. 2.

(2.) That it might be ſuited to the weakneſs of the capacity of the receivers. As he who gifts a ſword, ſends it in a ſcabbard, and not naked, leſt it ſhould harm the receiver; ſo God giving his Son to ſinners, gave him wrapped up in the vail of human fleſh. The Son of God in his unvailed glory would have no more been an object for our eyes to have looked on, than the ſhining ſun to the eyes of an owl. A few rays of his glory, breaking out from under the vail, made his enemies fall to the ground: What would have come of us then, if there had been no vail at all?

THIRDLY, Let us conſider, what a gift this is. The gift of the Son of God to poor ſinners is a matchleſs gift, ſingular for,

1. The worth of it, Prov. viii. 11. ‘Wiſdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be deſired, are not to be compared to it.’ Many worthy gifts God has given; but this is the gift of God by way of eminency, as if he had never given another, John iv. 10. ‘If thou kneweſt the gift of God, &c. Never did Heaven's bounty appear ſo much as in this gift, John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. If it were laid in the balance with ten thouſand worlds, they would be lighter than vanity in compariſon of it; nay, balanced with the gift of created graces, and the created heavens, it would downweigh them; as the bridegroom's perſon is more worth than his jewels and palace.

2. The ſuitableneſs of it. Ranſack the earth and ſeas, the whole vault of heaven; go through the upper houſe amongſt all the ſhining angels; no perſon, no thing, ſhall be found ſo ſuitable for our caſe as this gift that is given us, Acts iv. 12. ‘Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.’ Heb. vii. 25. ‘Wherefore he is able alſo to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them.’ The earth, ſeas, and air, afford for the back, belly, and purſe; but there is nothing there to give life to a dead body, far leſs to a dead ſoul. But (1 John v. 12.) He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life. The angels in heaven might have condoled our loſs, but could not repair it, like him, Ruth iv. 6. ‘And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for myſelf, leſt I mar mine own inheritance; redeem thou my right to thyſelf, for I cannot redeem it.’ Nay, they could not have ſhown how to do it, Rev. v. 3. 5. But there is in Chriſt what is ſuitable to all the caſes of all ſinners,

3. The ſeaſonableneſs of it. Many a gift has been marred, by its coming out of ſeaſon: but this gift was given moſt ſeaſonably. No ſooner was mankind broken and ruined, but as ſoon the upmaking gift was proclaimed, Gen. iii. 15. in a promiſe that the ſeed of the woman ſhould bruiſe the head of the ſerpent. Seaſonably was the ram afforded for Iſaac, when he lay bound on the altar: A type of the Son given to and for poor ſinners, when juſtice had the knife at their throat.

4. The comprehenſiveneſs of it. It is all in one, Rom. vii. 32. He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things? Whoever have Chriſt, have all in him, and are complete in him, Col. ii. 9, 10. ‘For in him dwelleth all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power.’ All grace is in him relative and real. God giving Chriſt to ſinners, gives them remiſſion of ſin, and ſanctification. All glory and happineſs is in him, 1 John v. 11. And this is the record, That God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son. All that is neceſſary for our bodies in this life, is in him, for he is heir of all things, and is Lord of the whole creation, Pſal. viii. 6. &c. Whatever we want is in him, formally or virtually. He is meat, drink, and cloathing, lodging for the ſoul directly. He is all this for the body indirectly, as money anſwereth all things.

5. laſtly, The unreſtricted freeneſs of it. As it is abſolutely free to ſome, ſo it is abſolutely free to all, John iii. 16. ‘God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.’ What is freer than a gift? The joint ſtock of the whole world could not have purchaſed this gift. It is quite below the honour of the Giver and gift, for any to pretend to come with money in their hand to grace's market, Iſa. lv. 1. Ho, every one that thirſteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat, yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price. And all are alike free and welcome to it, Rev. xxii. 17. ‘And the Spirit and the bride ſay, Come. And let him that heareth, ſay, Come. And let him that is athirſt, come: And whoſoever will, let him take of the water of life freely.’

Uſe 1. Beware of ſlighting this gift. It is a perſon, to take notice of the ſlight put upon it; a divine perſon, to make the ſlight highly criminal, and to avenge it; the ſecond perſon, the Saviour, the Mediator, whoſe office it is to make peace, and there is not another Mediator, Pſal. ii. 12. ‘Kiſs the Son, leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little.’ The ſlighting of this gift is the ſin of this day.

2. Take heed ye miſs not to perceive this gift. The Jews were ruined in their unbelief; for they could not ſee through the vail that the gift was wrapt up in. And ſo it is to this day. Moſt men ſee no farther into the myſtery of Chriſt than the outward appearance it makes in the world, as adminiſtred in the word, ſacraments, &c. and they deſpiſe it. Look ye inward.

3. Admire the wiſdom of God, and his infinite condeſcenſion, in the manner of the conveyance of this gift of the Son. Behold him in our nature, that he might ſuffer, and guilty ones may approach him.

4. laſtly, See here how you may be made up and enriched for time and eternity. And prize and receive this gift ſingular for its worth, ſuitableneſs, ſeaſonableneſs, comprehenſiveneſs, and freeneſs, as ye have heard at large. Why ſhould we continue in ſuch a poor condition, when ſuch a gift is made to us, and nothing remains but to receive it?

II. Secondly, Let us conſider the Giver. And,

1*ſt, Who is the Giver?* The Giver is God, John iv. 10.—‘If thou kneweſt the gift of God,’ &c.; and could be no other, ſince the gift is a divine perſon. And it is particularly God the Father, John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. and could be no other perſon of the Godhead, ſince the gift is the Son. Here is the ſpring and original ſource of our ſalvation. The Father ſaw mankind was ruined, no help for them in the creation; and rather than they ſhould periſh without remedy, he makes a gift of his Son to them, for remedy of their miſery. And to exalt the Giver's free love and grace herein, obſerve from the word three things there marked about it.

1. It was his own Son that he gave, Rom. viii. 32. ‘He ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all,’ &c. All the ſons in the world were at his diſpoſal: but as none of them could redeem his brother, ſo none of them were made the gift. The angels were his ſons improperly; to have parted with one of them, would have been much; but they could not anſwer the end; ſo he gave his proper Son, the expreſs image of his perſon.

2. It was his beloved Son that he gave, Luke xx. 13. —I will ſend my beloved Son, &c. He loved upright Adam as his ſon: he loved the holy angels as his ſons, but he had one, the expreſs image of his perſon, and brightneſs of his glory; who was the beloved Son, whom he loved more than them all; and him he gave. Jacob had a beloved ſon, Benjamin; and he could not think of parting with him, to venture him to Egypt: but God gave his beloved Son into the world, though to die there without peradventure.

3. It was his only begotten Son he gave, John iii. 16. Jacob thought it a good reaſon for refuſing to let Benjamin go down to Egypt with his brethren, Gen. xlii. 38. And every body knows it is hard to part with an only ſon, Zech. xii. 10. So that was Abraham's trial, Gen. xxii. 2. And he ſaid, Take now thy ſon, thine only ſon Iſaac, whom thou loveſt, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering upon one of the mountains which I will tell thee of: A type of the Father's giving his only Son for ſinners.

2*dly*, What has he given ſinners, gifting his Son to them? The tongues of men and angels cannot fully expreſs this. I ſhall give a general view of it in three things. Giving his Son,

1. He has given them himſelf. For the Father is in him, John xiv. 11. and they are one, John x. 30. He is the true God, John v. 20. The fulneſs of the Godhead dwells in him, Col. ii. 9. So, if ye will receive his Son, ye are poſſeſſed of the Father for your Father, &c. All the perſons of the Godhead are yours, all the perfections of God, all his works, &c. O wonderful gift of the Father!

2. He has given them eternal life. The Son of God is the life, John xiv. 6. eternal life, 1 John v. 23. Sinners are naturally in a ſtate of death, yea, they are liable to dying eternally; but behold, in the gift of the Son, the Father has given them eternal life, 1 John v. 11. O enriching gift! Life to the dead is the greateſt gift that can be beſtowed on them. Here is life, legal life, moral life, a life of comfort; and all eternal.

3. He has given them all things, Rom. viii. 32. 'He 'ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us 'all, how ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all 'things?' Therefore ſays the apoſtle of thoſe who have received Chriſt, 1 Cor. iii. 21. 'All things are yours.' The Son of God is heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. Receiving him, we become joint heirs with him, Rom. viii. 17. and ſo inherit all things, Rev. xxi. 7.

Uſe 1. Let us admire the love of the Father to poor ſinners of Adam's race. The love of the Father is propoſed as an object of admiration, in making ſinners his ſons, 1 John iii. 1. 'Behold, what manner of love the 'Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be cal'led the ſons of God!' But here is a ſtep higher, his giving to them his ſon, John iii. 16. 'God ſo loved the 'world, that he gave his only begotten Son,' &c. But ah, how is it loſt on a blind ungrateful world, that take no notice of it! They will be apt to conclude God's ſpecial love to them, from his laying to their hands plenty of common favours: but the love of the Father in giving them his Son, comes not in mind.

Dreadful muſt the hazard of ſlighting this gift be, as the crime in it is atrocious. As ye would not run into the deepeſt of guilt, and expoſe yourſelves to God's fierceſt wrath, ſlight not the gift of his Son made you. God has given us his own Son, his beloved Son, his only begotten Son, and in him himſelf, &c. The greater the gift, the greater the love in making it, the greater is the ſin, and the greater will be the wrath, for the ſlighting of it, John iii. 19. 'And this is the con'demnation, that light is come into the world, and men 'loved the darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds 'were evil.'

III. The third thing is, The party to whom he is given. Here let us conſider,

1*ſt*, To whom he is given.

2*dly*, In what reſpects he is given.

3*dly*, In what character he is given.

Firſt, To whom he is given? He that believes the Son of God to be given to ſinners, and lays the matter to heart will be ready to ſay, O but whom is he given to? I fear he is not given to me; and what am I the better then? But Chriſt is given to mankind-ſinners indefinitely. It is not to the elect only, but to ſinners indefinitely, elect or not elect; ſinners of the race of Adam without exception, whatever qualifications they have, whatever they want. The Father, in making of this gift to us, had no eye to any qualification in us, but our miſery and extreme need; and, in the view of that, he made this gift for their remedy.

1. This gift and grant is conceived in the moſt ample terms, without any reſtriction to any particular ſet of men, John iii. 16. 'God ſo loved the world, that he 'gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth 'in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life.' You ſee here it goes as wide as the world, the world of men, to exclude fallen angels, but none of the family of fallen Adam. Therefore ſays the prophet, To us a Son is given. They will get no approbation of Chriſt nor his Father, who curtail and hem in this grant, as they conſult not his nor his Father's honour therein.

2. Chriſt is given to mankind-ſinners, as the manna was given to the Iſraelites. Now, the manna was given to the Iſraelites indefinitely; to them who lothed it, as well as to them who loved it, John vi. 31, 32, 33. Our fathers did eat manna in the deſert; as it is written, He gave them bread from heaven to eat. Verily, verily, I ſay unto you, Moſes gave you not that bread from heaven: but my Father giveth you the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. And therefore Chriſt is given to ſinners indefinitely, without exception of any; therefore ſays Chriſt to the unbelieving Jews, ver. 32. 'My Father giveth you the true bread from heaven.'

3. There is made to mankind-ſinners indefinitely a gift of the benefits of his purchaſe, which yet are never given but in and with himſelf, Rom. viii. 32.——'How 'ſhall he not with him alſo freely give us all things?' There is a gift of righteouſneſs made to them, Rom. v. 17. which is revealed to faith, chap. i. 17. i. e. to be believed on and truſted to. Eternal life is given them, 1 John v. 11. and a promiſe of entering into his reſt is left them, Heb. iv. 1.

4. laſtly, If Chriſt were not given to mankind ſinners indefinitely, but here were ſome in the world who have no part in the gift of Chriſt; then the miniſters of the goſpel might not offer him to all, nor might all receive him. Not the firſt; for no man has power to offer to any the Father's gift, to whom it is not given of the Father; more than a ſervant has power to offer his maſter's gift to one to whom his maſter has not made the gift. Not the ſecond; for none can lawfully take what God does not give him, John iii. 37. 'John anſwered and 'ſaid, A man can receive nothing, except it be given 'him from heaven.' It would be preſumption in thee to take a bit of bread, or a drink of water, if God gave it not thee; much more it would be to take his ſon, if he gave him not to thee. But it is no preſumption in any ſinner of mankind to take Chriſt, 1 John iii. 23. 'And 'this is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on 'the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt.' Mark xvi. 15, 16. And he ſaid unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the goſpel unto every creature, &c.

Secondly, In what reſpects is Chriſt given to them? To us the Son is given,

1. In reſpect of allowance to take him. Ye all have the Father's allowance to take Chriſt, to poſſeſs yourſelves of him, without fear of vitious intromitting with him. The Father's allowance was proclaimed by a voice from heaven, Matth. xvi. 5.——'This is my be'loved Son in whom I am well pleaſed: hear ye him:' and by his meſſengers, Matth. xxii. 9. 'Go ye there'fore into the highways, and as many as ye ſhall find, 'bid to the marriage.' If you were deſiring ſomething of a neighbour that you needed, and he ſhould uſe no other ſolemnity in giving it you, but only ſay, Well, I allow you, take it; would ye queſtion the gift of it, or fear to take it? Now the Father gives you the ſame allowance, and ſays, Well, I make an offer of my ſon to you, and allow you to take him; take him then as I offer him.

2. In reſpect of legal deſtination. That is more than a ſimple allowance. There is an act paſſed in the court of heaven, deſtinating and appointing a crucified Chriſt for the world of mankind ſinners, as a Saviour, 1 John iv. 14. 'And we have ſeen and do teſtify, that the Father ſent the Son the Saviour of the world.' As the brazen ſerpent was the ordinance of God for cure to the ſtung Iſraelites, the cities of refuge for manſlayers among them; ſo is Chriſt the ordinance of God for mankind-ſinners, John iii. 14, 15, 16. If ye had an act of parliament appointing a thing for you, ye would not queſtion its being given you: here ye have more.

3. In reſpect of real offer. The word in the book of God offers him to all without exception, and the preachers of the goſpel perſonally make, or may make the offer, whereſoever they come, Mark xvi. 15. Go ye into all the world, and preach the goſpel to every creature. Hear God's own offer, Rev. iii. 20. 'Behold, I ſtand 'at the door, and knock: If any man hear my voice, 'and open the door, I will come in to him, and will ſup 'with him and he with me;' the miniſterial offer, Mat. xxii. 4. And he ſent forth other ſervants, ſaying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage. It is ſo real, that they will be condemned for refuſing it to whom it is intimated. So all are not only allowed, and have the gift legally deſtinate for them; but it is offered to them: God ſays, Take, and welcome.

4. In reſpect of the freeneſs of the offer. There are ſome gifts ſo hampered and clogged with conditions in the offer of them, that they are not free gifts, and are in effect put out of the reach of the party-receiver. But this gift is abſolutely free: no qualification, no condition is required of us, that we may have it, but to receive it, Rev. xxii. 17. 'And the Spirit and the bride, 'ſay, Come. And let him that heareth ſay, Come. 'And let him that is athirſt, come: And whoſoever 'will, let him take the water of life freely.' No money, no price is here demanded, Iſa. lv. 1. More than all that,

5. Laſtly, In reſpect of exhibition. God not only allows, has deſtinate, offers freely, this gift to you: but it is exhibited to you, preſented and held forth as with the hand, God ſaying, Ho, ſinner, here is my Son, take him. This is done in the word of the goſpel to all. The goſpel not only offers ſalvation, which it might do, though the ſalvation were far off; but it brings ſalvation along with it to the loſt ſinner, Tit. ii. 11. For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men. And God doth not ſtay the exhibiting of his Son to ſinners, till they ſay, they will take him, as we do ſometimes the bringing out of meat to our friends; as his voice reacheth their ears, his hand holds him forth, ſaying, Here he is for you, take him. Ye muſt take him, as we do ſometimes with our meat, holding it out in our hand to our friend, and telling him and preſſing him to eat.

Thirdly, In what character is Chriſt given to ſinners? He is given of the Father to ſinners of mankind in the character of a Saviour. He is given to the elect, and was from eternity, in the character of a ſurety, undertaking the payment of their debt for them. But he is given to the world indefinitely in the character of a Saviour, John iv. 42.——'This is indeed the Chriſt, the 'Saviour of the world.' 1 John iv. 14.——'The Father ſent the Son the Saviour of the world.' The world of mankind is a company ſick unto death, the earth is the hoſpital where the ſick and wounded lie, Chriſt is the phyſician given them by his Father's bounty. It is his office to be phyſician of the hoſpital, to cure the ſick, and that without any fees from them. Every ſick man and woman in the hoſpital may come to him, and employ him as their own phyſician. Such a gift in the caſe of mens bodies would be highly eſteemed; but this is a thouſand times greater, as the ſoul is of more worth than the body.

Under this much is comprehended; but I ſhall comprehend the ſame in a threefold character. He is given to mankind-ſinners,

1ſt. In the character of a light ſet up, John viii. 12. I am the light of the world: he that followeth me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the light of life. He is given to ſinners in a ſuitableneſs to their caſe. It is a dark world; by Adam's fall the ſun ſet on mankind: but Chriſt is ariſen the Sun of Righteouſneſs, to whoſe light the ſinner is as free as to the light of the ſun and moon, by the gift thereof made, Gen. i. 17. 'And 'God ſet them in the firmament of the heaven, to give 'light upon the earth.' And nothing is to hinder their acceſs to it, but their love of darkneſs, John iii. 19. 'And this is the condemnation, that light is come into 'world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, be'cauſe their deeds were evil.'

2. In the character of an atoning ſacrifice, ſlain and offered up. He died in the room and ſtead of the elect only; but being offered for them, and being of ſufficiency for the needs of all, he is made the ordinance of God for taking away the ſin of the world of mankind, and as ſuch is gifted to them of the Father; even as the brazen ſerpent to the ſtung Iſraelites, and the cities of refuge to the manſlayers, to look to and be healed, to flee to and be ſafe, John iii. 14, 15. This is what John aſſerts in very expreſs terms, 1 John ii. 2. 'and he is the 'propitiation for our ſins; and not for ours only, but al'ſo for the ſins of the whole world.' Thus the Baptiſt pointed him out, John i. 29. 'Behold the Lamb of God, 'which taketh away the ſin of the world.' He taketh away the ſin of the world, not eventually, but officially. Compare chap. vi. 33. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world. And thus Chriſt holds out himſelf as a ſlain ſacrifice ſet down for all to eat of and feaſt on, Matth. xxii. 4. according to the prophecy, Iſa. xxv. 6. 'And in this 'mountain ſhall the Lord of hoſts make unto all people 'a feaſt of fat things, a feaſt of wines on the lees, of fat 'things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refin'ed.'

3. In the character of a crowned king, mighty to deſtroy the kingdom of Satan, to reſcue mankind-ſinners his captives and priſoners, 1 John iii. 8. 'For this pur'poſe the Son of God was manifeſted, that he might 'deſtroy the works of the devil.' 1 Cor. i. 30. 'But 'of him are ye in Chriſt Jeſus, who of God is made 'unto us——redemption.' Therefore they are called to receive him into their hearts in this character, Pſal. xxiv. 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting doors, and the King of glory ſhall come in. The caſe of the conquered world, conquered by the king of the bottomleſs pit, was ſo hopeleſs, that none was able to head them for recovery among angels or men: God therefore anointed and gave them his own Son for a King-Deliverer, Pſal. ii. 6. Yet have I ſet my King upon my holy hill of Zion. Iſa. lv. 4. Behold, I have given him——for a leader and commander to the people.

USE 1. Believe it then, that to us poor ſinners the Son of God in man's nature is given; that Chriſt is given to you in particular; that the Father has made a free gift and grant of his Son Jeſus Chriſt to you, and every one of you.

If ye believe it not, ye make God a liar, diſbelieving his goſpel, 1 John v. 10, 11. He that believeth not God, hath made him a liar, becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, That God hath given to us eternal life: and this life is in his Son. And unleſs ye believe it, ye will never receive Chriſt; for who can receive from God his Son, when he does not believe he has given him? John iii. 27. 'John anſwered and ſaid, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven.' As there can be no taking from God without a prior giving, ſo there can be no receiving of Chriſt by faith without a prior belief that he is given. Why will ye not believe it?

1. Is the gift too much to be granted? Conſider the Giver, and it is not too much for an infinite God to give. Gifts are expected agreeable to the ſtate of the giver; what is too much for an ordinary perſon, is not too much for a King. And can any thing be too much for an infinite God?

2. Is the party gifted too great to be made a gift of? Why, conſider he is gifted by his own Father; and the gifting of him tends to his own and his Father's honour, Heb. xii. 2: and he is gifted as Mediator; in which reſpect he ſays, My Father is greater than I, John xiv. 28.

3. Is the party-receiver too mean and low to have ſuch a great gift conferred on him? Why truly, this is the language of unbelief. Ye could eaſily believe that Chriſt is given to the righteous and holy: and ſo could the Phariſees. But to believe that he is given to the ungodly and ſinners, there lies the difficulty. But pray conſider, this gift is not given according to our worth, but our need: and it is evident ſuch need him moſt, Matth. ix. 11, 12, 13. And when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto his diſciples, Why eateth your Maſter with publicans and ſinners? But when Jeſus heard that, he ſaid unto them, They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. And Chriſt and his Father will have the greater glory in that caſe.

USE 2. Receive the gift of Chriſt then at his Father's hand: take him, and poſſeſs yourſelves of him by faith.

Motive 1. Conſider ye have an abſolute need of this gift, Matth. ix. 12. forecited. Ye periſh without him, Acts iv. 12. 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we muſt be ſaved.' What need a man ſtarving for hunger has of bread, the naked of clothing; that and more ye have of Chriſt. That ſoul of thine that is loſt, is crying to thee, O ſlight not a Saviour! that ſoul that is ſick unto death, Slight not the Phyſician!

Mot. 2. There are ſome who have as much need as you, to whom yet he is not given, viz. the fallen angels, Heb. ii. 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels; but he took on him the ſeed of Abraham. They muſt periſh for ever without remedy, for Chriſt was neither given for nor to them. Trample not on ſovereign love, that has made the gift to you then, and not to them.

Mot. 3. Ye muſt either receive or refuſe. The fallen angels, nay the poor Pagans, to whom the gift is not intimated, are neither receivers nor refuſers. But in your caſe there is no mids, to whom he is both given and intimated. Therefore we ſay as Heb. xii. 25. 'See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh: For if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth, much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from heaven.' It will be heavy to be marked refuſers of Chriſt.

Mot. 4. Conſider the worth of the gift. Men and angels cannot tell it, Prov. viii. 11. 'For wiſdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be deſired, are not to be compared to it.' Look into its ſuperlative worth, and reſolve to have it, not to let it go. Never ſuch a gift will or can come in your offer again. Therefore buy the truth and ſell it not; take it at any rate, part with it at no rate.

Mot. 5. Conſider the hand it comes from. Reſpect to the giver often cauſeth embracing the gift that one would otherwiſe ſlight. The giver is the infinite God. If he ſhould ſend you a piece of bread out of heaven, (as he did the manna,) or a cup of cold water; could you take it on you to refuſe it? How then will ye adventure, when he ſends and gives you his own, his beloved, his only begotten Son?

Mot. 6. Conſider that others before you have received it, and have been made up by it for ever. The ſaints in glory were once as poor as you; they received this gift: and now they are kings and prieſts, they inherit all things; and of their happineſs there will be no end. So you ſee that ye may receive it, and that it will be upmaking to you.

Mot. 7. Conſider that this gift will not always be for the taking as it is now, Heb. iii. 15. 'While it is ſaid, To day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation.' If men will go on to refuſe it, God will call in his gift, and ſet a bar between them and it for ever, Luke xiv. 24. 'For I ſay unto you, that none of thoſe men which were bidden, ſhall taſte of my ſupper.' So that the day will come when, if ye would give a thouſand worlds for another offer of the gift, ye would not get it, Heb. xii. 17. For ye know how that afterward when Eſau would have inherited the bleſſing, he was rejected; for he found no place for repentance, though he ſought it carefully with tears.

Mot. 8. Your not receiving will be very heinouſly taken, as a deepeſt ſlight put upon both the giver and the gift. When you make an offer of a gift to a friend, how do you take it to have it ſlighted? Think then how will the Father take your ſlighting the gift of his Son; how the Son to be ſlighted in quality of a gift?

Mot. 9. laſtly, It will ſet you at greater diſtance from God than ever; and will kindle a keener flame of wrath againſt you to burn for ever, than if the gift had never been made you. The Lamb's wrath is dreadful above meaſure, 2 Theſſ. i. 7. 8, 9. 'The Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.' Matth. xi. 22. But I ſay unto you, 'It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of Judgment than for you.' Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themſelves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; and ſaid to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who ſhall be able to ſtand?

See then, ſalvation is brought to your door, Chriſt is exhibited as the gift of God his Father to you. Think how you will entertain it, and that ye muſt anſwer at his tribunal for what entertainment you give this offer.

The Government on Chriſt's Shoulder.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——And the government ſhall be upon his ſhoulder.——

AS a people whoſe affairs are ruined, have great need of an active and expert governor; ſo the government of ſuch a people is a great burden. Such a people are loſt ſinners; and with reſpect to them theſe words ſpeak two things.

1. The burden and weight of heading of them, taking the government of them, and management of their affairs. The ſhoulder is the inſtrument of bearing burdens, Gen. xlix. 15.——'and bowed his ſhoulder to 'bear,' &c. Sinners affairs were ſo ruined, that it was hard to find one who had a ſhoulder fit for the burden of the government of them: but infinite wiſdom finds out one who had ſhoulders ſufficient for the weight.

2. Jeſus Chriſt the perſon on whom this burden was laid. The word ſignifies the principality. The principality in this caſe was laid upon this Child, this Son. It has been (Heb.) upon his ſhoulder. It was laid from eternity by his Father, and is, and ſhall be on him for ever. Princes are, in the ſtyle of the Holy Ghoſt, burden-bearers, Numb. xi. 17.——'And they ſhall bear 'the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it 'not thyſelf alone.' On him was laid the heading of loſt ſinners, the retrieving of their deſperate affairs, and the government and management of them to ſalvation.

This is a part of the glad tidings of the goſpel, and refers to both the preceeding clauſes, the copulative being uſed inſtead of the relative. Q. d. Unto us a Child is preſented born, unto us a Son is given, on whoſe ſhoulder the government is laid. So the ſenſe is, He is born, preſented, and given to us, a Prince and Governor; whom we ought therefore to ſubmit to and receive as our native prince. In this Samſon was a ſpecial type of him.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt is preſented and given to us of the Father as our Prince and Governor, on whoſe ſhoulder the burden of the Government of ruined ſinners of mankind is laid for ſalvation.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. The occaſion of ſetting up this Prince and Governor.

II. The import of this principality and government laid on Jeſus Chriſt for the benefit of mankind-ſinners.

III. The honour, power, and authority belonging to this principality and government of Jeſus Chriſt.

IV. The burden of this principality and government laid on him.

V. laſtly, Improve the doctrine.

I. Firſt, I ſhall ſhew the occaſion of ſetting up this Prince and Governor. It was ſinners abſolute need, from which free grace took occaſion to ſet up Jeſus Prince over them. Their need will appear in three things.

1. Their firſt prince was gone, to manage their affairs no more. Adam their natural head miſmanaged the government quite, ſunk their intereſt, rendered himſelf incapable of the government, betrayed his truſt, and deſerted them; their matters being brought to ſuch a paſs that it was quite beyond his reach to retrieve them.

2. They were left in confuſion, in the hand of the enemy Satan. They were no more a people, as not being God's people, Rom. x. 13. broken from God, and broken among themſelves. They were ſcattered like ſheep without a ſhepherd, having none to head them for their good, or to care for them.

3. Their affairs were deſperate. They were in a ſtate of enmity with heaven, a ſtate of ſlavery to hell. None in earth, nor among the angels in heaven, could be able for the government of them. Allude to Iſa. iii. 6, 7, 8. 'when a man ſhall take hold of his brother of 'the houſe of his Father, ſaying, thou haſt cloathing, be 'thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand: 'In that day ſhall he ſwear, ſaying, I will not be an healer, for in my houſe is neither bread nor cloathing; 'make me not a ruler of the people. For Jeruſalem 'is ruined, and Judah is fallen; becauſe their tongue 'and their doings are againſt the Lord, to provoke the 'eyes of his glory.' For their matters were beyond recovery by any creature, and no created ſhoulder fit for the burden.

For ſuch a time as this came Jeſus to the kingdom, when none other could or would take the burden of it. When the whole earth could not afford one, Heaven gave ſinners a Prince, of ſhoulders ſufficient for the burden.

II. Secondly, I ſhall ſhew the import of this principality and government laid on Jeſus Chriſt for the benefit of mankind ſinners. It ſpeaks,

1. His near relation to them; as between a king and his ſubjects by right, head and members. He is to make one body with them; he the Head, they the members; he the Prince, they the people. So that their intereſt becomes a joint intereſt; his honour and their advantage are cloſely linked together.

2. His eminency among them. Whatever perſons come into the bleſſed ſociety, he alone is the Prince there. The kings and monarchs of the earth are but ſubjects in Chriſt's kingdom, to receive, not to give laws. His eminency quite overtops all other.

3. His honourable office he has over them. He is the Governor, the only Lawgiver, to whom they all muſt ſubmit. His father put this honour on him, and ſinners ought to acknowledge it, and honour him accordingly, John v. 22, 23. 'For the Father judgeth no 'man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son, 'that all men ſhould honour the Son, even as they honour the Father. He that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father which hath ſent him.'

4. His ſovereign power and authority over them. He is made a ſovereign Prince over the children of men, therefore called the Prince of the kings of the earth, Rev. i. 5. He has an illimited power and juriſdiction veſted in his perſon, in this and the other world, Matth. xxviii. 18. 'All power is given unto me in heaven and in 'earth.' He has power of life and death: ſo he is called the Prince of life, Acts iii. 15.; and the keys of hell and death hang at his girdle, Rev. i. 18.

5. laſtly, The burden of the care and duty belonging to the office and ſtation. Many of the princes of the earth value themſelves on the honour, little regarding the duty of their place. But this Prince bears on his ſhoulder, takes the weight of the charge on him, and performs the duty of it: therefore he is called a Shepherd and Biſhop of ſouls, 1 Pet. ii. 25.

III. Thirdly, I ſhall ſhew the honour, power, and authority belonging to this principality and government of Jeſus Chriſt. I take up this in theſe four honours veſted in his perſon.

1. The legiſlative power belongs to him ſolely, Iſa. xxxiii. 22. 'The Lord is our Lawgiver.' He gathers a church, which is his kingdom. He is the ſole Legiſlator in it, Matth. xvii. 5. 'This is my beloved Son, in 'whom I am well pleaſed, hear ye him;' a miniſterial explication and application of them being all that any can pretend to, being the officers of this Prince. He is an abſolute monarch, whoſe will is the only law: and none but he has the wiſdom and goodneſs to be truſted with abſolute power. To him only belongs the appointing of offices, officers, and ordinances in his kingdom. And whatſoever of that ſort has not his ſtamp and ſuperſcription on it in his kingdom, is null.

2. The ſupreme executive power is lodged with him, John v. 22. The Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son. And whoſoever execute the laws of his kingdom, muſt have their commiſſion from him, or they intermeddle to their peril. By him rewards and puniſhments are diſtributed, and he is Judge of all. Now he judgeth particular perſons, churches, and nations; and the time comes wherein he will appear on his throne with awful ſolemnity, and judge and ſentence the whole world, Matth. xxv.

3. The power of granting remiſſions, receiving into peace with heaven, pardoning and indemnifying criminals and rebels, Acts v. 31. 'Him hath God exalted 'at his right hand, to be a Prince and a Saviour, for to 'give repentance to Iſrael, and forgiveneſs of ſins.' He exerciſed that power when he was on earth, and much more now. The ſcribes quarrelled it, Mark ii. 5, 6, 7. 'When Jeſus ſaw their faith, he ſaid unto the ſick of the 'palſy, Son, thy ſins be forgiven thee. But there were 'certain of the ſcribes ſitting there, and reaſoning in 'their hearts, Why doth this man thus ſpeak blaſphemies? who can forgive ſins but God only?' And he wrought a miracle to confirm it, ver. 10, 11. But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins, (he ſaith to the ſick of the palſy,) I ſay unto thee, Ariſe, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine houſe. And immediately he aroſe, took up the bed, and went forth before them all, &c.

4. laſtly, A large and vaſt dominion, reaching to both worlds, earth, and heaven, Matth. xxviii. 18. and hell, and the paſſage between the two worlds, viz. death, Rev. i. 1. 8. In his hand is,

1. The kingdom of grace, Eph. i. 22.—'And gave 'him to be the head over all things to the church.' All grace and favours of heaven are at his diſpoſal. Kings of the earth can beſtow ſilver and gold, houſes and lands, on their favourites; but he righteouſneſs, peace, and joy, Rom. xiv. 17. 'For the kingdom of God is 'not meat and drink; but righteouſneſs and peace, and 'joy in the Holy Ghoſt.'

2. The kingdom of glory, Luke xxii. 29, 30. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me: that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, &c. The eternal weight of glory is in his hand: he is the righteous Judge, whoſe it is to give the crown of glory; he who admits to, and excludes out of that kingdom.

3. The kingdom of Providence, Eph. i. 22. 'And 'hath put all things under his feet.' He rules not only over his kindly ſubjects, but in the midſt of his enemies. The wheel of providence through the world is directed by him. In the ſame hand the government of the church is lodged, the government of the world is lodged alſo.

IV. The fourth thing is, The burden of this principality and government laid on Chriſt Jeſus. It is ſeven-fold.

1. The burden of the purchaſe of it. It behoved to be purchaſed by a price of infinite value, and it was laid upon him to do it. 'Without ſhedding of blood there was no remiſſion.' And ſo he redeemed the ſubjects, not 'with ſilver and gold, but his own blood,' 1 Pet. i. 18. 19. The Father is indeed ſaid to give it, Pſal. ii. 8. but that giving is the delivering it upon the paying down of the price, Acts xx. 28.—Feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood.

2. The burden of a war with the devil, for recovering of it. However dear it coſt him, he could not have the poſſeſſion thereof, without vanquiſhing the power and force of hell, that was engaged to hold faſt what they had got. So on the croſs he encountered the ſerpent, Gen. iii. 15. and by his Spirit in the goſpel he carries on the war, raiſing his kingdom out of the devil's kingdom, reſcuing the captives and priſoners out of his hands.

3. The burden of ſubduing them. The deſigned ſubjects of his dominion are born ſubjects of the devil's kingdom, unwilling to quit with their old maſter, and to ſubmit to this their new Prince: and therefore cannot be brought over without being conquered and ſubdued. And the burden of this lies on him, Pſal. cx. 3. who is mighty in battle, and with the ſword of the Spirit makes it effectual in their converſion.

4. The burden of their reconciliation with Heaven, Eph. ii. 14. For he is our peace, who hath made both one, &c. He has the peace to make up betwixt God and ſinners, that his dominion may be happy in peace with God. And as he purchaſed the peace by his blood, ſo he becomes God's meſſenger of peace to ſinners, and travels between the parties till it be made up, and confirmed by a ſure covenant of peace entered into.

5. The burden of their defence and protection, Iſa. xxxiii. 21, 22. But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and ſtreams: wherein ſhall go no galley with oars, neither ſhall gallant ſhip paſs thereby. For the Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king, he will ſave us. The ſubjects of this Prince have many enemies, without them and within them. Satan the prince of this world is continually making war upon them, to withdraw them from their allegiance to their rightful Lord; employs the men and things of this world, and the corruptions lodged within their own breaſts, to advance his deſigns againſt them: but Chriſt defends them.

6. The burden of their proviſion, in all things neceſſary for life and godlineſs. He cares for them in all theſe, from the leaſt to the greateſt of their wants, 1 Pet. v. 7. 'Caſting all your care upon him, for he careth for 'you.' Their food and raiment for their bodies he has the providing of; and his viſitation preſerves their ſpirits, laying in new ſupplies of grace, exciting, quickening, and ſtrengthening it.

7. laſtly, The burden of the whole management and conduct of them through the wilderneſs, till they come to the heavenly Canaan. Great was the burden that Moſes had of the people of Iſrael through the wilderneſs. How unmanageable did they often prove! But that was a light burden in compariſon of that laid on this Prince. He has the burden of all believers through the world on him, in their life and death. Great are their wants, and he has them to ſupply. Their weakneſs and follies are innumerable; he has them all to bear and correct. They are broken and ſhattered ſhips, often daſhed on many rocks: he has them all to bring to land.

USE 1. Of Information. This informs us, that,

1. Jeſus Chriſt is the alone Head of his church, and ſupreme Governor thereof; and the Headſhip of it and ſupremacy over it, is neither competent to Pope nor any earthly King. It is a burden too heavy for the ſhoulder of any mortal, and none is fit for it but himſelf alone. And the government appointed by him in it, is not alterable by any power on earth, civil or eccleſiaſtic.

2. That the intereſts of the church, the kingdom of Chriſt, and of every particular believer, the members thereof, will certainly be ſeen to, and brought to a comfortable account at length. Such a Governor muſt needs make his dominion happy, Matth. xvi. 18. I ſay unto thee, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. Whatever enemies they have, he is able to maſter them, and will do it, 1 Cor. xv. 25. 'For he muſt reign, till 'he hath put all enemies under his feet.' Whatever wants they have, he is able to ſupply them, and will do it, Phil. iv. 19. But my God ſhall ſupply all your need, according to his riches in glory, by Chriſt Jeſus. Whatever is neceſſary for to make them completely happy, he has purchaſed, and will confer on them, Pſal. lxxxiv. 11. 'For the Lord God is a ſun and ſhield: the Lord 'will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.'

3. Believers have all reaſon to be quietly reſigned to the divine diſpoſal, and to live by faith in confidence of a bleſſed iſſue, whatever be the difficulties they have to grapple with, either in reſpect of the caſe of the church or of their own private caſe. That holds always ſure anchor ground, Iſa. lii. 7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publiſheth ſalvation, that ſaith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!

The caſe of the church is often very low, as now: backſlidings are multiplied, iniquity abounds, the Spirit's influences are withdrawn, the diſeaſe is proof againſt all means of cure that can be uſed by men. We muſt in that caſe table the complaint before the great Governor himſelf, roll it on him, leave it with him, and be going on in our duty, Micah vii. 7. 'Therefore I will look 'unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my ſalvation; my God will hear me.' Pſal. cxix. 126. 'It is 'time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made 'void thy law.'

The believer's own private caſe may be very difficult, in reſpect of various afflictions, temptations, and trials. But even there, there is a broad foundation for the reſt of faith, James i. 2. 'My brethren, count it all joy 'when ye fall into divers temptations.' There is not one circumſtance in all their caſe, but it is ordered by the Governor, John v. 22. for wiſe ends, Heb. xii. 10. And it is ſtill under his management, to go or come, increaſe or decreaſe, preciſely according to his order, Mat. viii. 8, 9. And he will turn them all about for good, Rom. viii. 28. as being all medicinal, Iſa. xxvii. 9.

USE 2. Of Exhortation. Receive him then as your Prince and Governor, renouncing all other lords which have had dominion over you, Iſa. xxvi. 13. Receive him really as your Prince and Governor, Matth. xi. 29. 'taking his yoke upon you, and learning of him;' and not in profeſſion only. The moſt part of this generation do in their practice ſend Chriſt that meſſage, Luke xix. 14. 'We will not have this man to reign over us;' and they will not be governed by him. But,

1*ſt*, Receive him as your Prince, and governor of your life, to walk according to his orders in your whole converſation; and walk no more after your luſts. And,

1. Let his Spirit be your guide and leader, John xvi. 13. When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. How long will ye be led with the ſpirit of the world, and your own corrupt ſpirit? Renounce theſe, and give up yourſelves to be led by his Spirit, or in vain do ye profeſs Chriſt to be your Lord and Governor, Gal. v. 18. 'But if ye be led by the Spirit, ye 'are not under the law.' The fulfilling of the luſts of the fleſh, ſpeaks you not to be led by the Spirit, verſ. 16. Walk in the Spirit, and ye ſhall not fulfil the luſt of the fleſh.

2. Let his word be your rule, Gal. vi. 16. 'And as 'many as walk according to this rule, peace be on them 'and mercy,' &c. Let that determine you what to do, and what and how not. David laid it before him, as the pattern he was to copy after, Pſal. cxix. 30. 'I have 'choſen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid 'before me.' But this generation for the moſt part throw it by, as a thing they have no uſe for. The way of the world, and their own carnal intereſt, is their rule that they walk by.

3. Let his will be the determining point to you. Let your own will be a captive to his; and follow his will, though it ſhould be againſt the will of all the world. Why will men profeſs him to be their Governor, and will not be ſwayed with his authority? Luke vi. 46. And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay?

And receive him as Governor,

1. Of your hearts and ſpirits, Prov. xxiii. 26. 'My 'ſon, give me thine heart.' Let the proud heart be made to ſtoop to him, let the covetous heart be purged by him, and the vain fooliſh heart be made to find the weight of his awful authority. While Chriſt has not the government of thy heart, thou haſt not given him the throne.

2. Of your tongues. Who governs the lying tongue, the wicked, bitter, and malicious tongue? Not Chriſt, ſurely; but the devil. Men that will frame lies, and deliberately tell lies, their tongues are their own, not Chriſt's. Satan fills their hearts to lie, and they run a riſk of being ſtruck down with a lie in their mouth, as Ananias was, Acts v. 3. See Iſ. lxiii. 8. 'For he ſaid 'Surely they are my people, children that will not lie.'

3. Of your practice. And ye will have a practice of true piety towards God, and exact juſtice towards man, Tit. ii. 12. That is what Chriſt's true ſubjects will exerciſe themſelves in, Acts xxiv. 16. viz. in 'having a 'conſcience void of offence toward God and toward 'men.' O the fraud and deceit, the injuſtice and covetous practices that are to be found with many at this day, ſpeak them to be under the government of the god of this world, not of Chriſt!

2*dly*, Receive him as your Prince and Governor of your lot and condition in the world, reſigning the ſame to his diſpoſal, Pſal. xlvii. 4. 'He ſhall chuſe our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved.' And,

1. Be content with the lot carved out for you, Heb. xiii. 5. 'Let your converſation be without covetouſneſs; 'and be content with ſuch things as ye have: for he hath 'ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake thee.' And be not murmurers and complainers, grudging, repining at, and blaming your lot. That is a ſad character, Jude ver. 16. and betrays into many ſnares. There is nothing in your lot, but what the Supreme Governor ſees meet; and where Chriſt has the government on his ſhoulders, it is unbecoming and dangerous to be malecontents.

2. Never go out of God's way to mend your condition, nor do the leaſt ill thing to better your circumſtances. That is to pull the government of your lot out of Chriſt's hand, and take it into your own. And ye may be ſure ye will have won nothing by it at long-run, Matth. xvi. 26. For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? If you ſhould gain ſome worldly profit by it, ye get it, and the curſe in it, Zech. v. 4. 'I will bring it forth, (viz. the curſe,) ſaith 'the Lord of hoſts, and it ſhall enter into the houſe of 'the thief, and into the houſe of him that ſweareth 'falſely by my name: and it ſhall remain in the midſt 'of his houſe, and ſhall conſume it, with the timber 'thereof, and the ſtones thereof.'

3. In all changes of your lot, acknowledge him for direction and guidance; that whatever way ye diſpoſe of yourſelves, you may have the comfort of your being in the way God bids you go, Prov. iii. 5, 6. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not to thine own underſtanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy paths. He ſets us our ſtations, and we are not to change but at his direction. Let houſe-holders in the change of their dwellings, ſervants in their change of families, ſingle perſons in the change of their lot, and, generally, all in every change of their condition, own the Governor.

In all theſe reſpects receive Chriſt as your Prince and Governor, give up yourſelves to his government, ſurrender and ſubmit yourſelves to him. And,

1. Take him for your only Governor. Renounce all other lords, ſaying, Iſa. xxvi. 13. O Lord our God, other lords beſides thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name. One throne contains not two kings. If ye will have Chriſt for your Lord, he muſt have the government of you ſolely. Let not Satan lord it over you any more, to be led captive at his pleaſure. Let not the world be your lord; nor your luſts your lords.

2. Take him for your abſolute Governor. Chriſt's government is, and muſt be abſolute and illimited: for he is eſſentially juſt and good, and we are naturally unjuſt and evil; therefore we can be allowed no hand in determining how he ſhall govern us; but, without limitation, we muſt reſign the government of ourſelves to him, ſaying with Paul, Acts ix. 6. 'Lord, what wilt 'thou have me to do?'

3. Take him for your perpetual Governor, giving up yourſelves to his government for ever, Pſal. cxix. 112. I have inclined my heart to perform thy ſtatutes alway, even unto the end. Some they ſwear allegiance to him at a time, and enduring for a while, they afterwards apoſtatize. But he is a Prince of whoſe kingdom there muſt be no end.

4. Take him for your Prince and Governor preſently, without delay, Heb. iii. 15. 'While it is ſaid, To-day 'if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in 'the provocation.' His royal proclamations are emitted inſtantly, requiring your ſubmiſſion, and he is preſented to you as your Prince. Delay not then a moment longer: the time paſt may ſuffice to have wrought the will of the Gentiles, and to have ſubjected yourſelves to other lords.

5. laſtly, Take him heartily and willingly. Let your whole ſouls open to receive this glorious Prince. And cordially ſubmit yourſelves to his royal ſceptre, as a Prince whoſe government will make you happy.

Motive 1. Conſider what an excellent Prince and Governor he is, to whom you are required to ſubmit. The excellencies competent to him as a Prince and Governor, are to be found in none other. He is as far above all the princes of the earth in the excellency of his government, as he is in the dignity of his perſon.

(1.) He is perfectly juſt in his adminiſtration, Deut. xxxii. 4. 'He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all 'his ways are judgment; a God of truth, and without 'iniquity, juſt and right is he.' His laws for the government of your life, and your lot too, are abſolutely ſpotleſs; and his government, and execution of theſe laws, are abſolutely holy and pure, without the leaſt ſtain of injuſtice. Behold his commands, they are moſt pure, Pſal. xix. 8. The ſtatutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart; the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes: and that in all points, Pſal. cxix. 128. 'I eſteem all thy precepts concerning all things to 'be right.' His providence is ſpotleſs, Pſal. cxlv. 17. 'The Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all 'his works.' What faults men think they eſpy therein, are owing to their own blindneſs.

(2.) He is moſt wiſe; infinitely wiſe; and that wiſdom ſhines forth in the whole of his government, Iſa. xxviii. 29.—'Wonderful in counſel, and excellent in 'working.' His deſigns are wiſely laid, and the means for compaſſing his wiſe deſigns are wiſely managed, ſo as to prove infallibly ſucceſsful. The wheels are full of eyes, Ezek. x. 12. So Iſa. xlvi. 10. 'My counſel ſhall 'ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure.' So that one may without heſitation abſolutely reſign himſelf to his conduct; and ſo faith makes men do, Heb. xi. 8. By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he ſhould after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went.

(3.) He is moſt vigilant and careful, Zech. iv. 10. The eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth. Nothing can be a-contriving againſt any of his ſubjects by their enemies, far leſs can befal them, but he is perfectly apprized of it. There is no ſurpriſing of the Keeper of Iſrael, who neither ſlumbers nor ſleeps; and he ſees all with his own eyes, which no prince on earth can pretend to.

(4.) He is moſt tender of his ſubjects, and of all their intereſts, his government being exactly calculated for making them truly happy, Rom. viii. 28. 'All things 'work together for good to them that love God.' There is ſuch a cloſe connection of their duty and intereſt, that it is impoſſible for them to neglect their duty, but as far as they do neglect it, they prove falſe to their intereſt. He governs them as a father, with the tender affection that one does his own family, Iſa. xl. 11. 'He ſhall 'feed his flock like a ſhepherd; he ſhall gather the lambs 'with his arm, and carry them in his boſom, and ſhall 'gently lead thoſe that are with young.'

Mot. 2. While ye are not under his government, ye are under the government of Satan, Acts xxvi. 18. While this Prince governs you not, the prince of darkneſs doth. And his government, as it is moſt imperious, ſo it is moſt unjuſt, and deſtructive of the true intereſt of ſouls. He is a cruel lord, and delights in and ſeeks the miſery and ruin of his ſubjects. We may frame a true notion of his government from his managing of thoſe among whom his power is abſolute. What a wretched way does he manage the poor Pagans, the poſſeſſed, and thoſe who are in expreſs compact with him? So does he with others, though in a ſpiritual and covered way.

Mot. 3. Jeſus Chriſt is your rightful Prince and Governor. Satan is an uſurper, the throne belongs to Jeſus of right. He is ſo by the irreverſible conſtitution of Heaven, Pſal. ii. 6. 'I have ſet my King upon my ho'ly hill of Zion.' He was born a King. Ye were devoted to him in baptiſm, and as members of his church ye profeſs yourſelves his ſubjects, Luke vi. 46.

Mot. 4. laſtly, If ye ſubmit not to him, he will treat you as rebels, who have broken your faith and allegiance to him, and caſt off the yoke of his government. He is preſented to you as your lawful Prince born: it will be dangerous to refuſe him. The day is coming wherein he will judge the world, and behold the end of the rebels againſt his government, Luke xix. 27. But thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.

Wherefore conſider how other lords have had the dominion over you; the neceſſity of taking him for your Lord and Governor; if he be your Saviour, he muſt be your King, Hoſ. xiii. 9, 10. O Iſrael, thou haſt deſtroyed thyſelf, but in me is thine help. I will be thy King. Solemnly give up yourſelves to him.

CHRIST'S NAME above every Name.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——And his Name ſhall be called, Wonderful, Counſellor, The Mighty God, The Everlaſting Father, The Prince of Peace.

HERE is held out the incomparable excellency of this Prince and Governor preſented to us. His name is called, ſo the original carries it, One hath called his name, i. e. his name is called, Wonderful, &c, The connection is, Unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given, on whoſe ſhoulder the government is laid, and whoſe name is called, Wonderful, &c.: ſo that the ſcope of this latter part of the text is, to commend the Prince preſented to us from his name, which is here unfolded to be a name above every name.

DOCT. The name of Chriſt by which he is called, is a name above every name, fit to commend him to the ſouls of poor ſinners.

The name is that which follows in ſeveral parts here, viz. Wonderful, Counſellor, The Mighty God, The Everlaſting Father, The Prince of Peace. Many glorious names are uſed by the princes of the earth: but there is no name among them all like this. None ſo high and honourable, none ſo ſweet and lovely, none ſo adapted to make the ſubjects happy. Conſider here,

I. Who calls him by this name.
II. What his being called by it imports.
III. laſtly, Apply.

I. Who calls him by this name? And,

1. His Father has called him by this name, Phil. ii. 9. 'God hath highly exalted him, and given him a 'name which is above every name.' His Father beſt knows what he is, to give him a name expreſſive of his nature. And he has by his Spirit in the Prophet, given him this glorious one. In effect he proclaimed it, Matth. xvii. 5. 'This is my beloved Son in whom I 'am well pleaſed.'

2. All his people call him by this name, flying to him in their firſt believing as ſuch a one, and depending on him all along their courſe of life as ſuch a one.

II. What does his being called by this name import?

1. That he really is what this name bears. God gives no empty titles, nor will empty titles anſwer the neceſſities of believers. As his name, ſo is his nature; the name truly expreſſeth what he is.

2. He manifeſts himſelf to be what the name bears. What he is called, he is found to be in the experience of ſaints.

USE. Study the name of Chriſt, as repreſented in the word, ſo as your ſouls may be enamoured of him.

CHRIST'S NAME WONDERFUL.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——His name ſhall be called Wonderful——

HERE begins the name of him whom the Father preſents and gives to us for our Prince. The firſt ſyllable of it is, Wonderful. The word ſignifies miracle, a work paſt reach of the creature's power and ſkill, or knowledge, and ſo competent to God alone, Exod. xv. 11. 'Who is like unto thee, O Lord, a'mongſt the gods? who is like thee, glorious in holi'neſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders?' Pſal. lxxvii. 14. Thou art the God that doſt wonders. Every miracle is wonderful, but every wonderful thing is not a miracle. Our Lord Chriſt is not only a wonderful one, but miracle, a miraculous one, one moſt wonderful. He is beyond the creature's comprehenſion. So that this is fitly made the firſt ſyllable of his name, that men may know, that whatever they know of his excellencies, there is ſtill more behind; and though they may apprehend, they cannot comprehend what he is.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt, who is preſented and given to us of the Father for our Prince, is and appears to be a miraculous one, a moſt wonderful perſonage.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall enquire,
I. Under what notion Chriſt is held forth as a miracle, a miraculous perſon.
II. What is the import of Chriſt as God-man his being and appearing to be a miraculous one.
III. In what reſpects he is ſo.
IV. laſtly, Apply the doctrine.

I. I ſhall enquire, Under what notion Chriſt is held forth as a miracle, a miraculous perſon. Ye have heard already, A miracle is a divine work, and competent to God alone, beyond the reach of any creature. Now, Chriſt is and appears a miracle. Hence it follows, that he is not ſo called,

1. In reſpect of his being a miracle-worker. For it is himſelf, and not his work, that is here called a miracle. Moreover, the Prophets and Apoſtles were miracle-workers, John xiv. 12. Yet this name is above every name, not competent to them, but to him alone.

2. Nor in reſpect of his divine nature ſimply, and his eternal generation of the Father. This part of his name does not point him out to us ſimply as God. For beſides that that is, by itſelf, another ſyllable of his name, The Mighty God, the ſcripture, for all that I can diſcern, doth not warrant us to call him the work of his Father in that reſpect. And the Father works miracles through the Son by the Spirit, Luke xi. 20. compared with Matth. xii. 28. But the eternal generation of the Son is proper to the Father alone.

3. Nor in reſpect of his human nature ſimply. This part of his name does not point him out ſimply as man neither. For though man is indeed a divine work, yet he is not a work competent to God alone; for the ſcripture owns man himſelf to be the father of man's fleſh, Heb. xii. 9. But,

4. Chriſt is held forth as a miracle, a miraculous perſonage, as God-man in one perſon. This part of his name points him out to us preciſely as our incarnate Redeemer, and is given him preciſely in reſpect of his incarnation. Behold him, God man, the Word made fleſh; and ye behold the miracle, the miraculous perſon. So the text, A Child, A Son, his name Wonderful.

Thus he is a work done or made, John i. 14. 'The 'Word was made fleſh;' a divine work, Heb. x. 5. 'When he cometh into the world, he ſaith,——A bo'dy haſt thou prepared me;' competent to God alone, as a work of creating power, Jer. xxxi. 22. The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman ſhall compaſs a man. The Son of God in our nature is a miracle indeed, a work beyond the reach of the creature's capacity. Many miracles had been wrought before the Son of God was incarnate. The ſea had been divided, the dead raiſed, a world created out of nothing, which was more: but a greater miracle than any of theſe was the incarnation of the Son of God; after all theſe had been done, this was the creating of a new thing, never any of the kind before.

Wherefore this is the name of our incarnate Redeemer; and when we hear it named, it muſt repreſent to us the Son of God in man's nature.

Uſe 1. O the love of God to poor ſinners of mankind! John iii. 16. God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life. The greateſt work that ever God did, was for their ſalvation. He made the world for man, and gave it him, Pſal. cxv. 16. and the viſible heavens too, Gen. i. 17. Heb. yea the higheſt heavens alſo he made for them, and gives to them in his Son, Matth. xxv. 34. But a greater work than all theſe he did for them, when he did this miracle of the incarnation of his own Son for them; and gave him, an incarnate Redeemer, to them. O how can we eſcape the moſt fearful doom, if we neglect this great ſalvation! How worthy are they to periſh, that will not be ſaved, when God has wrought this greateſt miracle to ſave them?

2. What unaccountable ſtupidity is it in men, not to conſider, admire, and be ſwallowed up in contemplation of this miracle; and not to be in deepeſt love with this miraculous perſonage given to them? Ah! have we not all been careleſs, unmoved ſpectators of this miracle? How many have never ſpent a few minutes in the conſideration and admiration of him? Have ye not gazed on and wondered at ſome trifle, more than at this greateſt of the works of God? have ye not been more deeply in love with ſome perſon or thing for its ſhadowy excellencies, than with this miraculous perſon? Ceaſe to wonder at the Jews obſtinacy, in not being moved to believe by all his miracles; for a greater than them all is here, to wit, his miraculous ſelf; and yet we are unmoved.

II. What is the import of Chriſt as God-man his being and appearing to be a miraculous, moſt wonderful One? Conſidering this as the name of Chriſt, to commend him to ſinners, it imports,

1. The excellency of his perſon as God-man. He is an excellent, glorious, and lovely one, Heb. i. 3. 'Being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon.' Though the blind world perceive not his excellency, ſaying, as Iſa. liii. 2. 'He hath no form nor comelineſs; and when we ſhall ſee him, there is no beauty that we ſhould deſire him;' it is not but through their own default, by reaſon of their blindneſs: for his glory ſhines forth, to be perceived by thoſe whoſe eyes are opened, John i. 14. 'We beheld his glory,' &c. But the glory of the ſun is not ſeen by the blind man, nor the glory of Chriſt by unbelievers.

2. The fulneſs of excellencies in him, our incarnate Redeemer. His name is Miracle, a collective word. There is a confluence of excellencies in him; look to him in every part, and all is excellent in him, Cant. v. 16.—'He is altogether lovely.' Some excel in one thing, ſome in another; as Moſes in meekneſs, Samſon in ſtrength, and Solomon in wiſdom: but none but Chriſt in all. Moſes, we would ſay, was a miracle of meekneſs, Samſon of ſtrength, and Solomon of wiſdom. But Chriſt is Miracle all over: meekneſs, ſtrength, wiſdom, and all other excellencies, meet in him to a miracle. There is no blemiſh, no want at all in him, Col. i. 19. 'For it pleaſed the Father, that in him ſhould all fulneſs dwell.

3. The uncomonneſs and ſingularity of his excellencies.—Miracles are but rare, in reſpect of the common operations of providence. And Chriſt among the ſons of men is as a ſtandard-bearer among ten thouſand, Cant. v. 10. he is a perſonage of ſingular excellencies. It is obſerved, that what is done by miracle, doth in its kind excel what is the product of nature in that kind. The water that was made wine, was far better than the wine of the vine, John ii. 10. So the man Chriſt is fairer than the ſons of men, Pſal. xlv. 2. So every excellency in Chriſt, is beyond that excellency in another; ſo was Chriſt's meekneſs beyond Moſes's meekneſs, his ſtrength beyond Samſon's, and his wiſdom beyond Solomon's, as the ſun's light beyond that of the ſtars.

4. The abſolute matchleſſneſs of his perſon, for excellency and glory, Prov. viii. 11. Wiſdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be deſired, are not to be compared to it. Seek through all the creatures in heaven and earth, and there is none comparable to him, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. His match is not be found among all the ranks of created beings.

1. Among created perſons, the like to him is not to be found, Jer. xxxi. 22.—The Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman ſhall compaſs a man. Conſider them in all their excellencies.

(1.) What are men to this miracle of men? Great men are contemptible, wiſe men fools, good mens goodneſs diſappears, in compariſon with him.

(2.) Conſider devils in their knowledge and might, the only excellencies remaining with them: and their knowledge is but ignorance in compariſon of his, Rev. v. 3. 5. their power weakneſs, Matth. xii. 29. He can bind them as eaſily as a giant a little child.

(3.) What are glorified ſaints, but ſo many bright ſtars ſhining with his borrowed light, wonders of his mercy, monuments of his free love? Rev. iv. 10.

(4.) What are angels that never ſinned? They are all his, Heb. i. 14. to worſhip him, ver. 6. He is the Son of the houſe, they are but ſervants of it. He is the Lord of angels. Moſes was not content with the offer of an angel, but would have himſelf, Exod. xxxiii. 15.—'If thy preſence go not with me, carry us not up hence:' nor was Mary content, till ſhe got himſelf.

2. Among created things his match is not to be found, however men take the ſhadow for the ſubſtance.

(1.) Worldly good things are not comparable to him in their greateſt abundance and choice of them. Riches, honour, ſtrength, &c. are a poor portion in his room and ſtead: Prov. viii. 11. 'Wiſdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be deſired, are not to be compared to it.' All of them are greater in expectation than fruition, broken ciſterns ſoon running dry, bitter ſweets uncommenſurable to the deſires of the ſoul: he the quite reverſe.

(2.) Spiritual good things do come from him as rays from the ſun. Grace is a created quality, heaven itſelf is but the place where he keeps his court. And as the prince himſelf is preferable to all the jewels in his crown, and to his palace; ſo is Chriſt above all theſe.

5. The ſhining forth of his excellencies, fit to draw all eyes upon him. A miracle is the centre of all mens eyes, to which all men are ready to look; it is a ſight every one would deſire to ſee, and to ſee narrowly. There is an attractive beauty and glory in this wonderful One. This is a myſtery to the world, who are ready to ſay as Cant. i. 9. 'What is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou doſt ſo charge us?' ſeeing nothing in him to fix their eyes on him. But,

(1.) His Father's eyes are fixed on him, as the object of his good pleaſure, Matth. iii. 17. 'This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed. The Lamb is in the midſt of the throne above, Rev. v. 6. It is a ſtrange word that is ſaid of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 16. 'For now have I choſen and ſanctified this houſe, that my name may be there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart ſhall be there perpetually.' But a greater than the temple is meant there. The eyes of the Holy Spirit are on him, Zech. iii. 9. 'Behold, the ſtone that I have laid before Joſhua; upon one ſtone ſhall be ſeven eyes; behold, I will engrave the graving thereof, ſaith the Lord of hoſts.' Compared with Rev. v. 6. 'In the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, and in the midſt of the elders, ſtood a Lamb as it had been ſlain, having ſeven horns, and ſeven eyes, which are the ſeven Spirits of God ſent forth to all the earth.'

(2.) The eyes of the angels are drawn after him, as a moſt wonderful ſight. The faces of the Cherubims were therefore made looking towards the mercy-ſeat, Exod. xxv. 20. to teach us, that Chriſt the Mediator reconciling God and ſinners, is the object of the angels wonder, 1 Pet. i. 12.——‘ Which things the angels ‘ deſire to look into.’

(3.) The eyes of all the ſaints are drawn after him, as the object of their admiration and affection. No ſooner are the eyes of the blind ſoul opened, but they fix on him, John iv. 10. If thou kneweſt the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldſt have aſked of him, and he would have given thee living water. Therefore faith is called a looking unto Chriſt, Iſa. xlv. 22. ‘ Look unto me, and be ye ſaved, ‘ all the ends of the earth. Cant. iii. 11. ‘ Go forth, O ‘ ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon,’ &c. And it is not a looking after a wonder of a few days; but it muſt remain all along their courſe through the world, Heb. xii. 1, 2. Let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith. And when they come to glory, they will fix their eyes on him for ever, never weary, but always refreſhed with the ſight. Therefore the Lamb is in the midſt of the elders, Rev. v. 6. and the multitude before the Lamb, chap. vii. 9.

And that the eyes of all men are not upon him, is becauſe they know him not, are not capable to diſcern his glory, Pſal. ix. 10. ‘ And they that know thy name, ‘ will put their truſt in thee.’

6. laſtly, The incomprehenſibleneſs of him to any creature. He is a miracle paſt their reach, the reach of their knowledge as well as their power, Eph. iii. 19. And to know the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge. Men are ſoon nonpluſſed in the works of nature; there are things there which they cannot comprehend, Job xxxviii. and xxxix. as in the wind that bloweth, John iii. 8. ‘ The wind bloweth where it liſteth, and thou ‘ heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence ‘ it cometh, and whither it goeth.’ Eccleſ. xi. 5. ‘ As ‘ thou knoweſt not what is the way of the Spirit, nor ‘ how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with ‘ child; even ſo thou knoweſt not the works of God ‘ who maketh all.’ How much more muſt they find themſelves at a loſs in miracles, where the laws of nature are neglected, and God works quite beyond them? Then how muſt they be quite loſt in this greateſt miracle, The Son of God become man? Agur long ago challenged the wit of all mankind to comprehend his name, Prov. xxx. 4. Who hath aſcended up into heaven, or deſcended? who hath gathered the wind in his fiſts? who hath bound the waters in a garment? who hath eſtabliſhed all the ends of the earth? what is his name, and what is his ſon's name, if thou canſt tell? And the Son of God himſelf declared his name to be paſt reach, Judges xiii. 18. ‘ Why aſkeſt thou thus after my name, ‘ ſeeing it is ſecret?’ Whatever the ſaints know of it, the half is not known, there is ſtill more behind.

Uſe 1. Whoſoever do truly diſcern what Chriſt is, cannot chuſe but to love him above all perſons and things, and chuſe him for their portion being offered to them, Pſal. ix. 10. ‘ They that know thy name, will put ‘ their truſt in thee.’ John iv. 10. ‘ If thou kneweſt ‘ the gift of God, and who it is that ſaith to thee, Give ‘ me to drink; thou wouldſt have aſked of him, and ‘ he would have given thee living water.’ His matchleſs excellencies make him ſuch a lovely one, that the diſcovery of them does command the ſurrender of the heart to him, and captivates the affections; ſinks the value of all created things in competition with him, and inthrones him in the heart, Phil. iii. 8. ‘ Yea doubtleſs, ‘ and I count all things but loſs, for the excellency of ‘ the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus my Lord.’ Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘ Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is ‘ none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee.’ Hence true believers can neither be boaſted nor bribed, frighted nor flattered from his love, Cant. viii. 6, 7. Set me as a ſeal upon thine heart, as a ſeal upon thine arm: for love is ſtrong as death, jealouſy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a moſt vehement flame. Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: if a man would give all the ſubſtance of his houſe for love, it would utterly be contemned.

2. Believers love to Chriſt muſt needs be laſting, everlaſting. For his excellencies are infinite and incomprehenſible. When we meet with an object among the creatures that commands our admiration and love, we are taken with it: but ſome defect comes afterwards to be perceived in it, and then the admiration ceaſeth, or turns into contempt. At leaſt, the perfections of the object are all ſeen through, and they become familiar, and the admiration dwindles away into nothing; and what was at firſt ſight admired as new, ceaſeth to be ſo when it affords no more new. But no defect nor blemiſh can ever be eſpied in him, who is fairer than the ſun: and there being an incomprehenſible depth of excellencies in him, there is ever place for new diſcoveries; ſo the admiration muſt be kept up for ever, Rev. xxii. 2. ‘ In the midſt of the ſtreet of it, and of either ‘ ſide of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare ‘ twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every ‘ month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing ‘ of the nations.’

3. Thoſe whoſe greateſt admiration and ſupreme love Chriſt is not the object of, are yet certainly in the midnight darkneſs of their natural ſtate. Whoſoever of you admire and love any created perſon or thing as much or more than Chriſt, ye have never yet ſeen nor known him, Pſal. ix. 10. ‘ They that know thy name, will put ‘ their truſt in thee.’ Luke xiv. 26. ‘ If any man come ‘ to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, ‘ and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his ‘ own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple.’ The predominant love of the world, prizing and eſteeming the things thereof above him, is a concluding evidence, that ye are walking in the dark; that the ſcales are yet on your eyes, and that Chriſt is a vailed Chriſt to you.

4. laſtly, See here how it is not to be thought ſtrange, that there are who ſtumble at the doctrine of an incarnate God our Redeemer. Corrupt nature is blind and venturous. Our incarnate Redeemer is a miracle, paſt the reach and comprehenſion of the creatures. They are blind, and cannot apprehend his glory; yet they are proud and lofty, and will not admit the myſtery becauſe they cannot comprehend it. Now, it cannot be comprehended; therefore either they muſt be humbled, or ſtumble at it as a ſtumbling-ſtone. See Matth. xi. 6.

III. In what reſpects is our incarnate Redeemer a miraculous One, a moſt wonderful perſonage? This is a ſubject which no man can fully comprehend, and will never be exhauſted by the ſaints in glory through eternity. We will touch a few things, to ſhew that he is miracle all over. He is wonderful,

1*ſt*, In his perſon and natures. He is God-man, God and man in one perſon. None ſuch in heaven or earth.

1. The man Chriſt is the true God, the ſecond perſon of the glorious Trinity, the one ſupreme moſt high God, with the Father and the Spirit, 1 John v. 20. ‘ And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath ‘ given us an underſtanding that we may know him ‘ that is true: and we are in him that is true, even in his ‘ Son Jeſus Chriſt. This is the true God, and eternal ‘ life.’ He is ‘ the brightneſs of his Father's glory, ‘ and the expreſs image of his perſon,’ Heb. i. 2, 3. Therefore he ſaid to Philip, John xiv. 9. ‘ Have I been ‘ ſo long time with you, and yet haſt thou not known ‘ me, Philip? He that hath ſeen me, hath ſeen the ‘ Father.’ He is the Father's fellow, Zech. xiii. 7. His equal, Phil. ii. 6.

2. Chriſt the Son of God is true man. The eternal Son of the Father is a Son of Adam, Luke iii. 23. ——38. being ‘(as was ſuppoſed) the ſon of Joſeph—— ‘ which was the ſon of Adam.’ He was really human fleſh, John i. 14. ‘ The word was made fleſh;’

and our fleſh, as made of a woman, Gal. iv. 4. He is a man, conſiſting of a ſoul, Matth. xxvi. 38. and a body of fleſh, and blood, and bones, Luke xxiv. 39. as really man as any man whatſoever.

So he is God and man in one perſon. Here is a wonderful perſon indeed, whom we cannot comprehend; true God, yet man; true man, yet God; A myſterious perſon, undiſcerned by moſt that ſaw him with their eyes, perceived only by the enlightened eye, John i. 14. The uniting of a ſoul to an earthly body, forming one perſon called man, was a work of wonder: but what is the putting together two pieces of clay, in compariſon of the potter's uniting with his own clay? Should we behold an angel aſſuming to himſelf and appearing in a crawling worm, as his own body; we would ceaſe to wonder at it, beholding this ſurpaſſing wonder, an incarnate God! here eternity and a being of yeſterday meet together in one perſon, a child, and yet the Everlaſting Father; here infinite and finite meet in one, God and his own creature!

2dly, In his perfections and qualifications, Pſal. xlv. 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men: grace is poured into thy lips. All qualities that render one deſirable and lovely meet together in him: and all theſe are in him to a miraculous pitch. So his Father is well pleaſed in him, Matth. iii. 17. and the Spirit reſted on him, verſ. 16. And every ſoul beholding him with an eye of faith, will take up its eternal reſt in him. Particularly, he is wonderful,

1. In his ſpotleſs and unchangeable holineſs and purity, Heb. vii. 26. For ſuch an high prieſt became us, who is holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, and made higher than the heavens. The fulneſs of the Spirit of holineſs is in him, John iii. 34. 'God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him.' The brighteſt of the ſaints here below want not their ſpots; at beſt they are but fair as the moon: but there is no darkneſs in him at all. The ſaints and angels in heaven have but each one their meaſure of holineſs, the fulneſs of a veſſel; they have none to communicate to others; but in him there is the fulneſs of a fountain, to fill all with holineſs, John i. 16. 'And of his fulneſs have all we received, and grace for grace.'

2. In his wiſdom, Col. ii. 3. 'In whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge.' The leaſt portion and the greateſt that any have in the world, is from him, John i. 9. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The apoſtle challenges the whole creation with that, Rom. xi. 34. 'For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſellor?' But his name is the Counſellor, and he hath known the mind of his Father, Matth. xi. 27. and can open the ſealed book, and look into the ſecrets there. O the admirable wiſdom of Chriſt, appearing all along in the conduct of his providence in the church and in the world, whereby men and devils are outwitted!

3. In his power. There is nothing too hard for him to do. What aſtoniſhing works of power did he while he was in the world! Matth. xi. 5. The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the goſpel preached to them. And he is the beginning of the creation of God, Heb. i. 2. How often has the ſong of victory been raiſed in the church to his praiſe! Pſal. xcviii. 1. 'O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done marvellous things; his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory.' His triumphing over death, devils, hell, and the grave, are laſting monuments of his power.

4. In his goodneſs, mercy, and grace. The Prince of the kings of the earth is the Prince of peace. There is grace in his lips, whereby he ſpeaks to poor ſinners, Pſal. xlv. 2.——'Grace is poured into thy lips.' Though he has power ſufficient to ſtrike terror on the ſtouteſt of his enemies, yet he is a matchleſs mirror of goodneſs, patience and meekneſs.

5. laſtly, In a word, he is wonderful in the concentering of all perfections in him, each in its perfection, Cant. v. 16. His mouth is moſt ſweet, yea, he is altogether lovely.

3dly, He is wonderful all along his duration. Some are wonderful in one part of their life, ſome in another; but he is miracle all over his duration. And particularly he is wonderful,

1. In his eternal generation of the Father, Pſal. ii. 7. 'The Lord hath ſaid unto me, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. He was before he was born, John viii. 58. 'And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, verily I ſay unto you, before Abraham was, I am.' He was in the beginning of time, John i. 1. 'In the beginning was the word;' before time, from everlaſting, Prov. viii. 22, 23. 'The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was ſet up from everlaſting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.' See Micah v. 2. 'But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thouſands of Judah, yet out of thee ſhall he come forth unto me, that is to be ruler in Iſrael, whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting.' Wonderful One! A Son, and yet from eternity, without beginning of days, Heb. viii. 3. A Son, and yet his duration of equal extent with his Father's. An incomprehenſible One! Who can comprehend this his generation? Begotten from eternity! The ſame numerical divine eſſence communicated from Father to him!

2. In his birth, Matth. i. 23. Behold, a virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted, is, God with us. Adam's body was made of the duſt, without help of man or woman; Eve's of Adam's, without the help of a woman; before the laws of generation took place. But after they took place, and had gone on uninterrupted for four thouſand years, Chriſt was conceived of a virgin, without the help of a man, Heb. vii. 3. This was a miracle, a wonderful birth, incomprehenſible to us, Luke i. 35. 'The angel ſaid unto Mary, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.'

3. In his life. In his private life, a wonderful infant, lying in a manger, yet worſhipped as God; Herod ſet to kill him, yet he preſerved, while the ſeveral babes about were ſlain, that he might not be miſſed! A wonderful child, ruling the whole world; yet ſubject to Joſeph and his mother. A wonderful youth, engaging the doctors at twelve years of age, having never learned, John vii. 15. His public life was one continued wonder, in his temptations, preachings, and miracles, eſpecially in the untainted holineſs which ran through his whole life; never a wrong action, word, nor thought, notwithſtanding of all he ſuffered from an ungrateful world.

4. In his death betrayed by one of his own; forſaken by them all; acquitted by his judge as innocent, yet condemned to a moſt cruel death. Aſtoniſhing wonder, God dying in man's nature! the beloved Son of God hanging on a croſs; heaven, earth, and hell, all pouring in at once floods of ſufferings on him: but he in the mean time wholly reſigned, and patient to a miracle under all; taking up the bitter cup of wrath kindly out of his Father's hand, and maintaining his confidence in him, praying for men his enemies, and triumphing over devils on the croſs. Ceaſe to wonder at mens laying down their life for their friends; at Samſon's dying with the Philiſtines. A greater wonder is here. The ſun never ſaw ſuch a wonder, and was ſtruck blind with the ſight; and death aſtoniſhed, let go its priſoners.

5. In his burial. The Lord of life lying dead in a grave; the ſpotleſs Jeſus making his grave with the wicked; the great deliverer from death carried priſoner to its dark regions; is a wonder that may hold us in admiration for ever! The beautiful fabric of heaven and earth pulled down, heavens rolled up and caſt by like old rags, would be no ſuch wonder, as the Chriſt of God laid down in a grave, and the powers of hell ſeeming ſo to have carried the day againſt him.

6. In his reſurrection. Behold him dead and buried, a rock the walls of his grave, cloſed up with a huge ſtone, the ſtone ſealed, a guard of ſoldiers ſet to watch there; and ſo for two days the wicked world and hell triumphing over him: but all of a ſudden, on the third day, the earth and rocks fall a quaking and ſhaking; an angel rolls away the ſtone; the guards become as dead men; death itſelf loſes its gripes of him; the bands of all the elects guilt, wherewith it held him, become as tow touched with the fire; and the ſlain Redeemer riſes again, and comes forth; ſtands conqueror on the field of battle, laden with the ſpoils of his enemies, death, and hell; bringing away the keys of them with him.

7. In his aſcenſion into heaven. Behold him aſcending into heaven from the earth, where he ſtood with his diſciples; making his way through the air upward, they looking on, till a cloud received him out of their ſight, Acts i. 9. being carried up into heaven, Luke xxiv. 51. Then he was returning conqueror from the battle unto his Father's palace: and he is attended in his triumphal chariot with his captives, Pſal. lxviii. 18. 'Thou haſt 'aſcended on high, thou haſt led captivity captive;' and with joyful acclamations, and ſound of trumpet, Pſal. xlvii. 5. God has gone up with a ſhout, the Lord with the ſound of a trumpet. Behold how he is admired by thoſe of the upper houſe, while he was coming towards them, as a moſt wonderful One! Iſa. lxiii. 1. 'Who is this 'that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from 'Bozra? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling 'in the greatneſs of his ſtrength? I that ſpeak in righ'teouſneſs, mighty to ſave.' Then he enters the gates, and ſets them open for all his people to follow.

8. In his ſitting at the right hand of God, Heb. i. 3. When the man Chriſt came into the higheſt heavens, his Father ſeated him at his right hand, Pſal. cx. 1. The moſt favourite angel never had at any time ſuch an honour put upon him, as this moſt wonderful man was fixed in, at his firſt arrival in the upper houſe, Heb. i. 13. There he ſat, there he ſits, and there he will ſit, in a ſtate of glory, reſt, and expectation of his enemies becoming his footſtool, till the myſtery of God be finiſhed.

9. In his coming again to judge the world, 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8, 9, 10. What tongue can expreſs, or heart conceive the wonders that ſhall then take place about him? The attendance of all the holy angels on him as the Judge, the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God, the reſurrection of all the dead at his coming, their compearance before him, the ſeparating of the ſheep from the goats, the ſentencing of both, driving the wicked away into hell, and taking the righteous along with him to heaven, will ſhew him wonderful at that day to thoſe who now ſee no glory in him.

10. laſtly, In his continuing for ever to be the eternal band of union, and mean of communion, between God and the ſaints for ever, Rev. vii. 17. For the Lamb which is in the midſt of the throne, ſhall feed them, and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes. Heb. vii. 25. Wherefore he is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt, that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. Every ſaint ſhall ſhine there as a ſtar in the firmament; but he is the Sun for ever, from whom they ſhall derive all their light and glory, Rev. xxi. 23. 'And the city had no need of the ſun, neither of the 'moon to ſhine in it: for the glory of God did lighten 'it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.' If they are to be as the ſeven lamps in the temple above, he is and will be as the bowl in the candleſtick from which they will all be fed; he only immediately communicating with the Godhead.

4*thly*, He is wonderful in his offices. And,

1. In his prophetical office. How would men run together to ſee a prophet of the Lord; how would they admire him? But he is the great Prophet, never was ſuch a one as he. The Spirit came at times on the Prophets, but he reſted on him, Iſa. xi. 2. They had their foreknowledge of future events at ſecond hand, but it is his privilege to look with his own eyes into the ſealed book, John i. 18. 'No man hath ſeen God at 'any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bo'ſom of the Father, he hath declared him.' All that they could do, was to teach externally; but he can render his teaching effectual, and that on the weakeſt and fooliſheſt creatures that are. Hence he hath choſen the fooliſh things of the world. So that we may conclude, Job xxxvi. 22. Behold, God exalteth by his power: who teacheth like him?

2. In his prieſtly office. The prieſts under the law, had their altars of ſtone, or braſs, or gold; their ſacrifices of beaſts, their offerings of divers ſorts. But here is a moſt wonderful Prieſt; who is the Prieſt, the altar, and the ſacrifice, all in one. He offered himſelf a ſacrifice unto God; and from himſelf was the ſacrifice rendered acceptable. All the ſacrifices offered before his, were but as hand-writings to own the debt of ſin; but could pay none. His ſacrifice was truly expiatory, purchaſed the Spirit, reconciliation with God, and eternal life for ſinners. Never was there ſuch a prieſt nor ſacrifice. And he is the great Interceſſor, wonderful in reſpect of the ground of his interceſſion, the objects of it, the manner of it, and the infallible ſucceſs of it continually.

3. In his kingly office. Such a wonderful King the world never ſaw, among all the crowned heads that ever were on it. Zion's King is moſt wonderful in his victories, reſcuing men from the power of the devil, ſubduing their hearts to him, and conquering their wills; in his defence of his ſubjects from the devil, the world, luſts, frowns, and flatteries of the world; in ruining his enemies totally, and completing the happineſs of his friends. Chriſt's kingdom is the moſt ancient kingdom, being erected on the ſixth day of the creation; the moſt extenſive kingdom, reaching both heaven and earth. Never a kingdom had ſo many enemies and ſo potent; yet has it ſtood through all ages, and will ſtand for ever and ever, without end.

5*thly*, He is wonderful in his relations. And,

1. He is nearly related to the houſe of Heaven, and ſo has the higheſt poſſible relation. The monarchs of the earth are the creatures of God, the angels are the ſervants of the houſe of heaven; but Chriſt is the Son of that houſe, the Son of God, Heb. i. 5.; and has the management of it all in his hand, John v. 22.

2. He is nearly related to the houſe of Adam. He is a Son of that houſe too, the top-branch of it, Luke iii. 38. He has a common relation to them all. He is their Saviour by office, 1 Tim. iv. 10. the Saviour of the world, 1 John iv. 14. he has a nearer relation to the elect, he is their ſurety and repreſentative, who undertook for them in the covenant, Heb. vii. 22. John x. 15. and yet a nearer relation to believers. He is their brother, Heb. ii. 11. their father, Iſ. ix 6. their huſband, 2 Cor. xi. 2. and their head, Col. i. 18. And thus by his relation to both,

3. He is the centre of union to the two. In him they meet, John xvii. 23. 'I in them and thou in me, that 'they may be made perfect in one.' There was war declared between the two houſes; and the houſe of Adam could never have made their part good againſt Heaven; but the Son of God married our nature to himſelf, and ſo brings together the two houſes, making peace through the body of his fleſh. So, as he is the foundation-ſtone on which all believers are laid; he is the corner-ſtone, joining and knitting heaven and earth.

6thly, laſtly, He is wonderful in his love, Eph. iii. 18, 19. ‘And to know the love of Chriſt, which paſſeth knowledge,’ viz. his love to the children of men, his love will appear wonderful, if ye conſider,

1. The ſubject of it, the party loving us. He is the eternal Son of God, the Prince of the kings of the earth. That ever there ſhould have been an eye of love caſt from heaven on us not from among the courtiers, but from the throne, the King himſelf, is wonderful. That the Father's delight ſhould have made the ſons of men his delight, Prov. viii. 30, 31. may cauſe us to cry out, Pſal. cxliv. 3. Lord, what is man, that thou takeſt knowledge of him? or the ſon of man that thou makeſt account of him?

2. The objects of it, the parties beloved; men, ſinful men. Conſider them as to their rank of being, and they are the loweſt of the rational creatures; but a ſuperior rank, viz. angels, were paſſed over, and they were made the objects of it, Tit, iii. 4. ‘The kindneſs and love of God our Saviour toward man appeared.’ Conſider them as to their quality, and they were enemies to him, Rom. v. 10. ‘For when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son.’

3. The effect, force, and energy of this love. It is abſolutely matchleſs: never did any love work ſo powerfully as his. It began, (if I may ſo ſay) before the world was, Prov. viii. 31. and engaged him in ſurety-ſhip, for the debt of an elect world. In time he died for them, he ſo loved them, Rom. v. 8. It reſts not till he have them with himſelf in the higheſt heavens, John xvii. 24. for ever.

4. laſtly, The qualities of it. Theſe are wonderful.

(1.) It is free love, Hoſ. xiv. 4. ‘I will love them freely.’ There was nothing in the object lovely, to engage it. But as the ſun ſhines without hire on the dunghill, as well as on the bed of roſes; ſo Chriſt's love was unhired. See the freeneſs of it, Ezek. xvi. 8. When I paſſed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was a time of love, and I ſpread my ſkirt over thee, and covered thy nakedneſs, yea, I ſware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, ſaith the Lord God, and thou becameſt mine.

(2.) It is ſovereign love. There were objects equally miſerable with fallen man; yet there was no love to them. Chriſt looked on the fallen part of the creation, and the angelic tribe, and the human tribe were both before him: and ſovereignty paſſes the former, but fixes its love on the latter.

(3.) It is preventing love, John xv. 16. ‘Ye have not choſen me, but I have choſen you.’ Love begets love, as one coal kindles another. But Chriſt's love to us had nothing from us of that kind, nor of any other, to kindle it. We never love him, till he love us firſt, 1 John iv. 19.

(4.) It is tender love, Iſa. xl. 11. ‘He ſhall feed his flock like a ſhepherd: he ſhall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his boſom, and ſhall gently lead thoſe that are with young.’ It is tender as of a father to his children, Pſal. ciii. 13. ‘Like as a father pitieth his children, ſo the Lord pitieth them that fear him;’ as of a mother to her ſucking child, Iſ. xlix. 15, 16. ‘Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands, thy walls are continually before me.’ It is tender, as one is to the apple of his eye, Zech, ii. 8. ‘He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye.’

(5.) It is unchangeable love, John xiii. 1. Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end. 2 Tim. ii. 19. The foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this ſeal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. Whatever falls out in the courſe of the believer's lot and life, though the manifeſtations of that love may be very variable, yet the love itſelf never alters. See Hoſ. ii. 19. ‘I will betroth thee unto me for ever.’

(6.) laſtly, It is everlaſting love. It never had a beginning, and will never have an end, Jer. xxxi. 3. ‘I have loved thee with an everlaſting love.’

And thus Chriſt appears to be all over wonderful.

USE 1. for Information. See here,

1. The greatneſs of the Father's love in giving to us ſuch a wonderful one for our Prince, John iii. 16. ‘God ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. The love of God appears here to be a wonder. O what honour is put upon man, by making ſuch a gift to him, than which heaven could not give a greater! O what happineſs appears to be deſigned for man by this gift! We may ſay as Hiram King of Tyre ſaid to Solomon, 2 Chron. ii. 11. ‘Becauſe the Lord hath loved his people; he hath made thee king over them.’

2. The reaſonableneſs of the believer's ſuperlative love to Chriſt. Every believing ſoul loves Chriſt above all perſons and all things. They will love him more than all the world, and all that is therein, and more than their own life, Luke xiv. 26. And good reaſon there is for it; for there is no object ſo lovely. If we look to confeſſors parting with their goods, their liberty, and their worldly comforts, for Chriſt; to the martyrs parting with their lives, embracing fires, gibbets, &c. the moſt cruel deaths, for Chriſt; we will ceaſe to wonder at their ſo doing, when we conſider what a wonderful One he is for whom they undergo the loſs of all. Gaining Chriſt, they are the greateſt gainers, whatever they loſe, Phil. iii. 7, 8.

3. The reaſonableneſs of the goſpel-demand of all, to receive and ſubmit to Chriſt as their Prince and Governor. His tranſcendent excellency intitles him to the principality and government over the ſons of men. His merit requires our abſolute reſignation to him. He is the Father's choice; and in making that choice, he has acted like himſelf, having choſen for us this moſt wonderful perſonage.

4. laſtly, The dreadful ſin and danger of the ſlighting of Chriſt. The more wonderful and excellent he is, the deeper will the guilt be of refuſing him; the deeper the guilt, the more fearful will be the vengeance for rejecting him, Heb. ii. 3. How ſhall we eſcape if we neglect ſo great ſalvation?

USE 2. Of Exhortation. Be exhorted then to give this wonderful one your heart, Prov. xxiii. 26. ‘My ſon, give me thine heart.’ And,

1. Make him the choice of your ſoul, ſaying, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. ‘Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee.’ Take him for your portion, as one who is the beſt of portions. Let your ſouls ſolemnly conſent to the goſpel-offer.

2. Part with all for him, as the wiſe merchant, who ſold all that he had, and bought the one pearl of great price, Matth. xiii. 44, 45. Give up with your luſts and idols: renounce the devil, the world, and the fleſh, reſting on Chriſt for all, for time and eternity.

3. Dwell in the contemplation of his matchleſs excellencies. Let it be the ſubſtance of your religion to love him, to admire him, to be ſwallowed up in his love. And let love to him ſet your ſouls a-moving in all holy obedience.

Motive 1. Ye can never beſtow your hearts ſo well. What is all the world in compariſon of Chriſt, but loſs and dung? Alas, that ſhadows ſhould have our hearts, while the moſt ſubſtantial good courts it!

Mot. 2. Conſider that it is for this end Chriſt is commended to you. We preach Chriſt, that ye may fall in love with him.

Mot. 3. laſtly, Conſider how ye will anſwer it to him before the tribunal, that ye have preferred other lovers to the lovely One.

Christ the Counsellor.

Isaiah ix. 6.

——His Name ſhall be called,——Counſellor.——

THE ſcope of this part of the verſe being to commend the Prince preſented and given to us for our Prince and Governor, this ſyllable of his name refers to his ſingular capacity for management of matters, in reſpect of his vaſt reach in point of wiſdom. Other princes muſt have their counſellors, by whoſe advice they may act: but he himſelf is, and ſhews himſelf to be Counſellor, an oracle of government, a Prince in whoſe own breaſt is the oracle for right management of all things relating to his dominion.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt, who is preſented and given to us of the Father for our Prince, is and ſhews himſelf to be the great Counſellor, an oracle of government.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,
I. In what reſpects Chriſt is the Counſellor.
II. What is the import of this part of his name.
III. laſtly, Improve the ſubject.

I. In what reſpects is Chriſt the Counſellor.

1ſt, He is of the ſecret council of Heaven, Zech. vi. 13. 'The counſel of peace ſhall be between them both.' He is a member of the cabinet council of heaven, to which the moſt favourite angel is not admitted. He has acceſs to the ſealed book of the divine decrees, Rev. v. 5.; and there is nothing tranſacted there, nor has been from eternity, but what he is acquainted with, John v. 20. For the Father loveth the Son, and ſheweth him all things that himſelf doth. With his Father and the Spirit he is of the council.

2dly, He is the oracle of counſel for the earth, John i. 18. 'No man hath ſeen God at any time; the only 'begotten Son, which is in the boſom of the Father, 'he hath declared him.' Matth. xi. 27. 'All things are 'delivered unto me of my Father, and no man know'eth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any 'man the Father, ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever 'the Son will reveal him.' Many counſellors are to be found in the earth, and wicked counſellors for mens deſtruction, as the houſe of Ahab were counſellors to Ahaziah king of Judah, to his deſtruction, 2 Chron. xxii. 4. But he is the counſellor for ſalvation, outſhining all other good counſellors, as the ſun doth the twinkling ſtars. And,

1. He is the counſellor of the world of men, John viii. 12. I am the light of the world; he that followeth me, ſhall not walk in darkneſs, but ſhall have the light of life. They have all loſt their way, their affairs are all in confuſion, they know not how to right them. But he is,

(1.) Their Counſellor in reſpect of office. As the ſun is ſet in the firmament to give light on the earth, ſo is Chriſt given for a light unto the world, that whoſoever will, may have his counſel, and by his counſel get the affairs of their ſouls retrieved, John xii. 46. 'I 'am come a light into the world, that whoſoever be'lieveth on me, ſhould not abide in darkneſs.' Whoever will conſult him, are welcome; none ſhall be refuſed his wiſe counſel, John vi. 37. 'Him that cometh 'to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.'

(2.) Their Counſellor in reſpect of capacity, Col. ii. 3. 'In him are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and 'knowledge.' The multitude and variety of their caſes cannot confuſe him; for his underſtanding is infinite. Nothing can perplex him, who, with one glance of his piercing eye, ſees at once through all caſes of all men, and can preſcribe ſuitable remedies.

2. He is the Counſellor of the viſible church more eſpecially, Micah iv. 9. and that in two reſpects.

(1.) He conſults her intereſt, for her protection and preſervation in the world, Micah iv. 9. 'Why doſt thou 'cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy Coun'ſellor periſhed?' There are conſtant conſpiracies of devils and wicked men to ruin her; and oft times their plots are laid ſo ſubtilly, and ſo powerfully managed, that the church is brought to the brink of ruin: but he, as her Counſellor, diſcovers the ſnare, and powerfully counteracts her enemies; ſo that ſhe is ſtill preſerved. A remarkable inſtance of which we have in the conſpiracy of Haman to deſtroy the whole nation of the Jews, the hiſtory of which you may read in the book of Eſther.

(2.) He is ſtill actually counſelling her by his word. All her members have the advantage of Heaven's counſels, inculcated on them for their ſpiritual welfare. The counſel of God in providing a Saviour, is proclaimed there: the ſalvation is offered, and they are counſelled again and again to embrace it: their way to happineſs is cleared, Rev. iii. 18. I counſel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayſt be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayeſt be clothed, and that the ſhame of thy nakedneſs do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eye-ſalve, that thou mayſt ſee.

3. He is the Counſellor of the inviſible church of believers, and of every particular believer in it, Eph. i. 22. and that moſt eſpecially. And,

(1.) The care and management of all and every one of them, lies on him, 1 Pet. v. 7. Caſting all your care upon him, for he firſt careth for you. He is the great Shepherd who brings in the ſheep from their ſtraying, feeds and protects them, and at length completes their well-being. To him the Father has committed the charge of all the elect; and on him it lies to bring them to himſelf in converſion, to manage them during their ſtay in the world, and to bring them all ſafe to glory in the end.

(2.) He counſels them effectually, by his word and Spirit, Pſal. xxv. 14. 'The ſecret of the Lord is with 'them that fear him, and he will ſhew them his cove'nant.' He has eſtabliſhed a communication between him and them, whereby they have his direction and inſtruction in their particular caſes, what way to ſteer their courſe, Prov. iii. 6. 'In all thy ways acknowledge 'him, and he ſhall direct thy paths.' He is their oracle, whom they are to conſult in all things; and his word bears his counſel to them, Pſal. cxix. 24. 'Thy 'teſtimonies alſo are my counſellors;' His providence points out their way, Pſal. xxxii. 8. 'I will inſtruct 'thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go; 'I will guide thee with mine eye!' and his Spirit makes all effectual, John xvi. 13. 'When the Spirit of truth is 'come, he will guide you into all truth.'

II. What is the import of this part of Chriſt's name? We may take it up in theſe ſeven particulars following.

Firſt, He is of ſingular wiſdom for conduct and management of affairs, Iſ. xi. 2, 3. 'The Spirit of the Lord 'ſhall reſt upon him, the Spirit of wiſdom and under'ſtanding, the ſpirit of counſel and might, the ſpirit of ‘ knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord: and ſhall ‘ make him of quick underſtanding in the fear of the ‘ Lord, and he ſhall not judge after the ſight of his ‘ eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears.’ Great is the truſt committed to him, in bringing the elect to glory: but he has a head ſufficient for the difficult taſk, which would be too hard for the ſkill of angels to manage. Nothing can be intricate for him, but his wiſdom can unfold it. For,

1. The fulneſs of the Spirit of wiſdom is lodged in him, to fit him for the great truſt of bringing many ſons to glory, Iſa. xi. 2. forecited; and that not by meaſure, as ſaints have the ſame; but without meaſure, to fit him for every emergent in the caſe of his truſt; ſo that he can never be at a loſs to know what to do, John iii. 34. For God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure unto him, being furniſhed with wiſdom, as the ſpring with waters continually.

2. He is wiſdom itſelf, the Eternal Wiſdom of the Father; under which name Solomon ſpeaks of him, Prov. viii. And Chriſt's children are wiſdom's children, Matth. xi. 19.

Uſe 1. How fit and ſuitable is Chriſt for us then, to conduct us through an evil world, to the place of perfect ſafety? We live in a deceitful world, where we are invironed with ſnares; how will we ever make our way through it? Let us betake ourſelves then to the great Counſellor for conduct, the deceit of the world prompting us to go to him.

2. Put your caſe in his hand, and truſt him with it, how intricate and perplexed ſoever it is. Though you cannot give a name to it, he can; though you can find no remedy for it in the whole creation; but all ſays, ‘ It is not in me;’ the wiſdom of the Counſellor will reach it.

3. See how weak and fooliſh things fall on and keep the way to happineſs, while worldly-wiſe men are bemiſſed and bewildered, that they never reach it, Iſa. xxxv. 8. And an high-way ſhall be there, and a way, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs; the unclean ſhall not paſs over it, but it ſhall be for thoſe; the wayfaring men, though fools ſhall not err therein. The Counſellor is on their head, verſ. 4. while thoſe ſlighting him lean to their own underſtanding, and ſo wander, Eccleſ. x. 15. ‘ The labour of the fooliſh wearieth every one ‘ of them, becauſe he knoweth not how to go to the ‘ city.’

Secondly, He is a Prince of great and noble deſigns and projects, requiring counſel and wiſdom. All the deſigns and projects of the princes of the earth are but trifles, and childiſh in compariſon of his; they are quite too high for creatures of the deepeſt reach, 1 Cor. ii. 9. We may take them up in theſe three.

1. He entertained, and has accompliſhed a deſign of ranſoming an elect world, and ſo became their Redeemer, 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. ‘ There is one God, and one ‘ Mediator between God and men, the man Chriſt Jeſus; who gave himſelf a ranſom for all, to be teſtified ‘ in due time.’ This was ſuch a high deſign, that no man whatſoever was able to have fallen on a method of ranſoming one of them, Pſal. xlix. 7, 8. ‘ None of ‘ them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give ‘ to God a ranſom for him; for the redemption of ‘ their ſoul is precious, and it ceaſeth for ever.’ Silver and gold could not effect it; it behoved to be by blood, that blood behoved to be of infinite value. So the great Counſellor falls on a method to effect it, his own incarnation, 1 Pet. i. 18, 19. ‘ Ye were not redeemed ‘ with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold: but with ‘ the precious blood of Chriſt, as of a Lamb without ‘ blemiſh and without ſpot.’

2. He has been and is on a project of reſcuing one and all of them from the power of the devil, John x. 16. Other ſheep I have, which are not of this fold: them alſo I muſt bring, and they ſhall hear my voice; and there ſhall be one fold, and one ſhepherd. This is a difficult taſk: all the wit and power of hell is engaged againſt it; and what is favourable on Satan's ſide, is, that he is in poſſeſſion; they are his captives, priſoners and ſlaves: and they themſelves ſide with him againſt Chriſt, being unwilling to be reſcued. Yet the Counſellor will not give over the project; but as he has hitherto, ſo he will to the end carry it on, till there is not one of them all left unreſcued, John vi. 37. ‘ All that the Father ‘ giveth me, ſhall come to me; and him that cometh ‘ to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.’

3. He is on a deſign to have them altogether at home with himſelf in his Father's houſe, in a ſtate of complete happineſs, John xvii. 24. Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me, be with me where I am: that they may behold my glory which thou haſt given me. There are mountains of difficulties lying in the way of this project; but the wiſdom of the Counſellor will find a way to roll them all away. This is the building of the temple of the Lord which he has in view, Zech. vi. 12. and will perfect over the belly of all difficulties, Zech. iv. 7. ‘ Who art thou, O great mountain, be‘ fore Zerubbabel thou ſhalt become a plain; and he ‘ ſhall bring forth the head-ſtone thereof with ſhout‘ ings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.’ For effecting of this, there are to be rolled away mountains of difficulties caſting up in their caſe,

(1.) Before death. Their paſſage through the wilderneſs is difficult, through their manifold wants, weakneſſes, ſnares and temptations there; that if they were not under the wiſe conduct of the great Counſellor, it would be impoſſible they could miſs their carcaſſes falling there; but he will have all ſafe through, Pſal. lxxiii. 24. Thou ſhalt guide me with thy counſel, and afterwards receive me to glory.

(2.) In death. It is hard to get ſafe through the dark valley: but he will have them ſafe there, where many ſplit and are broken in pieces. Be the voyage never ſo dangerous, he will be their Pilot, Pſal. xxiii. 4. ‘ Yea, though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow ‘ of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; ‘ thy rod and thy ſtaff they comfort me.’ Be the way never ſo much haunted by inſtruments of deſtruction, he will carry them ſafely through, Iſa. xxxv. 9. ‘ No ‘ lion ſhall be there, nor any ravenous beaſt ſhall go ‘ thereon, it ſhall not be found there: but the redeem‘ ed ſhall walk there.’

(3.) In the grave. There their bodies lie, when they leave this world, under the power of death. The bands of death wherewith they are held there, are mighty; the bars of the grave cannot be broken in ſunder by created power: but he deſigns to looſe the one, and break the other, Hoſ. xiii. 14. I will ranſom them from the power of the grave: I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues: O grave, I will be thy deſtruction: repentance ſhall be hid from mine eyes.

Uſe 1. Let us then, each for himſelf, fall in with the noble and great deſigns of this prince. Satan, the prince of this world, is carrying on deſigns of deſtruction: and men fall in with his deſigns, purſuing their worldly intereſt as their chief intereſt, and going on impenitent in their ſins. Chriſt's deſigns are deſigns of ſalvation: fall in with theſe, ſeeking chiefly the advancing of your eternal intereſt, Matth. vi. 33. repenting, and turning every one from his evil way.

2. Let us be concerned for the proſpering of his counſels, Pſal. lxxii. 15. ‘ Prayer ſhall be made for him ‘ continually, and daily ſhall he be praiſed.’ Compare Matth. vi. 10. ‘ Thy kingdom come. Thy will be ‘ done in earth, as it is in heaven.’ Satan and his agents counteract them all they can; ſtand not unconcerned ſpectators; for neutrals in this caſe are enemies to Chriſt, Matth. xii. 30. ‘ He that is not with me, is ‘ againſt me; and he that gathereth not with me, ſcat‘ tereth abroad.’ Rejoice in the proſpering of his kingdom, and mourn for the diſhonours done to him.

3. They that reject and oppoſe his counſels, are fools, and do it to their own loſs, Luke vii. 30. For all his counſels are great and noble; and whoſo ſet themſelves againſt them, work for their own ruin, Prov. viii. 36. He that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his own ſoul: all they that hate me love death. They muſt periſh without remedy, rejecting the counſels of ſalvation.

Thirdly, He can manage all by himſelf, and needs no counſel of men. The name of the wiſeſt on earth may be conſultor, the wiſeſt of men ſays ſo, Prov. xi. 14. 'Where no counſel is the people fall: but in the multitude of counſellors there is ſafety.' But his name is Counſellor. He is ſo far a Counſellor, that he is a conſultor of none, Rom. xi. 34. 'For who hath known the 'the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his counſel'lor?' His ſervants are about his throne, but not to pretend to give him counſel. Conſider,

1. His underſtanding is infinite. He ſees all things at once, and he ſees through every thing; whereas the creature's capacity is but finite, ſeeing but ſome things and but ſome parts of them too. There can be no lack of counſel in him; and if there were, we would be utterly unfit to make it up. Can the light of a ſmall candle increaſe the light of the ſhining ſun, or a drop from one's finger the waters of the ocean? Far leſs can finite add to what is infinite.

3. His counſels were all concerted before we had a being. The plan and method of his government in every part, was laid down immutably, before there was a man or angel. He hath not councils of yeſterday, wherein we might give advice; but known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world, Acts xv. 18. The elect were choſen to the kingdom from eternity, Eph. i. 4. and the kingdom prepared for them, Matth. xxv. 34. and all the diſpenſations of his providence immutably laid down, Zech. vi. 1.

3. The execution of them was begun entirely without us. What a ſweet ſurpriſe was the conduct of the great Counſellor to our guilty parents in paradiſe? Did he conſult with the guilty pair, how to remedy their caſe? No; but he ſurpriſed them with his counſel. He made us without us at firſt; and he remakes us, not only without us, but over the belly of oppoſition from us: therefore he can manage us, without us, both in nature and grace.

4. How often have we ſeen, that our counſels, had they been mixed with thoſe of the great Counſellor, would have marred all? David would have had the child to live; but the great Counſellor would have him die; for had he lived, he had lived to the reproach of David. Jacob ſays, 'All theſe things were againſt him;' yet were they for him; ſo that if they had not taken place, his family had been in ill caſe.

Uſe 1. Let us therefore wholly reſign the diſpoſal of our lot to Jeſus Chriſt the great Counſellor, Pſal. xlvii. 4. He ſhall chuſe our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Let us not carve for ourſelves, but leave that to him; believing that to be beſt for us, which he ſees beſt. Firſt commit your ſouls to him for eternal ſalvation, and then put a blank into his hand as to all other concerns. If we are his children, let our Father diſpoſe of us; if his ſubjects, let our King rule us; 'The Father hath committed all judgment to the Son,' John v. 22. Let us not refuſe for our part.

2. Let us wait on him patiently in the way of his diſpenſation towards ourſelves, and towards the church, Iſ. xxvi. 8. The church of God, and the intereſt of religion, are at very low paſs at this day: we are rowed into deep waters, from which no human ſkill can row us out again. But Chriſt is the great Counſellor; let him alone; he will ſee to his own work, and will awake as a giant refreſhed with wine. Are we in depths of affliction, trials, and difficulties? The ſtorm is never ſo boiſterous, nor the paſſage ſo hazardous, as the Pilot Chriſt needs to call a council what to do.

3. Let us beware of murmuring and fretting at, and quarrelling his conduct. There may be pieces of it which we cannot account for: but there is nothing in it that is wrong, Deut. xxxii. 4. Though we cannot ſee how all is well that he does, let us believe he does all well, Jer. xii. 1. Murmuring is a charging of the great Counſellor fooliſhly, as if he were not wiſe enough for to manage us; and that we might pretend to direct him. Remember his name, and be ſilent, and ſatisfied in all his diſpoſals.

Fourthly, His manner of conduct, and method of management, is deep and uncommon. Solomon tells us, that counſel in the heart of man is like deep waters, Prov. xx. 5. Chriſt's name is Counſellor, pointing out his counſels as great deeps; and ſo they are, Pſal. xcii. 5. 'O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts 'are very deep.' The contrivances of the greateſt wits among men, are but thin and ſhallow, in compariſon of the way of the great Counſellor, Pſal. lxxvii. 19. Thy way is in the ſea, and thy path in the great waters, and thy footſteps are not known.

1. It is not eaſy ſeen into. His way in his conduct of matters, is truly myſterious; there is need of wiſdom to diſcern it, Pſal. cvii. 43. and carnal wiſdom will not do it, 1 Cor. ii. 14. 'For the natural man receiveth not 'the things of the Spirit of God: for they are fooliſh'neſs unto him; neither can he know them, becauſe 'they are ſpiritually diſcerned.' Earthly princes have their ſecrets of government; and therefore no wonder that Chriſt has his ſecrets of government, who is the great Counſellor. It is ſuch a deep, and ſo hard to be ſeen into, that,

(1.) Carnal unrenewed men make wretched blunders about it, and quite miſtake it. They cannot at all ſee into the myſtery; it is as a parable to them, that they cannot underſtand, Mark iv. 11. They are none of the King's friends, and they cannot penetrate into his counſels, nor find out his deſigns, in his diſpenſations, Pſal. xcii. 5, 6, 7. O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep. A brutiſh man knoweth not; neither doth a fool underſtand this. When the wicked ſpring as the graſs, and when all the workers of iniquity do flouriſh; it is that they ſhall be deſtroyed for ever. Yea, they quite miſtake the matter to their own deſtruction, Mal. iii. 14, 15. 'Ye have ſaid, It is in vain to 'ſerve God; and what profit is it, that we have kept 'his ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully 'before the Lord of hoſts? And now we call the proud 'happy; yea, they that work wickedneſs, are ſet up; 'yea, they that tempt God, are even delivered.' Hoſ. xiv. 9. 'Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe 'things? prudent, and he ſhall know them? for the 'ways of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in 'them: but the tranſgreſſors ſhall fall therein.'

(2.) Even the godly themſelves are often mightily puzzled and perplexed about it; they know not what to make of it. How was Aſaph plunged in the caſe of the proſperity of the wicked, and adverſity of the godly? He was brought to the borders of Atheiſm by it. And there was no recovering, till he gave over looking with the eye of carnal wiſdom, and looked with the eye of faith, Pſal. lxxiii. 12. &c.

2. His manner of conduct, and method of management, is not to be ſeen through while we are here, by any whatſoever, Rom. xi. 33. O the depth of the riches both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out! Even thoſe who ſee into his conduct, cannot ſee through it. There are many plies of the manifold wiſdom of God that they cannot unfold; but will remain hid till the light of glory do diſcover them. By faith we may ſee ſo far as to ſay, 'He does all things well.' But when the whole web of providence being cut out, is laid before the ſaints in the light of the upper houſe, they will doubtleſs diſcern a great deal of beauties therein, which they do not now ſee. For a ſwatch of theſe depths, you may take theſe.

1. Things let go on to the uttermoſt point of hope.

leſſneſs, before a hand is put to, to work the delivery. This is not the manner of men, whoſe maxim is, to withſtand the beginnings, before the diſeaſe grows deſperate:

Principiis obſta: ſero medicina paratur,
Cum longa per moras invaluere mala.

But nothing is more ordinary in the conduct of the great Counſellor, than to let things go on to the utmoſt extremity, and then to take the opportunity, Deut. xxxii. 36. 'For the Lord ſhall judge his people, and repent 'himſelf for his ſervants; when he ſeeth that their 'power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left.' The chief thing in the diſpenſation was about himſelf: before he was delivered, he was dead, and buried, the ſtone ſealed, the watch ſet, he lying ſtill ſo long in the grave: and after that pattern, the greateſt deliverances his church, or any believer gets, is wrought; as in the caſe of Joſeph.

2. The Prince's friends treated like enemies, and his enemies treated like friends. Solomon obſerves it, Eccl. viii. 14. 'There is a vanity which is done upon the 'earth, that there be juſt men unto whom it happeneth 'according to the work of the wicked: again, there be 'wicked men to whom it happeneth according to the 'work of the righteous.' This is not the way of men neither, to careſs their enemies, and heap favours on them; and to pinch, and lay their hand heavy on their friends. But this is one of the Counſellor's depths of management. The ungrateful butler is at court in favour, but Joſeph in a dungeon: waters of a full cup wrung out to the ungodly, but godly Aſaph plagued every day: Herodias dancing and making merry; but John Baptiſt's head ſtruck off in a priſon.

3. The moſt unlikely inſtruments and means choſen, and the moſt promiſing laid by. This is not the way of men neither, who chuſe what bids faireſt for the purpoſe; but it is the way of the Counſellor. When the people chooſe a king, he was one that was the moſt ſtately among them; but not ſo was the Counſellor's choice, 1 Sam. xvi. 7. Cain was rejected and Abel accepted. Sarah, who had no procreative faculty, is choſen, when waſted and worn with age, to be the mother of the ſeed promiſed to Abraham; and not to Hager, who was in the bloom of youth. So Mary eſpouſed to a carpenter, and none of the ladies of Judea, was pitched upon to be the mother of our Lord. He choſe his apoſtles from among fiſhermen generally, not from among the learned men of the age; Paul only excepted.

4. Things brought about by means in their own nature, and in the eyes of men quite contrary to the deſign. Neither is this the manner of men; but it is his. The blind man is cured with clay laid on his eyes. Joſeph is advanced by means of his being ſold as a ſlave, and put into the dungeon. The wheel of providence that ſeems to drive away from the deſign, doth often but take an unknown road to it.

Uſe 1. Let us judge nothing before the time, nor be haſty in our concluſions on the conduct of providence. It will but proclaim our raſhneſs and folly, and we will be forced at length to retract our cenſures, Pſal. cxvi. 11, 12. 'I ſaid in my haſte, All men are liars.' His method of management is often what we cannot rightly judge of till we ſee the end, James v. 11. Behold, we count them happy which endure. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and have ſeen the end of the Lord: that the Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy.

2. Let us beware of penning up the great Counſellor to our known roads. Hence God's people often torment themſelves in vain, thinking, that, becauſe they cannot ſee him in all the roads within their view, he is not coming to them at all. In the mean time he may be making ſpeed towards them, though in a darned road, where they look not for him as in the conduct of Jeſus towards the diſciples, Matth. xiv. 25, 26, 27. 'And in the fourth watch of the night, Jeſus went unto them walking on the ſea. And when the diſciples 'ſaw him walking on the ſea, they were troubled, ſaying, It is a ſpirit; and they cried out for fear. But 'ſtraightway Jeſus ſpake unto them, ſaying, Be of good 'chear, it is I, be not afraid.' There are many methods of deliverance known to the Counſellor, that fall not within the compaſs of our narrow view; and when we are ſet on them, we know not whither they do lead, Iſa. xlii. 16. And I will bring the blind by a way that they know not, I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkneſs light before them, and crooked things ſtraight. Theſe things will I do unto them, and not forſake them.

3. See here the neceſſity of acquaintance with ſcriptures, and of faith, 2 Pet. i. 19. 'We have alſo a more 'ſure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye 'take heed, as unto a light that ſhineth in a dark place, 'until the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your 'hearts.' There the myſteries of the kingdom are unfolded, and by faith the beauty of them is perceived. Thoſe who are ſtrangers to the book of the word, cannot miſs to blunder in the book of providence to their own ſouls hurt; and unbelief of the word makes beautiful pieces of providence look very odd; for it fixes mens eyes, as if one ſhould ſtare on the wrong ſide of arras hanging, having no power to turn up the right ſide of them, Pſal. lxxiii. 16, 17. When I thought to know this, it was too painful for me. Until I went into the ſanctuary of God, then underſtood I their end.

Fifthly, He does nothing without a becoming reaſon. There is not one random ſtroke in the whole of the conduct of providence, Eph. i. 11. 'In whom alſo we 'have obtained an inheritance, being predeſtinated according to the purpoſe of him, who worketh all things 'after the counſel of his own will.' The red and black horſes came out between the mountains of braſs, as well as the reſt, Zech. vi. 1. 2. and every event is written in the ſealed book, Rev. v. There is a reaſon for every diſpenſation; and it is a reaſon that is good and valid. This appears, if ye conſider, that,

1. His infinite wiſdom ſees all things at once perfectly, Pſal. cxlvii. 5. 'His underſtanding is infinite.' The fitneſs of a means for compaſſing an end, cannot be hid to him, as it is often unto men: and he cannot be liable to miſtake in that matter; though men through their weakneſs as often pitch on means unfit as fit, Ezek. i. 18. and x. 12. Therefore he does all fitly and reaſonably, ſince he is withal infinitely good.

2. Even thoſe things which ſometimes cannot be diſcerned to have a fitneſs in them for any good purpoſe, do in end appear beautiful; thoſe that appear confuſed at firſt, when done out appear orderly: ſo that in end his people are made to ſay, He has done all things well. So was the diſpenſation anent Joſeph, Gen. l. 20. But as for you, ye thought evil againſt me; but God meant it unto good, to bring to paſs, as it is this day, to ſave much people alive. All of them, whatever compaſſes they make, do by virtue of the promiſe concenter in God's glory and his people's good, Rom. viii. 28. and ix. 22. 23.

Thus are the myſterious ſteps of providence before named, all managed, and may be accounted for.

1. Things are let go on to the utmoſt point of hopeleſſneſs, that the power of God may appear the more in bringing about the delivery, and that it may be the more ſignal mercy to his people, and fill them the more with joy and wonder, John xi. 14, 15. The Lord left his people in Babylon, till they were like dry bones lying about the graves; why? ſee Ezek. xxxvii. 13. 'And ye 'ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened 'your graves, O my people, and brought you up out 'of your graves.' Pſal. cxxvi. 1. 4. When the Lord turned again the captivity of Zion, we were like them that dream. Turn again our captivity, O Lord, as the ſtreams in the ſouth. Deliverance is ſweet at any time; but the more hopeleſs, the more ſweet and ſurpriſing is it when it comes.

2. By treating his friends with afflictions and trials, he pours contempt on the world, and all its honour, wealth, and eaſe; ſhewing to all thereby, that thoſe things which carnal men ſet their hearts on, are ſuch things as he hath no value for; elſe he would never diſpoſe of them at the rate he does. Thereby he invites his enemies to repentance, and renders them inexcuſable if they be not gained thereby, Rom. ii. 4. And he tries the faith, love, and patience of his own, and thereby lays up for them a greater weight of glory, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

3. He chooſeth the moſt unlikely inſtruments and means to accompliſh his purpoſes, that he may ſtain the pride of all glory, Iſa. xxiii. 9. that all may be referred to himſelf as the firſt cauſe and laſt end of all things, which is the reaſonable order, 1 Cor. i. 31. Therefore he put the treaſure in earthen veſſels, 2 Cor. iv. 7. and for the ſame reaſon, not in the fineſt, but the coarſeſt of the ſort.

4. He works by contrary means, that he may ſhew himſelf to be above means, and to have them at his beck; and to ſurpriſe his people the more ſweetly with the unlooked-for effect of them. The character of divine power is the more deeply engraven on the effect, that the means of themſelves are not of that tendency.

Uſe 1. Then all that God does, is well done. There is nothing amiſs in it, Deut. xxxii. 4. in the blackeſt diſpenſation there is a line of purity. The ſmoking oven is joined with a burning lamp, Gen. xv. 17. Compare Iſa. lxii. 1. In the whole fabric of providence towards the children of men, there is nothing awry, but every thing lies ſtraight to its end.

2. When ye cannot find out the reaſon, a becoming reaſon of ſome diſpenſation towards the church or yourſelves; yet believe that it is not without a becoming reaſon, and be ſatisfied in your minds that it is well done, becauſe the Counſellor has done it. When you put a ſtraight ſtick in the water, it appears to your eyes to be crooked; yet you do not think or believe in your judgment that it is really crooked. That appearance is owing to your eye ſight, not to the ſtick itſelf, which remains ſtraight. So it is with us oft-times in reſpect of the diſpenſations of providence. But let faith correct the errors of ſenſe in this matter, Jer. xii. 1.

3. Wait ye, and the reaſon of the moſt myſterious diſpenſation will appear in a clear light at length. There is a promiſe for it, John xiii. 7. What I do, thou knoweſt not now; but thou ſhalt know hereafter. Since the Counſellor does nothing without a reaſon, he will for his own honour ſatisfy all his friends with it, and ſilence his enemies for ever: and thereby he will bountifully reward believing waiters, and confound unbelieving quarrellers of his conduct.

Sixthly, He manageth all with a depth of wiſdom. Counſel ſpeaks not only a reaſonable management, but a depth of wiſdom: for it is to things of the greateſt weight and difficulty that counſellors are required, Prov. xx. 5. 'Counſel in the heart of man is like deep water: but a man of underſtanding will draw it out.' Hereof take the following evidences.

Evidence 1. His compaſſing a great variety of ends by one and the ſame means, and all theſe deſigned. What a vaſt variety of ends did he compaſs by Joſeph's being ſold into Egypt? Hereby Jacob was tried, the naughtineſs of his ſons diſcovered, Joſeph himſelf proved, Jacob's poſterity provided for, Chriſt was typified, way was made for the greateſt events under the Old teſtament, &c. So ſome ſuffer, and the Counſellor deſigns the good of many thereby, 2 Cor. i. 6. And whether we be afflicted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation, which is effectual in the enduring of the ſame ſufferings, which we alſo ſuffer: or whether we be comforted, it is for your conſolation and ſalvation. In mens management there may be happy undeſigned hits; but all theſe are deſigned by the infinite mind of the Counſellor.

Evid. 2. That no man can fully reach what is in the womb of providence, in the moſt open and obvious ſteps of it. He may ſee this and the other deſign in it, but ſtill there is ſomething beyond what he ſees, Pſal. xcii. 5. 'O Lord how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.' Sober-minded men of learning will own, that they cannot have a full and comprehenſive notion of the leaſt inſect: they know not but the Creator may have put in it ſome quality which they cannot diſcern. And ſober minded Chriſtians will own the ſame in the moſt obvious ſteps of providence, Rom. xi. 33. 'O the depth of the riches, both of the wiſdom and knowledge of God! how unſearchable are his judgments, and his ways paſt finding out!'

Evid. 3. The greateſt variety of deſigns in a diſpenſation is guarded on every ſide by the wiſdom of the Counſellor, that one ſhall not overthrow, nor interfere with another. Man's wiſdom cannot prevent, that where they have many irons in the fire together, ſome of them muſt cool, while others of them are working: but every the leaſt deſign of the Counſellor muſt take by his wiſe management, Iſa. xlvi. 10. 'My counſel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure.' See Joel ii. 7, 8. 'They ſhall run like mighty men, they ſhall climb the wall like men of war, and they ſhall march every one on his ways, and they ſhall not break their ranks, neither ſhall one thruſt another, they ſhall walk every one in his path; and when they fall upon the ſword, they ſhall not be wounded.' For the wheels are full of eyes round about.

Evid. 4. His bringing the greateſt of things out of the ſmalleſt beginnings. O how often does the Counſellor, in the depth of his wiſdom, rear up golden pillars on leaden baſes, and make the cloud like a man's hand at firſt, cover the whole face of the heavens? Thus he manages in the kingdom of nature: for an inſtance of which, man needs not go without himſelf; but conſider what a minute thing it is from which this body of his, growing to ſuch a bulk, in ſuch comely proportion, with ſuch a variety of organs, doth take its riſe, Pſal. cxxxix. 14. I will praiſe thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvellous are thy works, and that my ſoul knoweth right well.' In the kingdom of grace; in its beginning in a ſoul, and in the world, it is as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, Matth. xiii. 31. So Pſal. lxxii. 16. 'There ſhall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains; the fruit thereof ſhall ſhake like Lebanon, and they of the city ſhall flouriſh like graſs of the earth.' How long were the beginnings of that kingdom which has now filled the earth? The ſtone is become a great mountain, filling the earth, Dan. ii. 35.

Evid. 5. His making the moſt weighty and ſurpriſing turns in matters, upon the ſmalleſt of events. If we trace the turn the affairs of the church took in Mordecai's days, to the overthrowing of Haman's deſperate plot, to the firſt ſpring of it; we will find it was a vapour that had got up into Ahaſuerus's head that he could not ſleep, Eſth. vi. 1. In the ſmalleſt of things God is very great. He that hangs the earth upon nothing, often makes a very minute circumſtance to be the hinge on which great things turn, 2 Kings iii. 23.

Evid. 6. His counteracting ſucceſsfully the united force of devils and men, in all ages ſet for the overthrow of his kingdom, Prov. xxi. 30. There is no wiſdom, nor underſtanding, nor counſel againſt the Lord. The ſubjects of Chriſt's kingdom are weak, and eaſily beguiled; Satan is moſt ſubtle, watchful, and inceſſant in his acting againſt them; the war has been carried on by hell againſt them through all ages; the generality of the world is on Satan's ſide: often the feet of the ſaints are almoſt ſlipt; yet the church is preſerved, not one of Chriſt's kindly ſubjects loſt. This proclaims aloud the depth of wiſdom in her King, Micah iv. 9. See Gen. iii. 15.

Evid. 7. laſtly, His outſhooting the devil in his own bow, and bringing good out of evil, Phil. i. 12. The malice of hell never appeared more, than in the ſufferings Chriſt himſelf was put to: yet out of theſe was the ſalvation of an elect world brought, and theſe were they that ſhook the kingdom of Satan to the foundations. The very temptations and falls of the ſaints are over-ruled to ſome advantage, Rom. viii. 28.

Uſe 1. Then whatſoever he doth, is not only well done, but beſt done, Eccleſ. iii. 14. If thou art out of Chriſt, whatever thou meeteſt with in the providence of God, it is that which for the time is beſt for the glory of God. If thou art in Chriſt, whatſoever thou meeteſt with, is for the time beſt for God's honour, and beſt for thee too. For all is the product of the depth of wiſdom. The reaſon of the difference is, that the believer being in God's covenant, God's honour and his good are joint intereſts ſecured by the covenant; unbelievers not ſo.

2. The believer may ſecurely truſt him to whom he has committed his ſoul, with the management of all that concerns him, Pſal. xxxvii. 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord: truſt alſo in him, and he ſhall bring it to paſs. Our anxiety ſhould be confined to our duty: to be otherwiſe anxious, as for proviſion, protection, and the like, is but the fruit of unbelief, Luke xii. 29. And ſeek not ye what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. Since God ſtands in the relation of a Father, and is infinitely wiſe, there is a complete ground for the ſecurity of faith, Matth. vi. 8. 'Your Father 'knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye aſk 'him.'

3. In the caſe of doubtful events, believe that the Counſellor will do what is beſt. This is what ye are to believe in ſuch a caſe, Pſal. lxxxv. 12. 'The Lord will give 'that which is good.' Here is the reſt of faith in caſes of a doubtful iſſue: and here one may ſecurely reſt waiting the iſſue, which the depth of wiſdom ſhall in due time bring forth. Dominus meus omnia, &c. Luther.

Seventhly, and laſtly, He is the beſt Counſellor; there is none like him. There are many counſellors; no body wants ſome: but his name is Counſellor, as if there were not another; for he is the Counſellor by way of eminency.

Here we ſhall,

1ſt, Confirm the truth of this aſſertion, That Chriſt is the beſt Counſellor.

2dly, Shew wherein he counſels ſinners.

3dly, How he gives his counſel.

Firſt, To confirm the truth of this aſſertion, That Chriſt is the beſt Counſellor, conſider,

1. He is of the Father's choice, and nomination for a Counſellor to us, 1 Cor. i. 30. 'He is made of God 'unto us wiſdom.' When the Father from eternity pitying fallen man in his ruined ſtate, was thinking on a Counſellor, that might by his wiſdom retrieve their ſinking affairs, he pitched on Jeſus Chriſt, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. I have laid help upon one that is mighty. The higheſt angel was too weak for ſuch a burden; but the Son, who was of the cabinet-council of Heaven, was the choice; and ſinners are referred to him, Matth. xvii. 5.

2. He is the ſaints choice in all ages for a Counſellor; who all with one voice ſay, Pſal. lxxiii. 24, 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I deſire beſides thee. My fleſh and my heart faileth: but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever. Men are by nature out of themſelves, and ſo will keep the guiding of themſelves in their own hands: but as ſoon as they come to themſelves, they renounce their own wiſdom, will no more believe their own eyes, but by faith chuſe him for their Counſellor.

3. He never miſſeth the point in his counſelling, Prov. xxx. 5. 'Every word of God is pure: he is a 'ſhield unto them that put their truſt in him.' The beſt of counſellors among men will miſs at a time: but infinite wiſdom is not liable to miſtake. He ſees, and ſees through all that is paſt and preſent, and thoroughly foreſees all that is to come. How can he err in his counſel?

Secondly, Wherein doth Chriſt counſel ſinners? He counſels them,

1. In their greateſt concerns, their concerns for eternity. In theſe they have leaſt ſkill; in theſe a miſtaking of their meaſures is moſt fatal: ſo his counſel reſpects theſe chiefly. And he counſels them,

(1.) To the way of peace, which they know not, Rev. iii. 18. The goſpel is Chriſt's counſel to ſinners: thereby he points them the way to the favour of God, the pardon of their ſin, the ſecuring to themſelves a right to heaven, and freedom from the wrath and curſe of God. He preſſeth and plies them to take that counſel, with the ſtrongeſt arguments.

(2.) In the way to peace and happineſs, how they being ſet on it, may keep it till they arrive at perfect happineſs, Pſal. lxxiii. 24. His clients are in a wilderneſs while in this world; and he is to be inſtead of eyes to them there. In every new emergent difficulty, they have acceſs to his counſel, what courſe to take in ſuch a temptation, dark ſtep, or caſe.

2. In their leſſer concerns, viz. the things of time. He refuſes not to be their Counſellor, in the matters of this preſent life. And,

(1.) In their matters of greater weight, he allows ſinners to ſeek his counſel; and it is their ſin that they neglect it, Joſh. ix. 14. There is an oracle to be conſulted in our temporal, as well as in our ſpiritual affairs; for the promiſe reacheth the one as well as the other, Pſal. cxii. 5. A good man——will guide his affairs with diſcretion.

(2.) In their ſmalleſt matters, Prov. iii. 6. 'In all thy 'ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy paths.' There is nothing ſo ſmall but the providence of God reaches it, even to the very hairs of the head, Matth. x. 30. and on very ſmall things great matters may depend. Things ſmall in themſelves may be very great in their conſequences; therefore we have need of a Counſellor in the leaſt.

So Chriſt is a Counſellor for ſinners in all their matters, of whatſoever kind. And it is a peculiar excellency of this Counſellor, that he can give counſel in every thing. Men conſult divines in their ſoul's caſe, phyſicians in the caſe of their body, laywers in the caſe of their eſtate, men experienced in their occupation: but Chriſt is a Counſellor in them all.

Thirdly, How doth Chriſt give his counſel?

1. He propoſeth his counſel in and by his word, Pſal. cxix. 24. Thy teſtimonies are my——counſellors. If ye would have his counſel, ye muſt go believingly to his word. That is it by which the anſwer is given to thoſe that conſult the holy oracle. And there is no caſe can happen to one, but in the word there is proper counſel for it. This is a myſtery to the formal and prophane; but the exerciſed Chriſtian knows it by experience to be true.

2. He clears it, and opens it, and confirms it by his providence, Pſal. xxxii. 8. I will inſtruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou ſhalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye. Providence taken by itſelf, without reſpect to the word, is a very uncertain light to walk by, as in Jonah's finding the ſhip going to Tarſhiſh: but when providence is conſidered in ſubordination to the word, it is of eminent uſe for diſcovering the Lord's mind in particular caſes, as in the caſe of Peter, Acts x. 17. 'Now while Peter doubted in himſelf what this 'viſion which he had ſeen ſhould mean; behold, the 'men which were ſent from Cornelius, had made in'quiry for Simon's houſe, and ſtood before the gate.' And therefore all tender Chriſtians will be ſerious obſervers of providence, Pſal. cvii. 43. 'Whoſo is wiſe, and 'will obſerve theſe things, even they ſhall underſtand 'the loving-kindneſs of the Lord.'

3. He makes it effectual by his Holy Spirit, John xvi. 13. 'When he the Spirit of truth is come, he will

'guide you into all truth.' He ſhines on the word, and on the work of providence, ſets both in a clear light, and enables as well as determines the believer to follow it. So the counſel of the great Counſellor is the light of life, John viii. 12. promiſed to all Chriſt's followers. Men following their own wiſdom and deluſive counſels, cannot expect the Spirit's efficacy; and the word and providence cannot be effectual without the Spirit; but the Spirit makes both effectual to thoſe that wait for Chriſt's counſel.

USE 1. Then take him for your Counſellor, renouncing all other. And,

1. Renounce your own wiſdom, Do not lean to your own abilities for the management of yourſelf; but know your own wiſdom to be but weakneſs and folly, Prov. iii. 5, 6. Truſt in the Lord with all thine heart, and lean not unto thine own underſtanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he ſhall direct thy paths. Fallen man loſt his ſpiritual eye-ſight, and he can ſee nothing aright in ſpirituals till he go to the Counſellor, Rev. iii. 18.; and he is apt to go wrong even in other things.

2. Renounce the counſel of the world, and ſhut your ears to it, Prov. xix. 27. 'Ceaſe, my ſon, to hear the 'inſtruction that cauſeth to err from the words of know'ledge.' Mind it is the character of a happy man, that he walks not in the counſel of the ungodly, nor ſtandeth in the way of ſinners, Pſal. i. 1.; and the character of one in a natural ſtate, Eph. ii. 2. to walk according to the courſe of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air. They who make the way of the world their rule, muſt periſh with the world.

3. Take Chriſt for your Counſellor inſtead of all other, Prov. xxiii. 26. 'My ſon, give me thine heart; 'and let thine eyes obſerve my ways.' Give up yourſelves wholly to his management; let him be your ſole Counſellor, and that for all things. You need a guide, the Father has given him to you for that end, Iſa. lv. 4. 'Behold, I have given him for a leader unto the people.' Cloſe with him as your Guide and Counſellor.

USE 2. Follow the counſel that he is giving you. Chriſt is counſelling you all in the goſpel; even thoſe that will not conſult him, and have refuſed his counſel, he is counſelling ſtill. His counſels are two.

1. He is counſelling you to believe in himſelf, John vi. 29. to come to him, to come to his market of free grace, and buy there without money or price, Rev. iii. 18. Iſa. lv. 1. to take him for a Head, and Huſband, for all.

2. To be holy; to give up with your ſinful courſes, that will ruin you; and to betake yourſelves to the way of holineſs; without which there is no ſeeing the Lord, Ezek. xviii. 31. Caſt away from you all your tranſgreſſions, whereby ye have tranſgreſſed, and make you a new heart, and a new ſpirit; for why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael? See both together, Prov. ix. 5, 6. 'Come, eat 'of my bread, (ſaith Wiſdom,) and drink of the wine 'which I have mingled. Forſake the fooliſh, and live; 'and go in the way of underſtanding.'

USE 3. laſtly, Then make uſe of Chriſt as a Counſellor, by your conſulting him daily, that ye may not walk but by his direction. And,

1. Be habitually tender in labouring to know the mind of God, as to ſin and duty, in particular caſes; and in your common, as well as in your religious affairs, Iſa. xxviii. 26.

2. Be upright and ſincere in your conſulting him, lying open to the divine determination, Jer. xlii. 20. compare chap. xli. 17.

3. Humbly entertain the divine determination though it fall to be croſs to your inclination. Do not, like Balaam, tempt God, till ye get an anſwer to your own mind, Numb. xxii.

4. Beware of going croſs to duty cleared, and rejecting God's counſel given, 1 Kings xiii.

5. laſtly, Pray much; ejaculatory, and ſecret; and carefully obſerve providences, while ye are waiting for the Lord's counſel. The light is from the Lord, if it is ſtrengthening to duty, and overpower corruptions againſt it.

CHRIST the MIGHTY GOD.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——His Name ſhall be called——The Mighty God——

These words in the Hebrew are, God Mighty One. This is the third ſyllable of the name of our Lord Redeemer; and as this name is given to him as God-man, ſo this ſyllable of it natively reſpects both. As he is God, he is the true God; as he is man, he is the Mighty One; the greateſt heroes are but weaklings to him.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt, the Prince preſented and given to us of the Father, is and ſhews himſelf to be true God, the Mighty One.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,
I. That Chriſt is the true God.
II. That the man Chriſt is the Mighty One.
III. laſtly, Apply,

I. I ſhall ſhew, that Chriſt is the true God. This appears from theſe following things.

1. That he is the true God, the ſcripture expreſsly calls him, and aſſerts him to be ſo, John i. 1. 'In the 'beginning was the Word, and the Word was God.' Acts xx. 28. Feed the church of God, which he hath purchaſed with his own blood, Rom. ix. 5. 'Of whom as con'cerning the fleſh, Chriſt came, who is over all, God 'bleſſed for ever;' the true God, 1 John v. 20. 'This 'is the true God, and eternal life;' Jehovah or Lord, Mal. iii. 1. 'The Lord whom ye ſeek, ſhall ſuddenly 'come to his temple; even the meſſenger of the co'venant.' This name is peculiar to God only, Pſal. lxxxiii. 18. That men may know, that thou whoſe name alone is Jehovah, art the Moſt high over all the earth.

2. The attributes or perfections of God, diſtinguiſhing God from all created beings, are in him, and aſcribed to him. He is eternal, or from everlaſting, Micah v. 2. independent and almighty, Rev. i. 8. every where preſent, John iii. 13. omniſcient, John xxi. 17. and unchangeable, Heb. i. 11, 12.

3. The works peculiar to God alone, are done by him, and aſcribed to him. He is the creator of all things, John i. 3. and preſerver of them in their being, Heb. i. 2, 3. He raiſeth the dead by his own power, and at his own pleaſure, John v. 21. 26. He is the Saviour of ſinners, Hoſ. i. 7. and there is no ſaviour beſides God, chap. xiii. 4. yea, whatſoever the Father doth, he doth, John v. 19.

4. Divine worſhip, which muſt be given to God only, Matth. iv. 10. is due to him: for the angels are commanded to worſhip him, Heb. i. 6. Every one is to give the ſame honour to him, as to the Father, John v. 23. They are bleſſed that truſt in him, by faith reſting on him, Pſal. ii. 12. while they are curſed that put their truſt in man, Jer. xvii. 5. He is the object of prayer, Acts xxvii. 59. and we are baptized in his name, Matth. xxviii. 19.

5. laſtly, He is equal with the Father, Phil. ii. 6. and one with him, John x. 30. Now, ſeeing God will not give his glory to another, Iſa. xlviii. 11. it follows, that though Chriſt is a diſtinct perſon, yet he is not a diſtinct God from the Father. And therefore he is, with the Father and Holy Ghoſt, the one Supreme Moſt High God.

II. I ſhall ſhew, That the man Chriſt is the Mighty One.

1*ſt*, He doth and has done works that no other could do, John xv. 24. His works proclaim him the Mighty One in all reſpects; mighty in the reach of his wiſdom, mighty in treaſures, mighty in moyen and intereſt, and mighty in battle. And there are four mighty works of Chriſt to which there is an eye in this his name.

1. His fully anſwering all the demands of the broken law, in the room of the elect, Pſal. lxxxix. 19. A work none elſe could have done; a weight none elſe could have borne; a vaſt debt none elſe could have paid, and cleared. But he did it by his birth, life, and death; and completely, ſo that he got up the diſcharge, 1 Tim. iii. 16.

2. His deſtroying of ſin, Gen. iii. 15. The whole ſin of the whole elect, he gave a dead blow to, at once upon the croſs; to the guilt and power of it; ſo that its utter deſtruction in them all was as much ſecured thereby, as Chriſt's death by his being nailed to the croſs, Rom. vi. 6. Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of ſin might be deſtroyed, that henceforth we ſhould not ſerve ſin. He is now purſuing that blow, in the converſion and ſanctification of the elect; driving out ſin by degrees from among them: he will give the laſt ſtroke at the laſt day, and then that helliſh flood ſhall be as much dried up, as it had never been.

3. His victory over death and the grave, Hoſ. xiii. 14. 'I will ranſom them from the power of the grave: 'I will redeem them from death; O death, I will be 'thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction.' Sin entering, death went out over the world a conqueror, armed with a ſting that none could pluck out. But Chriſt encountered death, and dying was the deſtruction of it, and of the grave its fellow, viz. in reſpect of all his. The victory will be complete at the laſt day, 1 Cor. xv. 26. Then the laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed, is death, Iſa. xxv. 8. Then God will ſwallow up death in victory.

4. laſtly, His victory over the devil, Gen. iii. 15. Satan conquered all mankind in Adam; but here was a man match and more for him. He engaged with the enemy as a tempter, in the wilderneſs, and he foiled him; as a roaring lion on the croſs, and overcame him, Col. ii. 15. as a violent poſſeſſor, in the hearts of the elect, from time to time; and he turns him out, out of one after another, till he ſhall not have a foot of ground in the elect world. And then he will attack him in his proper poſſeſſion, viz. the reprobate, ſtanding on the left hand of the Judge, and drive him and them away off the earth into the pit. So may we ſay, Pſal. xcviii. 1. 'O ſing unto the Lord a new ſong, for he hath done 'marvelous things; his right hand and his holy arm 'hath gotten him the victory.'

2*dly*, He hath all at his command in heaven and earth, whether created perſons or things, Matth. xxviii. 18. The man Chriſt is heir of all things, Heb. i. 2. Lord of all the works of God's hands, Pſal. viii. What a Mighty One muſt he then be?

3*dly*, laſtly, Being God as well as man, his power is infinite. Not that infinite power is ſubjected in the human nature of Chriſt; a created thing, and ſuch is his human nature, is not capable of infinite perfections. But the human nature and divine nature make but one perſon in him; and ſo he who is the man, is of infinite power.

USE 1. This ſerves to refute the damnable hereſy of thoſe who impugn the ſupreme Godhead of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. This age of apoſtaſy, having been unfruitful under the goſpel, comes naturally to queſtion the foundation-points of Chriſtianity. And ſuch is this, that overthrows all our ſalvation at once. When the Father provided a Prince for loſt ſinners to ſave them, he gave them one who was God Mighty One. None of inferior dignity could ſerve the purpoſe.

2. It ſpeaks terror to all the enemies of Chriſt, in principles or practice. Ah! ſinners, why do ye reject him for a Prince, trample on his laws? &c. Ye cannot make head againſt him, who is God Mighty One, who can cruſh you in pieces as a moth. True, he does not at every occaſion exert his power againſt the rebellious ſons of men; but pray, conſider this is the time of his grace, wherein he is waiting for your repentance: if that were over, then follows that, Luke xix. 27. But thoſe mine enemies, which would not that I ſhould reign over them, bring hither, and ſlay them before me.

3. It ſpeaks comfort to the church and every believer in their low eſtate. Whatever be your wants, he is able to ſupply them; your weakneſs, there is might enough in him; be your caſe never ſo hopeleſs, it is never without the reach of his help. Let believers learn to rejoice in their Prince, their head in whom they are complete.

4. laſtly, It ſerves to exhort all to take him for their Prince. O kiſs ye the Son preſented to you in the goſpel-offer! renounce other lords, and by faith embrace him. And therefore conſider,

(1.) His might will be for you, for your proviſion, protection, and happineſs, if ye be his.

(2.) It will be againſt you for time and eternity, if ye refuſe him.

CHRIST the EVERLASTING FATHER.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——His name ſhall be called——The Everlaſting Father——

THIS is the fourth ſyllable of Chriſt's name. Having called him a Child, a Son: a Child born, a Son given: it is ſhown here, that though he is a Son, he is a Father too; yea, though he is a Child born, he is the Father of eternity, i. e. The everlaſting Father, which plainly leads us to his divine nature.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt, the Prince preſented and given to us of the Father, is himſelf the everlaſting Father.

In handling this doctrine, I ſhall ſhew,

I. In what reſpects Chriſt is the everlaſting Father.

II. What a Father he is.

III. laſtly, Improve the ſubject.

I. In what reſpects is Chriſt the everlaſting Father?

1*ſt*, He is the Father of all things, who was from everlaſting before all. He is with his Father and Spirit one God, the common Father of all by creation, 1 Cor.

viii. 6. ‘ But to us there is but one God, the Father, ‘ of whom are all things, and we in him; and one Lord ‘ Jeſus Chriſt, by whom are all things, and we by him.’ Hence he is called the beginning of the creation of God, Rev. iii. 14. from whom all had their beginning. So he is the Father of all men more particularly, Mal. ii. 10. of their ſouls and bodies, but eſpecially of their ſouls, Heb. xii. 9. all men, yea, all creatures whatſoever, owing their being to him, as a ſon to the father. And ſo being before all creatures, himſelf is uncreated and eternal, Prov. viii. 23.

2*dly*, He is the Father of all believers, in a peculiar manner, who will be to everlaſting; and that in two reſpects.

1. As he is, with his Father and Spirit, one God, Eph. iv. 6. the one God and Father of the family of heaven, who has adopted believers for his ſons and daughters, 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. And thus we call him with the Father and Spirit, our Father, Matth. vi. 9.

2. As he is Mediator God-man, Heb. ii. 13. ‘ Behold, I, and the children which God hath given me.’ So believers are his children, his ſeed, Iſ. xliii. 10. ſtanding in a peculiar relation to him as ſuch. And of this relation there is a threefold ground.

(1.) Believers are of his fleſh and of his bones, Eph. v. 30. A plain alluſion to the woman's being formed of Adam's body; whereby it comes to paſs, that all mankind do entirely owe their original to Adam; all his poſterity being born of a woman who was made of him. So all believers owe their original entirely to the body of Chriſt, caſt into the ſleep of death on the croſs, Rom. vii. 4. ‘ Ye are become dead to the law by the body of ‘ Chriſt, that ye ſhould be married to another, even to ‘ him who is raiſed from the dead.’ Iſa. liii. 10. ‘ When ‘ thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ‘ ſee his ſeed.’ And herein Abraham was a type of him; of whoſe body, when in a ſort dead, a ſeed innumerable as the ſtars did ſpring, Rom. iv. 18, 19. Heb. xi. 12. So from the body of Chriſt dead on the croſs and grave, ſpring the innumerable company of believers that ever were, are, or ſhall be, John xii. 24. 32. ‘ Verily verily I ſay unto you, Except a corn of wheat ‘ fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone: but if ‘ it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. And I, if I be ‘ lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.’

(2.) They are begotten of him into their new life and nature, which they have as believers, Deut xxxii. 6. 18. The ſeed is the word of the goſpel, James i. 18. that incorruptible ſeed, 1 Pet. i. 23. quickened by his Spirit, John vi. 36. whereby being made to believe, and ſo united to Chriſt, they are made new creatures, Eph. i. 13. 2 Cor. v. 17. So that as they owe the purchaſe of their gracious being to his merit, they owe their actual gracious being to his Spirit, both wholly.

(3.) They do in a particular manner bear, and were appointed to bear Chriſt's image, as children of that Father, Rom. viii. 29. Believers bear not only the image of God, but the image of Chriſt. There is a difference betwixt theſe two. The latter implies all that the former does; but it takes in more alſo. There are two parts of it.

1. Conformity to Chriſt in his holineſs. And in this reſpect believers are like him, as the wax impreſſed with the ſeal bears the like figure, Eph. i. 13. John i. 16. And here is the image of God, which all believers do bear, and which is a part of the image of Chriſt. This image of God believers have not at the firſt hand, as Adam had it; but at the ſecond hand, viz. from Chriſt; as Adam's children would have had it from him, if he had ſtood, and as we now actually have Satan's image, impreſſed by Satan at the fall on Adam, and by Adam communicated to us. So God being to reſtore his image to fallen man, firſt impreſſed it on the man Chriſt, that from him it might be communicated to believers in him. The man Chriſt was made like God, as a ſon is like a father; and believers are made like the man Chriſt. On the man Chriſt that image was impreſſed, and from him it is expreſſed on us, and thence called Chriſt's image.

That is, God making the man Chriſt the ſecond Adam, made him after his own image, in knowledge, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, with dominion over the creatures. So believers being created again in Chriſt, he communicates to them of that knowledge, righteouſneſs, &c. which image of Chriſt is begun now, will be perfected after in all believers. All this is clear from 1 Cor. xv. 49. ‘ As we have borne the image of the ‘ earthly, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly.’ Rom. viii. 29. ‘ For whom he did foreknow, he alſo ‘ did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his ‘ Son.’ Hence believers are ſaid to be created in Chriſt, Eph. ii. 10. As Eve was made in the image of God, being made in the image of Adam, Gen. ii. 18. ſo the church is made in the image of Chriſt.

2. Conformity to Chriſt in his ſufferings. This is it that is particularly aimed at, Rom. viii. 29. compared with ver. 28. Hence believers are ſaid to be partakers of the ſufferings of Chriſt, 1 Pet. iv. 13. and their ſufferings are called his, 2 Cor. i. 5. In his ſufferings he gave us an example to follow, 1 Pet. ii. 21. What can be more natural than that the members of a ſuffering head be ſuffering members? that the followers of a crucified Chriſt bear the croſs after him?

This conformity lies in three things; for the wicked ſuffer too.

(1.) Believers ſufferings are deſtructive of ſin, Iſa. xxvii. 9. By this therefore ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſin. The more Chriſt ſuffered, the more the works of the devil were brought to ruin. The man who by his ſufferings is made more holy, more looſed from the world, more preſſing after God in Chriſt, is conformed to Chriſt in his ſufferings. Though indeed the progreſs may not be ſenſible ſometimes, more than that of the ſun in the firmament, or a tree in the earth.

(2.) Believers welcome their ſufferings on that account, as they tend to the ruin of ſin; as the ſick man does a bitter drug for the ſake of health, Matth. xvi. 24, 25. It is true, they may have their fits of impatience under the rod, and may be deſirous to be free; but they will turn towards a reſignation. Our Lord Jeſus, who never in the leaſt murmured, ſaid, Matth. xxvi. 39. O my Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me: nevertheleſs, not as I will, but as thou wilt.

(3.) Believers ſufferings will have a happy and glorious iſſue. As Chriſt went to the crown by the croſs, ſo will they, 1 Tim. ii. 12. While the ſufferings of others will end in eternal ſuffering, their preſent ſufferings will end in glory: their longeſt and blackeſt night will have a bleſſed morning, an eternal day; with which their worſt nights of trouble are not to be compared, Rom. viii. 17.

Thus he is the believer's Father; and he is their everlaſting Father.

1. The relation is never interrupted from the firſt moment it is made. Once in God's family, never out of it again, for ſhorter or longer time. Their Father may frown on them, and chaſtiſe them, and hide his love from them; but he is their Father ſtill, Pſal. lxxxix. 30.——33. The adoption laſts, they are ſtill of Chriſt's body, their new nature is never loſt, and his image is never quite defaced in them.

2. The relation is never ended. He will be their Father through all eternity. Among men there is no interruption of the Fatherly relation, while the father and the ſon live; but death diſſolves it. But here death cannot diſſolve the relation, Rom. viii. 38, 39. He will be, and they will be forever: and he will be their Father for ever, and they his children, Rev. xxi. 7.

II. What a Father is Chriſt? He is a non-ſuch Father.

1. He is the moſt honourable Father; the King of kings, and Lord of lords. None whoſe eyes are opened, but they value this relation to Chriſt more than all the fading honours of the world, 1 John iii. 1. Behold, what manner of love the Father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the ſons of God! Moſes preferred it to the being called the ſon of the daughter of a king, Heb. xi. 24, 25.

2. The moſt loving and compaſſionate Father. His love has gone beyond that of fathers and mothers too, even to their ſucking children, Iſa. xlix. 15, 16. David wiſhed he had died for his rebellious ſon, but Chriſt really died for his.

3. The moſt helpful Father. Many times fathers, though they fain would, cannot help their children; but he can help his in all caſes. In the greateſt danger he is a refuge; in all wants, he has ſtore for their ſupply; if they be held at ſhort commons at any time, it is becauſe he ſees it beſt for them. In death, when neither father nor mother can help, he will, Pſal. xlviii. 14. This God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death. He is ever a preſent help.

4. The richeſt Father, that has the beſt inheritance to give his children, 1 Pet. i. 4. 'An inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for them.' He has prepared for them a better country, a glorious city, a palace for their manſion-houſe; and the richeſt treaſures; and theſe ſuch as ſhall never go from them, nor they from them.

5. The wiſeſt Father, God only wiſe. To his diſpoſal one may ſecurely reſign himſelf abſolutely. He ever ſeeks his childrens welfare: and he cannot be miſtaken in his meaſures.

6. laſtly, He has provided the beſt attendants for his children in their life. Angels are miniſtering ſpirits to them during their life, Heb. i. 14. and at their death they carry their ſouls into heaven, Luke xvi. 22. Yea, himſelf is ever with them, in life and in death.

USE. Then, ſinners, take him for your everlaſting Father. Come out of Satan's family: Come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate. Forget your father's houſe, and your own people. He is preſented and given to you the Everlaſting Father; receive him. And,

1. Ye that are fatherleſs. The Father of your fleſh is dead and gone; ye have the fewer to care for you, and ſee to your welfare. Here is an everlaſting Father for you.

2. Ye that ſee yourſelves in a helpleſs caſe like orphans in the world. Created props and pillars have been taken from you, one after another; and ye ſee yourſelves fram'd ſted. Here is a father for you, Hoſ. xiv. 3. 'In thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy.'

3. All of you will find yourſelves in ſuch a caſe as none in the world will be able to relieve. Chuſe him now for your Father, who will be everlaſting.

Motive 1. He is your Father by creation, let him be your Father by choice. He has the firſt and beſt right to you: if one is to ſerve, will he not rather chuſe to ſerve his father than another?

Mot. 2. There are bleſſed privileges of this ſtate. As,

(1.) You will have acceſs to him with holy boldneſs, Eph. iii. 12. He will be well pleaſed with your voice, Cant. ii. 14.

(2.) Special immunities and freedoms, as king's children, freedom from the law as a covenant of works; free from the curſe; free from the hurt of every thing.

(3.) Fatherly love and pity, Pſal. ciii. 13. He will diſtinguiſh between weakneſs and wickedneſs. He corrects with a fatherly reluctancy, Lam. iii. 33. He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.

(4.) Protection, Prov. xiv. 26. 'In the fear of the Lord is ſtrong confidence: and his children ſhall have a place of refuge.' Proviſion both for ſoul and body, and ſeaſonable correction.

(5.) An inheritance and portion according to the Father's quality, Rom. viii. 17. Heirs of God, and joint heirs with Chriſt.

Mot. 3. laſtly, If ye take him not for your Father, ye cannot eſcape him as your wrathful Judge.

CHRIST the Prince of Peace.

ISAIAH ix. 6.

——His name ſhall be called the——Prince of Peace.

THIS is the laſt ſyllable of the name of our glorious Redeemer. It conſiſts of two letters. (1.) He is a Prince, an eminent one, (2.) Peace. He is The Prince of peace. As the Father of eternity is the everlaſting Father; ſo the Prince of peace is the peaceful Prince.

DOCT. Jeſus Chriſt preſented and given to us of the Father, is the peaceful Prince.

Of Chriſt's principality we have already ſpoken; we are now to conſider him as the peaceful Prince. And in proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall only ſhew, in what reſpects Chriſt is the peaceful Prince; and then make ſome practical improvement.

In what reſpects is Chriſt the peaceful Prince? And, Firſt, More generally, we take it up in theſe three particulars. He is the peaceful Prince,

1. In reſpect of diſpoſition. He is a Prince of the moſt peaceable diſpoſition, Matth. xi. 29. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart. Peace is woven into his nature, though he is the mighty One, who is of ſuch power as to frown a ſinner to deſtruction; yet his great power is tempered with the greateſt meekneſs and peacefulneſs. The prince of this world is the roaring lion; the Prince of heaven, the Lamb, John i. 29. even on his throne, Rev. v. 6.

2. In reſpect of action and operation. Peace is his work he purſued all along, and doth ſtill purſue, Eph. ii. 14. 'For he is our peace.' He is the great Peacemaker. Adam's ſin and the ſin of his poſterity ſet all at red war, and kept them ſo, but Chriſt the ſecond Adam travels for peace. Bleſſed are the peace makers, and he is bleſſed for ever on his peace-making, Phil. ii. 8, 9.

3. In reſpect of the ſtate of his kingdom, Rom. xiv. 17. 'The kingdom of God is——peace.' Peace in the language of the Holy Ghoſt in the Old Teſtament is proſperity; ſo a peaceful Prince is a proſperous one. Thus Solomon was a type of him, who had a reign of the greateſt peace and proſperity, Pſal. lxxii. 7. His ſubjects may enjoy peace, whoever want it.

Secondly, more particularly. And,

Secondly, More particularly. And,

1ſt, He is the peaceful Prince, peaceful of diſpoſition, in the following reſpects.

1. He bears long with his enemies, he is long-ſuffering, 2 Pet. iii. 9. Many calls he gives them which they neglect; but he calls them ſtill: many affronts they do to him, yet his deſerved wrath is held in: and ſtill he waits, if ſo be they may be brought to repentance, Rom. iii. 4. There muſt be a mighty inclination to peace where it is ſo.

2. He bears much at the hands of his friends, but never caſts them off, John xiii. 2. O the weakneſs, witleſſneſs, and folly that hangs about them! O the ingratitude, untenderneſs, and backſlidings they fall into! They reflect diſhonour many times on him by their way; but they experience him to be the Prince of peace, Pſal. lxxviii. 38.

3. He is eaſy of acceſs, for poor ſinners. The worſt of ſinners may have acceſs to him, if they will, John vi. 37. ‘Him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe caſt out.’ Papiſts make mediators to him: but there needs none to him; whoever comes to him, is welcome. And there needs none to God but him. Whatever is their buſineſs in the court of heaven, he will readily do it for them.

4. He is ready to forgive, Pſal. lxxxvi. 5. His offending friends are readily pardoned, and reſtored to wonted favour: his rebellious enemies are readily pardoned on their ſubmiſſion, and received into the number of his friends. His peacefulneſs is ſuch, that peace is his delight.

5. He is very familiar with his true ſubjects. He treats all his ſervants, not as ſervants, but as friends; and communicates to them his ſecrets, John xv. 15. ‘Henceforth I call you not ſervants; for the ſervant knoweth not what his lord doth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my father, I have made known unto you.’ Love and good will ſhines forth in his countenance.

6. The afflicting of his people, is as it were againſt the grain with him, Lam. iii. 33. He doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. There is a neceſſity for it, for which he is obliged to do it, 1 Pet. i. 6. ‘Wherein ye greatly rejoice, though now for a ſeaſon (if need be) ye are in heavineſs through manifold temptations.’ The apoſtle diſtinguiſheth between mens correcting and his, in Heb. xii. 10. They verily for a few days chaſtened us, after their own pleaſure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holineſs. And in it he carries along the pity of a father, Pſal. ciii. 13, 14. and ſo is afflicted in their affliction, Iſ. lxiii. 9.

7. laſtly, He bore his own ſufferings with the utmoſt peaceableneſs, meekneſs and patience. The angels ſang at his birth, Peace on earth: and the earth never ſaw ſuch a pattern of peace. In his life, which was a continued ſuffering, he never ſhewed the leaſt diſcompoſure. In his death he prayed for his enemies.

2dly, He is the peaceful prince, peaceful in action and operation. He acted for peace, as never another did. He brought about ſuch peace as never had been known, if he had not taken it in hand. And here we may conſider,

1. What peace is effected by this Prince of Peace.

(1.) Peace with God, Iſa. liii. 5 The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him. Sinners were at war with God, and God with them; and there could be no peace betwixt the parties, till the Prince of peace turned to be mediator of the peace. The war went on, ſinners doing as they could againſt God, and God in a ſtate of war with the ſinner, blocking up all commerce with heaven of a ſaving ſort, &c. But he ſteps in, lays hands on both, and makes up the peace.

(2.) Peace among men. Mens peace with God being loſt, the peace among themſelves was broken too. See the caſe of mankind by nature in this point, Tit. iii. 3. ‘For we ourſelves alſo were ſometimes fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.’ But Chriſt brings them together again in him, to love and charity one to another, Iſ. xi. 6. And wherever he makes peace with God for a man, he implants love to men in that man's heart. Particularly, he made peace between Jews and Gentiles, Eph. ii. 14.

(3.) Peace within men, peace of conſcience, Rom. xiv. 17. The kingdom of God is righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt. Sin by itſelf breaks the peace within one's own breaſt. The guilt of it is like a thorn in the fleſh, that till it be plucked out, ceaſes not to gall; the reign of it is like a tyrant in the houſe, that inſlaves, and keeps in diſturbance all therein. Chriſt the Prince of peace by his blood and Spirit, only can reſtore the true peace within.

2. What is his work about the peace, that three-fold peace?

(1.) He purchaſed it by his precious blood, Eph. ii. 14, 15. There is a peace the wicked have, that is a ſtolen and uſurped peace, known by this mark, that it is a peace in ſin, James iii. 17. But the peace of the Prince of peace is a dear bought peace. It coſt him to be denied to his own peace, and ſwim through a red ſea of ſuffering for it, Iſa. liii. 5. The chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him.

(2.) He makes the peace by his own efficacy. The covenant of grace is the covenant of peace, and he is the Mediator of it. He travels betwixt God and the rebel ſinner, till the reconciliation is made. He does by his Spirit bring the ſinner into the covenant of peace, and by his interceſſion obtains peace with God for him. He by the ſame Spirit unites men to himſelf by faith, and to one another in love. And by his blood ſprinkled on the ſoul, he removes the guilt of ſin, and plucks out the thorn; and by his ſanctifying Spirit breaks the power of turbulent luſts, and ſo he creates peace, Iſa. lvii. 19.

(3.) He maintains the peace made, Iſa. xxvi. 3. Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whoſe mind is ſtayed on thee: becauſe he truſteth in thee. He is the believer's reſident at the court of heaven, that takes up emergent differences, and hinders matters to come to a total rupture betwixt God and them any more. And it is by the efficacy of his blood and Spirit that peace within men and love among men who are his, are continued.

(4.) He reſtores the peace when at any time it is brangled, Iſa. lvii. 18. I have ſeen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him alſo, and reſtore comforts unto him, and to his mourners. While believers are in this world they are upon a ſea; and in that ſea they often meet with ſtorms. Sometimes the ſtorm blows from above, ſometimes from without, ſometimes from within; ſometimes fightings without, and fears within; yea ſometimes all three blow together. But the Prince of peace again clears the ſky above, Job xxxiii. 23, 24. He ‘ſtills the tumult of the people,’ Pſal. lxv. 7. and quells all diſturbance within, Iſa. lvii 19.

(5.) laſtly, He perfects the peace. It is begun now, but he will not leave it imperfect, Pſal. cxxxviii. 8. ‘The Lord will perfect that which concerneth me.’ He began Iſrael's peace in bringing them out of Egypt, and perfected it in bringing them to Canaan: ſo he begins his people's peace in their converſion, and perfects it in glorification. Their peace now is liable to a great mixture of diſturbance: but he will render it perfect at length, without the leaſt trouble, Rev. xxi. 4.

3dly, He is the peaceful Prince, in the peaceful ſtate of his kingdom, in the proſperity attending it. He is the true Solomon (Peaceful;) and no king of Iſrael had ſuch a peaceable and proſperous reign as Solomon; that his kingdom might be a type of Chriſt's, the Prince of peace, as David's was a type of it in the wars thereof. And,

1. Every one of his ſubjects is, by his wiſe management, put in a ſtate of peace, Micah iv. 4. They ſhall ſit every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, and none

ſhall make them afraid. He has procured them peace with God, among themſelves, and within themſelves: what then ſhould diſcompoſe them? It is true, in the world they muſt have tribulation, but in their prince they have peace to balance that, John xvi. 33. Having a good God, communion with good people, and a good conſcience; they may, in peace, bear through all the troubles of a preſent evil world.

2. The peace of his kingdom is the fruit of war, and victory in that war. What made Solomon's reign ſo peaceable, was David's wars and victories. Our Lord Chriſt was a man of war; he fought and overcame ſin, death, and the devil; and the peace of his kingdom now, is the fruit of that. The wicked's peace is the fruit of a conqueſt, like that of Iſſachar, who ſaw that reſt was good, and the land that it was pleaſant; and bowed his ſhoulder to bear, and became a ſervant unto tribute, Gen. xlix 15 and like that of the ſtrong man keeping his houſe, in which caſe all things are at peace. So their peace is merely precarious; but God's people's peace is ſure.

3. Hence in his kingdom is the greateſt wealth and abundance. There is an abundance of grace, and of the gift of righteouſneſs, which his ſubjects receive, Rom. v. 17. ſo that they are made a royal prieſthood, 1 Pet. ii. 9. The fruits of the victory over ſin, death, and Satan, are among them; they are enriched with the ſpoil of their enemies: free commerce is ſettled between heaven and them; and all that oppoſe their entrance into the heavenly Canaan, are overcome.

4. The good of his kingdom is advanced from all airths, and there is nothing but it is turned to the profit thereof, by the infinite wiſdom of the Prince, Rom. viii. 28 Go matters what way they will, his kingdom is advanced by them; his ſubjects reap benefit by them. Out of the eater is brought forth meat by our Lord Jeſus; yea, peace, order, and proſperity, out of war, by the Prince of peace. Is not that a proſperous kingdom that proſpers in all emergents?

5. Laſtly, In end the peace of his kingdom will be abſolute. Solomon's reign was more peaceable in the beginning of it, than toward the end. But Chriſt's kingdom is contrariwiſe; though indeed it will never end. But at laſt all occaſion of diſturbance from without, or within, will be utterly cut off.

USE 1. Is Jeſus Chriſt preſented and given to us the peaceful Prince, peaceful in action and operation, the procurer maker, maintainer, reſtorer, and perfecter of peace? Then,

1. Sinners in a ſtate of enmity with God, ye may have peace with God through him. There is a Mediator of peace provided for you, able and willing to make up the peace betwixt God and you. This is the good news the goſpel brings, Luke ii 14. If ye periſh in a ſtate of enmity with God, it is not becauſe ye could not, but becauſe ye would not have peace. There is nothing on heaven's part to hinder the peace, but all is ready for it on that ſide, Matth. xxii 4. Therefore,

2. Apply yourſelves to the buſineſs of making your peace with God through him, 2 Cor. v. 20. Be no more at peace with yourſelves, till ye be at peace with God through Chriſt.

Motive 1. Ye are naturally in a ſtate of enmity with God. So Adam left us all; and the breach is ſtill made wider by actual ſins, while unconverted. Ye have a real enmity againſt God, Rom. viii. 7. If ye are not ſenſible of it, your works declare it, Col. i. 21. God bears a legal enmity againſt you as rector of the world; even as a judge againſt a malefactor, whom in juſtice he muſt purſue and condemn, Pſal. vii. 11, 12, 13.

Mot. 2. While ye are at enmity with God, ye have not one faſt friend in all the creation: ſo you are never ſafe. The very beaſts, fowls, and creeping things, are your enemies, as enemies to their Creator, and are ready to diſpatch you on the leaſt ſignal from him, Hoſ. ii. 18. Job v. 22, 23. Frogs, lice, &c. were employed to plague Pharaoh and his people; and worms to devour the bloody Herod. The meat thou eateſt, and the drink thou ſwalloweſt, may be a means to choke thee, and ſend thee to the pit. The friendſhip of the world, being enmity with God, can never be faſt.

Mot. 3. Ye are not able to make your part good againſt him. When the clay ſtrives with the Potter, it is eaſy to ſee who ſhall have the better. An angry God will be a party too ſtrong for the ſtouteſt ſinner. And do ye not ſee how many, fluſhed with the world's ſmiles, forget God and themſelves, and in a moment are daſhed in pieces; and go out like the crackling of thorns under a pot? 1 Cor. x. 22. Infinite wiſdom and power are what will be too hard a match for you, Job. ix. 4. 'He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength, who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?' It is wiſdom then to yield, and make peace with one with whom we are not able to war, Luke xiv. 31, 32.

Mot. 4. Conſider what loſers ye are, while not at peace with God.

(1) Ye loſe all the advantages of commerce with heaven. When war breaks out betwixt nations, there is no more trade or commerce between them, all acceſs to that is blocked up. So you have no acceſs to import your prayers, deſires, &c. into heaven, nor to export pardons, grace, &c. therefrom.

(2) You loſe the ſap and ſoyſon of all you have in the world. There is a blaſting, withering curſe on it, Prov iii. 33 Deut. xxviii. 17. Hence it will do you no good, but evil, Prov. i. 32. The very thought, that ye are at enmity with God, is ſufficient to blaſt all your enjoyments.

(3) You loſe true peace within your own breaſt. Conſcience is not your friend, ſince ye are at enmity with God. Therefore that joy, 2 Cor i. 12. is a joy ye cannot intermeddle with. A ſleep of conſcience, which will have a fearful awakening, ye may have; but peace of conſcience ye cannot have, Iſa. lvii. 21. 'There is no peace, ſaith my God, to the wicked.'

(4) Ye will loſe your ſouls in end. That will be the iſſue of the war with heaven; and what can countervail that loſs? Matth. xvi. 26. For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? That is to loſe thyſelf, Luke ix. 25. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and loſe himſelf, or be caſt away? The ſoul is the man.

Mot. 5. The ſlighting of offered peace now, will make an eternal war againſt you, in the keeneſt manner. The peace is purchaſed by the blood of the Son of God; it is offered to you on free coſt: if ye reject it, ye pour contempt on the blood of Chriſt, and the grace of God; and while God is God, he will purſue that quarrel, in a more fiery manner than if ye had never heard of peace, Matth xi. 23, 24. 'And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, ſhall be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom in the day of judgment than for thee.' 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8, 9. 'The Lord Jeſus ſhall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the goſpel of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.' Wherefore conſider what ye do; for life and death are here ſet before you, Iſa. xxvii. 4, 5. 'Fury is not in me: who would ſet the briers and thorns againſt me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together. Or let him take hold of my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me.'

Queſt. How may we get peace with God? Anſw.

Through the mediation of Chriſt; as thoſe of Tyre and Sidon in another caſe made the king's chamberlain their friend, ſo do ye. It is through faith in his blood, Rom. iii. 25. That blood is held out to you as a covert to flee in under: and you will be wrapt up in that cover, by believing the efficacy of it to bring peace to ſinners, and to you in particular, and wholly truſting on it for your peace with God. This implies a deſire of peace with God, and a willingneſs to lay down your weapons.

3. Saints, ſee here how ye will get your peace maintained, reſtored, and perfected. You muſt be daily making uſe of Chriſt, his blood, interceſſion, and Spirit, for maintaining it. What time it is broken, exerciſe faith anew, for reſtoring it, Pſal. lxv 3. 'Iniquities 'prevail againſt me; as for our tranſgreſſions, thou ſhalt 'purge them away.' And hang on him for perfecting it.

Use 2. Is he the peaceful Prince, peaceful of diſpoſition? Then,

1. Whoſoever deſire to employ him for peace, ſaints or ſinners, be not frighted away from him, but come to him with holy boldneſs, as one who is a peaceful Prince, of eaſy acceſs, and ready to help: Heb. x. 22. Let us draw near with a true heart, in full aſſurance of faith. There is love and good will to wretched ſinners of mankind in his heart and in his face; and it is the work of faith to perceive it, by means of the glaſs of the word, John i. 14.

Satan and an unbelieving heart hold him out to the trembling ſinner to be an auſtere man Luke xix. 21. And this is more riſe in the world than we are aware of; it being the natural report of a guilty conſcience concerning him. And hence men are ready to ſay as Jer. ii. 25. 'There is no hope' But oppoſe to that report of him, the report of the word; according to which he is the Prince of peace, 1 John iv. 8. 'God is love.' Hang by this in all accuſations of conſcience, and believe it, Iſa. liii. 1.

2. Then reſemble him in that diſpoſition, as ever ye would prove yourſelves his ſubjects; 1 John ii. 6. 'He 'that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to 'walk, even as he walked.' Is he the peaceful Prince? be ye peaceful men, Heb. xii. 14 'Follow peace with 'all men.' He bids you learn it of him, Matth. xi. 29. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart. Nay, if ye be not men of peace ye are none of his, Iſa. xi. 9. The proud, fiery, miſchievous ſpirit that ſome are poſſeſſed with, evidence them to be none of his, Tit. iii 3.

Use 3. Is he the peaceful Prince, in the proſperous ſtate of his kingdom? Then,

1. Let his enemies, and thoſe of his church and people know, that their attempts againſt the ſame ſhall be in vain, and ſhall return on their own heads, according to that promiſe, Zech xii. 3. And in that day will I make Jeruſalem a burdenſome ſtone for all people: all that burden themſelves with it, ſhall be cut in pieces, though all the people of the earth be gathered together againſt it. There is a peace of his kingdom that they cannot reach to take away, John xiv 27. 'Peace I leave with you, 'my peace I give unto you. Let not your heart be 'troubled, neither let it be afraid.'

2 Let his friends rejoice in his peace and proſperity, by faith, Rom. xv. 13. particularly knowing, that his kingdom ſhall proſper over the belly of oppoſition, yea, that it ſhall proſper by means that threaten to overthrow it, as in the caſe of Paul's ſufferings, Phil. i. 12. that their particular trials ſhall promote their proſperity, John xv. 2. and that in him they may have peace in the midſt of trouble, John xvi. 33.

3. laſtly, Join yourſelves to this proſperous and peaceful Prince and kingdom. Great is the noiſe of wars and commotions through the nations, ſtrong confederacies on all hands a-forming. Join ye the Prince of peace in the covenant of grace; and ye ſhall have peace, though all ſhould be in red war, Pſal xlvi 1.—4.

Thus Chriſt has been directly commended to you.

(1.) Do ye believe the report that has been made of Chriſt to you from the word, or not? that he is indeed the Wonderful One, the Counſellor, the mighty God, the Everlaſting Father, the Prince of Peace? that he is preſented, yea, given to you of the Father? If ye do, I am ſure the vain world, and your luſts, will be ſunk in their value with you. If they be not, it is an evidence it is not believed, Iſa. liii. 1.

(2.) Will ye take him or not, for and inſtead of all? If ye do, let theſe go away, Luke xiv. 26. He will be your Wonderful one, your Counſellor, &c. If ye will not, be it known to you, you refuſe heaven's preſent to you, you caſt back its gift made to you; and ye muſt anſwer it.

The Unſucceſsfulneſs of the Goſpel, the Nature of the Goſpel-report, the Rarity of believing it, and the Neceſſity of divine Power in order to Faith.

Several SERMONS preached at Ettrick, in the year, 1726.

Isaiah liii. 1.

Who hath believed our report? and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

NONE ſpoke ſo much of Chriſt as this evangelical Prophet He had been ſpeaking of him in the former chapter, verſ. 13. and downward; and he was to ſpeak more of him here. But in the words now read, he makes a melancholy reflection on the cold entertainment the word met with in his own time, and would meet with in after times.

The words are a heavy complaint and lamentation. And if we conſider, 1ſt, To whom it was made, we find from parallel ſcriptures that it is made to the Lord himſelf, John xii. 38. Rom. x. 16. Lord, who hath believed our report? &c. From powerful preaching he betakes himſelf to mournful prayer, lamenting the unſucceſsfulneſs of his meſſage.

2dly, Whom it reſpects. It reſpects the hearers of the goſpel in his own time, and in after times too, John xii. 37, 38. But though he had done ſo many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him: That the ſaying of Eſaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed? The Jews to whom Chriſt himſelf preached: and both Jews and Gentiles, to whom the apoſtles preached, Rom. x. 16. No wonder than it extend to thoſe to whom miniſters now preach.

3dly, The matter of this heavy lamentation.

1. The unſucceſsfulneſs of the goſpel, and prevailing unbelief among them that heard it. Where conſider,

(1.) What the goſpel is. It is a report; a report from heaven brought by Chriſt himſelf, the apoſtles and prophets, to be believed unto ſalvation. The word ſignifies a hearing, i. e. a thing to be heard and received by faith, as a voice is received and heard by the ear. Hence is that expreſſion, the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 2.

(2.) What faith is. It is a believing that report. The word rendered believing, doth properly ſignify to truſt. So it is in the Hebrew, Who hath truſted to our report? Faith is a giving credit to the goſpel, and a truſting our ſouls to it, as on a word that cannot fail.

(3.) How rare that faith is: Who hath believed? Few, very few, have believed the report. It is brought to multitudes: but where is the man that really truſts to it, as news from heaven that may be relied on? They are but here and there one, who truſt it: the generality regard it but as idle tales.

2. The great withdrawing of the power of God from ordinances: And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? The arm of the Lord is the power of God: and this arm is ſaid to be revealed or uncovered, when it exerts itſelf in acting powerfully; as men put up their ſleeves when they are putting themſelves in order for working with the hand. And this implies three things.

(1.) That there is a neceſſity of the mighty power of God being exerted on a man, to cauſe him believe, John vi. 44. 'No man can come to me, except the father which hath ſent me draw him.' The truſting to the report of the goſpel, is ſo far from being an eaſy effort of imagination, that it is beyond the power of nature.

(2.) That few, very few, felt this power. To whom? Heb. Upon whom is the arm of the Lord revealed? The goſpel was but an empty ſound to the moſt part; they found not the power of the Spirit coming along with it.

(3.) That hence ſo very few believed. Where there is no feeling of that power, there is no believing. Firſt the arm of the Lord muſt draw, ere the ſinner can come: therefore theſe two are of equal latitude, Eph. i. 19. What is the exceeding greatneſs of his power to us-ward, who believe, according to the working of his mighty power. Four doctrines are deducible from the words.

DOCT. I. The little ſucceſs of the goſpel, and great rarity of divine power coming along with goſpel ordinances, will be matter of heavy lamentation to the godly, and particularly to godly miniſters.

DOCT. II. The goſpel is a report from heaven, to be believed and truſted to for ſalvation.

DOCT. III. Though many hear, yet few believe or truſt to the report of the goſpel.

DOCT. IV. There is no true believing or truſting to the report of the goſpel, but what is the effect of the working of a divine power on the ſoul for that end.

We ſhall handle each of theſe doctrines in order.

DOCT. I. The little ſucceſs of the goſpel, and great rarity of divine power coming along with goſpel-ordinances, will be matter of heavy lamentation to the godly, and particularly to godly miniſters.

In diſcourſing this doctrine I ſhall ſhew,

I. What is that ſucceſs which the goſpel ſometimes hath.

II. What is that divine power which ſometimes comes along with goſpel ordinances.

III. Give the reaſons of the doctrine.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. What is that ſucceſs which the goſpel ſometimes hath? We may take it up in theſe two generals. It is ſucceſsful.

1. When ſinners are thereby brought to faith in Chriſt, Rom. i. 17. The goſpel is a good report of Chriſt the bridegroom of ſouls, ſpread in the world: and then the end of it is gained, when the ſinner is brought to behold him ſo altogether lovely, that he gives up with all his former lovers, and is married to him, to be his only, wholly, and for ever, Pſal. lxxiii. 25.

2. When they are thereby brought to holineſs of life; when they are transformed into the image of him in whom they have believed, 2 Cor. iii. 18. It is a holy goſpel, and true believers of it are caſt into the mould of it, Rom. vi. 17. and being united to Chriſt, put on Chriſt, Gal. iii. 27. walking as perſonating him, 1 John ii. 6. Theſe things are ſo excellent, that it is very lamentable there is ſo little of them among men.

II. What is that divine power which ſometimes comes along with goſpel-ordinances? There is,

1. A heart and life diſcovering power, 1 Cor. xiv. 24, 25. The word comes, and the Lord's arm comes with it, and opens the volume of a man's heart and life: and it is as if the preacher were reading the ſecret hiſtory of a man's thoughts and actions, Heb. iv. 12. 'For the word of God is quick and powerful, and ſharper than any two-edged ſword, piercing even to the dividing aſunder of ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.' This is called the watchman's finding the ſpouſe, Cant. iii. 3.

2. A ſharp convincing power, whereby the ſinner does not only ſee his ſin, but ſees the ill and danger of it, and is touched to the heart with it, Acts xxiv. 25. That is the finger of God at the man's heart, according to John xvi. 7, 8. 'When the Spirit is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment. So it was with theſe, Acts ii. 37. 'They were pricked in their heart, and ſaid men and brethren, what ſhall we do? And O, it is promiſing when men are ſent home with a breaſt full of convictions, from the word. But if that arm of the Lord be not revealed, one will be very eaſy, come the word never ſo cloſe to his caſe.

3. A drawing and converting power, John xii. 32. 'And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me.' Pſal. xix. 7. 'The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the ſoul.' While the word comes, ſome ſecret power comes along, that the man is not able to reſiſt it: but the iron gate of the heart is looſed, and of its own accord opens wide, to receive the king of glory. Such a power Zaccheus felt with that word, Come down, that made his heart, which was like a ſtrong caſtle to keep out Chriſt, come as faſt down, as ever an old houſe did being undermined, Luke xix. 5. While this comes not, ſinners will not come to Chriſt, John v. 40.

4. A quickening power, Pſal. cxix. 50. 'Thy word hath quickened me.' Sometimes the ſpiritual ſenſes have all been bound up, that the ſoul could neither ſee, hear, taſte, ſmell, nor feel ſpiritually, more than it had been dead: and a word has been dropt in with ſuch a power, that it has been like the barley-cake tumbling down on the tents of Midian, or like the honey Jonathan taſted in the wood; it has cleared their eyes, unſtopped their ears, &c. Cant. vii. 9. While this is wanting, the word cannot awaken people.

5. A clearing power, reſolving doubts, removing miſtakes and darkneſs in certain particulars, whereby one is retarded in their ſpiritual courſe, Pſal. xix 7, 8. Many a time ſouls have been ſo imbarraſſed with ſome doubts or miſtakes, that they have thereby been made to go like a fettered bird, perhaps many a day and year: till at length they have got a word with ſuch power, that it has made theſe their fetters fall off, like Peter's chains when the angel gave him a touch on the ſide, Acts xii. 7. Cornelius had ſweet experience of it, Acts x. 6. 44. While the power comes not, they come and go with their chains on them.

6. A comforting power, Pſal. cxix. 49, 50. Remember thy word unto thy ſervant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me. Diſcouragement is a great load; the diſcouraged ſoul is like one going with a clog at his heels. Great preſſures of affliction are apt to diſ-courage, make the heart faint, and the hands weak, and the knees feeble: but ſometimes the word comes with ſuch power, as that it ſtays the fainting ſoul, Pſal. cxix. 92. 'Unleſs thy law had been my delight, I ſhould then 'have periſhed in mine affliction.' Sometimes ſuch a high ſpring tide of power comes with the word, that the clog drops off, and the affliction that was ſo heavy is not the weight of a feather, but the man rejoices in the Lord, and leaps like an hart, Iſa. xii. 3. For the comfort of the word has looſed all his bands, Rom. xv. 13. Heb. x. 34.

7. A ſtrengthening power, Pſal. xcvi. 6. Strength and beauty are in his ſanctuary. Sometimes a man has great temptations to conflict with, and he knows not how to ſtand before them; till he come to the ſanctuary with Aſaph, Pſal. lxxiii. 16, 17. and with Paul get a word with power, 2 Cor. xii. 7. Then he is like a giant refreſhed with wine, and in the ſtrength of that word goes out like David againſt Goliah. The Spirit with the word blowing on the dry bones, makes them ſtand on their feet like a great army.

8. laſtly, A ſoul elevating and heart raviſhing power, Luke xxiv. 32. Did not our heart burn within us, while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the ſcriptures? Sometimes ſuch a power has come along with the word, as if in heaven, not a window only but a door had been opened: that the man has made no doubt to ſay, Gen xxviii. 16, 17. 'Surely the Lord is 'in this place.——This is none other but the houſe 'of God, and this is the gate of heaven.' And Chriſt has come ſo near him, as he could tell what was the ſmell of his garments, Pſal. xlv. 8. and the ſermon or communion place would have been gladly embraced as the dying place, Luke ii. 29.

III. The third thing is, The reaſons of the point. And, 1*ſt*, It muſt be matter of lamentation to the godly, in general. For,

1. The honour of Chriſt is thereby overclouded. He is not honoured, but highly diſhonoured by ſinners diſbelieving the report of him, not receiving him in the goſpel offer, John viii. 49. Hence it was a part of Chriſt's humiliation, that his report was not believed out of his own mouth, John xii. 37, 38. and after his exaltation his apoſtles were to do greater works than he, John xiv. 12. And when he goes forth in the goſpel conquering, a crown is ſaid to be given him, Rev. vi. 2. But that crown is obſcured in a time of the goſpel's unſucceſsfulneſs. And Chriſt's honour will be dear to the godly, whatever it be to others; and the affronts done him by unbelievers will lie near their hearts.

2. The glory of the glorious goſpel is thereby vailed. The goſpel is in itſelf glorious, 2 Cor. iv. 4. 1 Tim. i. 11. It is a radiant jewel, of greater worth than all the glory of the world; but the glory of it is hid, while it is not believed, and divine power does not accompany it: therefore having free courſe, it is ſaid to be glorified, 2 Theſſ. iii. 1. And this cannot but affect the godly, who reliſh the goſpel.

3. Souls are thereby loſt, while ſalvation is come to their door. The goſpel brings ſalvation; but none can ſhare of it where it is not believed, Heb. iv. 2. What a lamentable ſight is it to ſee men ſlighting and deſpiſing their own mercy; neglecting the great ſalvation, continuing filthy ſtill under means of cleanſing, growing worſe by the means of grace doing them no good; and, finally, aggravating their own condemnation? John xv. 22.

4. The godly themſelves ſuffer loſs. The thronger Chriſt's family is, the better thriven are the children; and contrariwiſe. The calling of the Jews will be as life from the dead, Rom. xi. 15. The ſaints in the worſt of times will always get as much as will keep in their life, Micah ii. 7. But there is a difference between fend and fare well. If there were more converting, there would be more confirming work too.

2*dly*, And particularly to godly miniſters. For,

1. Thereby their care and pains is much loſt, and in vain. To toil all night and catch nothing is a heavy taſk. Miniſters are like candles: while they give light to others, they waſte themſelves. And that is a heavy tale, Iſ. xlix. 4. I have laboured in vain, I have ſpent my ſtrength for nought, and in vain. O there is much need of faith in the work of the miniſtry! the huſbandman, ſhepherd, and tradeſman, ſees ordinarily the fruit of his labours; if it miſs at one time, it will readily proſper at another; but there is much ſpiritual ſeed ſown, where there is no viſible fruit.

2. Thereby their work is rendered more difficult and weariſome. When the arm of the Lord is revealed to carry on the work on men's ſouls and conſciences, it is made lightſome: they are then like a ſhip going with a fair wind. But when the Spirit is withdrawn, they are like the ſhip in a dead calm, that takes much ſtrength to work her, and yet ſhe comes but little ſpeed.

3. laſtly, Thereby the ſeals of the miniſtry are but ſmall. They are the ſavour of death to many, the ſavour of life to few; for the one or the other they will be to all, 2 Cor. ii. 15, 16. If they be not, by mens receiving their teſtimony, inſtruments to further their ſalvation; they will be witneſſes againſt them to aggravate their condemnation.

USE. Then let it touch our hearts, and cauſe us to lament, that there is ſo little ſucceſs of the goſpel, and ſo great a rarity of divine power coming along with ordinances at this day in the land, and among us. Of this there are ſeveral evidences.

Evidence 1. The ſlighting of goſpel ordinances that ſo much prevails. How eaſy is it for many to ſit at home and make to themſelves ſilent ſabbaths, while the Lord puts an opportunity in their hands to attend ordinances! for others, if they be but touched againſt the grain, and diſobliged, to caſt them off for good and all! a ſad evidence the goſpel has had little ſucceſs or power with them: for the experience of the power would give men a higher value for them than ſo, Pſal. lxiii. 1, 2. and lxxxiv. 1, 2, 3.

2. Little reformation of life under the diſpenſation of the goſpel. Miniſters may ſay with Jeremiah, chap. vi. 10. To whom ſhall I ſpeak and give warning, that they may hear? behold, their ear is uncircumciſed, and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach: they have no delight in it. He that was filthy, is filthy ſtill. The glaſs of the word is held before mens eyes, that they cannot but ſee their ſpots; yet do they not wipe them off. Under the goſpel of the grace of God they live ungodly lives; in the land of uprightneſs they deal unjuſtly; rebelling againſt the light.

3. Much formality in attendance on ordinances, Ezek. xxxiii. 31, 32. People ſatisfy themſelves with the work done. Few take heed how they hear. They ſeek not to be ſpiritual in the work, to have communion with God in ordinances; nor do they mourn when they obtain it not. They do not miſs the power of God in ordinances; or if they do, they can eaſily bear the want.

4. laſtly, Little of the work of converſion or ſoul-exerciſe in our day. The goſpel is the great mean of converſion, of bringing ſinners into a ſtate of grace; but converts are rare. Conviction, compunction, and humiliation, are rarely made now by the word; and rarely iſſued in kindly converſion to God. Sometime the word would have raiſed ſoul exerciſe in them that heard it, and the word again would have brought the Chriſtian's exerciſe to a happy iſſue: but alas! that is ſeldom the caſe now.

Now this may be for a lamentation, that it is ſo; that there is ſo little ſucceſs attending the diſpenſation of goſpel ordinances, and that there is a great rarity of divine power coming along with them. For,

1. This ſays, that the Lord is in a great meaſure departed from us, miniſters and people, Iſa. lxiv. 7. 'There 'is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up

‘ himſelf to take hold of thee; for thou haſt hid thy ‘ face from us, and haſt conſumed us, becauſe of our iniquities.’ We may lament, that he is become as a ſtranger in the land, Jer. xiv. 8. Ordinances are the tryſting-places where he is to be met with: and when he is ſo little found there, it is time to lament his departure. We may ſay, as 2 Kings ii. 14. ‘ Where is ‘ the Lord God of Elijah?’ We have the chair of ſtate: but where is the King himſelf? Here is the napkin and linen cloaths lying, but where is the Lord that was wrapt in them?

2. That we have ſinned away his preſence, Iſ. lix. 1, 2. Your iniquities have ſeparated between you and your God, and your ſins have bid his face from you, that he will not hear. When the glory departed to the threſhold, Ezek. x. 4. from the threſhold, verſe 18. from the midſt of the city to the mountain, chap. xi. 23. it was for the abominations done in the houſe, chap viii. Why doth he lothe our ſacrifices, refuſe to ſmell in our aſſemblies, but becauſe we have made ourſelves and them vile before him? Iſa. i. 11. to 17. Had we entertained the blowings of his Spirit when we had them, he had not left us in ſuch a dead calm.

3. That the Lord has a controverſy with us, that we are not yet convinced of, and humbled for, Hoſ. v. 15. People may be long under the Lord's withdrawings, ſo far inſenſible of the cauſes thereof, as not to be lamenting over them, 1 Sam. vii. 2. Now there is no convincing of us of the cauſes of God's controverſy. But if ever the Lord return to ordinances as heretofore, ye will ſee there will be a convincing and humbling influence, that will bring miniſters and people to their knees, taking ſhame to themſelves.

4 That wrath and heavy judgments are abiding us, come from what airth they will. Matth. iii. 10. It is not to be thought, that the contempt of the goſpel, and unfruitfulneſs under it, will get paſſed without ſome ſpecial mark of the divine indignation. When the invitations to the goſpel-feaſt prevail not, the King's armies are ſent forth to deſtroy, Matth. xxii 7. When the white flag of peace is contemned, the red flag of war is hung out.

5. That theſe judgments will be very ſore when they come, according to the meaſure of light ſinned againſt. Capernaum exalted to heaven is thruſt down to hell, Matth. xi. 23. After the white horſe, the red and black follow, Rev. vi. Never did a generation enjoy ſuch a clear light of the goſpel as the Jews in the time of our Saviour and the apoſtles, and accordingly wrath came to an extremity, to the uttermoſt, 1 Theſſ. ii. 16.

6. laſtly, That it is high time to be lamenting after the Lord, and wreſtling and ſupplicating for his return to ordinances. Stir up yourſelves therefore unto this, that it be not ſaid as Iſa lxiv. 7. There is none that calleth upon thy name, that ſtirreth up himſelf to take hold of thee. Conſider,

1. It is a ſad ſign to be unconcerned about it. It ſpeaks, (1.) Such a one to be a ſtranger to the experience of the power of the word, and the precious enjoyment of communion with God in ordinances, Pſal. lxiii. 1, 2. (2.) To be too eaſily ſatisfied in the matters of God with the huſks, the ſhadows, inſtead of the foyſon and ſubſtance. (3.) To be unacquainted with Chriſt, and none of his; ſince the withdrawing of his preſence is not heavy to him. (4.) That they could even be content Chriſt would never come again: for they that reliſh not his coming in ordinances, can never reliſh his ſecond coming.

2. Great would be the advantage of his return to ordinances. (1.) It would be well for particular hearers of the goſpel who ſhould ſhare in it themſelves. Strangers would be converted, and converts ſtrengthened. Duties would be a delight. Whereas a form of godlineſs is all that can be reached otherwiſe. (2.) It would be well for the church in general; it would cure our diviſions; all being by that means brought to acknowledge their offences, and return to the Lord, and ſo to one another in him.

Doct. II. The goſpel is a report from heaven to be believed and truſted to for ſalvation.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall conſider,

I. The goſpel as it is a report.

II. Faith as it is a truſting to this report.

III. The report of the goſpel, and the truſting to it, conjunctly.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the goſpel as it is a report. And here we ſhall view it,

1*ſt*, In the nature of a report in general.

2*dly*, In the nature of a report to be truſted to, for ſome valuable end.

Firſt, We ſhall view the goſpel in the nature of a report in general. And,

1. There is the ſubject of a report, or the thing that is reported, viz. ſome deſign, action or event, true or falſe. The ſubject of the goſpel report is, a love-deſign in God for the ſalvation of ſinners of mankind, 2 Tim. i. 9, 10. Such was the goſpel-report that was firſt made in the world, Gen. iii. 15. It is the report of an act of grace and kindneſs in God, in favours of them, whereby he has given them his Son for a Saviour, John iii. 16. Iſa. ix. 6. and eternal life in him, 1 John v. 11. The report of the event of Chriſt's dying for ſinners, and a crucified Chriſt's being ready for marriage with ſinners, Matth. xxii. 4. A ſubject of the utmoſt importance.

2. There is the place whence the report originally comes. And the place here is heaven, the boſom of the Father. Hence the goſpel is called heavenly things, John iii. 12. revealed from the boſom of the Father. The original place of a report is the place of the tranſaction, and that at ſome diſtance from where it is reported. So,

(1.) The goſpel is a report from heaven, where the deſign of love was contrived, the gift of the Son was made, and from whence he came to die for ſinners, and where he is ready to match with them. The goſpel may come from one place of the earth to another, as it did from Jeruſalem to other places of the world, Iſa. ii. 3. Luke xxiv. 47. But it came from heaven originally, Luke ii. 13, 14.

(2.) The goſpel is good news from a far country, and ſo ſhould be as acceptable as cold water to the thirſty, Prov. xxv. 25. The farther off a country is from whence a report comes, we think ourſelves the leſs concerned in it: and ſo do carnal men treat the goſpel report. Far indeed it is; but as far as it is, we muſt ſpend our eternity in it, or elſe in hell: and therefore it does moſt nearly concern us.

3. The matter of a report is ſomething unſeen to them to whom the report is made. And ſo is the matter of the goſpel-report. It is an unſeen God, John i. 18. an unſeen Saviour, 1 Pet. i. 8. and unſeen things, 2 Cor. iv. 18. that are preached unto you by the goſpel. So the goſpel is an object of faith, not of ſight, Heb. xi. 1. We receive it by hearing, not by ſeeing, Iſa. lv. 3. It is not what we credit on our eye ſight, but upon the teſtimony of another, viz. of God. Hence the carnal world are fond on ſeen objects, Pſal. iv. 6. but ſlow to believe the goſpel.

4. There is a reporter or reporters. And in this caſe the report is made by many. But,

(1.) The firſt hand reporter is an eye witneſs, viz. Jeſus Chriſt. Chriſt himſelf was the raiſer of the report of the goſpel, Heb. ii. 2. And who elſe could have been ſo? John i. 18. What he reported he ſaw, and gives us his teſtimony of the truth of it on his eye-ſight, John iii. 11. Hence he is propoſed to us as the faithful and true witneſs, Rev. iii. 14. who was from eternity privy to the whole deſign revealed to us in the goſpel.

(2.) The prophets and apoſtles, and miniſters of the goſpel. They are the ſecond hand reporters. The former had it immediately from Chriſt, the latter from them again. But none of them were eye witneſſes, but ear witneſſes properly ſpeaking. For even the apoſtles, who ſaw Chriſt with their eyes, yet owed their knowledge of the goſpel to their faith originally, though they were confirmed by what they ſaw, John i. 14. So it is determined, Pſal. lxviii. 11. 'The Lord gave the word; 'great was the company of thoſe that publiſhed it.'

5. laſtly, There is a manifeſtation of the thing by the report, to the parties to whom the report is made. So is the grace of God to poor ſinners, manifeſted to them by the goſpel, 2 Tim. i. 9, 10. It is no more kept a ſecret from them, but they are let into the knowledge of the deſign, action, and events which concern their ſalvation. The goſpel opens up and reveals the ſecret of God's grace to ſinners, with the method of communicating it, even the whole plan of ſalvation, which from eternity was hid in the breaſt of God, John i. 18. Let us view the goſpel,

Secondly, In the nature of a report to be truſted to, for ſome valuable end. And ſo it is,

1. A true and faithful report, that one may ſafely truſt, 1 Tim. i. 15. 'This is a faithful ſaying, and 'worthy of all acceptation, that Chriſt Jeſus came into 'the world to ſave ſinners.' It was originally brought from heaven by Jeſus Chriſt, Heb. ii. 2. the faithful and true witneſs, Rev. iii. 14. Many falſe reports are going in the world; and thoſe that are brought from afar, we are not in a capacity to contradict: but the truth of the goſpel has been confirmed by the greateſt evidence, particularly by the death of Chriſt, and by the experience of the believers of it in all ages.

2. An infallible report. A report may be true where there is no infallibility: but the report of the goſpel is an infallible truth, Acts i. 3. for it is the word of God that cannot lie, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. Though men bring it to you, God has put it in their mouths from his written word; and the ſpeaker is Chriſt himſelf, they are but the voice. And the Spirit of the Lord demonſtrates it to believers, as divine truth, 1 Cor. ii. 4.

3. A good and comfortable report. It is not only good in itſelf, as the report of the law's curſe is; but it is good for us. Hence it is called good or glad tidings, Luke ii. 10. As the contrivance of ſalvation is ſtated in the goſpel, it is adapted in all points to our caſe. And the convinced ſinner helped to believe, ſees it ſo; that it is a good report of God, bringing the tidings of a contrivance every way good for him.

4. laſtly, A weighty report, even of the greateſt weight as concerning man's eternal intereſt, how he may be ſaved from the wrath of God, and made happy for evermore.

II. We ſhall conſider faith as it is a truſting to this report, the report of the goſpel. And ſo it is not only divine faith, but ſaving juſtifying faith, Rom. x. 8, 9. It may be taken up in theſe two. Faith is,

1*ſt*, A truſting of the goſpel report as true. It is a believing of the doctrine of the goſpel, Acts viii. 37. Faith is the ſoul's echo to the joyful ſound. That Chriſt came to ſave ſinners is true, ſaith the goſpel: true, ſaith faith. Hence the goſpel is called a hearing in our text, and the hearing of faith, Gal. iii. 2. The voice from without entering the ear, is conceived and ſounds there: the voice of the goſpel entering the heart, is conceived and ſounds like an echo, from the heart: and that is faith, Rom. x. 9. When a word is heard that one does not believe, there is as it were a repelling it from within; and it is all one to the purpoſe of the ſpeaker, as if it were not heard at all. So unbelief repels the goſpel teſtimony, receives it not as true, 1 John v. 10. But faith receives it as true; and the ſpeaker ſo far gains his deſign. And faith truſts it as true,

1. In the general, with reſpect to the multitude whom it concerns, 1 Tim. i. 13. It is a faithful ſaying, Chriſt came to ſave ſinners. Here is the goſpel; here is faith's aſſent to it as true with reſpect to ſinners in general. It is the report of a common good, the common ſalvation for ſinners of mankind. The great body of mankind looks on it as idle tales: but faith receives it as a true report; and admires the love of God to fallen man, and not to fallen angels.

2. In particular, with reſpect to one's ſelf, 1 Tim. i. 15. This is a faithful ſaying, that Chriſt came to ſave ſinners; of whom I am the chief. Here is the application of faith, without which the report of the goſpel is not truſted as true: He came to ſave me. Faith believes there is a fulneſs in Chriſt for poor ſinners, and for one's ſelf in particular; that Chriſt and all his ſalvation is in earneſt offered to ſinners, and to one's ſelf in particular; that he is the Saviour of the world, and their Saviour in particular, John iv. 42. 'We know that this is in'deed the Chriſt, the Saviour of the world,' chap. xx. 28. 'Thomas ſaid unto him, My Lord and my God.' This is evident, if ye conſider, that the goſpel comprehends you, and every one of you, John iii. 16. 'God 'ſo loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, 'that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhould not periſh, 'but have everlaſting life.' Prov. viii. 4. Unto you, O men, I call, and my voice is to the ſons of men. If then you do not believe it with reſpect to yourſelf, if you ſhould believe it with reſpect to all the world beſides; ye diſbelieve it, ye deny credit to it, in that which is the main point for your ſalvation, 1 John v. 10, 11. You believe in that caſe no more than devils do, Mark i. 24. Nay, you do not believe ſo much as the devils do: for they cannot help believing your intereſt in the goſpel, as well as the intereſt of others; and therefore are at ſo much pains to keep you from believing it, leſt ye be ſaved: if ye had no intereſt in it, they would tell you ſo much for your torment.

Object. But where is it written in the goſpel, that Chriſt came to ſave me, or that he is my Saviour? I am ſure my name is not in it. I may believe the goſpel then, though I do not believe it to hold with reſpect to myſelf.

Anſw. Where is it written in the law that Adam ruined you? I am ſure your name is neither in the commands of the law, nor in the curſe of it either. But do you think you could indeed believe the law, without believing its commands and curſe reaching you? No; if ye believe not that, you contradict the expreſs terms of the law, Gal. iii. 10. For as many as are of the works of the law, are under the curſe: for it is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. O, but ſay ye I am comprehended in the curſe as a breaker of the law: True; but are ye not as much comprehended in the the goſpel as a ſon of Adam? Prov. viii. 4. Is not the promiſe of the goſpel in as extenſive terms, John iii. 16. as the curſe of the law?

Wherefore, let no body deceive themſelves, thinking they believe the goſpel, while they believe it not with particular application to themſelves. True faith truſts the goſpel as true, with reſpect to one's ſelf; and ſo truſts it.

1. As certain truth. It does not receive the goſpel-report only as a thing that is probable, and likely to be true. That is opinion and conjecture, not faith. Faith embraceth the goſpel as certain truth, as a thing one is ſure there is no falſhood in, John vi. 69. 'We believe, 'and are ſure that thou art that Chriſt the Son of the 'living God.' Paul was ſo much perſuaded of the truth of the goſpel, that he could declare an angel accurſed that ſhould contradict it, Gal. i. 8, 9.

2. As infallible truth, as a thing there can be no falſehood in. The reaſon of which is, That faith truſts the goſpel as the teſtimony of God himſelf that cannot lie,

1 Theſſ. ii. 13. It receives the joyful ſound as the voice of God, John iii. 33. To believe the goſpel becauſe good miniſters and good books ſay ſo, or becauſe it appears agreeable to our reaſon, is not faith, but opinion. Faith believes it becauſe God ſays ſo The tidings of the goſpel are beyond our ſight, and above our reaſon, as the myſtery of an incarnate God, an imputed righteouſneſs. &c. But becauſe we ſee the divine teſtimony for theſe things, therefore we believe them by true faith, juſt on the credit of God's word, Mark xvi. 15. Hence it appears,

1. That there is an aſſurance in the nature of faith, whereby the believing perſon is ſure of the truth of the doctrine of the goſpel, and that with reſpect to himſelf particularly, 1 Theſſ. i. 5. For our goſpel came not unto you in word only: but alſo in power, and in the Holy Ghoſt and in much aſſurance. So that whatever were his doubts of it, and carnal reaſonings againſt it, he is brought at length to aſſent thereto as moſt firm truth.

2. That there is a neceſſity of an inward illumination by the Spirit, in order to the faith of the goſpel, 1 Cor. ii. 14. 10. 'The natural man receiveth not the things of 'the Spirit of God: for they are fooliſhneſs unto him: 'neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually 'diſcerned. But God hath revealed them unto us by 'his Spirit.' The Spirit of the Lord opens the eyes, and demonſtrates the truth of the goſpel to the ſoul, verſe 4. 'My ſpeech and my preaching, was——in de'monſtration of the Spirit, and of power;' otherwiſe there is no reaching the divine faith of it, verſe 5. That your faith ſhould not ſtand in the wiſdom of men, but in the power of God. This caſts down the man's carnal reaſonings againſt it, and awes him and overcomes him into a belief of the truth, 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.

Queſt Is there no doubting then conſiſtent with the faith of the report of the goſpel? Anſw All doubting is contrary to faith, Matth. xxi. 21. But ſince faith is not perfect more than other graces, it may have a mixture of its contrary, chap. xiv 31. 'O thou of little faith 'wherefore didſt thou doubt? Howbeit, the more doubting the leſs faith; and the more faith, the leſs doubting. As long as doubting is predominant in a ſoul to be brought to Chriſt there is no faith. But the Spirit of the Lord lays in a weight of light, and the balance is caſt on the ſide of the truth of the goſpel, and the doubting is downweighed, and faith ſprings up in the ſoul. The ſoul is aſſured of the truth of the goſpel, appearing in his venturing himſelf for eternity upon it, in the ſight of a holy, juſt God; though perhaps he is not without all doubting; as there may be a moving of the heavier ſcale by the lighter weight, though the balance is fully caſten.

2*dly*, There is in faith a truſting to the goſpel report as good. Faith does not only truſt the goſpel, but truſts to it, truſts much to it, lays ſtreſs on it, not only as a true thing, but as a good thing. Faith,

1. Looks on the goſpel as a good thing in itſelf, and deſirable. For it is done with the heart, Rom. x. 10. Look how a Saviour, a righteouſneſs and a pardon, muſt needs be good things in the eyes of ſinners ſeeing themſelves loſt; ſo the goſpel that brings theſe to ſinners, muſt needs appear good. As the belief of the report of the law, imports not only an aſſent to it as true, but a horror of it as evil; ſo the belief of the report of the goſpel, imports not only an aſſent thereto as true, but a reliſh thereof as good. So it is holden out to faith under the notion of good, Iſa. lv. 2. 'Hearken diligently 'unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your 'ſoul delight itſelf in fatneſs.'

2. Faith looks on the goſpel as good for one's ſelf in particular. The believing ſoul ſays, This is good news, and good for me, 1 Tim. i. 15. 'Worthy of all accep'tation.' When there is a report of a phyſician come to a country that infallibly cures ſuch and ſuch a diſeaſe, the whole people ſay, That is good; but the ſick of theſe diſeaſes ſay more, That is good for me. What makes one think a thing good for him, is, the ſuitableneſs of it to his mind and caſe. Many hearers of the goſpel may account the goſpel good in itſelf, but they do not look on it as good for them, at leaſt as yet: As one who may account ſome kind of meat good, but he is not for it. He has better before him, more agreeable to his ſtomach; or perhaps he has no ſtomach for the time, ſo it muſt be ſet up. Thus Chriſt is good, and his ſalvation; but the man has the world and his luſts to feed on, that are more agreeable to him: let them ſtay off till death, and then he will be for them. But the goſpel is to the believer not only good in itſelf, but good for him, and that juſt now.

And ſo he truſts to it as good for him. And if ye aſk, What it is that he truſts to it? Why, he truſts his ſalvation to it, in a word: for that is it the goſpel brings to ſinners, Tit. ii. 11. marg. 'The grace of God that 'bringeth ſalvation to all men, hath appeared.' And the truſt of faith relates to it, Eph. i. 12, 13. That we ſhould be to the praiſe of his glory, who firſt truſted in Chriſt. In whom ye alſo truſted, after that ye heard the word of truth, the goſpel of your ſalvation. The ſoul ſees itſelf loſt; the goſpel offers ſalvation. And faith thereupon truſts for it, Acts xvi. 31. even for Chriſt's whole ſalvation. Which may be taken up in theſe two.

1. The relative part of it; which comprehends the ſoul's juſtification, reconciliation, adoption, and all other benefits of the like kind. Theſe the goſpel offers, together with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, upon which they are founded: and faith truſts to it for all theſe, Rom. i. 17. 'For therein is the righteouſneſs of God 'revealed from faith to faith.'

2. The real part of it; which comprehends the ſoul's ſanctification and glorification, and all other benefits of that kind. Theſe alſo the goſpel offers, together with the Spirit of Chriſt, by whom they are to be wrought in ſinners: and faith truſts to it for all theſe, Gal. iii. 2.

Thus faith lays the greateſt of weight on the report of the goſpel, even the weight of the man's ſalvation for time and eternity; dealing with God for that his greateſt intereſt, in the way of truſt on his word of the goſpel; truſting to that report for his own ſalvation in particular, Acts xv. 11. But we believe that, through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved.

Now, as faith is a truſting to the report of the goſpel for one's own ſalvation, according as ſalvation is offered in the goſpel, it implies theſe following things.

1 Not only a willingneſs, but a ſincere deſire to be ſanctified, and delivered from ſin, as well as to be juſtified and delivered from wrath; to be delivered from the reigning power, practice, pollution, and inbeing of ſin, as well as from the guilt of it, Rom vii. 24, 25. 'O 'wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from 'the body of this death! I thank God, through Jeſus 'Chriſt our Lord.' A perſon may fear from one what he does not deſire; but what he deſires not, he cannot truſt in one for. Therefore where there is no ſuch deſire, there is no truſting to the goſpel, there is no faith.

2. A renouncing of all other confidence for his ſalvation. Faith truſting to the report of the goſpel, quits ſelf confidence, law confidence, and creature confidence, Jer. xvi. 19. 'O Lord, my ſtrength and my fortreſs, 'and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles 'ſhall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and 'ſhall ſay, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vani'ty, and things wherein there is no profit,' Phil iii. 3. We are the circumciſion, which——have no confidence in the fleſh: like the woman with the bloody iſſue, who quit all her phyſicians, truſting for healing to a touch of the hem of Chriſt's garment.

3. A hearty approbation of the way of ſalvation manifeſted in the report of the goſpel, Matth. xi. 6 Bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. Faith here views Chriſt in the glaſs of the goſpel, as a crucified Saviour, 1 Cor. ii. 2.: believes his ſufficiency as ſuch to ſave ſinners, and them in particular, from ſin, and from the wrath of a holy God, in the eye of the holy law, and to make them completely holy and happy, Phil. iii. 9.; and acquieſceth in that way for their own ſalvation; 1 Cor. i. 24.

4. A betaking one's ſelf entirely to that way of ſalvation, by truſting to it wholly for our own ſalvation, Ruth ii. 12. Even as a poor beggar, having riches and wealth made over to him by his friend, leaves off his begging, and betakes himſelf to that entirely for his throughbearing. This is the ſoul's coming to Chriſt, fleeing for refuge, receiving the atonement, and rolling its burden on him.

5. laſtly, A confidence or truſt, that he will ſave us from ſin and wrath, according to his promiſe, Acts xv. 11. We believe, that through the grace of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we ſhall be ſaved. This is that truſt which ſhall never be diſappointed, Rom. x. 11. that building on Chriſt which ſhall never fall, 1 Pet. ii. 6.

III. We ſhall conſider the report of the goſpel, and the truſting to it, conjunctly.

1. The goſpel is a report from heaven, of ſalvation for poor ſinners, from ſin, Matth. i. 21 and from the wrath of God, John iii. 16. however dear-bought, yet freely made over to you in the word of promiſe; ſo as ye may freely take poſſeſſion of it, Iſa. lv. 1.

This report being brought to the ſinner, faith truſts it as a true report, believing that God has ſaid it; and truſts to it as good, laying our own ſalvation upon it. So the ſoul greedily embraceth the Saviour, and the ſalvation brought to it in that report, as ever a drowning man would take hold of a rope let down to bring him out of the waters, Cant. i. 3.

2. The goſpel is the report of a crucified Chriſt made over to ſinners, as the device of heaven for their ſalvation. It is proclaimed by the authority of heaven, that Chriſt has died, and by his death purchaſed life and ſalvation for loſt children of Adam; and that they, and every one of them, may have full and free acceſs to him, Matth. xxii. 4.

Faith truſting this report as true and good, the ſoul concludes, The Saviour is mine; and leans on him for all the purchaſe of his death, for life and ſalvation to itſelf in particular, 1 Cor. ii. 2.

3. The goſpel is the report of a righteouſneſs wherein we guilty ones may ſtand before a holy God, Rom. i. 17. For therein is the righteouſneſs of God revealed from faith to faith. And by faith one believes there is ſuch a righteouſneſs, that it is ſufficient to cover him, and that it is held out to him to be truſted on for righteouſneſs: and ſo the believer truſts it as his righteouſneſs in the ſight of God, diſclaiming all other, and betaking himſelf to it alone, Gal. ii. 16.

4. The goſpel is a report of a pardon under the great ſeal of heaven, in Chriſt, to all who will take it in him, Acts xiii. 38, 39 'Be it known unto you, that through 'this man is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins: 'and by him all that believe, are juſtified from all 'things.' This pardon is proclaimed openly by the authority of heaven, full and free, without exception of any of loſt Adam's race, to whom the report comes.

The ſoul by faith believes this to be true, and applies it to itſelf, ſaying, This pardon is for me; it is good and ſuitable to my caſe; I will therefore lean to this word of grace for my pardon, and come in, for this is the word of God that cannot lie.

5. The goſpel is the report of a phyſician that cures infallibly all the diſeaſes of the ſoul, Matth. ix. 12, 13. Heb. vii. 26. and freely, Hoſ. iv. 4.; and rejects no patients, John vi. 37.

The ſoul believes it, and applies it to its own caſe; and ſays, Then I will truſt him for the removing the ſtony heart out of my fleſh, for curing me of the falling evil of backſliding, the fever of raging corruption, the running iſſue of the predominant luſt, and the univerſal leproſy of the corruption of my nature.

6. The goſpel is the report of a feaſt for hungry ſouls, Iſa. xxv. 6. to which all are bid welcome, Chriſt himſelf being the maker and matter of it too, Iſa. lv. 2.

The ſoul weary of the huſks of created things, and believing this report, accordingly falls a feeding on Chriſt, his fleſh which is meat indeed, and his blood which is drink indeed; believing and applying to itſelf all that Chriſt was, did, and ſuffered, as that whereof the ſoul ſhall reap the benefit; which is the feeding by faith on a ſlain Saviour.

7. The goſpel is a report of a treaſure, 2 Cor. iv. 7. In it are the precious promiſes, within them precious Chriſt, with his merit, like the gold mentioned, Rev. iii. 18. 'I counſel thee to buy of me gold tried in the 'fire, that thou mayeſt be rich.' The field it is hid in, may be yours, Matth. xiii. 44.; the goſpel offers you the covenant as that field.

Faith believes the report; and the ſoul lays hold on the covenant, and truſts entirely to the treaſure hid there for the payment of all its debt, for its throughbearing during life, and through death, and for procuring it eternal happineſs.

8. The goſpel is the report of a victory won by Jeſus Chriſt over ſin, Satan, and death, and the world, Pſal. xcviii. 1. and that in favours of all that will join the glorious Conqueror.

Faith believes this report; and the ſoul truſts to it for its victory over all theſe, as already foiled enemies, 1 John v. 4. To name no more,

9. laſtly, The goſpel is the report of a peace purchaſed by the blood of Chriſt for poor ſinners, Eph. ii. 14. and offered to them, Iſa. xxvii. 5.

Faith believes it; and truſting to it, the ſoul comes before God as a reconciled Father in Chriſt, brings in its ſupplications for ſupply before the throne, believing the communication to be opened betwixt heaven and them, which during the war was blocked up.

USE I. of Information. This ſhews, that,

1. The goſpel is the mean of divine appointment for the ſalvation of ſinners. Therefore it is called the goſpel of our ſalvation, Eph. i. 13. and to bring ſalvation, Tit. 11. The light of nature is not the external mean or inſtrument of ſalvation; for it brings no report of Chriſt, Acts iv. 12. The law is not it neither; it is the miniſtration of death and condemnation, 2 Cor. iii. 7. 9.; but the goſpel only: for it is in the goſpel only that a righteouſneſs is revealed for the unrighteous, Rom. i. 16, 17. and in which the Spirit is conveyed to dead ſinners, Gal. iii. 2. To ſlight the goſpel then, is to ſlight the only mean of ſalvation.

2. The goſpel however will not be of any ſaving effect to us without faith, Heb. iv. 2. 'The word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in 'them that heard it.' The goſpel is the net: but the ſoul is not catched, to be drawn out of the waters of wrath, untill it believe, 1 Cor. i. 21. It pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſs of preaching to ſave them that believe. If the goſpel be hid to us, it is an evidence we are yet loſt: and it remains hid to all unbelievers, who ſee not the truth, goodneſs, nor glory of the goſpel

3. The goſpel method of ſalvation takes away all ground of glorying in the leaſt, from the ſinner: for it is by the faith of the goſpel, Rom. iv. 16. 'Therefore it is of faith 'that it might be by grace.' The way how a ſinner is to be brought into a ſtate of ſalvation, is not by doing of a law, or any work of a law; but by believing or truſting to a report. Faith is a believing or truſting, which of all things is the fartheſt removed from the nature of a work: and it is an injury done to the free grace of God, to look upon it as a work, or to explain it ſo, as hardly to leave any believing or truſting in it.

USE 2. of Exhortation. Let the goſpel gain truſt with you, as ever you would be ſaved from ſin or wrath. And 1ſt, Truſt the goſpel as true, as univerſally true, and that certainly and infallibly, as from God himſelf.

Motive 1. Conſider the manner of its diſcovery, clearly appearing to be from God, being delivered by Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles. It is a doctrine confirmed by the life and death of Chriſt, and particularly by his reſurrection from the dead; by the miracles wrought by him and his apoſtles, John iii. 2.

Mot. 2. Conſider the manner of its propagation in the world. It overturned Judaiſm and Paganiſm, the only two religions in the world when it entered: and that neither by the ſubtilty of men and learning, nor by the force of arms; but by the means of a few fiſhermen, declaring it in its ſimplicity: againſt whom the learning of the ſchools and the power of the magiſtrate and ſword, were engaged.

Mot. 3. laſtly, Conſider its effects on men, ſubduing their luſts, rendering them holy as God is holy; cauſing them to embrace it, over the belly of their worldly intereſt, and in ſpite of all hazards ſet before them by its enemies; and carrying them up comfortably in the midſt of the moſt cruel death.

2*dly*, Truſt to it, and lay the ſtreſs of your ſalvation on it as good. For which cauſe conſider,

1. It diſcovers a righteouſneſs in which a ſinner may ſtand before a holy God, Rom. i. 17. The law requires righteouſneſs, a perfect righteouſneſs, under the pain of the curſe, Gal. iii. 10. but it affords none, nor any ſtrength whereby it may be wrought: but the goſpel tells us of a righteouſneſs already wrought, and offers it to the ſinner, Rom. viii. 3, 4. 'For what the law 'could not do, in that it was weak through the fleſh, 'God ſending his own Son in the likeneſs of ſinful 'fleſh, and for ſin condemned ſin in the fleſh, that the 'righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in us.' And in it there is what, in the eye of the law, will juſtify the ſinner before God, and give perfect peace in one's own conſcience, Rom. v. 1. Being juſtified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

2. It ſets before us the moſt glorious life of moſt perfect happineſs, in the cleareſt and ſureſt way, 2 Tim. i. 10. The brighteſt ſcheme of happineſs, and the moſt illuminated map of Immanuel's land, is therein laid before us; fit to draw mens hearts to it, over the belly of all oppoſition. The reſearches of happineſs made by moraliſts, were as midnight darkneſs; the diſcoveries of it in the Moſaic diſpenſation, were but as the twilight; but in the goſpel as the mid-day.

3. laſtly, It is the only channel of ſalvation, in which ſalvation is conveyed to loſt ſinners, Acts iv. 12. 'Neither is there ſalvation in any other; for there is none 'other name under heaven given among men whereby 'we muſt be ſaved.' And,

1. It is the channel of ſalvation, to which whoſoever do betake themſelves by faith, ſhall undoubtedly be ſaved, Rom. i. 16. 'The goſpel is the power of God unto 'ſalvation, to every one that believeth.' There they ſhall find quickening, ſanctifying, and ſaving influences as by a mean appointed of God for that very end.

2. There is no other channel of ſalvation, no not the law as contradiſtinguiſhed thereto, 2 Cor. iii. It was the channel of life to innocent man once; but to a ſinner never. When ſin entered, it quite dried up as to all ſtreams of life, Gal. ii. 16. 'By the works of the law 'ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.' In a ſinking ſtate of the church, the law and goſpel are confounded, and the law juſtles out the goſpel, the dark ſhades of morality take place of goſpel light; which plague is this day begun in this church, and well far advanced. Men think they ſee the fitneſs of legal preaching for ſanctification; but how the preaching of the goſpel ſhould be ſuch a mean, they cannot underſtand, through want of experience of the power of the goſpel on their own ſouls. But,

(1.) The goſpel, and not the law, has the word of divine appointment for that end, Eph. i. 13. 'In whom 'ye alſo truſted, after that ye heard the word of truth, 'the goſpel of your ſalvation: in whom alſo after that 'ye believed, ye were ſealed with that holy Spirit of 'promiſe.' It is the word of ſalvation, Acts xiii. 26. the word of grace, chap. xx. 32. and the word of life, Phil. ii. 16. But the law, as contradiſtinguiſhed to it, is under no ſuch appointment; but is the miniſtration of condemnation and death, 2 Cor. iii. 7. 9. Abana and Pharpar ſeemed as fit in the eyes of carnal men to cure a leper as Jordan; but Jordan had the word of divine appointment. And without ſuch an appointment nothing can avail.

(2.) The goſpel and not the law as contradiſtinguiſhed thereto has the bleſſing annexed to it. There and only there, is the power of God to ſalvation to be expected, Rom. i. 16. It alone is the miniſtration of the Spirit, 2 Cor. iii. 8. So the apoſtle could appeal to the experience of the Galatians, Gal. iii. 2. 'This only (ſays he) would 'I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of 'the law, or by the hearing of faith?' Now, that can never be the channel of ſalvation from which the Spirit is ſeparated.

Wherefore know, that your life lies here, and that there is no ſalvation but in the way of truſting to the report of the goſpel.

DOCT. III. Though many hear, yet few believe or truſt to the report of the goſpel.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Confirm this point, that though many hear, yet few believe or truſt to the report of the goſpel.

II. Give the reaſons why ſo few believe the report of the goſpel.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall confirm this point, that though many hear, yet few believe or truſt to the report of the goſpel. It is clear, if ye conſider and view theſe two things.

1*ſt*, A view of the church in all ages, and the entertainment the goſpel has met with among them to whom it came.

2*dly*, A view of the church ſetting aſide thoſe whom the ſcripture determines to be unbelievers.

Firſt, Let us take a view of the church in all ages, and the entertainment the goſpel has met with among them to whom it came. It has been a deſpiſed and diſbelieved goſpel in all ages, and under all diſpenſations. Few believed it,

1. Under the patriarchal diſpenſation, from Adam to Moſes. It was firſt preached in paradiſe to Adam and Eve, being comprehended in the promiſe of Chriſt to come. By them indeed it was believed, and Adam preached it; but Cain ſlew Abel, and headed an apoſtaſy. And in the days of Enos, the ſon of Seth, there was a profeſſed diſtinction made between profeſſors and others, Gen. iv. 26. Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. Noah, a preacher of righteouſneſs, his doctrine was ſo little believed, that that generation was ſwept away with the flood. An unbelieving Ham was in the ark; and Nimrod ſhortly after headed a generation of unbelieving apoſtates, that built the tower of Babel. Abraham was called alone from his country, where his fathers ſerved other gods. And his poſterity in Egypt had little knowledge of either law or goſpel left them: Rom. v. 13. For until the law ſin was in the world.

2. Under the Moſaic diſpenſation, they had the goſpel, though vailed with types and figures. But the body of the generation that came out of Egypt, believed not, but fell in the wilderneſs, Heb. iv. 2. How often did the body of that nation fall off into idolatry? What heavy complaints did their prophets make time after time of the unbelief prevailing in their generations?

3. Under the Chriſtian diſpenſation. The word out of Chriſt's own mouth was generally diſbelieved, John xii. 37, 38. 'But though he had done ſo many miracles 'before them, yet they believed not on him: that the 'ſaying of Eſaias the prophet might be fulfilled, which he ſpake, Lord, who hath believed our report? and 'to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?' The goſpel had never ſo great ſucceſs as in the apoſtles days; yet even but few believed it in compariſon of others in the world, Rom. x. 16. But they have not all obeyed the goſpel. The ſtate of the church for the times thereafter may be ſeen, Rev. vi. in the firſt ſix ſeals. Then in the time of Antichriſt, the world wondered after the beaſt, the witneſſes were reduced to two, and the church of believers driven to the wilderneſs. At the reformation the goſpel had remarkable good ſucceſs; but yet believers were but few comparatively: and there have been but few all along ſince that time.

Secondly, Let us take a view of the church, ſetting aſide thoſe whom the ſcripture determines to be unbelievers; and we will ſoon ſee that but few do remain. Set aſide,

1. The groſly ignorant of Chriſt, and of the truths of the goſpel. Theſe God himſelf caſts out of the number, Iſa. xxvii. 11. It is a people of no underſtanding: therefore he that made them, will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will ſhew them no favour. There may be a believing in an unſeen, but not an unknown Chriſt. How can they believe the goſpel that know not what it is?

2. The profane, who are Chriſtians in name, becauſe they live in a Chriſtian country: but have not a ſhape of Chriſtianity about them. Surely theſe do not believe the goſpel: Tit. i. 16. They profeſs that they know God: but in works they deny him, being abominable, and diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Sanctification and belief of the truth go together, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. The goſpel is the great mean of God's appointment for reforming the world, if then it prevail not to the reforming of men's lives, it is an evidence they believe it not, Heb. iv. 2.

3. The carnal and worldly, who make the world their chief good, mainly ſeeking that, and ſavouring it only. Theſe undoubtedly are unbelievers, Phil. iii. 19, 20. 'Whoſe end is deſtruction, whoſe God is their belly: and whoſe glory is in their ſhame, who mind earthly things.' No ſooner doth a man believe the report of the goſpel anent the unſeen world, but the preſent evil world ſinks in its value with him, Matth. xiii. 44. 'The kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure hid in a field: the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and ſelleth all that he hath and buyeth that field.' But to the moſt part the matters of faith are as the bird in the buſh; what they ſee with their eyes is the bird in hand, Pſal. iv. 6. There may be many that ſay, Who will ſhew us any good?

4. Mere moraliſts, all whoſe religion is confined to ſome pieces of the ſecond table. Theſe are they who are juſt in their dealings with men, but know nothing of dealing with God through Chriſt, and make no conſcience of the duties of worſhipping of God. They come but the one half of that Phariſee's length, mentioned Luke xviii.; and to be ſure are unbelievers, for Chriſt ſets them aſide, Matth. v. 20. 'For I ſay unto you, that except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.'

5. Groſs hypocrites, who have a profeſſion of religion, and worſhip God, but in the mean time are looſe and licentious in their walk. Theſe are they who on their knees are like ſaints, but have no more religion than what lies in theſe external duties of worſhip. Them Chriſt ſets aſide as unbelievers, Matth. vii. 21. Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven; and will diſown any ſaving relation to them, Luke vi. 46. 'Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay?' That goſpel that cleanſes not a man's hands from unjuſt dealing; his mouth from lying, ſwearing, and filthy ſpeaking; and his converſation from the pollutions of the world, is certainly not believed.

6. Cloſe hypocrites, whoſe outward converſation is blameleſs in the eye of the world, but in the mean time are inwardly ſtrangers to God and Chriſt. Such were thoſe in the church of Sardis, of whom our Lord ſays, Rev. iii. 1. 'I know thy works, that thou haſt a name that thou liveſt, and art dead.' They are not unacquainted with the practice of outward duties both towards God and man: but they are abſolute ſtrangers to the life of faith, communion with God, and experimental religion. They are walking on in the dark, and dreaming they are in the way; yet never have one foot on it. Theſe are unbelievers; for faith purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9. They are ſelf juſticiaries, like the Jews of old, 'who being ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, did not ſubmit themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God,' Rom. x. 3.

7. Laſtly, All unregenerate perſons; for they are certainly unbelievers, as believers are regenerate: as is clear from John i. 12, 13. 'But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the ſons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of God.' And ſuch are all thoſe who have never been convinced of their ſin and miſery; nor humbled, and brought to be content with a Saviour on any terms; who have never had Chriſt revealed in them; nor been ſavingly determined and enabled to embrace him.

Now they of theſe ſeveral ſorts make the throng of the multitude of the hearers of the goſpel. And it is but here and there one that is not of one or other of them. Set aſide then all theſe, few remain, few believers, few who truſt to the goſpel report.

II. I ſhall give the reaſons why ſo few believe the report of the goſpel.

1. There is a natural impotency in all, John vi. 44. 'No man can come to me, except the Father which hath ſent me, draw him.' This is cured in few; to few is the arm of the Lord revealed. Believing the report of the goſpel is not, as ſome think, an eaſy effort of imagination. It is beyond the power of nature. Yea, every thing in nature is againſt it, and riſes up againſt it, till the Spirit of the Lord overcome them into belief of the report of the goſpel.

2. The predominant power of luſts, to which the goſpel is an enemy. There our Lord lodges it, John iii. 19. This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil. The goſpel is a light; but they love darkneſs better: and therefore they will not receive the light by the belief thereof. They are ſet upon preſent things, things of ſenſe; and therefore eſteem the things of faith but as idle tales, John v. 44.

3. There is a judicial blindneſs on many. Men have refuſed to believe the goſpel, that they might get continued in the embraces of their luſts, therefore God hath given them over into the hand of Satan, who has blinded them ſo, as they cannot behold the light and glory of the goſpel, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

USE I. of Information. Hence learn, that,

1*ſt*, There is great odds between hearing and doing, James i. 22. Many hear, but few obey; many are called, but few choſen. The goſpel comes to the ears of many, who receive the ſound with an air of reverence, but never receive it into their hearts by faith. Do not then lay ſtreſs on your attendance on ordinances, as if that would render you acceptable to God, Jer. vii. 4. 'Truſt ye not in lying words, ſaying, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, the temple of the Lord are theſe.' Such a conceit will be ſadly expoſed at the laſt day, as is clear from what our Lord ſays will be the language of ſome at his awful tribunal, 'We have eaten and drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught 'in our ſtreets.' Unto all ſuch he will ſay, Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity, Luke xiii. 26, 27.

2dly, This may remove the occaſion of ſtumbling by theſe three things. Do not ſtumble at it, (1.) Becauſe the goſpel hath ſo few friends in an evil day. The ſcripture hath told us before, that few believe it at any time. It is a greater wonder, that one adheres to it over the belly of perſecution, eſpecially even to death, than that hundreds forſake it; conſidering how rare the faith of it is even in a time of peace. (2.) That the foundations of Chriſtianity come at length to be attacked by men of corrupt minds. For what wonder is it, that, in a time of long peaceable enjoyment of the goſpel, they that never truly believed it, come at length to queſtion it, and in end downright to deny it? (3.) That the lives either of profeſſors or miniſters of the goſpel are altogether unſuitable to it. For men may profeſs and preach the goſpel too, that they never believed. Man's arm may fit men to profeſs and preach it, but it is the arm of the Lord only that can bring men to believe it.

OBJECT. But is not that ground to queſtion it, that ſo few believe it? ANSW. That is no juſt prejudice againſt it. For, (1.) There are many natural truths, which yet are believed by very few. I ſuppoſe the thouſandth, not to ſay the ten thouſandth perſon in the world that ſees the ſun and moon, does not believe the ſun to be bigger than a cart wheel, or any ſtar to be ſo big as the moon; and yet learned men demonſtrate by reaſon, that the ſun is bigger than the whole earth by far, and the moon leſs than any ſtar. But the goſpel is ſupernatural truth, which cannot be comprehended or received by mere reaſon, 1 Cor. ii. 14. 'For the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are fooliſhneſs unto him; neither can he know them, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned.' Therefore there is no ground to queſtion the goſpel report, becauſe few believe it. (2.) The moſt part of men are wedded to their luſts and paſſions, which the goſpel is ſet for the rooting out of, Tit. ii. 11, 12. 'For the grace of God that bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared to all men; teaching us, that denying ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, in this preſent world.' It is the intereſt of their luſts that the goſpel be not believed: and therefore the general unbelief of the goſpel is no prejudice againſt it; becauſe men generally have a ſtrong bias againſt it, from the mighty power of their luſts, John iii. 19. forecited. But the belief of it is of equal latitude with a ſincere deſire of enjoying God, and being like him: which is man's chief happineſs.

3dly, The common way of the world is not God's way; and they are rare perſons that are right. This is evident from our Lord's exhortation, Matth. vii. 13, 14. Enter in at the ſtrait gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat: becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Many will be waled out of the viſible church, and thrown away as naught, till they be left but as one of a city and two of a family, as the gleanings of the vintage, that are to be carried to Zion above. They are men wondered at, Zech. iii. 8. therefore not ordinary: God's jewels, Mal. iii. 17. therefore not common ſtuff; Chriſt's little, little flock, Luke xii. 32. Greek.

4thly, laſtly, Surely many deceive themſelves as to their faith of the goſpel, thinking they believe the goſpel while they really believe it not: Hoſ. viii. 2, 3. 'Iſrael ſhall cry unto me, My God, we know thee. Iſrael hath caſt off the thing that is good.' The apoſtle obſerves, 2 Theſſ. iii. 2. that 'all men have not faith;' and our Lord ſhews it to be very rare, Luke xviii. 8. 'When the Son of man cometh, ſhall he find faith on the earth?' I ſuppoſe it will be found, that few believe this very truth we are inſiſting on. For as few as there are who believe the goſpel, if the queſtion were put through us, Do you believe the goſpel? Do you believe it? I reckon few, if any, particularly of the unbelievers, but would ſay, They do. The reaſons of the miſtake are theſe.

1. They were brought up in the profeſſion of the goſpel, and they never queſtioned their belief of it. Many among us have no more for their belief of the goſpel, than Papiſts in Italy have for their belief of Popery, and Pagans in America for their belief of Paganiſm. Their fathers, and mothers, and prieſts told them ſo; and ſo they have a human faith of Popery and Paganiſm, upon that human teſtimony. And ſo many a Scotſman has no more but a human faith of the goſpel, which they have taken up on the word of their fathers, mothers, and miniſters; and they never queſtioned it. But the divine faith of the goſpel is another thing, and that they will find when they come to a pinch in that matter: Matth. xvi. 17. 'And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Barjona: for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.' 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. 'For this cauſe alſo thank we God without ceaſing, becauſe when ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not as the word of men, but (as it is in truth) the word of God, which effectually worketh alſo in you that believe.'

2. They never had much ado with their faith of the goſpel. Such as it is it has lien by them idle all their days; like a book by a ſcholar he never had occaſion to conſult, or a piece of money one never offered in payment to his neighbour. Their faith of the goſpel was never tried with barefaced ſatanical temptations, obſtinately inſiſted in; nor with their afflictions; nor with ſound and thorough convictions of their loſt and miſerable ſtate: and all is good untried. But the trial would have diſcovered another thing, James i. 12. that is true faith of the goſpel that will abide a trial, 1 Pet. i. 6, 7.

3. They ſatisfy themſelves with a general hiſtorical faith of the goſpel, knowing nothing of truſting to it for all Chriſt's ſalvation to themſelves. And if that be the believing of the goſpel-report, the devils are as good believers as they, and better too, James ii. 19. for the devils believe, and tremble. They know not what it is to be at the inſtance of the law, ſet before the tribunal of God, in the court of conſcience, and to have the law there preſſing them particularly with its demands and curſes; and for their own defence to be fain to plead there as for their life, the holineſs of Chriſt's nature, the righteouſneſs of his life, and ſatisfaction for ſin, and that upon the credit of the goſpel report.

But there are four things which may evince, that moſt of the hearers of the goſpel, whatever they think, do not believe the goſpel, nor truſt it as true, nor truſt to it as good.

1. It does not purify their hearts and lives, Acts xv. 9. The belief of the truth is the means appointed of God for ſanctification, 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. 'God hath from the beginning choſen you to ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth,' Eph. v. 25, 26. 'Chriſt loved the church, and gave himſelf for it, that he might ſanctify and cleanſe it with the waſhing of water, by the word.' And it is the word of the goſpel that is ſo, John xv. 3. Now ye are clean through the word which I have ſpoken unto you. The word of the goſpel received into the heart by faith, is like a ſpring that works out the mud, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. The word of God effectually worketh in you that believe. It is like leaven that ſeeks through the whole maſs. For the Spirit of Sanctification is in it, John vi. 63. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. The words that I ſpeak unto you, they are ſpirit, and they are life. So they whoſe heart and life is not purified by the goſpel, they do not really believe it, Heb. iv. 2.

The profane man, he that is ungodly with reſpect to God, unrighteous with reſpect to men, not ſober with reſpect to himſelf, does not believe the goſpel: for it 'teacheth us, that, denying ungodlineſs, and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, in this preſent world,' Tit. ii. 11, 12.; and is effectual in believers, 1 Theſſ. ii 13. forecited. But ſuch an one is maſter of it, it is not maſter of him. Rom. i. 18. He holds the truth in unrighteouſneſs. The man that is a ſlave to his paſſions, his pride, wrath and revenge, believes not the goſpel, Iſ. xi. 6. The man whoſe God is the world, the covetous, the unjuſt, the ſenſual, the vain, &c. believes not, Matth. xiii. 45, 46 forecited.

2. It does not make them fruitful to God, as it does in believers, Col. i. 5, 6. That faith is vain that is without works, James ii. 20. The word of the goſpel is a heavenly ſeed, which received into the heart by faith, never miſſeth to bring forth fruit. As it puts out the fruits of the fleſh, it brings in the fruits of the Spirit. It makes the man to live to Chriſt, and live for him, Phil. i. 21.; as the woman of Samaria did, who not only lived unto Chriſt herſelf, but induced others, by her example, to believe in him, as their Saviour. See John chap. iv.

The man that makes no conſcience of ſerving his generation by doing good to others, that lays not out himſelf to be uſeful for God in his place and ſtation, that thinks it enough that he does not ill to others, and hangs not out a flag of defiance againſt the honour of God, is as really an unbeliever of the goſpel, as he that is noxious, in reſpect of God and man: for where is his fruit? Col. i. 6. ſee Matth. xii. 30. He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad.

3. It is not their chief comfort, as it is to the ſaints, Pſal. cxix. 49, 50. 'Remember the word unto thy ſervant, upon which thou haſt cauſed me to hope. This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.' The ſcripture calls the believer's great hope, the hope of the goſpel, Col. i. 23. And it has been proven to be ſo by their ſufferings even of death for it, Mark viii. 35. 'For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it; but whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my ſake and the goſpel's, the ſame ſhall ſave it.' What bears up a man in his greateſt ſtraits, muſt needs be his greateſt comfort. The goſpel is that which bore up the hearts of believers, under their greateſt hardſhips. Therefore it has been found, that brown bread and the goſpel has been pleaſant fare to many a believer. Take away the goſpel, and take the ſun out of the world. Whatever are their ſtraits or their ſtorms, the goſpel is their plight anchor.

But alas! there are few thus minded. Give them full pantries and a warm fire ſide they could be right cheary without the goſpel. It is corn and the cattle, good markets, &c. they know the comfort of theſe: but many that know that, know little of the comfort of the goſpel. If they be lifted up at any time, it is not the goſpel that does it, but ſome creature comfort. If ſome affliction befal them, ſome creature comfort removed; what helps them is not the comfort of the goſpel, but ſome other creature comfort put in its room, or hoped for.

If one had his ſtock in a ſhip at ſea, whatever joys or ſorrows he met with in his means at home, they would not be his chief ones; the chief would be about the ſhip. The goſpel is the ſhip the believer's ſtock is in; and whatever joys or ſorrows he meets with in the world, yet his chief ones are in the goſpel, Hab. iii. 17, 18. Although the fig tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the vines, the labour of the olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat, the flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls: yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. There is ſuch a difference betwixt a believer and an unbeliever, as betwixt a laird and tenant in a harveſt flood ſweeping away the corn. The corn being ſwept away the tenant has nothing left. Micah ſaid, when his gods were taken away, 'What have I more?' The other comforts himſelf, Yet it has not ſwept away the land. So Job vi 13. 'Is not my help in me? and is wiſdom driven quite from me?'

4. It is not their chief concern, what come of it. Oft-times they have no concern at all about it; they will profanely put that off to them that live by it. Be it ſo, then all that believe it, live by it, and it will be their chief concern, Iſa. xxxviii. 16. John vi. 63. It is the word of life, and believing it is the way to live, Iſa. lv. 3. 'Hear and your ſouls ſhall live.' They will be concerned for it as for their life, Deut. xxxii. 47. and take away their hope from that airth, they would reckon themſelves moſt miſerable, 1 Cor. xv. 19. Therefore they will ſtrive for the faith of the goſpel as their all.

But I fear many a hearer of the goſpel would take it for no ill news, if any body could make them ſure of it, that the whole goſpel is but a fable: A plain evidence that it is not the thing they mainly truſt to, elſe they would be mainly concerned for it.

USE 2. Be ſtirred up then to a weighty concern to attain to the true faith of the report of the goſpel; that ye may be of thoſe who really truſt it as true, and truſt to it as good. Theſe following things may be of uſe to put a peculiar edge on your ſpirits for this.

1. That there are ſo few that really believe it in a ſaving manner. When Chriſt ſaid, One of you ſhall betray me, the diſciples ſaid, Is it I? And the conſideration that ſo few believe the report of the goſpel, ſhould put every one to ſee to himſelf, that he be not an unbeliever.

2. Your ſalvation or damnation turns on this point, Mark xvi. 16. 'He that believeth ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned.' Many will be affected with ſome groſs ſins of theirs againſt the law, who never ſee the venom of their unbelief of the goſpel. But this is the ſin that draws deepeſt: and therefore that is the ſin which the Spirit is in a ſpecial manner to convince of, John xvi. 8, 9. 'And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment: of ſin, becauſe they believe not on me.' And that is the great ſoul-ruining ſin, John iii. 19. 'This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil.'

3. Doing this ye do all, Mark v. 36. 'Be not afraid, only believe.' This is the ſhort way, and the only way to ſanctification. It is the belief of the goſpel that brings ſinners to the obedience of the law; for thereby the ſoul is united to Chriſt, the ſtore-houſe of grace, and of the Spirit of holineſs, Eph. iii. 17. John i. 16. Hence it purifies the heart, Acts xv. 9. and the heart being purified, the life will be ſo too. So the apoſtle runs up obedience to it, 1 Tim. i. 5.

4. If ye do not this ye do nothing, 1 John iii. 23. 'This is his commandment, that we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt.' John vi. 29. 'This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent.' All that ye do in the way of obedience without it, will be but as ſo many cyphers, that will amount to juſt nothing in the ſight of a holy God, Heb. xi. 6. 'Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God.' Your prayers, tears, juſtice, ſobriety, &c. all will be loſt without faith. Whatever good works any does without faith, are but dead works; they may have the ſhape of good works, but the ſoul and life is wanting. Here is the reaſon why endeavours of reformation with unbelievers do not ſucceed: Why, when the doctrine of the goſpel is corrupted, and preachers, inſtead of preaching Chriſt, turn their ſermons into harangues of moral virtue, they and their hearers loſe both grace and virtue, and turn profane.

5. laſtly, If ye really believe the goſpel, nothing can ruin you: if ye do not, nothing can ſave you. Under the law, the Jews were a ſtubborn, diſobedient generation, every now and then falling into idolatry, till the Babyloniſh captivity: yet were they preſerved, God minding to try them with the diſpenſation of the goſpel. But when they rejected and diſbelieved the goſpel, though they had quite left their idolatry, they were deſtroyed.

So whatever is your guilt, if ye believe the goſpel, it will be wiped out, Acts xvi. 31. ' Believe on the Lord ' Jeſus Chriſt, and thou ſhalt be ſaved ;' if not, whatever good ye do, ye will periſh, John iii. 36. ' He that ' believeth not the Son, ſhall not ſee life ; but the wrath ' of God abideth on him.' The goſpel is the laſt method of heaven for the ſalvation of ſinners : where the law failed, the goſpel came to help out, Rom. viii. 3. But if ye miſs ſalvation in the way of the goſpel, there is not another method to follow : ſo it is the laſt ſhip bound for Emmanuel's land, and therefore the only one.

I ſhall conclude with ſome directions how to believe the goſpel.

1. Perſuade yourſelves that the faith of the goſpel is beyond the power of nature, John vi. 44. that there is a neceſſity of a power from on high to bring you to believe. This will raze the old foundation, and cauſe you look up for it.

2. Urge on yourſelves the faith of the law. It alſo is the teſtimony of God. Believe it with application to yourſelves. See the authority of God in its commands binding on you ; the truth of God, in its threatening and curſe, reaching you and holding you faſt.

3. laſtly, With an eye to the Spirit's working in you, conſider and apply the promiſe of the goſpel : for that is not only the object, but the means of faith, Rom. x 17. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Doct IV. There is no true believing or truſting to the report of the goſpel, but what is the effect of the working of a divine power on the ſoul for that end.

In proſecuting this doctrine, I ſhall,

I. Evince the truth of it.

II. Shew what is that working of divine power whereby the ſoul is brought to truſt to the goſpel-report.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. I ſhall evince the truth of the doctrine. Conſider for it,

1. Expreſs ſcripture-teſtimony, John vi. 44. ' No ' man can come to me, except the Father which hath ' ſent me, draw him.' The apoſtle calls it therefore the faith of the operation of God, Col. ii. 12. and the work of faith with power, 2 Theſſ. i. 11. is fulfilled. Hence believing is ſaid to be given, Phil. i. 29. Yea, no leſs power is put forth in it, than that which was exerted in the raiſing of Chriſt from the dead, Eph. i. 19, 20.

2. The ſtate that by nature we are in, dead in ſin, Eph. ii. 1. Faith is the firſt vital act of the ſoul, quickened by the Spirit of life from Jeſus Chriſt ; which therefore a ſoul without the Spirit of life, is no more capable of, than a dead man of breathing, walking, &c. The raiſing of the dead is a work competent to God alone ; the raiſing of dead ſouls as well as bodies, John v. 25, 26. ' Verily verily I ſay unto you, The hour is ' coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the ' voice of the Son of God : and they that hear ſhall live. ' For as the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given ' to the Son to have life in himſelf.'

3. There can be no faith without knowledge ; and the knowledge of ſpiritual things man is by nature incapable of, 1 Cor. ii. 14. ' The natural man receiveth ' not the things of the Spirit of God ; for they are fool- ' iſhneſs unto him : neither can he know them, becauſe ' they are ſpiritually diſcerned.' How can one truſt to the report of the goſpel, without diſcerning the goſpel in its glorious excellency ? But the eye of man naturally is out as to theſe things. Natural truths he can diſcern by natural powers : but ſupernatural truths are above his reach without ſupernatural abilities.

4. Man is naturally under the power of Satan, a captive of the devil, who with his utmoſt efforts will hinder the work of faith, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. If our goſpel be hid, it is hid to them that are loſt : in whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not. Such a caſe the goſpel finds men in, Iſa. lxi. 1. ; and it is the deſign of the goſpel to bring them out of it, Acts xxvi. 17, 18. But how can ſuch be the deſign of the goſpel, but becauſe it is the inſtrument of a ſuperior power, Rom. i. 16. and is rendered effectual by the Omnipotent himſelf ? 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. The ſtrong man muſt be caſt out by a ſtronger.

5. Man's truſt is by nature firmly pre-occupied by thoſe things which the goſpel calls them to renounce. He is wedded to other confidences naturally, which he will therefore hold by, till a power above nature carry him off from them. And therefore it is a differencing character between the Lord's people and all others, that they have no confidence in the fleſh, Phil. iii. 3.

(1.) Self confidence is natural to man. And therefore it is the firſt leſſon at Chriſt's ſchool, to deny ourſelves ; which is inwrapped in the very nature of faith, or truſting to the goſpel, Matth xvi. 24. Man going away from God as his chief end, ſet up himſelf for his chief end : and ſo it is as natural for him to act from and for himſelf, as for birds to fly in the air. So that to unſelf a man, which is done in the work of faith, muſt needs be a work of divine power.

(2.) Creature confidence. Man not being ſelf ſufficient, muſt needs ſeek ſomething without himſelf wherein to reſt his heart. Being eſtranged from God, he goes to the creature, Jer. ii. 13. And to it he is ſo wedded in confidence, that after a thouſand diſappointments, he ſtill maintains it. And the truth is, it is impoſſible to get the heart carried off it, except to abſolute deſpair, without putting a better in the room thereof ; which is done only by faith taking a God in Chriſt inſtead thereof, Matth. xiii. 45, 46. This ſure requires a ſupernatural power, Jer. xvi. 19.

(3.) Law confidence. The law was Adam's covenant ; and as he was to work and win his wages, ſo that is the natural religion of all his poſterity. Nature knows no other way of acceptance with God : and men ſtick by it till death, and a violent death too, do part them, Gal. ii. 19. ' For I through the law am dead to ' the law, that I might live unto God,' Rom. vii. 4. Wherefore, my brethren, ye alſo are become dead to the law by the body of Chriſt. An evidence that it is another power than their own muſt bring them off it.

6. Man has a ſtrong bias and bent againſt believing or truſting to the goſpel, Rom. x. 3. ' For they being ' ignorant of God's righteouſneſs, and going about to ' eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs, have not ſubmitted ' themſelves unto the righteouſneſs of God,' John v. 40. And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life. The contrivance of the goſpel lies croſs to the mind and will of natural men, and they to it : ſo that the one is the very reverſe of the other. Hence the Jews and Greeks both were oppoſite to the goſpel, and in their wiſdom reckoned it folly. So that the ſoul muſt be new-moulded by a divine power, ere it can receive it, 1 Cor. ii. 14. forecited.

7. laſtly, It is the product of the Holy Spirit, wherever it is, Gal. v. 22. ' But the fruit of the Spirit is—— ' faith.' Hence Chriſt is called the author of it, Heb. xii. 2. as working it in the elect by his own Spirit, 2 Cor. iv. 13. It was promiſed in the covenant for the elect, to be effected by the Spirit : and it is peculiar to them, Acts xiii. 48. as being the work of God's Spirit only. And the goſpel is the only immediate outward mean of it, becauſe it only is the miniſtration of the Spirit.

II. What is that working of divine power whereby the ſoul is brought to truſt to the goſpel-report ? There is a twofold work of divine power on the ſoul for that end.

Firſt, A mediate work, which is preparatory to it ; whereof the Spirit is the author, and the inſtrument is the law. It is twofold.

1ſt, An awakening work ; whereby the ſecure ſinner is rouſed up, and made to lay ſalvation to heart, which he was little concerned about before, ſleeping ſecurely. And that is done by the Spirit's bringing home the law on the ſinner's conſcience. And,

1. There is a divine power bringing home on the ſinner's conſcience the commands of the law, Rom. vii. 9. For I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. And thereby they are diſcovered, (1.) In their divine authority, as the commands of the eternal ſovereign God, which clothes them with an awfulneſs they were not wont to appear in to the ſinner; each of them being prefaced with a Thus ſaith the Lord. (2.) As binding on the ſinner in particular; ſo that the bond of the command is found by him girding him ſtrait; however he felt little of it before, Rom. vii. 10. And the commandment which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death. It is obſervable, that the ten commands are all in the ſecond perſon, ſpeaking to every man, as if they concerned no other but him, Thou ſhalt not, &c. And when the Spirit comes, he ſpeaks them the ſame way to the ſinner's conſcience, Rom. vii. 7. 'What ſhall we ſay 'then? Is the law ſin? God forbid. Nay, I had not 'known ſin, but by the law: for I had not known luſt, 'except the law had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not covet.'

Now hereby the ſinner is convinced of ſin, and brought in guilty before the Lord, John xvi. 8. Rom. iii. 19. His ſins, original and actual, of heart and life, of thoughts, words, and actions, are ſet before him, Pſal. l. 21. And he is like a thief found, Jer. ii. 26.

2. This divine power brings home on the ſinner's conſcience the curſe of the law, John xvi. 8. And when he is come, he will reprove the world of ſin, and of righteouſneſs, and of judgment. And it is diſcovered to be, (1.) God's curſe, heavier than mountains of lead; which in virtue of his greatneſs, is inſupportable, in virtue of his infiniteneſs eternal, and in virtue of his truth, infallible: though before it was but like the ſounding again of the mountains, in his conceit. (2.) God's curſe on him in particular, ſtaking him down to revenging wrath. The Spirit of the Lord ſays within the man, as Mal. iii. 9. 'Ye are curſed with a curſe; for ye have robbed me, 'even this whole nation.' As long as the ſinner can ward off the particular application of the curſe to himſelf, he will little value the goſpel, Rev. iii. 17. But the word delivers it in the general, Gal. iii. 10. Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them; and a divine power obliges the conſcience to apply.

Hereby the ſinner is convinced of his miſery, and ſees himſelf loſt and undone, Luke xv. 17. And ſo he is,

(1.) Stung to the heart and galled with remorſe, Acts ii. 37. Waves of killing grief go over his ſoul: he ſees he has been murdering his own ſoul, and he groans out an elegy over his dead ſelf, Rom. vii. 9. I was alive without the law once: but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died.

(2.) Frighted with terror, Acts xvi. 29. with the terror of God, the terror of death, and the terror of eternity.

(3.) Racked with anxiety, Acts ii. 37. Sometimes he hopes, ſometimes he fears, but is always anxious. This anxiety fills head, heart, and hands; ſwallows up all other cares, for the man ſees how true it is, Matth. xvi. 26. 'What is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the 'whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a 'man give in exchange for his ſoul?'

2dly, An humbling work, whereby the proud ſinner is brought low to the duſt: not only finding a need of ſalvation, but an abſolute need of Chriſt for ſalvation; that there is no other way of help for him: but if he get not Chriſt he muſt periſh. So he is broken off from,

1. Self-confidence, Luke xv. 17. He ſees he has deſtroyed himſelf, but cannot help himſelf, Hoſ. xiii. 9. He finds that he is without ſtrength, light, or life; that his work is quite beyond his reach; his debt beyond his ability to pay; the bonds of ſin, in the guilt of it, and the power of it quite above his might to break aſunder, Rom. vii. 9.

2. Creature-confidence, Luke xv. 16. While his conſcience was aſleep, he pleaſed himſelf in his enjoyment of the creature; but now that is awake, the emptineſs of the whole creation is felt by him. His lawful comforts are foyſonleſs, while he thinks God is his enemy: his unlawful comforts have left a ſting behind them, which the whole creation cannot pull out. There is no reſt for his heart now, but in a God.

3. Law-confidence, Rom. vii. 9, 10. Time was when he had hopes of acceptance with God by the deeds of the law, and ſet down his duties of firſt and ſecond table as ſo much clear gain; but now he ſees they are all but loſs, Phil. iii. 6, 7. So he deſpairs of mending his caſe that way; and that he cannot pay his own debt in whole or in part. And all this is by means of the law too, diſcovered in its ſpirituality and ſeverity, Gal. ii. 19. 'I through the law am dead to the law, that I 'might live unto God.'

Secondly, This work of divine power is an immediate work; whereby faith is produced in the ſoul, it cauſed to truſt to the goſpel report; whereof the Spirit is the author, and the goſpel the inſtrument. And it is,

1. A quickening work; whereby the dead ſoul is called again to ſpiritual life, Eph. ii. 1. 'You hath he 'quickened who were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins.' Therefore the ſame power is ſaid to be exerted in that caſe, as in raiſing Chriſt from the dead, re-uniting his ſoul with his body, Eph. i. 19, 20. So the Spirit of Chriſt enters into the dead ſoul, and the dry bones live, Ezek. xxxvi. 27. which Spirit is communicated in the word of the goſpel, as the vehicle thereof, ſo to ſpeak, Gal. iii. 2. Hence the word of the goſpel is ſaid to be ſpirit and life, John vi. 36. as being the miniſtration of the Spirit. An emblem of which is in the reſurrection of the dry bones. And hence there is,

(1.) A power to believe, as in a living man to breathe. So the Spirit of life being the Spirit of faith in the ſoul, it has a ſupernatural power, for that ſupernatural act, 2 Cor. iv. 13. In vain do we call the lame man to walk, who has no ability of walking: but the Spirit with the call of the goſpel entering into the ſinner, he is enabled to embrace Chriſt on the goſpel report.

(2.) A diſpoſition to believe, Pſal. cx. 3. 'Thy people 'ſhall be willing in the day of thy power;' as in Laazrus brought to life, to come out of the grave, and to lie no longer there. So the ſoul becomes pliable to the goſpel call, content to come to Chriſt, content to be made clean. Death's bands being looſed, the neck is no more as an iron ſinew; but the life given diſpoſes to what is agreeable to it.

2. An illuminating work. There is a knowledge in faith, which is therefore called knowledge, Iſa. liii. 11. John xvii. 3 No man will truſt to the report of the goſpel until he know it, and know it by a ſupernatural diſcovery too, 1 Cor. ii 14. And the Spirit of the Lord makes that diſcovery, Acts xxvi. 18. ſhewing the treaſure hid in the goſpel field, Matth. xiii. 44. This the Spirit doth by bringing home the goſpel-report to the ſoul: in which he demonſtrates it to the ſoul with the greateſt certainty, 1 Cor. ii. 4. He demonſtrates it to be,

(1.) God's own word, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. The report comes in the word, that Chriſt is ſent in the character of Saviour of the world; that he is able to ſave, and willing to ſave the worſt of ſinners; and that whoſoever 'believeth in him, ſhall not periſh, but have everlaſting 'life,' John iii. 16. The Spirit of the Lord ſets this in ſuch a clear light, as that the ſinner ſees it is not a report of fallible men; but the word of the eternal God that cannot lie; the divine teſtimony, which is ſo certain that it cannot be falſe, 1 Cor. ii. 4.

(2.) God's word to that ſoul in particular, as really as if a voice from heaven did ſpeak to him by name, ſaying, Such an one, Chriſt is your Saviour, able and willing to ſave you; and you truſting on him, 'ſhall not periſh, 'but have everlaſting life,' 1 Theſſ. i. 5. This is as it were an internal word, applying to the ſoul in particular, the external word which is general: and without it the ſpecial application of faith will not be. Hence the Spirit is ſaid to convince of righteouſneſs, as well as of ſin; which he does by a particular application of the law in the one, and of the goſpel in the other, John xvi. 8. And the Spirit's teſtimony of Chriſt is diſtinguiſhed from the preacher's teſtimony, John xv. 26, 27. 'But 'when the Comforter is come, whom I will ſend unto 'you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which 'proceedeth from the Father, he ſhall teſtify of me. 'And ye alſo ſhall bear witneſs, becauſe ye have been 'with me from the beginning.'

(3.) A determining work, effectually and irreſiſtibly determining them to believe, ſo that they can no longer not believe. This is called the Father's drawing, viz. by his Spirit, John vi. 44. The Spirit of the Lord freely wins the ſoul, over the belly of all oppoſition.

(1.) To believe and truſt the report of the goſpel, as true. For the demonſtration of the Spirit is accompanied with power, 1 Cor. ii. 4. Some things are ſo clear to all, as that two and three make five, that no body can not believe it. Some things are ſo demonſtrated by ſight, or by reaſon, that though one could not believe them before, they can as little not believe them, or withhold their aſſent from them, after. So the goſpel being demonſtrated by the Spirit, cannot but be believed, and truſted as true: and therefore it is ſaid to have come in much aſſurance, 1 Theſſ. i. 5. as a thing ſeen by the ſoul, or demonſtrated to it.

And ſo faith is the ſoul's echo to this demonſtration of the Spirit; the ſoul ſaying, he is the Saviour of the world, and my Saviour, able and willing to ſave ſinnets, and to ſave me; on whom I truſting ſhall not periſh, like Thomas, My Lord and my God, John xx. 28.

(2) To truſt to the report of the goſpel as good. For the ſame demonſtration of the Spirit ſo diſcovers the excellency, and abſolute ſuitableneſs of Chriſt to the ſinner's caſe, and full ſecurity for its ſalvation that is in him, upon the infallible truth of the goſpel report, that it being earneſtly deſirous of ſalvation, cannot but truſt to it as good for them, and good ſecurity.

So then here faith takes up the ſoul's eternal reſt, reſting wholly on Chriſt held forth in the goſpel for ſalvation, upon the ſecurity of the word of the goſpel.

USE 1. of Information. Hence learn, that,

1. The faith of the goſpel is to be ſuſpected, that ſprings up without a work of mighty power to the producing of it. Theſe are not of that ſort, Eph. i. 19, 20. who have experienced 'the exceeding greatneſs of his 'power toward them in believing, according to the 'working of his mighty power: which he wrought in 'Chriſt, when he raiſed him from the dead.' Wild oats ſpring up without any pains about them, but it is not ſo with good grain. So a falſe faith may ſpring from nature, without divine influence; but true faith is the fruit of the mighty power of God. It is the loſs of many, that they come eaſily by their religion, they know not how, but as in a morning dream it coſts them nothing.

It is true grace is a ſeed that ſprings and grows up a man knows not how, Mark iv. 17. But it is one thing to ſpring up without tilling and ſowing; another, to ſpring up out of ground tilled and ſown, one knows not how. The huſbandman knows very well how he comes by his crop, what pains he was at in labouring the ground, though he cannot account for that how the ſeed he ſowed did turn into ſuch a fair breard. So faith ſpringing up in the heart may be myſterious to the believer, as to the time and way of it; who yet knows there was an awakening, humbling, enlightening, and powerfully determining work on him for that end.

Some indeed may be ſanctified from the womb: But that will appear in grace's exerciſe beginning with the exerciſe of reaſon: and Satan will readily aſſault their faith after, that they ſhall find a difficulty in the exerciſe of it.

2. See whence it is that moſt mens faith of the goſpel has no ſanctifying effect on their lives. It is a mere natural faith, and therefore cannot change their natures. If their faith were the produce of a mighty work of divine power on their ſouls, whereby they were quickened, humbled, enlightened, and powerfully determined, it would make a ſuitable change on the whole man. It would be a moſt holy faith, Jude ver. 20. as making holy; produced by the Holy Spirit; and uniting the ſoul to the holy Jeſus, and drawing ſanctifying virtue from him.

3. The ſalvation of ſinners is altogether of free grace. Man can do nothing to purpoſe for himſelf any manner of way. In the law-way, perfect obedience is required: that is certainly beyond his reach. In the goſpel way, faith is required: and that is beyond his power too, Eph. ii 8. By grace are ye ſaved, through faith; and that not of yourſelves; it is the gift of God. The goſpel caſts out a rope to hale ſinners to land; but the ſinner has no hands to lay hold on it: his very faith muſt be wrought in him by the Spirit.

4. Believers have reaſon to be humble, and to acknowledge that whatever difference in the matter of faith and holineſs is betwixt them and others, it is purely owing to the work of the Spirit, not to themſelves, agreeable to what the apoſtle ſaith, 1 Cor. iv. 7. 'Who maketh thee to differ from another? and what haſt thou 'that thou didſt not receive? now, if thou didſt receive 'it, why doſt thou glory, as if thou hadſt not received 'it?' Sinners are all naturally dead in ſin; and free grace ſends the quickening Spirit to one, not to another; that 'he that glories, may glory in the Lord.'

5. The difficulty that ſome find in believing, is rather a good ſign, than an ill one. They were the diſciples that ſaid, Luke xvii. 5. 'Increaſe our faith.' The ſoul that finds a difficulty in believing the goſpel, and is weighted with that ſlowneſs to believe, and looking out to the Spirit of the Lord to help him to believe, is in a hopeful caſe as to the work of faith, Mark ix. 24. The Lord makes the truth of faith, and his own power in working of it, to appear the better, by letting men find the power of their own unbelieving hearts.

USE 2. of Exhortation. Let us look to the Lord for the operation of his mighty power to cauſe us to believe. There is need of this, (1.) For the begetting of true faith in us. Natural powers aſſiſted with the beſt means of external revelation, will not do it. (2.) For the increaſing and exerciſe of faith. New ſupplies are neceſſary for this. And with reſpect to both, both miniſters and people have need to look to the Spirit of God. As the ſhip will make but ſorry progreſs, if the wind blow not: ſo the goſpel will be but ill improven, if the Spirit of the Lord do not blow.

DOCT. The feeling of this power of God is oft-times very rare among the hearers of the goſpel.

We need not inſiſt on the proof of this; our own caſe is a viſible evidence of it. With reſpect to which we may conſider, 1. What are the cauſes of it; and 2. Our duty.

I. What are the cauſes of it? Why is it ſo with us?

1. An old ſtanding quarrel that God has with our mother. The ſins of Manaſſeh were a ſtanding quarrel in the days of his grandſon Joſiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 26. and his great grandſon Jehojakim, chap. xxiv. 3. God is ſaying concerning us as, Hoſ. ii. 4, 5. 'And I will not 'have mercy upon her children; for they be the children of whoredoms. For their mother hath played 'the harlot; ſhe that conceived them hath done ſhamefully; for ſhe ſaid, I will go after my lovers, that give 'me my bread and my water,' &c. Do we aſk, Why the Lord has ſo much withdrawn himſelf in our land? Ah! what wonder is it, his ſoul ſo much abhors a land wherein a covenant ſworn to him with upliſted hands, was broken purpoſely, burnt diſgracefully, his ordinances changed, his ſaints perſecuted and murdered, and his name inſulted and blaſphemed; and theſe things never yet ſufficiently mourned for: I doubt much if ever Scotland ſhall recover her ancient ſpiritual glory, through the preſence of the Lord remarkably and gloriouſly with her, till ſhe go back to God in the way ſhe came away.

2. A preſent courſe of backſliding among all ranks in church and ſtate. In reforming times the Spirit of the Lord returns to a land, Pſal. cii. 16, 17. When the Lord ſhall build up Zion, he ſhall appear in his glory. He will regard the prayer of the deſtitute, and not deſpiſe their prayer. And ſo it was ſeen among our forefathers. oftener than once. Our preſent caſe, in reſpect of the Lord's withdrawing, doth therefore write us a back ſliding generation; whoſe judgment and ſin ſee Iſ. lvii. 17. For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him: I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart. The generation is ſouring apace; the elder ſort loſing the life in religion that ſometime they had; and the younger neither knowing any thing about it, nor caring for it. A ſad evidence of the Spirit's being in a great meaſure gone.

3. Worldlineſs prevailing through long peace. Times of perſecution were times of much of God's preſence: enemies kept profeſſors ſtirring. And the more they afflicted them, the more they grew: the young folk were engaged to embrace a perſecuted religion. But now the generation is ſunk in worldly cares and eaſe; and religion is ſo cheap, that it is quite undervalued. It is as Joſh. xxiv. 31. 'Iſrael ſerved the Lord all the days of 'Joſhua, and all the days of the elders that overlived 'Joſhua, and which had known all the works of the 'Lord, that he had done for Iſrael;' implying, that after the elders were gone too, the generation went away from God, for good and all. Truly, we may ſay in our caſe, Our Joſhuas are away long ago; and our elders that have overlived them, are by this time near away. So the Lord, and his great works he did in the land, are almoſt worn out of ken, and out of mind, with this generation: and the generation that knew not Joſeph and his afflictions, are filling the ſtage faſt, and proclaiming themſelves unconcerned in them; trampling on that religion that others ſuffered for. But let them take heed that ſadder ſufferings be not abiding them, that they will neither get ſhifted, nor be ſo well buckled for. See Judges iii. 1. Now theſe are the nations which the Lord left, to prove Iſrael by them, even as many of Iſrael as had known all the wars of Canaan.

4. Grieving and quenching of the Spirit, Iſa. lxiii. 10. The Spirit is compared to a fire: and when that holy fire is cheriſhed and nouriſhed, a ſmall ſpark may become a great flame: but being neglected, and ſought to be extinguiſhed, it abates. Many have been the methods taken publicly and privately to quench the Spirit in the generation: and they have prevailed far, till that which remains is even ready to die. God who by his own hand has given ſeveral ſharp knocks at the door of ſome ſinners hearts, who yet would not open, has therefore been provoked to go and leave them.

II. What is our duty in ſuch a caſe?

1. Mourn over it: lament the lord's withdrawings, as thoſe who are ſenſible of the great loſs, 1 Sam. vii. 2.

2. Pray much and earneſtly for the return of his powerful preſence to ordinances, Cant. iii. 1.—4. Iſa. lxiv. 7.

3. laſtly, Conſider the word of the goſpel as the word of the eternal God, 1 Theſſ. ii. 13. and labour to walk up to what ye know of the word, John vii. 17. If ye do ſo, ye ſhall feel, that his 'words do good to him 'that walketh uprightly,' Micah ii. 7.

The WAY to LIFE, and the WAY to DESTRUCTION, unfolded:

Several SERMONS preached at Ettrick, in the year, 1731.

MATTH. vii. 13. 14.

Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way which leadeth to deſtruction: and many there be which go in thereat. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth to life, and few there be that find it.

MEN in this life are but on their way, not in their home-houſe, where they are to abide: and it nearly concerns all, ſince life on the one hand, and deſtruction on the other, are before them, having their different gates and ways leading to them, to take heed which gate, which way they chuſe, to enter and go by. Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate, &c.

The ſcope of theſe words is, to remove a great ſtumbling block, againſt ſerious religion, that lies in the way of the world; that is, the great difficulty there is in ſuch a courſe of life, and the very ſmall number of thoſe that follow it. This makes terrible havock in the world, and time after time men fall over this ſtumbling-block. Our Saviour had been preaching his ſermon on the mount, wherein he gives ſuch a view of true and real religion, as could not miſs to be very unacceptable to carnal men. They were ready thereupon to ſay, Theſe were hard ſayings, few will ever fall in with them: the vote of the plurality of men is againſt that way, and points to a far eaſier courſe: and can we imagine, but there is ſafety in the trodden path, and ſhall we forſake it for an overgrown one? To remove this, our Saviour peremptorily determines the wide and beaten road wherein the throng of the world goes, to be the way to deſtruction; and that the way to life is a very narrow one, hard to find, and hard to walk in: and therefore, from the neceſſity there is of obtaining eternal life, and eſcaping eternal deſtruction, at any rate, coſt what it will, exhorts us to enter in at the ſtrait gate.

In the words we have two things.

I. An exhortation and warning, how to direct our courſe for the other world, which this world and life is but the avenue to: Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate, &c. And here we have,

1. The courſe pointed out to us, which is the ſafe one, the ſtrait gate. A gate is properly the port of a city, as Acts xii. 10. or of a court, as Acts iii. 10. But I do not find it uſed for the door of a houſe. So here it is plain there is a metaphor. And ſome think the metaphor is double: namely, (1.) That heaven is here compared to a houſe, into which a ſtrait gate leadeth; (2.) To a city, to which is a narrow way. But if heaven is here compared to a city, hell is ſo too; for there is a wide gate, and a broad way leading to deſtruction, as well as a ſtrait gate, and a narrow way leading unto life. But I think it is not the ſcripture way to ſpeak of hell under the notion of a city. I judge then the metaphor is one: that heaven is here compared to a houſe, as Luke xiii. 25. 'When once the maſter of the houſe is 'riſen up,' &c. as hell alſo is, being held out under the notion of a priſon, pit, dungeon, &c. but ſuch a houſe as has a court before it, where is the gate, which they muſt enter by that would enter into the houſe. So it is plain, that the gate, the way, and the entering in at the gate is in this world, and in this life, Gen. xxviii. 17. And ſo it is in the caſe of hell. Wherefore the godly, true converts, are, as it were, in the outer court of heaven; the ungodly and unregenerate in the outer court of hell; both making forward to their place.

2. A courſe hinted at, which is unſafe. For ſpeaking of the ſtrait gate, he ſuppoſes there is alſo a wide gate: the which alſo he directly teaches after. So there are two gates before us, very different in themſelves, and leading to very different periods.

3. Our duty and intereſt with reſpect to theſe gates. It is to enter in at the ſtrait one. Here the Lord directs our choice as to theſe gates. As ſoon as we begin to diſcern betwixt good and evil, we begin as it were to enter at one of theſe gates: and we will be ſure to chuſe the wide one as eaſieſt, till we hear the voice of Chriſt, and be perſuaded to change our courſe. Satan invites to the wide one, the world throngs in at it, it is moſt agreeable to the fleſh: but our Saviour bids us chuſe the ſtrait one, warns us to beware of the wide one. This is a ſhocking call and warning to nature, hard to digeſt. Who would chuſe to thruſt in by a ſtrait gate, where there were a broad one in which one might have full ſcope? Therefore we have,

II. A reaſon for this exhortation and warning; conſiſting of two parts.

Firſt, That though the other gate is eaſy, and much frequented: yet it is moſt dangerous: and they are fools that prefer the road unto deſtruction, to the road unto life, becauſe the former is eaſier than the latter: for what wiſdom can there be in fondly embracing that preſent eaſe, which muſt end in eternal agony? Here then our Saviour points out the oppoſite gate, the gate oppoſite to the ſtrait one, that we may avoid it: and he points it out together with the way conform thereto. The gate and the way, I think, are not to be conceived as ſeparate things, as a way leading to a city, and a gate leading into a houſe; but as an undivided ſpace; however the gate and the way may be diſtinguiſhed, they are to be conceived as making one undivided ſpace: for our Saviour ſpeaks of them as one, that go in thereat, or by it, not by them.

Some take the way in this metaphor, for the ſpace between the two ſides of the gate: at which rate the gate contains the way. But this makes the gate the immediate entrance into the houſe: which I do not find that word uſed for: for certainly the way lands one in the houſe, according to the text. Beſides, the mention of the way of the ſame nature with the gate, would at this rate be ſuperfluous; for wherever there is a wide gate, there muſt be ſuch a broad ſpace: and where a ſtrait gate, there muſt be ſuch a narrow ſpace. For it is the broadneſs or narrowneſs of the ſpace left betwixt the ſides of the gate, that makes the gate broad or ſtrait. Wherefore I judge the gate and the way are to be conceived as a continuous ſpace, the one terminating in the other.

Some conceive the way to lead to the gate, and ſo to be firſt in order. But this ſtill makes the gate, the gate of the houſe, or the door of it; which we have found cannot be admitted; and our Saviour himſelf diſtinguiſhes theſe two, Luke xiii. 24, 25.

Wherefore I conceive, that, according to the order of the text, the gate is before the way; ſo that entering in by it, we enter into the way; as one going in at the gate of an outer court, and paſſing through it, paſſes on the way into the houſe. And thus ye have the metaphor ſtated; which is neceſſary for underſtanding the mind of the Spirit in the text, as to the ſpiritual doctrine taught thereby. Now here we have,

1ſt, The nature of the gate oppoſite to that we are called to enter in by, and of the way joining it.

1. The gate is a wide one. The entrance into the way to hell is very eaſy. It is a room port and ſpacious, whereat multitudes may throng in, without troubling one another. None will need to thruſt through here, it will admit them with all eaſe; for it is perfectly agreeable to the fleſh, to the natural inclinations. It is ſo wide, that people may cloſe their eyes, run at random, and not miſs it; even young ones may get in at it without difficulty.

2. The way that joins it is broad. When they are through the gate, they are on a way that is a broad one, where they will get full ſcope and elbow-room. They will not find themſelves pent up there, as in a narrow road. There they are not hampered in their natural inclinations, by conſcience, Bible, &c. but get full ſcope for the vanity of their minds, the averſion of their wills to good, and proneneſs to evil, and all diſorderly affections.

2dly, The uſe made of it. It is much frequented; many there be which go in thereat. The wideneſs of the gate, and breadth of the way, affording ſo much eaſe to paſſengers, invite people to it: and it takes ſo, that the throng of the world goes that way. There are many different diſpoſitions of carnal men, theſe contrary one to another: there are covetous and prodigals, profane and formaliſts, &c. but however oppoſite they are one to another, they meet there; and the gate and the way are ſo wide, that there are roads therein for each of them.

3dly, The end of it, and tendency. The end of it is deſtruction, and to that it tends, Gr. leads away. However eaſy the gate and way are, every ſtep taken therein is a ſtep to eternal ruin. So, however inviting the beginning and progreſs in it be, the end of it is frightful. There is a pit at the end of the broad way, which may ſcare men from entering on it.

The ſecond part of the reaſon is, That though the gate we are called to enter in by is indeed difficult, yet it is ſafe, and a happy one.

1ſt, The nature of the gate, and way joining it.

1. The gate is ſtrait. The entry into the way of religion is difficult: it will require a great deal of reſoluteneſs to get in by it. Luke xiii. 24. Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate. One muſt thruſt through it, caſt off their burdens; they will not get in with them on their backs, they muſt bring themſelves into a narrow compaſs, leaving all ſuperfluity of naughtineſs at the entry. The Jewiſh doctors ſpeak of the gate of repentance, the gate of prayer, and the gate of tears. Theſe and the like are indeed the gate we are to enter by; and they are ſtrait.

2. The way joining it is narrow, Gr. afflicted or compreſſed. It is like a ſtrait ſhoe that preſſes the foot. It is not eaſy walking in it, more than in ſuch a ſhoe, or in a way where there is little room for the foot. Afflictions and temptations beſet it, and it leads over the belly of natural inclinations; which march cannot be eaſy.

2dly, The unfrequentedneſs of it; few find it. There is no difficulty to find the wide gate, it glares in the eyes of every paſſenger: and no difficulty of entering by it. But there be few that ſo much as find the ſtrait gate: they ſeek it not; blinded with corrupt luſts, they cannot take it up: and, conſequently, few enter by it; either they perceive it not, or if they do, the ſtraitneſs of it frights them.

3dly, and laſtly, The happy tendency and end of it, notwithſtanding: Gr. which leadeth away into life. It is not a ſtepping into it, but a going to it in a continued courſe. It leads away from the devil, the world and the fleſh; and brings at length through many a weary ſtep into eternal life in heaven. So all the hardſhips of the gate and way is compenſed at length in that end.

Several doctrines are deducible from the words.

DOCT. I. Whoſoever would direct their courſe aright for the other world, muſt neceſſarily enter in by the ſtrait gate.

In diſcourſing this doctrine, I ſhall,
I. Shew what is ſuppoſed in it.
II. Conſider this ſtrait gate.
III. The entering in by it.
IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. There are ſome truths ſuppoſed in this. It ſuppoſes that,

1. All men here are on their journey to the other world, Eccleſ. ix. 10. 'Whatſoever thy hand findeth 'to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor 'device, nor knowledge, nor wiſdom in the grave, 'whither thou goeſt.' This life is but the avenue to the other life, and this world but a thorough-fare to the other world; like a town lying on the road to a city, which paſſengers go through on their journey, Eccleſ. i. 4. However men talk, none have a tack of life. The young are but on their journey, even as the aged. All know what part of their way is paſſed, but none knows what remains.

2. We will get all there at length, one way or other, without all peradventure. There is no doubt of finding a courſe that will carry us thither: all the difficulty is in falling on and ſteering the right courſe, Pſal. xlix. 10. Many have taken journeys which they have never got to the end of; many have been baulked of the end of their intended journey, becauſe they took the wrong way. But right or wrong, we will all get to the other world.

3. There is a wrong courſe for the other world, which we are in hazard of taking. It is a wrong one, as leading, though ſurely enough to the other world, yet to the wrong part of it, the land of death and deſtruction eternal: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat. And we are in hazard of taking that road; for the natural bent of our ſpirits lies that way. Satan is buſy to decoy us into it, and the example of the throng of the world has great influence.

4. Yet there is a right courſe for that world too; a way to it opened, which if we can fall on, it will bring us ſafely to that part of the other world that is the land of eternal light and life. It is true, it was once blocked up; but Chriſt, by his obedience and death, hath opened it, Heb. x. 19, 20. This ſhould be gladly received by us, ſince it is of ſuch a vaſt moment to us.

5. It is poſſible we may fall on this right courſe. It is true, we cannot without ſerious conſideration, and applying ourſelves thereto: we will never ſtumble on it, nor ſnapper on it going at random, as we may on the courſe of deſtruction: but if we will hear the voice of Chriſt our Director, and direct our courſe accordingly, we will not miſs it, Prov. ix. 4, 5, 6. Pſal. cxix. 9.

6. But naturally we are off that courſe: we have our entrance on it to make. Adam, and in him all mankind, was once upon the ſtraight road to life: but there was ſuch a miſt raiſed by the breath of the old ſerpent, that he loſt his way; and ſo we in him were led off the way, Rom. v. 12. As by one man ſin entered into the world, and death by ſin; and ſo death paſſed upon all men, for that all have ſinned. And now in the firſt place we are wandering on the mountains of vanity: there Chriſt finds us as ſtrays, and gives us direction how to direct our courſe, where to enter, what to ſtand off from.

7. The gate we muſt enter by, is a ſtrait one, not eaſily found, hard to enter by. The courſe to hell, is wide at the beginning of it, ſtrait at the end, exceeding ſtrait, Rom. ii. 9. Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil, &c. The courſe to heaven is ſtrait at the firſt, and broad at the end, Rev. xxi. 7. 'He 'that overcometh ſhall inherit all things, and I will be 'his God, and he ſhall be my ſon.' Happy they that digeſt the ſtraitening at firſt! they are in the way to eternal liberty, Rom. viii. 21.

8. laſtly, There is no gate but the ſtrait gate, to enter on that courſe by. There is no choice here, for heaven: for however men may imagine wide gates to it, the ſcripture acknowledges only a ſtrait gate leading to it; ſo that he who cannot endure to think to be abridged of his liberty, or to thruſt in by a ſtrait gate, muſt give over thoughts of life in heaven.

II. We ſhall conſider this ſtrait gate. And here we ſhall ſhew,
1*ſt*, What that ſtrait gate is.
2*dly*, What makes it ſo ſtrait.

Firſt, What is that ſtrait gate? According to what was ſaid in the explication of the words, it is the entrance into religion, whereby men become really religious, John x. 9. I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he ſhall be ſaved, &c. Heb. iv. 3. For we which have believed, do enter into reſt, &c. This is converſion unto God, by faith in Jeſus Chriſt, Hoſ. xiv. 1. compared with John xiv. 6. Hence the door of faith, Acts xiv. 27. is expounded of converſion, chap. xv. 3. This is the gate we muſt enter by. For,

1. This is the gate of the outer court of heaven, which one having entered through, he is immediately in the court of heaven, Heb. iv. 3. forecited. And he is ſo in the court of it, that he cannot miſs it in end, Phil. i. 6. No converts nor true believers can periſh, more than one can pluck out of Chriſt's hand what he minds to hold, John x. 28. And therefore they are reckoned fellow-citizens with the ſaints, Eph. ii. 19. making up one family with thoſe above, chap. iii. 15. For the one are but within the houſe, the other are in the court of the houſe.

2. This is the gate by which men are ſet on the way to heaven, and begin their journey thitherward. They that have paſſed through this gate, are travellers to Emmanuel's land, now fairly upon the road, Cant. viii. 5. with the ſmell of heaven about them, chap. iii. 6. They are come out of Egypt, they have paſſed through the red ſea, and they are now in the wilderneſs, in their way to the promiſed land.

3. This is the gate that looks directly to the door of heaven, and by the way lands them in it. As the wide gate looks directly to hell, and lands the paſſengers there, if they go forward: ſo the entrance into real religion, by converſion, through faith, looks to heaven, and lands the paſſengers there.

4. This is the gate by which men turn their backs on the wide gate and broad way; for it is juſt oppoſite to them, Heb. iv. 10. Men may ſhift about from one way and courſe of life to another: but till they enter this gate, they are ſtill in the broad way to deſtruction, Matth. xviii. 3. where there is room enough to ſhift to oppoſite ſides. But once entered here, they are fairly ſeparated from the world lying in wickedneſs, and joined in with the family of God, 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18. and they ſhall never mix with them again, Pſal. xii. 7. 'Thou ſhalt keep 'them, O Lord, thou ſhalt preſerve them from this generation for ever.'

Now, this gate is a ſtrait gate. The entrance into a courſe of ungodlineſs is not ſtrait; nay, the entrance into a form of godlineſs is not ſtrait; men may be got in there by the gentle bow of good education, like Joaſh; by a common eaſy work of the Spirit on their affections by the goſpel, Matth. xiii. 20, 21. by the current of example running ſtrong that way at a time, like Simon, Acts viii. 12, 13. The ſtraiteſt entrance into it, is by an abortive law work, as the Iſraelites, Exod. xx. 18, 19. But even that is ſo wide, that it does not preſs the unholy heart to purity, Deut. v. 27. 29.

But the entrance into real religion by a ſound converſion, is a ſtrait gate, in theſe reſpects.

1. It is ſo ſtrait, that it is not eaſily taken up by the eye, Matth vii. 14. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Moſt part of the world never notice it, more than if there were not ſuch a gate at all. How many live joyfully year after year, never once troubling their heads with the queſtion, What converſion is? whether they be as yet converted or not? When the Spirit of the Lord begins to deal with others, they miſtake it for melancholy fancies. Yea, many times the parties themſelves do not know what it is that is dealing with them, for a time: and it remains ſtill a myſtery in great meaſure, John iii. 8. Maſters in Iſrael this day own it not; but inſtead thereof ſet up the reforming of virtuous habits, and applying to the practice of virtue, with as little ſucceſs towards reforming the generation as there is truth in the principle: though, if we had it, it would not carry us beyond the length of ſome Pagan moraliſts.

2. It is hard entering into it at all. Many ſeeing it at a diſtance, are frighted from it by the ſtraitneſs of it, John vi. 60. 66. Many entered actually, came out again, and made their eſcape from it, unable to bear the preſſure of the very firſt entry, like Felix, Acts xxiv. 25. who trembled at Paul's preaching, and ſaid to him, Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient ſeaſon, I will call for thee. Sound conviction of the ſin of our life and nature, with the miſery we are therefore liable to, will bring a man to his knees, and ſtraiten and preſs him ſore: like thoſe, Acts ii. 37. who were pricked in their heart, and ſaid, Men and brethren, what ſhall we do? Many a man in the entry of it comes to think, that he will never get through, but that he will certainly die in the birth.

3. The paſſage through it is difficult. Sometimes it is ſhorter, ſometimes longer; and often does mens want of wiſdom make it longer than otherwiſe it would be, Hoſ. xiii 13. But ſhort or long, it is difficult for the time.

(1.) For men cannot get the ſcope there that they were wont to have. They are abridged of their ſinful liberty. Hence they give many a greedy look back to the fleſh pots of Egypt; which they would actually turn back to, were there not a ſtrong hand puſhing them forward, 2 Theſſ i. 11.

(2.) They cannot get up their head there; but muſt as it were creep through on their knees. There is a power from heaven that brings down the man from his former heights. The converting word to Zaccheus was a humbling word, Come down, Luke xix 5. And if there was no myſtery in theſe words, but they only looked to his coming down from the tree, whence aroſe that mighty change immediately wrought on him? Nay converting work is ſoul humbling work, Acts ix. 6. 2 Cor. x. 4, 5. And they will never get up their head, till they be through at God in Chriſt by faith, Acts xv. 11.

(3.) They are preſſed there, to the laying aſide of all their ſuperfluities that they were wont to carry along with them, James i. 21. There is no room in the gate for them, and theſe too. Chriſt ſays, If ye take me, let theſe go away. Hence the wiſe merchant ſells all, and buys the pearl. It preſſes not only the purging of the life of ſome ſins, but all ſins, even the darling idol among the reſt; and not of the life only, but the heart too, Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4.

Secondly, What makes this gate, the entrance into religion, ſo ſtrait?

1. The mighty contrariety of our nature to it, Rom. viii 7. The carnal mind is enmity againſt God; for it is not ſubject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Take a fiſh out of the water into the open fields, it is reſtleſs: it pants as if it were pent up in the narroweſt ſpace. There is a ſtrong propenſity in our nature to evil, and averſion to God and goodneſs: ſo that much of the power of converting grace is employed in making the ſoul willing, Pſal. cx. 3. And when it is made willing, it is preſently through the gate; the main work is done, the ſoul readily comes to God through Chriſt.

2. The various luſts hanging about the ſoul. The gate is room enough for receiving of the man: but it is ſtrait and pinching to him, when he comes with all theſe about him.

(1.) There is a variety of theſe luſts unmortified about every unrenewed man, Tit. iii. 3. They hang about him like a numerous family to be fed, crying, Give, give. When the man comes to the gate, he finds it ſtrait; for there is an old man with him, that is to be put off, which there is no acceſs for into the houſe, Eph. iv. 22. But they are loth to part.

(2.) Theſe luſts are of a ſwelling nature at all times. They are the ill weeds in the ground of the corrupt heart, that wax well. He brings with him rude deſires, that would require much room, Hab. ii. 5. And therefore becauſe they muſt be preſſed till they be contracted, and brought to one for all, the gate feels ſtrait, Pſal. xxvii. 4.

(3.) They ſwell in a particular manner when one is entering the gate, Rom. vii. 9. 'I was alive without 'the law once; but when the commandment came, ſin 'revived, and I died.' The law cloſely applied to an unrenewed heart, has an irritating power upon it; that is, luſts, that, in time of ſecurity, ly dormant, awaken for their own defence, when there is an attack made on them to throw them out. They lift up themſelves then, and move like an ant's neſt ſtirred and diſturbed; and like a furious horſe, that rages the more that he is checked.

3. The keen oppoſition made by Satan to the ſoul's entry. When the ſoul begins to entertain thoughts of turning to God, hell is alarmed, and its forces brought out to oppoſe it with all vigour, Rev. xii. 12. They whom he diſturbed not, while his goods were at peace, are then dogged with temptations, and all oars are laid to the water to row them againſt the ſtream that flows from the Spirit of God to carry them into real religion. Satan plies them with,

(1.) The force of the example of the multitude, Acts xxviii. 22. He preſſes them with the odiouſneſs of being ſingular in the world; that if there were ſuch danger in the broad way, it could not be ſo throng; that with the multitude there is ſafety, and that if it be ill with them, it will be ill with many. That failing, he plies the temptation,

(2.) Of time enough after; what needs to turn to ſuch a ſtrict courſe ſo ſoon? The young get, by the ſleight of hell, a fair broad view of many years they have to come, wherein they may get all done at leiſure, in time enough: and by that means the time of youth is given up with many to the broad way; the entering on religion in earneſt being put off, till once they be ſettled in the world. When that is come, then they find they have another thing to care for, for that time, Luke xiv. 20.; and it is put off to old age, which moſt part never ſee. But if they do, cuſtom in ſin has taken away the ſenſe of it; and it is put off to a death bed: and if they get it there, the toſs of ſickneſs renders them incapable; or when their time comes at laſt, the wind from heaven riſes not; ſo they ſink in the harbour, never get away to the gate. But if that will not do,

(3.) They are plied with their being over-long a-doing, and that the time is paſt, the day of grace over; to drive them to deſpair like Judas. Satan will run with them from one extreme to another; and from defender of the ſecure, he will turn accuſer of the awakened. He will preach to them then the juſtice of God, to perſuade them he will be inexorable: he will muſter up their ſins before them, to render them hopeleſs; and ſhew them their repeated ſlights of Chriſt, to bear them in hand that they have forfeited the benefit of his mediation.

(4.) laſtly, And for that cauſe he will dog them with temptations to ſin, more than ordinary; that finding corruption more ſtrong and prevalent than before, they may be brought to quit hopes of ever obtaining the victory.

4. The enmity of the world againſt religion, 1 Cor. xvi. 9. 'There are many adverſaries.' Theſe are ſet up to nip the work of heaven in the bud, and to mar any good work as it begins to appear, Cant. ii. 15. The carnal world is the great agent for Satan; and carries on his work in this caſe, by giving inſtruction cauſing to err, by force, or by fraud, by mockeries, or by ſlight healing of the wounded.

5. laſtly, The nature of the thing makes it a ſtrait gate. A law work, cannot miſs to be ſtraitening to a ſinner, Conviction of ſin, of heart, lip, life, and nature, cannot but preſs ſore: the Spirit of bondage girding the ſoul with the cords of death, and the curſe of the broken law, makes a ſtrait entry, Rom. viii. 15. And it will be a hard pull for an awakened, law condemned, and ſelf condemned creature, to gripe and hold the gripe of the promiſe of grace in Chriſt.

III. We ſhall conſider, the entering in by the ſtrait gate. And here three things muſt be ſpoke to.

1ſt, What they enter into by it.

2dly, How they enter in.

3dly, What this entering bears.

Firſt, What do they enter into by the ſtrait gate? They enter by it,

1. Immediately into the narrow way of the practice of religion, in a holy life, and walk ſuited to the goſpel, Acts ii. 41, 42. There it is the ſtrait gate ſets them. How long their way may be from the gate to the houſe, they know not; but once entered they hold on,

(1.) In a new road, a quite new one, 2 Cor. v. 17. Therefore if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt away, behold, all things are become new. They enter into a new road they never travelled before; where they have a new rule to walk by, new company to walk with, a new guide to follow after, a new ſcope and end to aim at. And thus are they entered as it were into a new world, being no more of this world, though in it.

(2) In a ſafe road, however unacquainted with it they were before, Prov. i. 33. Whoſo hearkeneth unto me, ſhall dwell ſafely, and ſhall be quiet from fear of evil. Before they entered the ſtrait gate, they were in a moſt dangerous road, however eaſy and ſafe it appeared, Prov. ix. 17, 18.; but then they are entered into a ſafe one, however dangerous it appears. It is covered above, that no ſtorms of wrath can fall there; and what riſes from below, they will get ſafely through, Cant. iii. 11.

2. Mediately, they enter by it into heaven. That is the houſe the ſtrait gate looks to: which none can come into but by that gate; and all that come in by that gate, do certainly reach at length, Matth. xviii. 3. Acts iii. 19. Thus entering by the ſtrait gate, they enter at length.

(1.) Into a room houſe, John xiv. 2. 'In my Father's 'houſe are many manſions.' How ſtrait ſoever the gate is, there is no ſtraitening in the houſe. While they that took the wide gate, ſhall when they come to their houſe, be ſtraitened like priſoners crammed together in a pit; they that enter the ſtrait gate, ſhall in their houſe walk at liberty in white.

(2.) Into a houſe of all eaſe and fulneſs, Rev. xxi. 7. There will be nothing wanting there for their ſatisfaction. If it was with much anxiety, fear, and ſorrow they got through the ſtrait gate; yet there will not be the leaſt veſtige of theſe things there, Rev. xxi. 4. God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there ſhall be no more death, neither ſorrow, nor crying, neither ſhall there be any more pain: for the former things are paſſed away: but they will, by entering the ſtrait gate, enter into joy: whereas others, by entering the wide one, ſhall enter into eternal anguiſh.

Secondly, How do they enter in by this gate? They enter in by it,

1. Coming out of themſelves, Matth. xvi. 24. God by his Spirit ſets fire to their neſt, and brings them out there. He opens their eyes in conviction, pricks them to the heart in compunction, brings them to the duſt in contrition and humiliation; till he overturns the foundations of the houſe of their former reſt, and leaves them not a foot of their own to ſtand on. They are made to deſpair of ſalvation by themſelves. Their former gain is counted loſs, Phil. iii. 7, 8.; and they are carried off their own bottom, for juſtification, ſanctification, and eternal life in heaven.

2. Coming to Chriſt in the free promiſe of the goſpel by faith, John x. 9. Many think this an eaſy ſtep: but ſo far from it, that if there is not an arm of omnipotence to thruſt the ſoul forward, it will never make that part of the ſtrait gate, Iſa. liii. 1. Mean while the Spirit of God deals with the enterer rationally; ſo that ſeeing all refuge elſe failed, he cannot go back, but thruſts forward to Chriſt in the free promiſe, Jer. ii. 22, 23. like the drowning man griping haſtily to the rope at all adventures.

3. Coming unto God by Chriſt, Hoſ. xiv. 1. compared with John xiv. 6. This is converſion, which true coming unto Chriſt always terminates in, Heb. vii. 25. For man having by ſin turned away from God as his God, Lord, Lawgiver, and Maſter; the Mediator Chriſt was ſent, to bring us back to him again, 1 Pet. iii. 18. 'For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, the 'juſt for the unjuſt, that he might bring us to God.' And by faith in Chriſt we do come back to him, to live to him, and for him, Acts xx. 21 This ſhews the faith of many in Chriſt to be but pretended: while by it they do not return to God as their Lord and Lawgiver, to live to and for him, Matth. xiii. 20, 21.

Thirdly, What does this entering bear which we muſt ſet ourſelves for?

1. A diſcerning of the gate, the ſtrait gate, Mat vii. 14. Many had travelled over that ſpot of ground called Bethel, Gen. xxviii. who never diſcerned the gate of heaven there; but Jacob ſaw it, verſ. 17. So, many go up and down the world, come to ordinances, where the gate is pointed out; and yet are never able to take it up. Nay, that gate is to us like the well to Hagar, Gen. xxi. never ſeen by us till the Lord open our eyes. O pray, that God may diſcover this gate to you.

2. A finding of an abſolute neceſſity of entering by it, Luke xv. 17. We will never enter there, while we are careleſs and indifferent about our ſtate in the other world; while we have the folly to think, that we may get a wide gate to heaven. This fooliſh imagination ruins thouſands: What need they ſtraiten themſelves entering by the ſtrait gate, while a more room one will do as well? But ye muſt be convinced, that the ſtrait gate, and it only, is that by which you can ever get there.

3. Reſoluteneſs for a happy arrival in the other world at any rate, Matth. xi. 12. The kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. Till once men come to this, they will never enter the ſtrait gate; or if they do, they will never go through. The enterers are all ſuch as muſt be forward, coſt what it will: becauſe they ſee they are ruined for ever, if they get not forward, Luke xv. 17, 18.

4. A contentment to forego our preſent eaſe, in order to our getting ſafe to the other world, Matth. xvi. 24. If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me. This life is appointed of God for our trial with hardſhip and labour, and the place of reſt for the labourers is in the other. But O how hard is it to bring ſinners to be content to forego their eaſe for the preſent! They hang by the ſoft eaſy courſe, till their neſt be fired, and their bed of ſloth be ſtrawed with thorns and briars, that there is no reſt there any longer, Prov. vi. 9, 10. Acts ii. 37. But till once they are brought content to ſacrifice their eaſe, there is no entering.

5. A reſolute entering into the gate, Luke xv. 18. However ſtrait and uncouth it appears, they will not be frighted from it. They dare no more meddle with the wide gate, conſidering whereto it leads. The ſoul in this caſe is like the ſlayer fleeing to the city of refuge, who whatever difficulties be in the way, breaks through them, till he be within the gates of it.

6. laſtly, A reſolute going through it, without turning back from it, as Felix did, Acts xxiv. 25. or ſticking in it as Ephraim, Hoſ. xiii. 13. However ſtrait the gate is, the true enterer will thruſt forward, ſtriving againſt all difficulties, and reſtleſs till he get forward to God in Chriſt, Luke xiii. 24. For he ſees that till he be there, there is no ſafety, how eaſy ſoever the blind world is.

Use 1. Of Information. This informs us, that,

1. No body walking careleſly, inconſiderately, and at all adventures, will ever get a ſafe arrival that way in the other world. They may go to the pit that way; for ſleeping or waking they go with the ſtream, and it will carry them down; but the courſe to heaven is rowing againſt the ſtream, that will never do at that rate. Wherefore there is need of conſideration, and working out our ſalvation, Phil. ii. 12.

2. They muſt begin well who would end well; and enter by the ſtrait gate, who would lodge for ever in the room and ſpacious houſe above. It is the narrow way that leads to life, the ſtrait gate that enters into the narrow way. To expect life then without entering by the ſtrait gate, is a vain thing: it is in effect, to think that holding the courſe to hell in this life, we ſhall for all that land in heaven at death. But Gal. vi. 7. be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatſoever a man ſoweth, that ſhall he alſo reap. An ungodly life will make a wretched end.

3. There is a neceſſity to beſtir ourſelves, lay ſalvation to heart, and ſee what courſe we take for the other world. The ſecure ſinner muſt awake, leſt he ſleep the ſleep of death, 1 Cor. xv. 34. 'Awake to righteouſneſs 'and ſin not.' The careleſs, thoughtleſs about eternity, muſt begin to look to himſelf, that he do not periſh, Prov. vi. 9. 'How long wilt thou ſleep, O ſluggard? 'when wilt thou ariſe out of thy ſleep?' There is a ſtrait gate ſet before us, which we will not get into ſleeping: and if we get not into it, and through it too, we are gone.

4. There is an abſolute neceſſity of converſion for every one of us; for that is the ſtrait we muſt enter by, if ever we come to heaven, Matth. xviii. 3. Except ye be converted, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. If there is not a work of converting grace wrought on us, we will never get to glory. We are ſo totally corrupted by nature, that if there is not ſuch a change made on us as amounts to a new birth, we cannot ſee heaven, John iii. 5, 6. 'Except a man be born of water, 'and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom 'of God.' We are ſo far off the way naturally, that we muſt be converted.

5. They do but deceive themſelves, who imagine they are in the narrow way to life, who are yet ſtrangers to a work of converſion. This is an entering into religion, without coming in by the door, but climbing up ſome other way. And to ſuch may that be applied, John x. 1. 'He that entereth not by the door into the ſheep'fold, but climbeth up ſome other way, the ſame is a 'thief and a robber.' It is lamentable, that ſo few appear to betake themſelves to the way of religion; and that among the few who do, there are ſo many who miſs or neglect the firſt ſtep. Many come too eaſily by their religion, and ſo fares of it, it comes to no good account in end.

6. laſtly, Vain are their pretences to religion, and vain are their hopes of heaven, who are ſo prejudged at religious ſtrictneſs, that they cannot endure it, nor think of being bound up to it. What is that, but to be utterly averſe to the ſtrait gate and narrow way? And where is ſuch people's religion for the preſent, and what hopes can they have of heaven for the future? Will the courſe of the world, the wide way, ever bring them thither? Will men pretend to be followers of Chriſt, and yet be lothers of religious ſtrictneſs? Or will they think to be partakers of heaven, and yet not be followers of Chriſt?

Use 2. of Reproof. It ſerves to reprove,

1. Thoſe who are in no concern to direct their courſe aright for the other world. And ſuch are all they who make no inquiry for the ſtrait gate, nor trouble their heads about it. It is an evidence they are not for Zion, Jer. l. 4, 5. It had been better for theſe they had never heard the goſpel; for at this rate they ſlight the warning Chriſt has given; they neglect the gate he is pointing out to them; and they ſay in effect, What needs all this ado about the other world, and the ſafe gate to it?

2. Thoſe who keep by the wide gate deſpiſing the ſtrait one, and hope to do well enough in the end too. Truly this is to hope that the Bible will be found a fable; and all the warnings of danger to ſinners but mere ſcarecrows. Such may read their doom, Deut. xxix. 19, 20. 'And if it come to paſs when he heareth the words 'of this curſe, that he bleſs himſelf in his heart, ſaying, 'I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination 'of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt: the Lord 'will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the Lord, 'and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man, and all 'the curſes that are written in this book, ſhall lie upon 'him, and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under heaven.' And in end they will find it not a ſound of big words, but ſuch as will preſs them down for ever.

3. Thoſe who will neither enter themſelves, nor ſuffer others ſo far as they can hinder them, Matth. xxiii. 13. There is a generation of enemies to the ſtrait gate, who do what they can to keep others from it, as well as themſelves, and ſo vent the malignity of their diſpoſition againſt religion. They lay all the hindrances in their way that they can; take all opportunities to diſcourage them in any attempts that way; they lay out themſelves to tempt them to evil, and lead them into ſin. Alas! whoſe work is it ye do, when ye ſo do? Is it God's work, Chriſt's work? Surely ye cannot imagine that. Nay, it is Satan's work, who himſelf is buſy at it, whom you ſerve: and your reward will be accordingly. Particularly.

4. Mockers of religious exerciſe, who make a jeſt of ſeriouſneſs and ſerious perſons. We are warned, that in the laſt days there ſhould be ſuch, 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. Knowing this firſt, that there ſhall come in the laſt days ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation. Obſerve of them that they are profane: for none but thoſe of very profane ſpirits will dare to jeſt on ſacred things. They are atheiſtical: for none that have the belief of the being of a God to judge them, and of the Bible's being really his word, will be a ſcoffer at others for their regarding it. O that ſuch would conſider their danger, the bands that are abiding them for their looſeneſs, Iſa. xxviii. 22. 'Be not ye mockers, leſt 'your bands be made ſtrong.'

5. laſtly, Thoſe who being employed to direct others what courſe to take for the other world, make no conſcience of directing them to the ſtrait gate. They call to men continually, Do, do this and the other duty, exerciſe this and the other virtue, without endeavouring to lead them to Chriſt in the firſt place, and the great duty of believing in him: as if men needed nothing but application or plying themſelves to make them Chriſtians. But converſion to God by his Spirit is overlooked: and vital union with Chriſt, the neceſſary ſpring of all holy obedience, John xv. 5. is neglected, Eph. ii. 10.

USE 3. of Exhortation. Then, as ever ye would direct your courſe aright for the other world, enter ye in by the ſtrait gate. I ſhall branch out this in two particulars.

Firſt, As ever ye would direct your courſe aright for the other world, lay aſide your prejudices againſt religious ſtrictneſs: lay your account with, and peremptorily ſet yourſelves for thruſting through the ſtrait gate into the narrow way, that ſo ye may get to heaven, bidding farewel to the wide way of the world. This exhortation is,

1. For the young that are ſetting out in the world. I would have you to ſet out in the mean time for the other world too; becauſe, whether you do it or not, ye are really going thither; and how ſoon you may be there, you know not. And pray take heed how you direct your courſe at that time of your day; for accordingly as ye begin then, ye will readily hold on after, Prov. xxii. 6. 'Train up a child in the way he ſhould go; and 'when he is old, he will not depart from it.' O have a care that prejudices againſt religious ſtrictneſs get not a ſeat in you; but be reconciled to it, and ſet to it in earneſt.

2. For the aged that are gone out into the world. I would have you to ſet out at length for the other world alſo, directing your courſe aright thither; the rather that ye are far on already in the way to it, and for the moſt part off the right way as yet. It is high time you were begun to change your courſe, leſt if ye go on longer, ye harden in an ill courſe without remedy.

Many are the prejudices both old and young have againſt religious ſtrictneſs, the conceited hardſhip of it, the ſingularity and unfaſhionableneſs of it, and many others I will not now ſtand upon. But pray, let what our Saviour here advances againſt them, ſerve to ſtrike the bottom out of them all; that is, the abſolute neceſſity of it. In vain do men diſpute about a way to a place, and object againſt it as rough, &c. when there is no other way to it: for in that caſe it is plain, they muſt either take the way as it is, or give over thoughts of the place.

Now our Lord has told us, The gate is ſtrait; and I would therefore have you to ſet yourſelves for it, ſtrait as it is; and peremptorily to lay your account with enduring hardneſs now, in firm hope that ſo you may ſafely arrive at length in the other world, where ye ſhall for ever walk at liberty. Bid an eternal farewel then to the wide gate and way, and be reſolute to enter and go through the ſtrait one.

Motive 1. All prejudices you entertain againſt religious ſtrictneſs, are in favour of the corruption of your nature: and does that need any thing to feed and ſtrengthen it? 2 Theſſ. iii. 12. Do but impartially conſider any one prejudice you have againſt it; and you will find it is in favour of ſome one luſt or other, and that it is a ſcreen to defend it, Rom. i. 18. compared with Jer. ii. 25. It is the corrupt affection biaſſeth the judgment, and ſets men on palliating licentious courſes, and unfavourably repreſenting religious ſtrictneſs. And judge ye, what muſt be the iſſue of feeding the corruption of our nature which is to be mortified.

2. All the difficulty in religious ſtrictneſs ariſeth only from corruption in ourſelves and others, Rom. vii. 14. 'For we know that the law is ſpiritual; but I am carnal, 'ſold under ſin.' Religious ſtrictneſs is in heaven carried to its utmoſt pitch, Rev. xxi. 27. 'There ſhall in 'no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, neither 'whoſoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lye; but 'they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.' Yet there they are at perfect liberty, Rom viii. 21. Why? becauſe corruption is perfectly purged out. Learn therefore, that any uneaſineſs there is in religious ſtrictneſs, the blame of it is not to be laid at religion's door, but our own. Religious ſtrictneſs grates only on,

(1.) Our own corrupt hearts; as the ſhoe ſtraitens and pains the ſore foot, and cannot be ſuffered on it, though it was very eaſy while the foot was whole, Rom. vii. 23, 24. Though we would think it intolerable to be held any conſiderable time in the water, the fiſh are not at all ſtraitened in it; for it is agreeable to their nature: and ſo would the way of holineſs be to a holy heart. Now, a courſe of life grating on the corruptions of our hearts, is even as neceſſary for our partaking of Chriſt's eternal ſalvation, as Chriſt's courſe of ſuffering in his life and death was for the purchaſe of it, Gal. v. 24. 'They that are Chriſt's, have crucified the fleſh, 'with the affections and luſts.'

(2.) A corrupt ſinful world, Rev. xi. 10. They cannot endure it: they wonder what ſhould carry any unto it, and they are apt to reproach one for it, 1 Pet. iv. 4. Wherein they think it ſtrange that you run not with them to the ſame exceſs of riot, ſpeaking evil of you. No great wonder the dempſter's voice grate on the malefactor's ears; for he pronounces his doom: and ſo the godly by their religious ſtrictneſs pronounce doom againſt the wicked, Heb. xi. 7. But why ſhould we care to pleaſe the world lying in wickedneſs, in thoſe things that will ſink them in ruins? or ſeek to walk with them with whom we would not lodge with at the journey's end?

3. The greateſt difficulty in religious ſtrictneſs, is at firſt entering into it. It is with religion as with other uſeful and profitable courſes of life, trades, or employments: the greateſt hardſhip is at the beginning; afterwards it becomes more eaſy through uſe, Matth. xi. 29, 30. May be ſome's experience may contradict this: it is a good while ſince they attempted, and it is as hard this day as then. What is the reaſon of that? Ye are ay but beginning, ye do not hold cloſe to it. So it fares with you as with children at the ſchool, who being now and then kept at home, learning is a conſtant pain to them; whereas it turns eaſy to them that are held cloſe to it, Prov. ii. 1.——6. Therefore be peremptory, and reſolute, and conſtant: and of a truth it will be otherwiſe.

4. Whether would you chuſe your eternal ſtate with the religiouſly ſtrict, or with the more gay and worldlike part of mankind, that walk more looſely? No doubt that will be the language of every heart, Numb. xxiii. 10. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my laſt end be like his. Then pray live with them, and walk with them. If ye like their end, lay by your prejudices againſt their way, which they walk in unto it. If ye have a horror of the end of them that walk looſely, and yet like their way beſt, ye will be ſelf condemned. If ye would be eaſt, ye would travel with the company going that way, not with that going weſt.

5. laſtly, Religious ſtrictneſs is the only courſe in which any will get to heaven: the looſe courſe will land men in deſtruction. The text is very expreſs; and it makes no exception of great or ſmall, rich or poor, young or old. There is no body, but will be ſtraitened ſometime or other; it is impoſſible that any ſhould get always walked at liberty. Chuſe ye then whether ye will take your ſtraitening before or after death, for a time or for eternity.

If ye imagine, that ſome were far from religious ſtrictneſs, that yet got to heaven at length; conſider, then they were brought to repentance for their neglect of it. And will ye follow a pattern, that thoſe who gave it bitterly repented of? If ye do, ye muſt follow it out in repentance too, elſe ye are ruined. And is it a wiſe courſe, to be laying up matter for repentance, and to ſtand off from a courſe, the neglecting whereof ye muſt repent or ye periſh? Pray conſider that repentance will be more eaſy now, than on the brink of eternity; and it will be more ſure too, for it is what very rarely is reached at that time of day.

As for ſome directions or helps, I offer only theſe two.

1. Set before you, in the firſt place, the death of Chriſt for your juſtification and reconciliation with God, deliverance from the curſe and eternal wrath: and by faith flee in under the covert of his blood, for theſe effects. Without theſe men may reach civility, the moraliſt his practice of virtue, the legaliſt a form of godlineſs; but no true religious ſtrictneſs, more than the curſed fig-tree could ever bear fruit after, Luke i. 74, 75.

2. Set before you the life of Chriſt in the world, as the rule, the reaſon, and the endearment of religious ſtrictneſs. Every Chriſtian ſhould ſet before him the life of Chriſt, and often view it: for it is,

(1.) The rule of religious ſtrictneſs, the example and pattern we are to copy after, John xiii. 15. 1 Pet. ii. 21. 1 John ii. 6. Here it is we have the perfect draught of religious ſtrictneſs. The ſtricteſt of the ſaints have had their out of the way ſteps: vain men have pieces of ſtrictneſs, which is not according to this pattern, being nothing but the product of their blind and proud minds. But in the example of Chriſt, we have a perfect pattern of religious ſtrictneſs: for in him we ſee what is that ſort of walk really pleaſing to God, in as much as we ſee there, how God himſelf become man did walk. And when he has condeſcended to this, will we not eye it?

(2.) The reaſon. We have the naked divine authority, call, and command to religious ſtrictneſs, in the law. In the life of Chriſt we have that authority inforced by his own example, obliging us the more forcibly unto it. The example of ſuperiors is an additional law, binding the inferiors to conformity. Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is the ſupreme, the moſt high God, as well as he is man, and ſince as he was man, he was religiouſly ſtrict; certainly for that very reaſon we ſhould be ſo too.

(3.) The endearment. How forcible is that exhortation to religious ſtrictneſs? Eph. v. 1, 2. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children: and walk in love as Chriſt alſo hath loved us, and hath given himſelf for us, an offering and a ſacrifice to God for a ſweet ſmelling ſavour. There is no ſuch powerful remedy againſt prejudices at religious ſtrictneſs, as the believing conſideration of the death of Chriſt. Is it poſſible that faith's view of the death of Chriſt ſhould leave us indifferent to, and far more averſe to the life of Chriſt? No, ſure; 2 Cor. v. 14, 15. ‘For the love of Chriſt conſtraineth us, becauſe we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead: and that he died for all, that they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him which died for them, and roſe again.’ Let your conſciences be ſprinkled with his blood, and your hearts will be knit to religious ſtrictneſs. But alas! it is want of faith in his death, that makes us ſo indifferent to the imitation of him in his religious ſtrictneſs.

Secondly, As ever ye would direct your courſe aright for the other world, be concerned, that, in the firſt place, ye may be truly converted; that ye may be found converts in the firſt place, entering the ſtrait gate by a work of thorough converſion wrought on you.

Motive 1. Conſider the neceſſity of converſion to God. It is abſolutely neceſſary by our Saviour's declaration, Matth. xviii. 3. ‘Except ye be converted, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven:’ and by the nature of things too; for how is it poſſible they ſhould walk with God in the narrow way, who have not entered by the ſtrait gate, being once truly turned to God? This is the beginning of the Chriſtian courſe, without which it is impoſſible there ſhould be any progreſs in it, or happy end thereof.

Mot. 2. To think to be truly religious, without being once true converts, is a vain thing, a deluſion, becauſe a contradiction. It is a building on the earth without a foundation, Luke vi. 49. which can turn to no good account in end. True religion is to walk in Chriſt; but one muſt firſt be in him, Col. ii. 6. ‘As ye have therefore received Chriſt Jeſus the Lord, ſo walk ye in him.’ It is to walk in newneſs of life, but we muſt be new creatures firſt; Rom. vi. 4. It is to walk with God, but we muſt firſt be converted to him.

Mot. 3. Without it all your religion will amount to no more but a form of godlineſs, deſtitute of the power, 2 Tim. iii. 5. It will be but as a body without the ſoul; and all your performances will be but bodily exerciſe, that will profit little. For God is a Spirit; and they that worſhip him, muſt worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth, John iv. 24. But how can that be without converſion? Phil. iii. 3. ‘For we are the circumciſion, which worſhip God in ſpirit.’ Though the wall is fair plaiſtered, it is looſe in the heart; and ſo makes but a fair ſhew, like a whited ſepulchre.

Mot. 4. laſtly, The want of it is a ſpring of apoſtaſy, 1 John ii. 19. ‘They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifeſt that they were not all of us.’ How many do for a time bloſſom fair in religion, who at length totally wither? They give their names to Chriſt, pretending to have ſeparated from the world; but afterwards they prove deſerters, and get away to the enemy's camp. Why truly, if they had ever by ſound converſion come out from among them, they had never gone back, Pſal xii. 7. Thou ſhalt keep them, O Lord, thou ſhalt preſerve them from this generation for ever. But the ax of converting grace never went to the root of the tree with them; wherefore, though ſome branches of ſin were lopt off, the root of bitterneſs untouched, ſpreads again. For your help here, labour to impreſs your hearts with concern to have a good foundation laid. And,

1. Think it not enough to reform your lives, and to cleanſe the outward man. Remember religion is the hidden man of the heart, 1 Sam. xvi. 7. So the power of the natural enmity muſt be broken, and the heart reconciled to the holy law, not in ſome, but in every point thereof known to you, Heb. viii. 10. ‘This is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts: and I will be to them a God, and they ſhall be to me a people. For this only is true converſion, the heart being turned back again to God, 1 Kings xviii. 37. in cordial reconciliation with, and abſolute reſignation to his holy will expreſſed in his law.

2. For this cauſe, ye would ſtudy to diſcern the law in its ſpirituality and vaſt extent, and cloſely apply it to your own ſouls ſtate and caſe. Here Paul's converſion began, Rom. vii. 9. I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, ſin revived, and I died. By this means ye will be convinced of the total corruption of your nature, heart, and life; what a gulf of guilt ye are ſunk in under the curſe: the which may fill you with fear, ſorrow, and anxious concern what courſe to take to be ſaved. Then ſtudy to diſcern the promiſe of the goſpel, in its ſufficiency and ſuitableneſs to your caſe; and to ſee Chriſt in it: and cloſely apply that to your own ſoul. For this is it that completes converſion, Heb. vii. 19. ‘For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God.’ By this means ye will be enlightened in the knowledge of Chriſt, as a ſuitable Saviour, having a fulneſs of grace in him to be communicated for your regeneration, and a fulneſs of merit to carry off your guilt: which will be a fit means to raiſe in you a deſire of him, and hope of remedy through him; and ſo to draw you to him by faith, and by him unto God.

DOCT. II. There is a wide gate to enter by, and a broad way joining it: but it leads away to deſtruction.

Here we ſhall conſider,
I. The wide gate there is to enter in by.
II. The broad way joining the wide gate.
III. This way's leading away to deſtruction.
IV. laſtly, Improve the ſubject.

I. We ſhall conſider, the wide gate there is to enter in by. Were there no other but the ſtrait gate in the courſe to the other world, then there would be no fear of going wrong, all behoved to go that way, or none at all; and it would have been ſo, if there had been no part of the other world but the happy one. But there is another part of that world, a hell as well as a heaven; and ſo there is a gate towards the former, as well as the latter; and that is the wide one, which we are to beware of.

According to what is ſaid of the ſtrait, the wide gate is the entrance into a courſe of ungodlineſs, whereby men become actually ungodly. Thus men ſet their face towards hell, and begin to move towards the land of darkneſs, Eph. ii. 1. 2. Whenſoever this entrance is made, then they are on the courſe whoſe end is deſtruction: and it is made very early.

And that entrance or wide gate, is the gate of the corrupt natural inclination of the heart, Prov. iv. 23. Mark vii. 21, 22, 23. The gate begins to open to us with the firſt dawnings of reaſon, and opens wider and wider as we grow up, Gen. viii. 21. Our firſt looks in the world are aſquint; we diſcover a caſt to the wrong ſide, an averſeneſs to good, and proneneſs to evil, Rom. viii. 7. 'The carnal mind is enmity againſt God.' That is the natural inclination of the heart, that ſoon ſhews itſelf in what we call the innocent babe, and widens more and more through the ſeveral periods of childhood, youth, and manhood, Prov. xxii. 15.

This gate was ſet up by Adam's fall, Rom. v. 12. He breaking the firſt covenant, broke out this gate to deſtruction, to and in himſelf and all his poſterity: and mankind naturally ruſh in at it, not conſidering whereto it leads. Beſides this, there had never been another gate to the other world for fallen man, had not Jeſus Chriſt by his ſuffering, life, and death, opened it.

This gate is a two-leaved gate, opening wide.

1ſt, On the one hand, it opens wide toward the creature, away from God, Jer. ii. 13. That is the way the natural inclination of the heart lies. When God made man, he gave him a ſet of heart towards himſelf as his reſt and happineſs, Eccleſ. vii. 29. 'God made man 'upright;' without any motion towards the creature, but in God and for God: and good reaſon, for all the good of the creature lay there, it being otherwiſe but a cypher ſignifying nothing without him, Matth. xix. 17. But Satan in the firſt temptation ſet up the creature ſeparately from God, and over againſt him; and though ſo it was mere emptineſs, he blew it up with wind from hell, and made it appear a reſt for the heart, and cheated our firſt parents into a choice of it for their reſt, Gen. iii. 6. So the firſt leaf was opened, and has ſtood open to this day with mankind. And this I ſay,

(1.) Opens wide toward the creature, the vain and empty creation, Hab. ii. 5. compared with Prov. xxx. 15, 16. As the beaſts incline to the earth, the birds to the air, and the fiſhes to the waters; ſo does fallen man to the creature. He knows no other happineſs naturally, deſires no other, cannot underſtand how there can be another, He falls as naturally to ſeek it here, as the infant to ſuck the breaſts that bare it.

This is a broad leaf, opening very wide; becauſe of the boundleſs deſires of the heart to be ſatisfied, the vaſt variety of the creatures to try the experiment on, and the inſufficiency and unſatisfactorineſs of them all, Eccl. i. 2. Iſa. lv. 1, 2. The wide hungry heart that is without God, the wide world filled with nothing but vanity and lies, makes the leaf of the natural inclination to the creature open very wide.

(2.) It opens away from God, Heb. iii. 12. 'Take 'heed, brethren, leſt there be in any of you, an evil 'heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.' It is not poſſible, but that the heart turning to the creature for a reſt and happineſs, muſt turn away from God, Matth. vi. 24. For no man can ſerve two maſters. The heart of man naturally contracting a friendſhip with the world, ſtates and declares an enmity againſt God, Jam. iv. 4. Know ye not that the friendſhip of the world is enmity with God? Whoſoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. And the children of men ſetting out in the world, while they ſet their face thus to the creature, caſt God behind their back, Ezek. xxiii. 35. They know him not, deſire him not: it is a myſtery to them, how the enjoyment of him can make one happy: they are apt to think it is but a fancy, Pſal. iv. 6.

Thus this natural inclination of the heart to the creature is the one leaf of the wide gate. But here it is OBJECTED, How can the inclination of the heart to the creature be accounted a leaf of the gate to hell, when every creature of God is good, and we are allowed the enjoyment of it, and an inclination towards it is lawful, and in ſeveral caſes expreſsly required?

ANSW. The creature may be conſidered two ways. (1.) By itſelf, ſeparately from God. (2.) In God and for him. The firſt way it is regarded as a fountain and original ſpring to drink at for ſatisfaction; in the other, as a ſtream only coming from God, and leading back to him. Now, it is not in the latter, but the former reſpect, that we call the inclination to it a leaf of the broad gate. And it is in that firſt reſpect that the heart is naturally inclined to it. Upon it, ſeparately from God, the heart naturally fixes, looking for that from it, which it ſhould only look for in God; whereby it is put in the room of God. And this godleſs purſuit of the creature, ſeparately from God, not in him; for itſelf, and ourſelf, not for God, was never allowable, and is no other but the courſe of them that are gone in at the wide gate, Eph. iv. 17, 18. Conſider here,

1. The inclination to it ſeparate from God, plainly diſcovering itſelf, in either a prophane neglect of him, or elſe a crafty ſhifting of him, in our deſires after, or enjoyment of the creature. No doubt one may lawfully have an inclination towards health, wealth, relations, &c. But then it ſhould be in God; in his fear, regulated by his word; but as an incaſt to the great bargain of his favour, not as a principal. But the generality of men quite neglect him in theſe, Pſal. x. 4. while others that have ſome principles formed in them, craftily lay the thoughts of him aſide in theſe things, that they may not be hampered in their deſire or enjoyment of the creature, Jer. ix. 6. A glaring evidence of inclination to it ſeparate from God.

2. The inclination to it for it or ourſelf, not for God, diſcovering itſelf, in that there is no regard had, in the deſire, or enjoyment, to the honour of God to be advanced thereby, but to pleaſe ourſelves merely; though 1 Cor. x. 31. whether we eat or drink, or whatſoever we do, we ſhould do all to the glory of God. It is purely ſomething in the creature itſelf, not any thing of God about it, that grounds the inclination to it: and that is a piece of ſpiritual idolatry, and a debaſing of the ſoul, to deſire any creature for itſelf merely.

2dly, On the other ſide, it opens wide towards ſin, away from the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law, Pſal. lviii. 3. The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray, as ſoon as they are born, ſpeaking lies. When God made man, he gave him a ſet of heart toward holineſs, Eccl. vii. 29. ſo that as God himſelf was the reſt of his heart and portion, ſo his holy will and law was the rule of his walk. But the heart of man falling out of its reſt in God, unto the godleſs purſuit of the creature, the yoke of obedience to him came to be thrown off. So the natural inclination of the heart opens wide,

(1.) To ſin, Jer. xvii. 9. The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked: who can know it? The taſte is quite vitiated; nothing reliſhes with men naturally but ſin. As, on the one hand, they go to the creature, to ſuck its dry breaſts; ſo, on the other, they are bent on the fulſome breaſts of their corrupt luſts, Eph. ii. 3. Theſe corrupt luſts as ſo many brats of hell, naturally bred in the heart, open their mouths wide, crying, Give, give: and nothing can ſatisfy them, but the puddle waters of ſin, which are agreeable to their nature.

(4.) Away from the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law, Rom. viii. 7. There is not only a careleſſneſs of and indifferency to holineſs, but an averſion to it; ſuch as an untamed bullock has to the yoke. Hence holy walking and ſpiritual exerciſes, are naturally burdenſome to the corrupt heart, which loves ſinful liberty, and hates to be hampered by the holy commandment. So that what of theſe the man is in a ſort brought to, it is but bodily exerciſe, the heart is not at it, Ezek. xxxiii. 31.

This alſo is a broad leaf, opening very wide. For the corruption of nature is an unfathomable gulph, that there is no filling up off: the ſinner may be ſurfeited, but never can be ſatiated. The way of ſin, as being the way of error or wandering, has no end; one evil ſtep ſtill leading on to, and making way for another. Thus ye ſee the wide gate, that opening to all the children of fallen Adam, they are all ready diſpoſed to enter into. Which entering is next to be noticed.

The entering into this wide gate, is the giving way to the corrupt natural inclination of the heart; the not reſiſting of it, but yielding unto it, Rom. vi. 12. ‘Let not ſin reign in your mortal body, that ye ſhould obey it in the luſts thereof.’ This gate ſhould of right be cloſed: the bitter fountain ſhould be ſtopt immediately, the weeds of corruption ſhould be nipt in the bud, and men ſhould preſently begin a war with themſelves in mortification of their luſts. But inſtead of that, they ſoon begin to follow the corrupt natural inclination; and that in,

1. Giving way to the vanity of their minds, Eph. iv. 17. They find in them a reſtleſs heart, and they go in purſuit of that reſt, not to God, but to the creature. Man's mind is naturally blinded; and what it points out to him for happineſs and ſatisfaction, he purſues; the heart going as the vain mind leads. Thus men are lured on. The vain mind firſt points out a ſatisfaction to us in meat, then in gay cloathing, then in mirth and jollity; at length it opens as we grow up, into the wide field of pleaſures, profits, and honours: and here men wander as in a wilderneſs, ſeeking reſt, thinking to find it in this and the other vanity, and ſtill diſappointed: yet after all diſappointments, the vain mind ſtill has a new vanity to preſent unto us, and we go to it with new hopes of ſatisfaction, Iſa. lvii. 10. Thou art wearied in the greatneſs of thy way; yet ſaidſt thou not, There is no hope; thou haſt found the life of thine hand: therefore thou waſt not grieved. Now, the engaging in this purſuit is entering the wide gate with a witneſs.

2. Giving way to the corrupt bent of the heart towards ſin, and againſt the way of holineſs, Rom. iii. 11. 12. ‘There is none that underſtandeth, there is none that ſeeketh after God. They are all gone out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, there is none that doth good, no not one.’ Luſts begin to ſtir in the heart and crave of them; and inſtead of ſtarving them, they begin to think of feeding and ſatisfying them. So they break over the hedge of the divine law, and get over into the devil's ground, omitting their duty to God, and committing ſin againſt him, in compliance with the natural inclination. This alſo is a plain entering of the wide gate. Now, there is a twofold entering of this wide gate.

1ſt, One that is more ſecret and undiſcerned to the party himſelf. Thus we are all once entered into it, ere ever we are aware, by the early ſproutings of corruption in childhood: doing ſinfully and corruptly ere ever we begin to conſider what we are doing, Pſal. lvii. 3. Prov. xx. 11. Thus we are entered into the ſervice of ſin and Satan, ere we begin to conſider who or what they are. And where pains is not taken by good education to curb theſe early ſproutings, they grow readily too ſtrong afterwards to be holden down, either by one or other, Prov. xxix. 15. ‘The rod and reproof give wiſdom: but a child left to himſelf, bringeth his mother to ſhame.’

2dly, Another that is more deliberate, and of choice. Thus when the children of men are come to the years of diſcretion, and can diſcern between good and evil, they ſee on the one hand the ſtrait gate of religion, and the wide gate of ſin and vanity; and having a bias and caſt in their nature to the wrong ſide, they refuſe the ſtrait gate, and chuſe the wide one as the moſt agreeable to them, Jer. ii. 25. Of this there are three more notable kinds.

1. The throwing off the bonds of good education, as things wherewith they are hampered. Thus many ſet out into the broad way, and land in deſtruction at length, Prov. v. 11, 12, 13. Parental government is the firſt government that God puts us under: therefore in the proverbs written to give the young—knowledge—the very firſt exhortation is verſ. 8. My ſon, hear the inſtruction of thy father, and forſake not the law of thy mother, How dangerous muſt it then be, either to throw it off before God takes it off; or when he has, to throw off the impreſſions made thereby? None of them can be, but in compliance with the corrupt natural inclination to give it the ſwing.

2. Caſting one's ſelf into ill company. The ſecond exhortation in the Proverbs reſpects that, verſ. 10. My ſon, if ſinners entice thee, conſent thou not. We are ſo ready to be caſt into the mould of the company we chuſe, eſpecially if it be ill, that when one is ſo engaged, he may be reckoned to be gone in at the wide gate. If he had no mind to go with them, why would he chuſe their fellowſhip?

3. Apoſtatizing from a profeſſion and appearance of religion; when one having for ſome time given promiſing tokens of a religious diſpoſition, throws off all, and goes plainly into the way of the prophane world, Heb. x. 38. ‘If any man draw back, my ſoul ſhall have no pleaſure in him.’

The ſnare leading to this is readily the predominant ſin. That makes its entrance moſt eaſily unto us, and moſt powerfully prevails to carry us into the broad way.

II. We ſhall conſider the broad way joining the wide gate. Agreeable to what is ſaid of the gate, the broad way joining it is the way of mens own heart, Iſa. lvii. 17. ‘For the iniquity of his covetouſneſs was I wroth, and ſmote him: I hid me, and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart:’ Which heart being naturally a corrupt heart, is the way of irreligion and ungodlineſs, Pſal. i. 1. As ſoon as men have entered the gate of the corrupt natural inclination, giving up themſelves thereto, they are on the broad way, the way of their own heart. And here I ſhall ſhew, 1ſt, That the way of one's own heart or natural inclination, is indeed the broad way.

2dly, What are the parts of this broad way leading to deſtruction.

3dly, Speak of the broadneſs of this way.

FIRST, I ſhall ſhew that the way of one's own heart or natural inclination, is indeed the broad way. This appears,

1ſt, From that corrupt ſet or bent which the hearts of men have got by Adam's fall. Whatever vain men give out concerning the dignity of human nature, the teſtimony of God concerning the heart of man is quite otherwiſe, Jer. xvii. 9. ‘The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked; who can know it?’ Our Saviour repreſents it as a poiſoned fountain, Mark vii. 21, 22. and what poiſoned it, was the fall of Adam, Rom. v. 12. The way then that it leads, muſt needs be the broad way to deſtruction, and therefore ‘all we like ſheep have gone aſtray: we have turned every one to his own way,’ Iſa. liii. 6. In that ſet,

1. There is a bending away from God, who originally was, and of right is our chief end, Pſal. xiv. 3. Jer. ii. 13. The heart of man has not only left its reſt in God, but is filled with natural enmity againſt him, Rom. viii. 7. has a diſlike of his nature, which is holy, and of his law, which is a tranſcript of his holineſs. There is a downright contrariety in his nature againſt the nature of God, and in his will againſt the will of God: Job xxi. 14. Therefore they ſay unto God, Depart from us; for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways.

2. A bent towards the creature as the chief good, in the room of God, Jer. ii. 13. Hence the natural voice of the heart in man is, ‘Who will ſhew us any good?’ Pſal. iv. 6. For Adam falling from God betook himſelf to the creature, to get out of it that ſatisfaction, which he was to have had from God: and in this caſe he left us; and naturally we go on that way, till powerfully turned to God again by grace.

3. An averſion to good, ſuch as an untamed bullock has to the yoke, Jer. xxxi. 18. It is a pain to the natural man to admit the yoke of Chriſt, Hoſ. iv. 16. ‘Iſrael ſlideth back, as a backſliding heifer.’ So that a ſlaviſh fear of puniſhment, and a ſervile hope of reward, are the main things that can move them to duty; whereas if the heart were left to its free choice, without theſe extrinſic motives, they would never yoke with it.

4. A proneneſs to evil, Hoſ. xi. 7. ‘My people are bent to backſliding from me: though they called them to the Moſt High, none at all would exalt him.’ The bias of the heart lies that way, ſo that is the very firſt way the children of men go, Pſal. lviii. 3. ‘The wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray, as ſoon as they are born, ſpeaking lies.’ None need to teach them the way of ſin: leave them to their choice, they will as naturally go that way, as water will go downward, or ſparks of fire upward. Who then can doubt, but the way of the heart is the broad way?

2dly, This appears from the neceſſity of regeneration, which is abſolute and univerſal, John iii. 3. Except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of heaven. Men muſt be made new creatures ere they can do good works, Eph. ii. 10. united to Chriſt by faith, ere they can do any thing to purpoſe, John xv. 5. Without me ye can do nothing. This neceſſity ſprings from the total corruption of our nature, whereby it is indiſpoſed to all good, John iii. 6. That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh. Whence it is evident, that the natural way of the heart is the broad way: for that which is wholly corrupt, cannot act but corruptly; and that nature which muſt be made new, ere it can do good, muſt needs, till it be renewed, be ſtill going wrong.

3dly, laſtly, This appears from the difficulty there is in the converſion of ſinners unto God, Jer. xiii. 23. ‘Can the Ethiopian change his ſkin, or the leopard his ſpots? Then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed to evil.’ Great is that difficulty. Mercies will not do it, judgments will not: the ſinner will trample on the goodneſs of God leading to repentance; he will go on in ſin, though the fire of wrath is flaſhing on his face. A preacher from the dead would not convert a ſinner, Luke xvi. 31. It is only the irreſiſtable power of grace changing the heart that will do it, Jer. xxxi. 18. This ſpeaks the natural way the heart goes, to be the broad way, and no other.

SECONDLY, We ſhall conſider the parts of this broad way leading to deſtruction. It is ſo very broad, that we cannot enter into a detail of the particular parts thereof. But in the general, there are two parts of it. 1. The way of vanity; and 2. The way of vileneſs.

1ſt. The way of vanity, Eph. iv. 17. As ſoon as one has entered by that part of the wide gate of the natural inclination, opening towards the creature, away from God, he is upon the way of vanity, a broad ſpacious way to deſtruction. He then begins a vain life, a courſe of vanity of converſation, 1 Pet. i. 18. And in this way moſt men, yea all, but regenerate men, are going. And it is,

1. A way that ſets a man farther off from God. With the prodigal, he is then on his journey into the far country, Luke xv. 13. Every ſtep in this way is a ſtep farther away; and the older he grows in it, the relative diſtance betwixt God and him is increaſed. God and the ſinner part at the point of original corruption; and the ſinner taking the way of vanity, is ſoon far from him.

2. A way wherein he applies himſelf cloſe to the creature for his chief good, Jer. ii. 13. Having left God, he takes up with the empty creation, to hammer a happineſs to himſelf out of creature comforts; in imitation of fallen Adam embracing the forbidden fruit inſtead of a God. And here four things are to be conſidered.

(1.) The man is ſenſible of a want, Pſal. iv. 6. Who will ſhew us any good? He is conſcious to himſelf, that he is not ſelf-ſufficient. There is an empty ſpace in his heart, which he muſt needs labour to have filled up. And it cannot be otherwiſe, ſince he has loſt God, and is without him in the world, Eph. ii. 12; and that God is the only object capable of filling the heart, an infinite good only being commmenſurable to the boundleſs deſires of the ſoul.

(2.) Having loſt ſight of God as man's happineſs, he looks about through the creation for the ſupply of his want, for a match to his ſoul, which he finds cannot live alone by itſelf, Eccleſ. vi. 9. Though the man has loſt God, if he had not loſt his eyes too, he would ſee there was no way for him, but to ſee to recover the enjoyment of God again. But his eyes are darkened in this broad way, that he cannot ſee how God, and God only, can be happineſs to him, 1 Cor. ii. 14. The word of the goſpel tells him this of God, and Chriſtians tell it from their experience; but he cannot comprehend it: therefore he looks about for it elſewhere.

(3.) In this caſe the creature ſhews fair; the world appears in its beauty and gaudy dreſs. It diſplays its wealth at a diſtance, and looks out with all its charms, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, 1 John ii. 16. And the man is taken, thinking if he had it, he would be well. He looks on it as a fit match for his heart, and is not without hopes of gaining his point. And Satan is buſy here to forward the project, repreſenting the creature moſt ſpeciouſly, and inflaming the ſinner's deſire after it. See Matth. iv. 8.

(4.) The ſinner being taken, falls a-courting of the creature, for the enjoyment of the wanted happineſs in it, Pſal. iv. 6. Fluſhed with big hopes, he ſets out on this project, and plies it cloſely. And this is the broad way of vanity, in which he travels endleſsly, till either the grace of God open his eyes, and turn him back to God; or elſe that in hell he lift up his eyes, and ſee he has been ruined with courting all along a deceitful ſhadow.

This courting of the creature to be a match for the heart, is not ſlightly managed. But,

1. It is begun early, Pſal. lviii. 3. As ſoon as ever the children of fallen Adam are ſenſible of a want, they go to that door for ſupply; while as yet there are no deſires after God, they are gaping wide after the creature. Behold the little children, how fond on things grateful to the taſte, and pleaſant to the eye, while the compaſs of their underſtanding reaches no farther! What a mighty ſatisfaction do they promiſe themſelves in theſe! And as they grow up, and the world opens out to them, and ſpreads its deceitful glories; how do their deſires after it, and hunting for them, increaſe proportionally!

2. It is proſecute aſſiduouſly, no time being loſt for the purpoſe. The project is cloſely purſued, that if it prove ſucceſsleſs, it is not through careleſſneſs, Iſa. lvii. 20. Pſal. cxxvii. 2. They are early and late at the creature's door. Whatever diſappointment they meet with, it makes no change of their mind, nor do they go to another airth for their happineſs, Rom. vi. 20.

3. It is managed vigorouſly. They are not indifferent about their ſucceſs, but in good earneſt; their heart is wholly ſet on it. The moſt valuable talents they have are laid out upon it, Iſa. lv. 2. They take true pains upon it; they are not loiterers, but labour for to gain their point, Iſa. lv. 2. Matth. xi. 28. and that to wearineſs in the midſt of difficulties, Hab. ii. 13. They are like hewers in ſtone, on the matter, Jer. ii. 13.; and ſtrike on rocks till the fire flaſh in their faces.

4. laſtly, It is continued all along, till the Lord from heaven put a ſtop to it; either in mercy, ſhewing them their error, and bringing them back unto God in Chriſt, to take up their reſt in him; or elſe in wrath, taking them away from it by death, and ſo plucking up their hopes by the roots, Matth. xv. 45, 46. Luke xii. 20.

Now this way is the way of vanity, in that,

1. It is a falſe and deceitful way, Pſal. cxix. 128. and can take with men only by means of darkneſs, blindneſs, and ignorance, ver. 104. In it ſhadows are propoſed to the heart inſtead of a ſubſtance, the creature promiſing that which it is not able to perform; cauſing men to expect that out of it that is not in it. In it the bait appears; but the hook is hidden, which yet effectually ruins, 1 Tim. vi. 10. And in it men hunt their own ſorrows and deſtruction.

2. It is an unprofitable way. In it a life is ſpent to no valuable purpoſe; and at the end it appears to have brought no laſting advantage, Rom. iii. 12. But thus, men are running in the broad way, wearying themſelves for a thing of nought; like children running in a ſunny day catching butterflies, miſſing many of them, and the beautiful coloured wings of thoſe they catch, going to aſhes between their fingers. It is unprofitable,

(1.) In that they quite fall ſhort of the great end God propoſeth to men, viz. his glory, Rom. iii. 23. Inſtead of living to his honour, they live to his diſhonour, preferring the creature to the Creator, and putting it in his room as their chief good. And that muſt needs be a vain life, which does not reach the chief end it was given for. What then can be expected, but the doom of the unprofitable ſervant?

(2.) In that they quite fall ſhort of the end they propoſe to themſelves, viz. happineſs, or a reſt to their hearts, Hoſ viii 7 This is what all their days they ſeek, but never get in any of their days, nor at the end; nor is it poſſible to get it in that way; for it is the way of vanity. And is not that a vain life, where one muſt die diſappointed of the great thing they mainly ſought all their life?

3. It is a trifling way, in which one trifles away a lifetime, buſy doing nothing, no ſubſtantial laſting good, nothing that will give comfort in a dying hour, nothing for the better world, Pſal. xc. 9. God has ſent us into this world, to do buſineſs for eternity, to paſs trials for the happy world to come; but men going the broad way, forget their buſineſs, and trifle away time; it lies like lumber on their hand, and they are fain to go in queſt of this and the other vanity, to get it driven off, as if they had nothing to do.

4. It is a reſtleſs way, Matth. xi. 28, 29. Solomon ſpeaks of a vanity toſſed to and fro, Prov xxi. 6. Such is the whole life of one in the broad way. There is no reſt for the heart in this way. Whatever amuſements for a time they may get in it, they can never lay the heart to reſt. Laying down the head upon one vanity to reſt, the pillow is ſoon drawn away; or there is a thorn of uneaſineſs found in it, and they muſt ſhift themſelves to another vanity, which quickly proves as unſatisfying as the other. So that they are like one on the top of a maſt, they can get no reſt.

5. laſtly, It is a way of endleſs wandering, through repeated diſappointments. Here men are like the Sodomites about Lot's houſe, ſtruck with blindneſs. They are going about for ſatisfaction, and groping for it every where, but can never find it; wearying themſelves to find that door, but all in vain. But there is no end; but after a thouſand diſappointments a new vanity is tried, and the experiment made on another, Iſa. lvii. 10. And ſo men are ſtill going the round of vanities: till either grace is dropped into their hearts, turning them to reſt in God; or elſe they turn into the grave dying diſappointed.

2dly, The broad way is the way of vileneſs, Pſal xiv. 1. As ſoon as one is entered by that part of the wide gate of the natural inclination opening towards ſin, away from the holineſs of God expreſſed in his law, he is upon the way of vileneſs leading ſtraight to deſtruction, Tit. i. 15, 16. Rev. xxii. 15. And it is,

1. A way wherein men vile by nature ſoon grow more vile, and lothſome in God's ſight, by going farther away from the holineſs required in his law, Jer. ix. 3. 'They proceed from evil to evil, and they know not 'me, ſaith the Lord.' Here actual ſin is heaped on original ſin, a ſinful life added to a ſinful nature, and the natural corruption ſpreads itſelf in heart, lip, and life: ſo the farther they go on in it, the farther from all good.

2. A way wherein they apply themſelves to the ſatisfying inſtead of ſtarving and mortifying their luſts, Pſal. lviii. 3. Having no heart for the way of holineſs, they ſet themſelves to the way of ſin, and purſue the ſame at the expence of the honour of God, and the wounding of their own conſciences, till in end they land in the pit of deſtruction at the end of the way, if repenting not. And here four things may be conſidered.

1. The heart of man is naturally poſſeſſed with a fry of ſinful corrupt luſts craving to be ſatisfied. See what proceeds out of the heart, Mark vii. 21, 22. Evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, thefts, covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an evil eye, blaſphemy, pride, and fooliſhneſs. And if they were not in it, they would not come out of it. They are bred in the womb of the corruption of our nature: and by influence from hell they are ſoon brought to ſpread out themſelves. Theſe gape and open wide for to be ſatisfied with what is agreeable to their nature.

2. The ſinner, inſtead of ſtarving them, ſets himſelf to make proviſion for them, inſtead of denying them to gratify them, Pſal. lxxviii 18. And this is a hard taſk, the hardeſt that ever one took in hand; for it is like feeding of a fire, that never ſaith, It is enough. Luſts may be ſurfeited, but will never be ſatisfied. So it is a weary taſk the ſinner has, Jer. ix. 5. and a laborious one, as in a cloſe battle, James iv. 1, 2, 3.

3 The creature lying within the bounds of the law, cannot ſatisfy them: and no wonder; for it was never appointed to be ſatisfactory to us, ſo as to afford the reſt of the heart. Even in paradiſe there was a want, which nothing but the enjoyment of God could fill up. The regular deſires of a heart houſed in God, and centering in him, the creature may ſatisfy in the regular uſe of it; but nothing regular will ſatisfy irregular luſts.

4. Wherefore the ſinner breaks over the hedge unto that lying without the bounds of the holy law: and the ſatisfaction not found in allowed, it ſeeks in forbidden fruit, Prov. ix. 17. Thus the man wandering in the way of vanity, is ever now and then turning to the way of vileneſs: he is like the beaſt on a bare paſture, that having ate up all within the hedge to the red earth, at length breaks over the hedge; as Dinah gadding abroad in the way of vanity, at length fell into a pit of vileneſs and defilement. And here two things preſent themſelves to the entertainment of theſe vile luſts.

1. The deſires of the fleſh to be fulfilled, Eph ii. 3. And here is a mire of vileneſs for the ſinner to wallow in, in the broad way, called the filthineſs of the fleſh, 2 Cor. vii. 1. In it are to be ſeen drenched drunkards, gluttons, unclean perſons, filthy ſpeakers, and all ſenſualiſts, whoſe great buſineſs it is to gratify their ſenſes, neglecting their ſouls; as if they were nothing but living fleſh, or their ſouls only as ſalt to keep their bodies from corruption.

2. The deſires of the mind to be fulfilled, Eph. ii. 3. This mind is called the filthineſs of the ſpirit, 2 Cor. vii. 1. Here are endleſs depths of enmity againſt God, rancour of ſpirit againſt and diſtaſte of true holineſs and purity, unbelief of the goſpel, pride and ſelfiſhneſs, covetouſneſs, and earthly-mindedneſs, and innumerable evils more, in which ſinners indulge themſelves in the broad way.

Theſe two iſſue in a fourfold road of the broad way, in each of which are many walking.

1. Black ignorance, wherein not a few reſt ſatisfied without a tolerable knowledge of the foundations of religion, Pſal. lxxxii. 5. They are taught to work, but not to read; if they were, either they forget it, or elſe they make no due uſe of it. The deſires of the fleſh and mind wholly take them up: and they neither have, nor deſire to have the knowledge of God and his ways, Job xxi. 14. They know it would but hamper them in thoſe things which take beſt with darkneſs, and cannot abide the light, John iii. 20. For every one that doth evil, hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, leſt his deeds ſhould be reproved. But alas! they conſider not, that it will end in everlaſting darkneſs, Hoſ. iv. 6. Iſa. xxvii. 11.

2. Bare morality, lying in conformity to the letter of the ten commandments; whereby they keep ſome decency in civil ſociety, but are utterly eſtranged from religion, and have not ſo much as an appearance of it. They are good neighbours, but no good Chriſtians; deal fairly in things of this world, but have no dealing with things of the other world; mind their buſineſs and affairs of life, but quite forget the one thing needful. Their greateſt excellency lies in negatives, like the Phariſee, Luke xviii. 11. I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjuſt, adulterers, or even as this publican: as if they did not look on themſelves obliged to honour God, farther than not to affront him openly. This is a road of the broad way, Matth. v. 20. For except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.

3. A form of godlineſs: wherein men go the outward round of the outward duties of religion, but ſtill continue ſtrangers to the life and power of it, 2 Tim. iii. 5. Theſe are the whited ſepulchres, men who tack a new life to the old heart; who ſometimes have taken up from their extravagancies, but were never truly converted; who with their religion, ſuch as it is, ſtill retain the predominant love of ſin; and always have ſome beloved luſt, in the room of God in Chriſt. They are like thoſe beaſts, of which there is nothing good but the ſkin, and hence ſo many apoſtates, who turning their back on religion, ahd proving ſcandalous and profane in their lives, do but appear in their native colours, and what they always were, before they caſt off their maſk. Let ſuch conſider theſe ſcriptures, Pſal. cxxv. 5. 'As for 'ſuch as turn aſide unto their crooked ways, the Lord 'ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity,' Matth. xxiv. 51. The Lord ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there ſhall be weeping ahd gnaſhing of teeth.

4. Open profanity: wherein men bear the devil's mark on their foreheads, giving themſelves the looſe in the open courſe of ſcandalous enormities, Gal. v. 19, 20, 21. Theſe are they that declare their ſin as Sodom, and hide it not; who take pleaſure in making themſelves vile; ſcorn to be hampered with the rules of religion, ſobriety, and decency; who make a mock of ſin, and are going to deſtruction jovially, as with tabret and pipe. This ſurely is the broad road in the broad way; and they cannot be thought to be deceiving themſelves with hopes of heaven, for they cannot think it a place for dogs and ſwine. If they do, they will be diſappointed, Rev. xxii. 15. For without are dogs, &c. A profane life will make a miſerable end, Eph. v. 6. 'Let no man deceive 'you with vain words; for becauſe of theſe things 'cometh the wrath of God upon the children of diſo'bedience.'

Now this is the way of vileneſs, wherein men render themſelves lothſome in the ſight of God: their ſouls in this way ſtill gathering more defilement to them, and all the defilement ſticking, none carried off, while they are upon it. Every ſin leaves a blot on the ſoul, whereby it is laid under pollution agreeable to its nature. Thereby,

1. The ſoul is rendered unlike God; and the more ſinful, the more unlike him in his moral perfections. Now, God cannot but love himſelf, and his own purity; and therefore he cannot but hate and lothe what is made unlike him, and contrary to him.

2. The ſoul being made unlike God, its beauty is marred, and it becomes lothſome. Holineſs is the glory or beauty of God, Exod. xv. 11. 'Who is a God like 'unto thee, glorious in holineſs?' and God being the ſupreme pattern of all perfection, holineſs muſt alſo be the beauty of the creature; and conſequently ſin muſt be the deformity of the ſoul.

THIRDLY, We ſhall conſider the broadneſs of this way; which we may take up in theſe two things.

1. There is large room in it for paſſengers to walk in. The vain and vile mind is an unfathomable depth; and the way to deſtruction is an unmeaſurable breadth. So the mind has room to wander up and down, and to range to and fro in the broad way. Endleſs vanities preſent themſelves there, innumerable vileneſſes are to be found there, acccording to Jer. xvii. 9. The heart is deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked: who can know it? ſo that he who has diſreliſhed one, may betake himſelf to another; and every luſt of the heart may find wherewith to gratify it there.

2. There is no hampering with hedges in it. It is the way of lawleſs liberty; the very nature of it is to lay aſide all reſtraints, and to allow all licentiouſneſs. In that way the bands are broken aſunder, and the cords caſt away from the travellers. Bible rules, dictates of conſcience, and ſuggeſtions of the Spirit of holineſs, are laid aſide in that way, as things that would narrow it. Hence,

1. It is eaſy to fall on it. It is ſuch a broad way, that there is no difficulty to hit it, Pſal. lviii. 3. Though one ſhut his eyes, and walk at all adventures, he will not miſs it; becauſe it is the way of natural inclination; ſo all the difficulty is to keep off it.

2. It is eaſy walking in it. There is full room there for all the ſinners vain and vile inclinations. They go with the wind while they are on it; they row with the ſtream: for the natural bent lies that way, Jer. iv. 22. They have no more ado but follow it.

3. It is not eaſy to get off it, Jer. xiii. 23. Can the Ethiopian change his ſkin, or the leopard his ſpots? then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed to do evil. Many ſeem to themſelves and others for a time to leave it; and yet they do not change their way, but only their road; going off from one road of the broad way to another, as from profanity to formality.

III. We ſhall conſider this way its leading away to deſtruction.

Here we ſhall,
1ſt, Shew the import of it.
2dly, Confirm it.

Firſt, We ſhall ſhew the import of this. It imports, that,

1. Deſtruction is at the end of this way, however the travellers notice it not, Prov. ix. 17, 18. 'Stolen waters 'are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant. But 'he knoweth not that the dead are there, and that her 'gueſts are in the depths of hell.'

As ſure as heaven's happineſs is at the end of the narrow way, hell and deſtruction are at the end of the broad way. There is no ſeparating what God has thus joined.

2. The farther one goes in that way, the farther away he is from ſafety, and the nearer to deſtruction. Progreſs in the broad way carries one ſtill farther from God from holineſs, and from ſalvation, Pſal. cxix. 155. Salvation is far from the wicked: for they ſeek not thy ſtatutes. They are far from the God of ſalvation, the way of ſalvation, and ſo from ſalvation itſelf; and ſtill they draw nearer to deſtruction.

3. Holding on the way, they cannot miſs of deſtruction, Rom. iii 16, 17. 'Deſtruction and miſery are in their ways.' They will land at length in the place of deſtruction, Pſal. ix. 17. 'The wicked ſhall be turned into hell, and all nations that forget God.' They will find themſelves in the ſtate of deſtruction, Matth. xxv. 46. A deſtruction of their well being, not of their being; for they will not be ſubſtantially deſtroyed, or annihilated, to make an end of their being; but deſtroyed as to their comfort and eaſe, or tormented to make an end of their well being. What is deſtroyed is not therefore annihilated, Luke iv. 34. compared with Matth. viii. 29. Annihilation properly is momentary, their deſtruction will be everlaſting, 2 Theſſ. i. 9. annihilation brings into a ſtate of negative reſt, but they will have no reſt, Rev. xiv. 11. but be tormented for ever and ever, chap. xx. 10. Their worm that dieth not, muſt have a ſubject to live in: and the fire is not everlaſting, but for everlaſting puniſhment, Matth. xxv. 41. 46.

Secondly, To confirm that this way leads to deſtruction, conſider,

1. This is the conſtant voice of the word. God himſelf at the beginning ſpoke it firſt of all, Gen. ii. 17. 'In the day thou eateſt thereof thou ſhalt ſurely die.' The text is Jeſus Chriſt's declaration of it. It was the common and conſtant voice of all the prophets and apoſtles, to be found in almoſt every leaf of the Bible. Thus the truth of God inſures it: and if men will promiſe themſelves peace in it over the belly of all this, what help is there for it? But they will be miſerably diſappointed, Deut. xxix 19, 20. 'The Lord will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him, and the Lord ſhall blot out his name from under heaven.'

2. The rectoral juſtice of God demands it, Gen. xviii. 25. compared with 2 Theſſ. i 6. He that ruleth among men muſt be juſt; and therefore muſt puniſh crimes, as well as reward good ſervices: and muſt not the Ruler and Judge of the world do juſtice too? Yea, his own honour, and the good of mankind, require it; and it is the intimation of that juſtice that keeps ſome decency in the world. We ſee very well, that ſome men have a ſun-ſhine of peace in the broad way, while others have much adverſity in the narrow way. There muſt then be a judgment for puniſhment at the end of the broad way. And ſome ſinners are puniſhed now in their way, as an earneſt of it; but all are not, for aſſuring it.

3. The nature of things duly conſidered, manifeſts it. The ſoul of man is immortal, and dropping the body, lives ſtill. God alone can be our happineſs, as being alone commenſurable to the boundleſs deſires of our ſouls. Now the broad way leads away from God, conſequently away from happineſs: and the future ſtate being not a ſtate of trial, but of recompence, the ſeparation from God there muſt be total and final, and conſequently the miſery of the creature complete. What can be the end of the way of vanity, but abſolute diſappointment, cutting and galling of the ſoul; how can that diſappointment be evited, when men paſs away out of this world, and this world ſhall periſh, and ſo they can never have more of what they ſought their ſatisfaction in? What can be the end of the way of vileneſs but deſtruction, while nothing of their vile ways remains with them, but the luſt after them, the cutting remembrance of them, without any poſſibility of gratifying their luſts more?

4. laſtly, The voice of the natural conſcience confirms it, Rom. i. 32. and ii. 15. There is ſomething within the ſinner that forebodes deſtruction to him in this way; though through the violence of luſts it prevails not, or is not heeded, Job xv. 21. It is their conſciouſneſs of this that makes them always in a hurry, and to ſtave off ſerious communing with themſelves: for if they would deſcend into themſelves, and give the broad and narrow way a fair hearing, they would find conſcience within them frighting from the former, and preſſing to the latter.

Use 1. of Information. Hence we may learn,

1. That the way of one's ſetting out in the world is a matter of vaſt conſequence. It is of great weight, how one begins his courſe of life. It is begun well, it will readily end well: if the beginning be ill, the end will be conform, if there is not a ſound change made. Ye ſee there is a wide gate to enter by, and it ſets on a broad way leading to deſtruction. What need then is there to enter right, ſince if we enter wrong we cannot proceed right, till we enter again by a new gate? This calls aloud to,

(1.) The young to look well at what gate they enter, how they begin their courſe, and ſet off in the world, Eccleſ. xii. 1. Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth. This for the moſt part is little conſidered: but the young go forward at random, thinking it of little moment how their firſt years be ſpent, hoping their ripers years may be ſpent regularly. This is to enter the wide gate, leaving your ſoul in pawn, that ye will come back again, and will not go forward. But one ſtep makes way for another, and the return for the moſt part is forgot, and the pawn loſt.

(2.) The aged to review their entering; and now that they are far on in their way, to conſider what gate they entered by. It is impoſſible ye can be on the right way, whatever your way is, if ye entered not by the right gate. May be your way now is not quite ſo dirty as your entrance was; ye have perhaps left the follies of an ill ſpent youth, and taken up yourſelves; but ye may have done all that, and yet be on the broad way. Is there a ſound work of converſion in your caſe? Are ye become new creatures? 2 Cor. v. 17. If not, ye are ſtill in the old way.

2. That giving ſcope to the natural inclination of the heart, ſets one ſurely on the broad way to deſtruction. For that inclination is the wide gate, which the broad way joins, the former iſſuing in the latter. People generally think little of the opening of their hearts towards the creature, and towards ſin: but if there is not a ſtruggle begun againſt both, but way given to any of them, the party is entered by the wide gate, and is on the broad way. Our worſt enemy is within; and that heart will ruin a man, that is not ſtruggled againſt, but yielded to, and carries away a man in its way. The pliableneſs that way is frowardneſs againſt God, Iſa. lvii. 17.

3. laſtly, The way and courſe of life that is moſt grateful and eaſieſt to our corrupt nature, is moſt dangerous; it is the way to deſtruction. Nature likes not to be hampered, but to go at liberty, ranging the treaſures of vanity, and wallowing in the mires of vileneſs. But that preſent eaſe is a pledge of future deſtruction; that lawleſs liberty betrays one into eternal confinement; that caſting off of the bands of duty, prepares one for the bands of wrath in the end.

Use 2. of Exhortation. And,

1*ſt*, Conſider your way, what way ye are on, whether on the broad way or not, Hag. i. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, Conſider your ways. Should one cry to you, that about the place where ye are going there is a way that is deadly dangerous, ye would certainly look to your feet, to ſee that ye were not on it. Here is a voice from heaven telling you, that in this world where ye are, there is a way leading to deſtruction: O then be not ſecure, but conſider ſeriouſly what way ye are on, whether on it or not. Lay then this matter to heart, examine your ſtate and way, and put this queſtion to yourſelves, What way am I on?

Motive 1. This is a piece of duty ye owe to God, in return of all the calls of heaven to you by ordinances and providences, Micah vi. 9. Rev. iii. 20. Sometimes he ſpeaks to you by his word, ſometimes by providences; will ye not give him a hearing, ſtanding and conſidering what way ye are on, and whither it leads? It is dangerous to give a deaf ear to all, Prov. i. 24.

Mot. 2. It is a piece of juſtice ye owe to your own ſouls, 2 Cor. xiii. 4. Were a man driving a parcel of beaſts, and one tell him, There is a way thereabouts that ends in a precipice, he would certainly conſider whether he were on it or not. But it is ſounded again and again in mens ears, that there is a broad way that leads to deſtruction; yet they will not do their ſouls the juſtice once ſeriouſly to conſider whether they are on it or not, but juſt drive forward at all adventures.

Mot. 3. As is the way ye are on, ſo will the end be. Death and life hang on the way ye are on. If ye are on the broad way, ye are on the way of death and deſtruction; if not, ye are on the way of life; and is not that worth your conſidering the matter?

Mot 4. laſtly, It would be of great uſe to have that point cleared. Should ye find yourſelves not on the broad way, ye might have the comfort of it, that ye are in the way to life, and ſhall certainly get thither. If ye were convinced of your being on the broad way, ye might get off from it yet, and ſo eſcape being ruined by it. Some need be at no great pains to find out this, if they would but conſider things calmly and impartially. But I ſhall drop theſe few things about it.

1. Thoſe that never yet ſaw themſelves on the broad way, and deſtruction awaiting them at the end of it, are certainly upon it, by that token that they are going on their way blindfolded, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. Unconvinced ſinners are ſurely unconverted; for who will ever go right that once are wrong, till they ſee themſelves wrong?

2. They that have not entered by the ſtrait gate of converſion and regeneration, but have climbed up another way to the way they are in, Matth. xviii. 3. John iii. 3. They who, whatever changes have been made in their head, in point of light to diſcern the truth: in their affections, in point of reliſh of it; and in their life, in point of eſcaping the pollutions of the world; yet their nature has never been changed, never got the new heart impreſſed with inclination towards the whole law, and reconciled to the whole yoke of Chriſt, but the predominant love of ſin ſtill remains in them, are certainly on the broad way.

3. They that have a reigning diſguſt at the narrow way, whether in themſelves or others, Rom. viii. 7. There is a generation that chuſe ſuch a meaſure of religion for themſelves, but they can have no more of it, they cannot think to be bound up to all the rules of it; they hate it in others, and cannot admit it in themſelves. Theſe are in the broad way, by this token, that all the ſaints aſpire to a perfection of holineſs, and love it, Phil. iii. 13, 14.

4. laſtly, They whoſe choice is a looſe and licentious way, in the way of vanity or vileneſs, and can find no pleaſure but in ſuch a way, Rom. viii. 5. This argues a temper of ſpirit wholly carnal, and eſtranged from the life of God; that cannot ſavour the things of God, but of the fleſh; and that is a deadly condition, Rom. viii. 5, 6. To ſuch heaven as a holy place, would be a priſon, a place wherein they could have no pleaſure; and they may be ſure they ſhall never be brought thither; ſince they are not by heavenly diſpoſition made meet for it. Col. i. 12, 13.

2*dly*, Ye that are brought off the broad way, be ſuitably affected with, and walk worthy of the deliverance, as being brought off the way of deſtruction. And,

1. Be thankful to God for it, who by his grace drew you off from it, Pſal. cvii. 20, 21. Look back to the precipice that ye were once careleſsly ſtanding on, to the way of deſtruction that ye were ſecurely going forward in: bleſs him that opened your eyes, to ſee your danger there, and to ſee another way ſafe, however narrow: that by his grace determined you to forſake the broad way, and chuſe the narrow; and by the power of his Spirit drew you off the one, and ſet you on the other.

2. Entertain no hankering after that way again: beware of giving rueful looks back to it. It is an exhortation given to thoſe eſpouſed to Chriſt, Pſal. xlv. 10. Hearken, O daughter, and conſider, and incline thine ear; forget alſo thine own people, and thy father's houſe. And it is not given in vain: for in the beſt there is an old man, remaining corruption, which perceiving the free and unhampered gate of the carnal world, in the way of vanity and vileneſs, is apt to envy them in a ſort, and ſecretly to wiſh they had the ſame ſcope with them: Prov. xxiii. 17. ‘ Let not thine heart envy ſinners; but be ‘ thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long.’ This is moſt dangerous, which, if not timely ſuppreſſed, will inflame the whole ſoul, and lay it in ruins, Numb. xi. 4, 5, 6. 33, 34. therefore remember Lot's wife, Luke xvii. 32.

3. Do not grudge your difficulties and hardſhips in the narrow way, 1 Pet. iv. 12. James i. 2, 3, 4. In it you meet with correction, but in the other ye would have met with deſtruction; and there is no more reaſon to grudge than one brought off a way where he would have broke his neck, has to grudge, his breaking his toes on the ſafe way that he is brought on. The hardſhips of the broad and narrow way, differ as much as the curſe and the croſs, as the killing ſword and the ſurgeon's lance, as eternal wrath and God's fatherly rod.

4. laſtly, Pity them that are on the broad way, and be concerned for their recovery. Pity them; for alas! they know not what they do, where they are, the deadly danger they are in. Be concerned for them; for they are going to deſtruction, and are not aware of it, Prov. vii. 22, 23. and ix. 17, 18. How can ye miſs to be ſo affected towards them, if ye are ſenſible what once was your own caſe? Tit. iii. 3. ‘ For we ourſelves alſo were ‘ ſometime fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers ‘ luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful, ‘ and hating one another.’

3*dly*, Sinners on the broad way turn off from it as the way of deſtruction. Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die? Ezek. xxxiii. 11.

Motive 1. There is no eſcaping of deſtruction continuing on it, whatever ye may imagine, 1 Theſſ. v. 3. God has ſaid it: how can ye hope for ſafety in that way, over the belly of an expreſs declaration from heaven? He is infinite in knowledge, ye cannot outwit him; in power, and ye cannot outbrave him; he is eſſentially true, and ye will not be able to make him a liar, Numb. xxiii. 19. See Deut. xxix. 19, 20.

Mot. 2. It will be a total deſtruction it will bring you to, 2 Pet. ii. 12, 13. A deſtruction of your ſouls, bodies, and comforts, Prov. vi. 32. and viii. 36. Iſa lxvi. 24. Luke xvi. 24. Look as it was with Sodom when it was utterly overthrown, there was nothing left, but they and all theirs were deſtroyed: ſo will the end of the broad way be to you.

Mot. 3. It will be an eternal deſtruction, 2 Theſſ. i. 9. Who ſhall be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power. A deſtruction not of your being indeed, but of your well-being; ever dying, but never dying out, Matth. xxv. 46. Rev. xiv. 11. and xx. 10. Your way may be long indeed, but the deſtruction at the end of it will be longer: ye will compaſs your way at moſt in a few years; but the deſtruction will never end, but go on through eternity.

Mot. 4. Ye may get out of it now, and ſo eſcape deſtruction in it, Ezek. xviii. 30. Satan and an evil world may perſuade you to go on in it, but they cannot force you thereto. There is no neceſſary connection betwixt your having gone in it hitherto, and your going on in it ſtill. It is a courſe that may be broken off; the grace of God is able to bring you off it; and if ye be truly willing, will bring you off it, Jer. xxxi. 18, 19.

Mot. 5. God is calling you to turn from it, and leave it, Ezek xxxiii. 11. Christ has opened to you another way, a way to life, and is inviting you earneſtly into it.

He is propoſing himſelf as the way, John xiv. 6. and calling you to him, Matth. xi. 28. This his voice ſounds in the way, and reaches your ears while ye are on it, the broad way, Prov. ix. 5. 6. But it is not to be heard at the end of the way. Therefore it is ſaid, ‘To-day, if ye will hear his voice.’ At the end of the way, the voice of the Lamb of God ceaſes as ſuch, and becomes the roaring of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, Luke xix. 27.

Mot. 6. laſtly, The calls you have to turn from it, will be an aggravation of your deſtruction if ye go on, Matth. xi. 22. The remembrance of them at the end, will be cutting and galling, when there will be no remedy. It will be the never-dying worm, that will gnaw for ever; to think, that, for the pleaſure of walking at your liberty in the broad way for a few years, ye brought yourſelves to be ſhut up in the pit of deſtruction for ever. Therefore (Heb. xii. 25.) See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh; for if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth, much more ſhall not we eſcape, if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from heaven; leſt (Prov. v. 11, 12.) thou mourn at the laſt, when thy fleſh and thy body are conſumed; and ſay, How have I hated inſtruction, and my heart deſpiſed reproof?

Now, if ye would change your way, and leave the broad gate,

1. Be peremptory in it, and reſolute for it: for ye will not want oppoſition. Satan will oppoſe the change violently by his temptations: the carnal world will oppoſe it: your former licentious companions will be ſure to counſel, and mock you from it, if they can; and your own luſts within will be an active party againſt it. But remember, (Matth. xi. 12.) ‘the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.’

2. Do not delay it, but turn immediately, as the Pſalmiſt did, Pſal. cxix. 60. ‘I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.’ If your reſolutions for it be ſincere, they will not admit of a moment's delay, more than the caſting of a burning coal out of your boſom. If ye delay till the next day or the next hour, ye may be at the end of your way before that time: and what avails your purpoſe of turning then? As when the cry of fire in a houſe is made, men go immediately to quench it, knowing that every minute the fire is proceeding and gaining ground: ſo when men are convinced in earneſt, they will forthwith ſet to turn.

3. Set yourſelves by all means for the ſtrait gate, and do not think of getting over into the narrow way at the broad ſide, Luke xiii. 24. ‘Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate; for many will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able.’ This is a fundamental miſtake in the conduct of many; whereby, leaving the way of looſeneſs and careleſſneſs, they commence mere moraliſts or legal formaliſts, but no more true Chriſtians than they were before. Satisfy not yourſelves without a deep conviction of your ſin and miſery, faith in Jeſus Chriſt uniting you to him, true repentance and converſion unto God by Chriſt.

4. laſtly, Be not frighted at, diſcouraged by, or made to turn back becauſe of the ſtraitneſs of the gate; but peremptorily enter, and reſolutely thruſt forward, till ye be quite through on the narrow way of holineſs, Luke xiii. 24. forecited.

Doct. III. The wide gate, with the broad way joining it, does ſo take with mankind, that the multitude of the world goes in by it, at all adventures.

In diſcourſing this ſubject, I ſhall,

I. Explain the point.

II. Confirm this ſad truth, That the multitude of the world go in by the wide gate into the broad way.

III. Shew how it comes to paſs, that the multitude take the broad way, notwithſtanding of the deſtruction at the end of it.

IV. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall explain this point. And we may take up the ſenſe and import of it in theſe four things, all of them the genuine import of the text.

Firſt, There is among mankind a going in at the wide gate. However dangerous it is, yet it is frequented by poor unthinking ſouls. Though of right it ſhould be lothed for the pollution of it, and ſhould be ſhunned with a horror thereof, yet men do go in at it. That is,

1*ſt*, They enter and paſs through the wide gate, giving way to the corrupt natural inclination of their hearts, when they begin their courſe of life in the world, Pſal. lviii. 3. This, according to what was ſaid, lies in two things.

1. Giving way and ſcope to the bias of their heart towards the creature, away from God. The children of fallen Adam naturally go away from God, when they begin their courſe, Pſal. xiv. 2, 3.; and they go to the creature in his room and ſtead, Jer. ii. 13. They find they want, they need, and cannot but deſire to have ſupply: they want a reſt to their hearts, a match for their ſouls, ſomething that may ſatisfy their deſires. But what door go they to for the ſupply of their want? not to God's, but to the creature's, Pſal. iv. 6. John v. 40. There they faſten on the dry breaſts, refuſing the Lord's offers, Iſa. lv. 1, 2.

2. Giving way to the bias of the heart towards ſin, away from the holineſs required by the law. God in Chriſt calls them to take on his yoke, Matth xi. 29. but they cannot ſubmit their necks to it, Rom. viii. 7. They chuſe ſinful liberty, and look aſquint on the way of God's commandments. Beginning their courſe in the world, and ſinful liberty and religious ſtrictneſs being both before them, they reject the latter, and readily embrace the former. Sin appears delightful and pleaſant, holineſs rugged and unſightly to them: ſo they go with the bentſail of their hearts towards ſin, hoping to find there what will ſatisfy.

2*dly*, Paſſing through the wide gate, they are ſet on the broad way; they go in thereat, viz. into the broad way; which the wide gate is the entry to, and ſo they go on,

1. Walking in the way of vanity, Eph. iv. 17. They ſpend their lifetime in a vain purſuit of happineſs in the creature, which all along diſappoints them, and in the end worſt of all, Jer. ii. 5. ‘Thus ſaith the Lord, what iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain?’ They weary themſelves in the purſuit, and in end obtain nothing that can ſatisfy, Hab. ii. 13. Their whole life is filled up with mere amuſements: and beyond this they reach not to any ſolid and laſting happineſs, which can only be had in the enjoyment of a God in Chriſt, Luke xvii. 28, 29.

2. Walking in the way of vileneſs, Eph. ii. 3. The creature within the hedge of the divine law not affording the deſired ſatisfaction, they break over the hedge, and range up and down among forbidden profits and pleaſures; if ſo be that ſtolen waters may make up to them what is wanting in allowed ones. And none of theſe anſwering expectation neither, they go from one act of vileneſs to another; and the diſappointment ſtill renewed, their luſts crave anew of them, and they ſeek afreſh to ſatisfy them. Thus their life is ſpent, till their way is at end, and they fall in end into deſtruction. This is the going in thereat.

Secondly, They go in thereat at all adventures; raſhly and heedleſly, without conſidering. Great is the danger of that way, deſtruction being at the end of it. They are told their danger: conſcience tells them of it; they are warned of it from the word; providence ſets many frightful examples before them, one being made example to another: but all in vain. Their vain minds and corrupt luſts hurry them forward: they fix their eyes on the bait that is pleaſing, but notice not the ruining hook; and ſo they go on at all adventures, whatever be the iſſue.

Thirdly, They are many that thus go in at the wide gate into the broad way. As deſtructive as it is, there is a multitude of the children of men on it, Whoever mind for it, they need not fear want of company of fellow-travellers therein. They are many,

1. Abſolutely There is never wanting on the broad way a number of travellers, to encourage one another. There is a multitude to do evil. There they are of all ranks and qualities, great and ſmall, of all profeſſions, ages, and ſexes.

2. Comparatively, in compariſon of thoſe on the narrow way. So ſaith the text. There is ſuch an odds between the two parties, that the broad way men make the many, the other but a few. If broad way of ſinful liberty, and the ſtrait way of religion and godlineſs, were put to the vote in the world, the former would undoubtedly carry it; thoſe for it being ſo far ſuperior in number to thoſe for the other.

Fourthly, The wideneſs of the gate and broadneſs of the way influenceth this. The agreeableneſs thereof to the corrupt minds of men, inviteth powerfully to enter and come on; and being entered and come on, it keeps them from going back, and prompts to go on. It is a powerful influence, which the deſtruction at the end of the way is not able to balance.

II. We ſhall confirm this ſad truth. That the multitude of the world go in by the wide gate into the broad way. This may appear from,

1ſt, Scripture-teſtimony, which is the teſtimony of God himſelf, who neither can deceive nor be deceived. Scripture-light all along diſcovers the multitude of the world to be on the broad way. This it doth ſeveral ways; and particularly,

1. Witneſſing the univerſal corruption of human nature, Pſal. xiv. 2, 3. ‘The Lord looked down from hea-‘ven upon the children of men: to ſee if there were ‘any that did underſtand, and ſeek God. They are all ‘gone aſide, they are all together become filthy: there ‘is none that doth good, no not one.’ If ye think this was meant only of thoſe in the Pſalmiſt's day, ye may be cured of that miſtake by the apoſtle's application of it to all the world, Rom. iii. 12. 19. ‘They are all gone ‘out of the way, they are together become unprofitable, ‘there is none that doth good, no not one. Now we ‘know that what things ſoever the law ſaith, it ſaith to ‘them who are under the law: that every mouth may ‘be ſtopped, and all the world may become guilty be-‘fore God.’ This ſpeaks it to be natural to man, to betake himſelf to the broad way, though not primitively natural, for (Eccleſ. vii. 29.) ‘God made man upright;’ yet ſecondarily and accidentally, as our nature was corrupted in Adam, John iii. 6. ‘That which is born of ‘the fleſh is fleſh.’ Job. xiv. 4. ‘Who can bring a clean ‘thing out of an unclean? not one.’ So that this is the firſt way all men go, and in which they hold on till turned by grace.

2. Witneſſing the general depravity of men's lives. How forcible is that teſtimony, 1 John v. 19. ‘The ‘whole world lieth in wickedneſs.’ The godly are ſuch a ſmall number in the world, that the name of the world is left to the corrupt part: and they are ſo very corrupt, that they are ſaid to lie in wickedneſs. The ſtraying in the broad way begins very early, Pſal. lviii. 3. ‘The ‘wicked are eſtranged from the womb, they go aſtray ‘as ſoon as they be born ſpeaking lies;’ and God's elect ones are once engaged therein as well as others, Iſ. liii. 6. ‘All we like ſheep have gone aſtray;’ and go on till returned unto Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 25. For ye were as ſheep going aſtray; but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Biſhop of your ſouls. But ſtill the multitude ſtrays on, Phil. ii. 21. For all ſeek their own, not the things which are Jeſus Chriſt's.

3. The conſtant call to the multitude to repent and turn. That call ſuppoſes them to be quite wrong, and out of the way, Matth. ix. 13. ‘I am come—to call ‘ſinners to repentance.’ It was the ſound the prophets and apoſtles made in the world, each of them in their time, where they executed their commiſſion. So the houſe of Iſrael is beſpoken, Ezek. xxxiii. 11. ‘As I ‘live, ſaith the Lord God, I have no pleaſure in the ‘death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his ‘way, and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; ‘for why will ye die, O houſe of Iſrael?’ So ſaith the apoſtle, Acts xvii. 30. ‘And the times of this igno-‘rance God winked at; but now commandeth all men ‘every where to repent.’ And in all ages the neceſſity of this call to repent does continue, there being but few who anſwer it.

4. laſtly, The ſweeping judgments a holy God has at times ſet on the world, were ſure tokens of the multitude being on the broad way. Once the whole inhabitants of the earth, ſave eight perſons, were deſtroyed by a deluge of water. Sodom and Gomorrah were conſumed with fire from heaven, only Lot and his family eſcaping; whereas God was ready to have ſpared the whole, if there had been but ten righteous ones in the place. The deſtruction of Jeruſalem was another diſpenſation of that kind, of which our Saviour ſaith, Matth. xxiv. 21, 22. ‘For then ſhall be great tribulation, ſuch as was ‘not ſince the beginning of the world to this time, no, ‘nor ever ſhall be. And except thoſe days ſhould be ‘ſhortened, there ſhould no fleſh be ſaved; but for the ‘elect's ſake thoſe days ſhall be ſhortened.’ And the burning up of the world with fire at laſt, is a ſpeaking evidence that ſtill the multitude will take the broad way.

2dly, From our own obſervation, if we will but take a view of the world, as we have acceſs to be acquainted with it by ſeeing and hearing. I ſhall not ſpeak of the many nations lying in Pagan idolatry, nor others without the verge of the viſible church. It is plain, that among thoſe that have the light of the goſpel ſhining among them, the multitude is on the broad way.

1. Every body may ſee, how quite unlike to the rules of the goſpel are the lives of the generality that hear it, Tit. ii. 11, 12. Sobriety, righteouſneſs, and godlineſs, are taught by it; but few learn the leſſons. What exceſs of paſſions and vanity of mind carry moſt men beyond all bounds of ſobriety, to their own hurt? What unrighteouſneſs prevails to the injuring of others, ſo that in every ſociety, greater and leſſer, there are heavy complaints of this kind? And how little regard to God, his honour, his law, and intereſts, is to be ſeen among men, to the provoking of the eyes of his glory? If the multitude is not on the broad way, how is it thus? Truly, if ye ſee not that the multitude is upon it, it is an evidence ye do not know it by that name, and are unacquainted with the narrow way.

2. They that have eyes may ſee, how rare experimental religion is in the world. The multitude trouble not their heads about it; but live at eaſe, without any ſaving acquaintance with Chriſt, ignorant of the life of faith, and ſtruggle againſt the body of ſin and death. Conviction of one's loſt ſtate by nature, is very rare; the work of converſion is yet more rare. Few have a profeſſion or appearance of religion; and among thoſe that have it, how many are utter ſtrangers to the power of godlineſs? The truly ſerious will be convinced of this; for they muſt be ready to take up Micah's lamentation, Mic. vii. 1, 2. &c. See it.

III. How comes it to paſs, that the multitude take the broad way, notwithſtanding of the deſtruction at the end of it? This may be accounted for, if we conſider theſe following things.

1. It is the moſt agreeable way to their corrupt nature. It is the very way of their heart, Iſa. lvii. 17. The heart of man naturally is a treaſure of vanity, a fountain of vileneſs, Jer. xvii. 9. Mark vii. 21. How can the broad way of vanity and vileneſs miſs to be agreeable to it? Likeneſs begets love and liking: ſo their ſouls natively chuſe the broad way, wherein are to be found what things promiſe, though deceitfully, ſatiſfaction to the vanity of their minds, and the corrupt luſts of their hearts.

2. The blindneſs of their minds, Eph. iv. 17, 18. They ſee not the danger, to fright them away from it; they cannot, they will not ſee it. Their unmortified luſts caſt up ſuch miſts as darken the eyes of their mind, that though the danger is told them a thouſand times they cannot perceive it, Prov. ix. 17, 18. will not believe it, Deut. xxix. 19, 20. they ſee not any of thoſe things that might draw them from off it, 1 Cor. ii. 14. There is an attractive virtue, beauty, and glory in the contrary way, Prov iii. 17. but they do not perceive it.

3. Prejudices againſt the narrow way. They not only have not a good opinion of it; but they have an ill opinion of it, are prejudiced againſt it, Acts xxviii. 22. It appears to them an overgrown, rough, and frightful path: which, if they conſult their intereſt, they muſt hold off from. Chriſt's yoke is taken for an uneaſy yoke, his burden for a very heavy one. And ſo they determine againſt it, without giving it a fair trial.

4. The broad way is really eaſieſt for the time: Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat. In it one has no more ado, but to follow the inclination of his own heart; to go with the wind of corrupt paſſions and affections; but in the narrow way he will have that wind in his face, and muſt keep up a ſtruggle againſt his luſts, to mortify them. Thus preſent eaſe engages them to that way that ends in deſtruction, and preſent difficulty frights them from the way that leads to life in the end.

5. Satan the enemy of their ſalvation, has a mighty influence on them to carry them to, and keep them on that way. He is the god of this world, 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. and men are naturally under his power, Acts xxvi. 18. He has a favourable party within them; ſo that the way he would have them go, is the way their natural bent lies. Hence he has eaſy work to prompt them forward, for he rows with the tide. Add to this his ſubtilty, whereby he can eaſily over-reach them: and his diligence, whereby he ſlips no occaſion to put them on: and no wonder he drives the multitude before him.

6. Example contributes exceedingly to it, Matth. xviii. 7. One goes into that way, another follows, and ſo on. It is true, there are examples on the other ſide too: but good example has not ſuch influence as bad; becauſe men are naturally corrupt, and therefore want but one to go before, that they may follow according to their natural inclination, like water going down a hill, where the paſſage is cleared. But it is againſt the grain to follow good example.

7. laſtly, Want of conſideration, Luke xv. 17. Few are at pains to weigh things, and deliberately to chuſe their way; but they take the broad way upon truſt, as that which firſt offers to them. They look not afar off, beyond the preſent time: they conſider not what the end will be, but embrace the fair appearance for the preſent before them. They are engaged in the broad way ere they are aware; 'for childhood and youth are vani'ty,' Eccl. xi. 10. Youth is head ſtrong; and men are hurried on with ſtrong and impetuous paſſions, till they have got a ſet they cannot throw off, Jer. xiii. 24. 'Can 'the Ethiopian change his ſkin? or the leopard his ſpots? 'then may ye alſo do good, that are accuſtomed to do 'evil.'

USE 1. of Information. Hence we may learn, that,

1. Prevailing ſloth, and love to carnal eaſe, makes terrible havock in the world. Theſe are they that make the wide gate and broad way ſo taking, that the multitude go in thereat: and conſequently this betrays them into utter ruin, Prov. vi. 9, 10, 11. Sloth ſo prevails, that they cannot think to abide a ſtreſs, no not for things of the greateſt weight: but what is eaſieſt and requires leaſt pains, that is accounted beſt; and they cannot be moved with the after-reckoning.

2. The broad way that leads to deſtruction, is the throngeſt way in the world. Some take another way indeed, but the multitude is on the broad way. Many are the civil and religious differences among men: but here the multitude meet altogether upon one way, notwithſtanding of all their differences. There are different roads in this way, for the rich and the poor, the old and young, the profeſſor and the profane; but their way is one, and leads to the ſame place, where theſe differences will ſubſiſt no more, Pſal. cxxv. 5. Matth. xxiv. 51. At preſent they join to make up the multitude in the broad way.

3. What a poor defence of one's way and manner of life is it, That it is the way that generally prevails, that the moſt part follow? Alas is not the multitude on the broad way? But will that make it a way for our imitation? The apoſtle deſcribing the walk of the Epheſians when they were dead in ſins, tells us, it was according to the courſe of the world, Eph. ii. 2. And he urges the Romans not to conform to it, Rom. xii. 2. That way is to be ſuſpected that is the moſt taking with the multitude.

4. What it is that keeps ſin and iniquity in countenance in the world. It is the multitude of its followers, 1 Pet. iv. 4. Sin has a baſeneſs or filthineſs about it, which is a ſpring of ſhame: yet men will refuſe to be aſhamed of their vile and corrupt courſes, Jer. viii. 12. and ſome will pride themſelves in them, glorying in their ſhame. Why? The multitude ſtamp theſe courſes with their authority; and ſo they may appear with open face: for blackneſs is no reproach among Blackmoors. But Chriſt appearing in the glory of his Father, and all the holy angels with him, in the end, will ſink the glory of the authority of the multitude; then ſhame will cover them, Dan. xii. 2.

5. No wonder the ſerious godly have a lonely, uncomfortable, and deſpiſed life in the world. Iſrael was a type of them in that caſe, Numb. xxiii. 9. 'Lo, the 'people ſhall dwell alone, and ſhall not be reckoned a'mong the nations.' Micah laments his lonely caſe, becauſe of the multitude being on the broad way, Micah vii. 1. &c. he could have few to take part with him, few to unboſom himſelf to. Hence God's people are the world's wonder, Zech. iii. 8. Pſal. lxxi. 7. They are deſpiſed as an humourſome, odd, fantaſtick kind of people, addicted to ſingularities; becauſe the multitude is on another way they dare not take.

6. The church's peace and proſperity in the world cannot be long laſting; for the corrupt party in the world bears the ſway, the multitude being on the broad way, Cant. ii. 2. So 'the ſilence in heaven is but for half an 'hour,' Rev. iii. 1.: the corrupt multitude ſoon fill all with confuſion again. Hence,

(1.) Her peace has oft-times been broken with perſecution, the prevailing multitude crying, Crucify him, crucify him. The multitude then like ſwelling waters go over her head, and threaten to ſwallow her up, to raze Jeruſalem to the very foundations. And had not the Lord been on our ſide, they had deſtroyed her quite and clean long ere now.

(2.) Her peace reſtored, her purity is removed, Cant. i. 6. The multitude on the broad way deface her glory and beauty, and ſhe is made to lie among the pots; for a corrupt multitude will ſtill do corruptly, and like the mixed multitude infect all ſocieties, till the infection ſpread, and the corruption become univerſal.

We ſee it is our caſe this day. Time was when perſecution, blood, and violence rode in triumph; and nothing was heard from the multitude in church and ſtate, but Crucify, raze, &c. Now that humour is changed, and the perſecutors as well as the perſecuted are deſpiſed: but there is a general corruption in principles and practice, whereby truth and holineſs are wounded in the vitals; a hundred times more dangerous to the church, than the perſecution was.

USE 2. of Exhortation. As ever ye would eſcape deſtruction in the end, do not go the way of the multitude, the way the moſt go. And,

1. Believe it, that the multitude is on the broad way to deſtruction. Believe it, ſince Chriſt has ſaid it. Open your eyes, and ye may ſee it. Ye have the more need to be fixed in this principle, that we are naturally prejudiced in favour of a multitude, and to think, that the truth and goodneſs of a cauſe muſt needs be on the ſide of the many. And if that obtain with us in this caſe, we will be ready to embark, and go down the ſtream with them.

2. Never think to ſhelter yourſelves in an ill way, among the throng of them that are on it. The throng there may blind you as to the deſtruction at the end of the way, but can never afford you protection. If the the whole world were on the broad way, they could not alter the nature of it, and make that which is evil and deſtructive, good and ſafe.

3. In your courſe of life, follow not the multitude of the world, but diſtinguiſh yourſelves from them, though ye ſhould undergo the cenſure of being ſingular, Exod. xxiii. 2. Rom. xii. 2. Make not the many in the world your pattern; but chuſe that way which the beſt, not which the moſt are on.

Motive 1. Conſider the way of the multitude is the way to deſtruction, as is clear from the text: and however people may pleaſe themſelves with companions in ſin, it will be no comfort to go to hell with company, as may be learned from Luke xvi. 28. Why ſhould regard to a multitude prevail with us, to go to deſtruction with them?

Mot. 2. There will be no getting to heaven without ſtriving againſt the ſtream of the multitude of the world, Eph. vi. 12. God calls you to come out from among them, 2 Cor. vi. 17. to forget your people, Pſal. xlv 10. yea, to ſave yourſelves from them, as from a company of deſtroyers, Acts ii. 40. Ye muſt fight your way through them, if ever ye would receive the crown; reſolute not to go along with them, coſt what it will; as our Lord teacheth, Luke xiv. 26. 'If any man come to me, and 'hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life 'alſo, he cannot be my diſciple.'

Mot. 3. This was the way the cloud of witneſſes went before us, refuſing the way of the multitude. Thus did Noah in the old world; and thus did Abraham, Moſes, and all the prophets. Thus our Saviour himſelf had the multitude againſt him, he and they walking in a way and manner of life quite oppoſite: and ſo all his apoſtles. Can we think then to travel with the multitude, and lodge with the ſaints in the end?

Mot. 4. What is a multitude againſt God? Job ix. 4. Is it reaſonable that the authority of men ſhould take place againſt the authority of God? All men are liars; God neither can deceive, nor be deceived. Why then ſhould not his word be our rule to be ſtuck to in things that it requires or forbids, ſay the contrary who will? Can a multitude ſecure you from the puniſhment due to ſinful ways? No; they cannot ſecure themſelves, Pſal. ix. 17.

Mot. 5. laſtly, To follow the multitude, is to ſtrengthen the conſpiracy againſt God. And how will ye anſwer it to him, that when ye ſaw the ſtream going againſt him, his work, and his way, in the world, ye went along with it, and ſo added to the force of it? In ſuch a caſe, he is ſaying, 'Who is on my ſide? Will ye alſo go 'away?' It concerns all to ſee what they will anſwer to this.

Advice. Let not the ſcarecrow of ſingularity fright you into the way of the multitude. Noah was a very ſingular man in the old world, and Lot in Sodom; and had they not been ſo, they had periſhed with the reſt. None will ſee heaven, but a ſingular kind of folk, Mark viii. 38.

DOCT. IV. It is a ſtrait gate and narrow way that leadeth unto life.

In ſpeaking to this, we will conſider,

I. The ſtrait gate.

II. The narrow way leading away unto life.

III. laſtly, Apply.

I. We ſhall conſider the ſtrait gate. And having ſpoken of this already, I ſhall here drop but a few things of it.

1ſt, The ſtrait gate is the entrance, and the only entrance into the narrow way that leadeth unto life. This ſpeaks four things.

1. That mankind naturally are off the way to life, Rom. iii. 12. And if they hold on the way they begin, they will never ſee it. There is an abſolute neceſſity for all men once to chuſe a new way, and turn off from the way they are naturally going in. God ſet upright Adam on a way to life, the way of perfect obedience, Eccleſ. vii. 29.; but he left it, and all his poſterity in him, Rom. v. 12. There is a new and living way opened by Chriſt, the way of walking in him, Col. ii. 6. This is the narrow way; and that unbelievers were never on.

2. There is acceſs for ſinners off the way to life, yet to get on it, Prov. ix. 4, 5, 6. Wanderers may be yet ſet right; they that are going in the way of death, may yet be ſet on the way of life. While they are not arrived at their journey's end, there is ſtill hope: therefore (Matth. v. 25.) 'Agree with thine adverſary quickly, 'whiles thou art in the way with him,' &c. But once come to the journey's end by death, there is no more hope, Eccleſ. ix. 10.

3. There is a gate, though a ſtrait one, by which they may get through to the narrow way to life. This is the appointed entrance into it: whoever would be in on it, muſt go about, and enter by it: and going through the gate, they ſhall be undoubtedly on the way, John x. 9. Look about then to diſcern it.

4. laſtly, There is no getting on the narrow way but by the ſtrait gate, John iii. 5. To climb up another way, is a vain and fruitleſs attempt. As is one's entrance, ſo will his progreſs be. The actions muſt needs be of the nature of the principle; and there will be no bringing forth of good fruit in the narrow way, till once the tree be made good by entering in at the ſtrait gate, Matth. vii. 17, 18.

2dly, The ſtrait gate being the entrance into the way leading to life, it is, in plain terms, an inward and thorough change, relative and real, made on a ſinner. For this is it without which there is no reaching the way of true holineſs, the way leading to life. I ſay,

1. It is a change made on the ſinner, whereby he is not what he was before, 2 Cor. v. 17. 'If any man be 'in Chriſt, he is a new creature: old things are paſt a'way, behold, all things are become new.' This cannot be refuſed by any, who acknowledge themſelves to be born ſinners. To continue and go on in ſin, in vanity and vileneſs, is inconſiſtent with entering on the narrow way to life, Rom. viii. 13. 'For if ye live after 'the fleſh, ye ſhall die; but if ye through the Spirit do 'mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live.' You muſt then undergo a change, from what you naturally are and incline to, if ever you mind for life.

2. It is an inward change, Ezek. xxxvi. 26, 27. An outward change without that will not do. A new life and converſation pinned to the old corrupt heart and nature, will make but a painted ſepulchre, that can never be pleaſing to him, who ſees not as man ſees, but looks to the heart, 1 Sam. xvi. 7. Matth. xxiii. 27, 28. True holineſs lies inwardly, though it ſhines forth in the outward man, 1 Pet. iii. 4. and without an inward gracious principle, all is but hypocriſy, mere form and ſhew.

3. It is a real change, affecting one's nature, and making it new, 2 Pet. i. 4. There muſt be a new temper of ſpirit, with a new bent and ſet of heart; whereby one is made to incline to the way of holineſs he was averſe to before; and diſinclined to the vanity and vile-neſs he was prone and bent to formerly. Therefore it is called a being born again, John iii. 3. a putting on the new man, Eph. iv. 24. And there is a neceſſity for ſuch a change, in order to holineſs of life; for there muſt be new gracious qualities in our nature, to be a principle of holy walking.

4. It is a relative change, affecting one's ſtate, 1 Cor. vi. 11. Children of wrath will always be children of diſobedience; and curſed trees will never bring forth bleſſed fruits. They muſt be in a ſtate of grace and favour with God, ſtanding in new relations, who ſhall walk to God, in the narrow way to life, Rom. viii. 1. To expect that thoſe who are not children of God, will obey him; that thoſe who are not at peace with him, ſhall ſerve him acceptably; that they who are under the curſe of the broken law, ſhall walk in the way of life, is vain. The firſt covenant may have children; but they will be bond-children, to be caſt out, not to be heirs, Gal. iv. 24. 30.

5. laſtly, It is a thorough change, 2 Cor. v. 17. It muſt go through the whole man: every part being ſanctified, though in this life no part be wholly ſanctified, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. Light let into the head, while there is no gracious change in the heart; a caſting away ſome ſins, while others are ſtill ſtuck to; a taking of ſome ſcrapes of the law, for the rule of our life, while another part of it is ſtaved off; is a plain evidence, that one is not entered by the gate.

Thus ye ſee the gate by which one enters the narrow way; thus ye have a general proſpect of it. To deſcribe it more particularly, there are theſe ſeven ſteps of it.

1. Conviction, conviction of ſin and miſery. This is the very firſt ſtep, the awakening of the ſinner, and coming to ſee himſelf all wrong. A new light ſhining from heaven, the man by it ſees his ſin as he never ſaw it before, John xvi. 8. His ſins are ſet in order before him, and ſtare him in the face like a ghoſt. He ſees his actual ſin, and his original ſin; the evil of them, and their contrariety to the holy nature and law of God. He ſees his miſery, he beholds himſelf loſt and undone, Luke xv. 17. Rom. vii. 9. under the wrath of God, the curſe of the broken law, and the bands of death.

2. Saving illumination in the knowledge of Chriſt, 2 Cor. iv. 6. This is the merchant man's finding the one pearl, Matth. xiii. 46. Hereby the ſinner ſees Chriſt a Saviour in the tranſcendent glory of his perſon and offices, able and willing to help him out of his ſtate of ſin and miſery; a Saviour ſuited to the divine perfections, and to his own caſe; on whom therefore he may freely venture his ſalvation. This is a higher ſtep of the gate, whereon the ſinner is brought in ſight of the narrow way.

3. Renewing of the will, whereby the ſinner is made pliable to the goſpel-call, Ezek. xxxvi. 26. Pſal. cx. 3. The iron ſinew in the neck is hereby broken; the ſinner called by the goſpel, is hereby drawn with cords of love and bands of a man. Chriſt ſeen in his glory, captivates his heart, John xii. 32. By this ſaving work on the mind and will, the dead ſinner is quickened: there is a vital principle put in the ſoul, whereby the ſoul is both perſuaded and enabled to go up a ſtep.

4. Faith in Jeſus Chriſt, believing on his name, John i. 12. Thus the merchant-man buys the one pearl, Matth. xiii. 46. The ſoul being drawn, comes to Chriſt, and comes away to him freely, taking him for all, and inſtead of all, Pſal. lxxiii. 25. The ſoul bids an eternal farewell to the way of vanity and vileneſs, no more to go in queſt of happineſs there, Jer. xvi. 19. looks for the ſupply of all its wants in and from Chriſt alone: for by faith we are married to Chriſt, and ſo come to reſt in him.

5. New relations to heaven. This is a glorious ſtep which a ſinner gets up to by faith; and it lies here. The ſinner having believed in Chriſt, is united to him, Eph. iii. 17. being united to him, is juſtified, 1 Cor. vi. 11. being juſtified, is reconciled to God, Rom. v. 1. being reconciled, is adopted into the family of heaven, Eph. ii. 16. 19 being adopted, God is his God, John xx. 17. Whereas formerly being out of Chriſt, he was a condemned creature, an enemy to God, a child of the devil, without God in the world.

6. Habitual ſanctification, the ſanctification of our nature, Eph. i. 13. 1 Cor. vi. 11. Hereby the ſinner's nature is renewed, Eph. iv. 23, 24. his whole perſon, ſoul and body, is ſanctified, 1 Theſſ. v. 23. New qualities are infuſed into the mind, will, and affections; whereby he becomes a new creature, formed after the image of God, becauſe formed in a likeneſs to the man Chriſt, by receiving out of his fulneſs grace for grace, John i. 16. Thus the ſeeds of all graces are planted in him, new habits, habits of grace, the immediate principles of every gracious action.

7. laſtly, Repentance unto life, true goſpel-repentance, Jer. xxxi. 18, 19 Ezek. xxxvi. 31. This is the higheſt and laſt ſtep of the ſtrait gate, which immediately ſets the man on the narrow way leading to life. It is not that legal repentance, which being the effect of a work of conviction by the law, judging and condemning the ſinner, falls in with the firſt ſtep of the ſtrait gate. But it is that whereby a ſinner, not only convinced of his ſin and miſery. but illuminated in the knowledge of Chriſt, having his will renewed, believing, new related to heaven, and having his nature ſanctified, does turn from ſin unto God, out of love to God, and hatred of ſin, as contrary to his holy will and nature: which is the only repentance acceptable to God. And before a ſinner is thus furniſhed for it, it is impoſſible he can reach it.

But untill one is brought to this repentance, he can never ſet a foot on the narrow way of holineſs leading to life, Acts ii. 18. For before one can go right, he muſt needs turn right: and he can never turn right from ſin unto God, till he turn thus. The whole gate is a ſtrait gate, and this is a ſtrait ſtep; but no man, without making it firſt, ſhall ever go a ſtep in the narrow way, Luke xiii. 3.

II. We ſhall conſider the narrow way leading away unto life. And here we ſhall conſider, 1. The narrow way itſelf. 2. Its leading away unto life.

FIRST, The narrow way itſelf. That is the way into which a ſtrait gate ſets a perſon; the gate lands him on the way, ſo that having paſſed through the gate, he is on this way. Here conſider, 1. What this way is. 2. The parts of it. 3. The narrowneſs of it.

Firſt, What is this way? This way is the way of holineſs, Iſa. xxxv. 8. 'An high-way ſhall be there, and 'a way, and it ſhall be called the way of holineſs.' The broad way is the way of one's own heart; the narrow way is the way according to the heart of a holy God: the broad way is the way of vanity and vileneſs; the narrow way is the way of purity and holineſs, which is agreeable to God, Pſal. xxiv. 3, 4.

There is a twofold holineſs, habitual and actual. Habitual holineſs is holineſs of nature, in a holy new frame and diſpoſition of the ſoul, whereby the man is reconciled unto the holy law, which he was at war with before; the heart inclining unto thoſe things that the law commands, and diſinclining to, and having an averſion at the things that it forbids. Hence it is expreſſed by the law written on the heart; the renewed heart and the law lying both one way, and agreeing as an honeſt man's thoughts and written words whereby he expreſſeth his thoughts, Heb. viii. 10. For this is the covenant that I will make with the houſe of Iſrael after thoſe days, ſaith the Lord: I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts, &c. But this belongs to the ſtrait gate, being that which the entering in at the ſtrait gate iſſues in.

Actual holineſs is holineſs of life, in thoughts, words, and actions of a holy kind; whereby a man walks up in ſome meaſure to the holy principles and diſpoſitions of the new nature, and ſo adds a new life to his new nature, 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7.; that is, having gone through the ſtrait gate, he walks on the narrow way. So more particularly,

The narrow way is the way of holy obedience, 1 Pet. i. 14, 15. That is the way that leadeth to life; even as Jeſus Chriſt was, during his life in the world, obedient, even to the death of the croſs, and then was received up into glory: whom therefore we muſt follow in this way, if we mind to be with him in end, Heb. xii. 1, 2. Now, there are two things that go to the conſtitution of the way of holy obedience.

1. For the matter thereof, it is the way of God's commandments, Pſal. cxix. 32. It is the holy law that chalks out this way to us, in the ſeveral commands of God therein. Where there is no commandment, there can be no obedience. Whatever ſhew of holineſs there may be in things that God has not commanded, it is but ſuperſtition, not holy obedience, Matth. xv. 9. Where there is a tranſgreſſing of the commandment, by omiſſion or commiſſion, there is a going off the way of holy obedience, which is bounded on every ſide by the holy commandment. Thus the narrow way is diſtinguiſhed from the way,

(1.) Of profanity; wherein men walk after their own luſts, caſting God's commandments behind their backs. Theſe refuſe to be narrowed in their walk by the rule of life given in the word: they look upon it as a thing that would hamper them, and therefore practically ſay, as Pſal. ii. 3. 'Let us break their bands aſunder, and caſt 'away their cords from us.' Their own luſts, not the holy law, is their rule.

(2.) Of ſuperſtition; wherein men, without the commandment of God, pretend to ſerve and obey him, in a holy manner. This is a narrow way of men's own making, Matth. xv. 2. They themſelves deviſe commands of their own hearts, and make things duty or ſin, which God has not made ſo, Col. ii. 20, 21, 22.

In oppoſition to both theſe, the narrow way is the way of God's commandments; that, and that only, which is pointed out to us by the authority of God in the moral law of the ten commands. The which the profane man quite neglects, and the ſuperſtitious adds unto; but the true Chriſtian takes, as it ſtands, for the rule, and the only rule of his life, afraid either to neglect it, or add unto it.

2. For the form thereof, it is the way of walking in Chriſt, Col. ii. 6. Without this the walking in the way of the commandment, is no holy obedience; but a legal ſelfiſh courſe of life, which though it may be of uſe in ſociety among men, yet it is not acceptable to God, becauſe it ſavours not of Chriſt, John xv. 5. This makes it true goſpel-obedience, the only obedience that a ſinner can expect to have taken off his hand with acceptance in the court of heaven. It lies in theſe four things.

(1.) In taking the law as out of the hand, not of an abſolute God, but of a God in Chriſt, Matth. xvii. 5. Natural men, becauſe of their ſpiritual blindneſs, receive the law as innocent Adam did, from God, without eying the Mediator as the channel of its conveyance: hence they ſet themſelves to obey it as they can and think meet, that they may have life by their obedience to it. This mars their obedience, makes it ſervile, and unacceptable to God, Gal. iv. 24. 30. becauſe it is not perfect. But the true Chriſtian receives the law from a God Redeemer and Saviour in Chriſt, Exod. xx. 1, 2. Hence receiving life by faith in the free promiſe, they ſet themſelves to obey out of love to a reconciled God, in point of gratitude to the redeemer, and as the way in which he has appointed them to walk towards the perfection of that life he has purchaſed, and beſtows of free grace.

(2.) In depending on Chriſt for ſtrength for every ſtep of their way, as branches that muſt bring forth fruit by communication of ſap from the ſtock, John xv. 5. This the apoſtle exhorts to, 2 Tim. ii. 1. 'Be ſtrong in 'the grace that is in Chriſt Jeſus.' Hence the Chriſtian goes out in the way of holy obedience, as David went out againſt Goliah, in the name of the Lord of hoſts, 1 Sam. xvii. 45. in the name of the Lord Jeſus, Col. iii. 17. Therefore in his obedience he is ſelf-denied, and humble, acknowledging himſelf an unprofitable ſervant when he has done all.

(3.) In depending on him for acceptance of all their obedience, not daring to truſt the acceptance thereof to the nature of the work itſelf, Gen. iv. 4. compared with Heb. xi. 4. This is a difficult ſtep in the narrow way, which none but true Chriſtians do make, Phil. iii. 3. To be denied to our obedience when it is done, to lay no ſtreſs of its acceptance on our diligence, ſincerity, and attainments in it, is not eaſy. However it is certain, that the acceptance is for Chriſt's ſake only, 1 Pet. ii. 5.

(4.) laſtly, In daily recourſe to Jeſus Chriſt for purging away the errors of our way, Zech. xiii. 1. There are none that walk ſo exactly, but they are ſtill making wrong ſteps, and contracting new defilement, which cannot be purged but by the application of the blood of ſprinkling; nay, there is not one ſtep the beſt make, but there is ſome defilement cleaves to them in it; ſo that ſtill they need to waſh their feet, John xiii. 10. This then is the daily exerciſe in the narrow way; and there is no walking in it but in Chriſt.

The ſum of what is ſaid, is, That the narrow way is the way of holy obedience, wherein one walks in Chriſt, in the way of God's commandments. And this way of holy obedience may be taken up in theſe two.

1. The way of doing or working, in obedience to the preceptive will of God, Eccleſ. ix. 10. God ſets every man the work he is to do, his ſalvation-work, and his generation-work; in every relation wherein we ſtand to God or man, our duty is ſet us by his commandment; he has appointed us what we are to do, for his honour and the good of ourſelves and others. And to the performance of every part thereof we are to ſet ourſelves, in obedience to his will; and that in Chriſt Jeſus.

2. The way of bearing or ſuffering, in obedience to his providential will, Matth. xvi. 24. God allots to every one their particular burden of croſſes and afflictions; and requires them to go on their way under them, for their trial. Here is exerciſe for the bearing graces, faith, ſelf-denial, patience, hope, &c. And we muſt ſet ourſelves to the Chriſtian bearing of theſe things, in obedience to his will; and that in Chriſt Jeſus.

Thus ſhall we walk in the narrow way, doing and bearing in Chriſt, taking our duty and our trial as out of his hand, and going on with both in a believing reliance on him.

And this way bears a twofold ſet of marks upon it, all along from the beginning to the end of it.

1. The footſteps of the flock, Chriſt's flock, Cant. i. 8. It is the way wherein the company of ſaints have travelled in all generations, ſo that thoſe who will ſee, may ſee the prints of the feet of Chriſt's flock on the narrow way, as thoſe of the devil's drove are to be ſeen on the broad way. On the former you will ſee the prints of the feet of the patriarchs, prophets, apoſtles, all the Old and New Teſtament ſaints: on the latter you will ſee the prints of the feet of Cain, Pharaoh, Judas, and all the wicked in all generations. The habitual practice of the ſaints is what makes theſe footſteps in the narrow way, conſiſting of two diſcernible parts.

(1.) The fore part, viz. faith, faith in Chriſt, and the promiſes through him. This is the fore part of their footſteps, that being it by which the ſaints from Abel, in all generations, did and ſuffered great things, Heb. xi. 1.——39. They believed and worked their good works; believed, and bore their trials and afflictions. The promiſe of Chriſt was given, Gen. iii. 15. to ſet them at firſt on the way, and the very firſt motion on it was Adam and Eve's believing it; and ſo it has been in every footſtep of the flock ſince, and will to the end, Gal. ii. 20.

(2.) The hind part, viz. ſincere obedience. This is the print of the heel, Heb. xi. 4, 5, 7. &c. Believing the truth, they conformed to it in their lives, being caſt into the mould of it: receiving the promiſe by faith, they ſincerely obeyed the command: embracing the goſpel, they took the law for the rule of their life, making no exception of any of its commands, as ſeeing them all ſtamped with the authority of their God, Creator, and Redeemer: having received Chriſt the Lord, they walked in him in all holy obedience.

Thus the footſteps of the flock are diſtinguiſhed from all other. Many a different footſtep is on the broad way, but none of them all are of this make. The footſteps of Atheiſts and Infidels are to be ſeen there, of profane ones, mere moraliſts, formaliſts, and hypocrites: but as the fore part of all their ſteps is unbelief; ſo the hind part is profanity, or mere external hypocritical obedience, unacceptable to God. Either they are legaliſts, pretenders to obedience, and neglecters of faith; or carnal goſpellers, pretenders to faith, making no conſcience of good works, or univerſal obedience; or they are profane contemners of both. But the footſteps of the flock conſiſt of both together, James ii. 18.

2. The footſteps of Chriſt himſelf, 1 Pet. ii 21. All mankind having gone off their way, and not knowing how to find it again, it pleaſed the Father to ſend his own Son in our nature into the world, that, by his walking in the world, men might ſee, in a bright example, the way of walking acceptable to God. Accordingly he came, and entering on the narrow way, he walked it all along, and left the prints of his feet thereon from the beginning to the end thereof, Phil. ii. 8. In the example of the beſt of the ſaints, there are ſome wrong, out-of-the-way ſteps; but his footſteps are perfectly regular, without the leaſt imperfection, or the leaſt part of a ſtep out of the way. And they alſo conſiſt of two parts.

(1.) Faith in God his Father, and the promiſes of the covenant made to him. Chriſt in his divine nature is the object of faith, John xiv. 1. compared with Jer. xvii 5.; but in his human nature he was a ſubject of faith. The man Chriſt believed in God his Father, truſted in him perfectly, and relied on him, upon the ground of his faithfulneſs, Pſal. xxii. 8, 9. Heb ii. 13. He had the promiſes of aſſiſtance, Iſa xlii. 6. acceptance, and a glorious reward, chap xlix 8. Heb. xii. 2. And accordingly he waited for the fulfilment of them, and was not diſappointed, Pſal. x. 1. and declares the divine faithfulneſs from his experience, ver. 10. Yea even now in his exaltation at the right hand of God, he continues his faith and aſſured hope of what of the promiſes remains to be accompliſhed: ſo that the man Chriſt in glory is a believing waiter ſtill, Heb. x. 12. 13.: which ſhould endear to us waiting on God, ſince the man Chriſt himſelf was, and ſtill is one of the company of believing waiters on God. And this ſhews us how Chriſt came to receive the ſeals of the covenant, the ſacraments, viz. to confirm his faith in God.

Here then we have the print of Chriſt's own footſteps in believing, which alſo makes the fore part of them; for the man Chriſt believed and ſo obeyed; which is lively ſet forth, Iſa. l. 5, 6, 7. ‘The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned I away my back. I gave my back to the ſmiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting. For the Lord God will help me, therefore ſhall I not be confounded; therefore have I ſet my face like a flint, and I know that I ſhall not be aſhamed. Hence when he came into the world, he was circumciſed on the eighth day; before he entered on his public miniſtry, he was baptized, had the voice from heaven, and then was carried to the wilderneſs, Mark i. 9.——12.: and before he entered on the hardeſt piece of all his work, he received the ſacrament of the paſſover, and of the ſupper.

(2.) Perfect obedience. As his faith was, ſo was his obedience perfect, every way complete and ſinleſs, 1 Pet. ii. 22. It was perfect in parts, Matth. iii. 15. he fulfilled all righteouſneſs. In the doing part, he accounted nothing too hard, loving his very enemies; in the ſuffering part, he went through the hardeſt pieces mildly and patiently, Phil. ii. 8. 1 Pet. ii. 23: perfect in the degrees of it, every thing carried to the utmoſt pitch, Iſa. xlii. 4.: in the principle of it, love to his Father's glory, and the ſalvation of ſinners; perfect love appearing in the greateſt poſſible inſtances, Pſal. xl. 6, 7, 8: and in continuance, from the cradle to the grave, Phil. ii. 8.

Thus Chriſt walked the narrow way; and, by the prints of his feet, put another ſet of marks on it, whereby it it is more fully and clearly diſtinguiſhed from all other ways. The imperfections that attend the ſaints walk, leave the matter of the way in ſome obſcurity; ſo that carnal men noticing them, from thence would make the narrow way very broad, ſince in many paths of deſtruction they can diſcern the footſteps of ſaints. The adulterer ſees David's footſteps in his way, the drunkard Noah's, the curſer and ſwearer, and apoſtate, Peter's: not conſidering that theſe were their out of the way footſteps, from which they turned back by bitter repentance, in which ſteps they neglect to follow them. But the footſteps of the Shepherd of the flock, puts the way beyond all doubt; that it is the way of purity and holineſs, the way of faith and obedience, that has nothing in common with the broad way, the way of ſin.

Secondly, What are the parts of this way, the narrow way? Many are the ſteps or pieces of the way, from the beginning of it at the point of converſion to God, unto the end of it at death: and it is longer to ſome than to others, partly becauſe of the various lengths of mens lives, partly becauſe ſome are ſo happy as to be more early converted than others; which two things make an unequal length of the way. But longer or ſhorter, it conſiſts of two parts.

1ſt, The way of mortification, Rom. viii. 13. If ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye ſhall live. This is part of the narrow way, which lies all along from the beginning to the end of it, in which therefore the ſaints going towards life muſt ſtill be making progreſs, ſince they will never come to the end of it till death. The ſtrait gate of converſion and regeneration ſets one upon it, becauſe theſe are not perfect; but ſtill there is a mixture of the old with the new nature; of ſin and corruption with holineſs. It lies in theſe two.

1. Mortification to the creature, in oppoſition to the way of vanity. This is begun in the ſoul's coming to Chriſt, Jer. xvi. 19. and is to be carried on all along the believer's life after, Cant. iv. 8. till he be without the reach of an enchanting deluding world, no more to be moved either with its ſmiles or frowns. Paul was on that way, when he ſaid, Gal. vi. 14. God forbid that I ſhould glory, ſave in the croſs of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world. The Lord carries on his people in it, by ordinances, giving them there lively views of creature vanity and emptineſs, in the glaſs of the word, ſacraments, prayer, meditation, &c. by providences laying gall and wormwood on the breaſts of the creature, till the believer be as a weaned child, Pſal. cxxxi.

2. Mortification to ſin, in oppoſition to the way of vileneſs that unregenerate ſinners walk in, Rom. vi. 6, 7. This is to get the mouth out of taſte to the pleaſures of ſin, to be dying to it, to be rooting up the weeds of ſin daily, that grow up in the ſoil of an evil heart. And it reaches to the whole body of the ſins of the fleſh, if it be genuine mortification, Col. ii. 11. If any one is known and ſpared, it is no true mortification; the man is in the way to death and deſtruction, as the ſhip to ſinking where one lake is neglected to be ſtopped, Pſal. cxix. 6. Particularly it reaches to,

(1.) Particular luſts and corruptions, the members of this body, Col. iii. 5. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanneſs, inor-

ordinate affection, evil concupiſcence, and covetouſneſs, which is idolatry. Theſe are many, and divers kinds, fleſhly luſts, and ſpiritual luſts; pleaſing luſts, and tormenting paſſions. All come under the name of worldly luſts, which the goſpel teaches to deny the cravings of, Tit. ii. 12. On every one of them, men in the way to life keep a watchful eye, to knock them down as they begin to ſet up their heads; to wreſtle againſt them, ſeeking their death and deſtruction.

In a ſpecial manner, that luſt which one is moſt addicted to, commonly called one's predominant; whether it be the ſin which one's conſtitution, calling, circumſtances, or any thing whatſoever, makes moſt eaſily to beſet them, Heb. xii. 1. that muſt be mortified, though it be as hard to compaſs as to pluck out a right eye, or cut off a right hand, Matth. v. 29, 30. And none can prove himſelf on the narrow way, without the mortification of that, Pſal. xviii. 23. And we may judge of our progreſs in the narrow way by our progreſs in that.

(2.) The ſin of our nature, the body itſelf whereof theſe particular luſts are the members, called the fleſh, Gal. v. 24. That ſinful diſpoſition that is born with us, making us prone to evil, and averſe to good; ready to comply with temptations to ſin, hard to be brought up to our duty; holding faſt ill impreſſions made, letting good ones eaſily ſlip. The ax of mortification muſt be laid at this root of the tree, if we would take the narrow way.

Now theſe are mortified by refuſing compliance with them, and acting the graces contrary to them, Gal. v. 16, 17. Hereby they are ſtarved and weakened, and grace is cheriſhed and ſtrengthened, Rom. xiii. 14. Heb. v. 14.

2dly, The way of vivification, or newneſs of life, Rom. vi. 4. in the practice of good works, Tit. iii. 8. that is, thoughts, words, or deeds agreeable to the will of God, and pleaſing in his ſight. This is another part of the narrow way, which lies all along from the ſtrait gate to the end of the way at death; which the grace implanted in the heart in regeneration exerts itſelf in: for the new nature muſt have its fruit in newneſs of life, whereby a man lives to the honour of God, his own good, and the good of mankind. It alſo lies in two things.

1. Living to God in oppoſition to the creature, Gal. ii. 19. The unregenerate man is dead to God, but alive to the creature: all the inward motions of his ſoul are towards the creature, not towards God. It is his portion; his joy is in the having of it, and his ſorrow in the want of it. He has no kindly motion towards God for himſelf, more than they that are in the grave. But entering the ſtrait gate of regeneration, one becomes alive to God, Rom. vi. 11. and dead to the creature, Col. iii. 3. And ſo he goes on the narrow way, as dying to the creature, ſo living to God; reſting in him as his portion, ſeeking him always as his chief good, loving him above all, joying and delighting in the enjoyment of him, ſorrowing for the want thereof, and for ſin that mars the light of his countenance, Col. iii. 1, 2, 3. All this the tenor of his life witneſſeth, Pſal. xxx. 5. and iv. 6, 7.

2. Living to righteouſneſs, in oppoſition to ſin, 1 Pet. ii. 24. The unregenerate are dead to righteouſneſs, but alive to ſin, Rom. vi. 23. as free from righteouſneſs as thoſe in the grave from what is done on the earth, they meddle not with it, Eph. ii. 1. But entering the ſtrait gate of regeneration, they are put in a ſtate of death to ſin, and of life to righteouſneſs, Rom. vi. 4. Col. iii. 1. they awake to it, 1 Cor. xv. 34. And ſo they go on in the narrow way, living to it as ſervants of it, Rom. vi. 18. And this their living to righteouſneſs extends to the whole will of God known to them, Acts xiii. 22. Col. iv. 12. and makes their obedience univerſal, Col. i. 10. It lies in theſe following things.

(1.) Living to righteouſneſs towards God; that is, living godly, Tit. ii. 12. There is a duty that in juſtice we owe to God immediately, as our Creator, Preſerver, and Redeemer, that is, the duty of piety, in all the inſtances thereof required in the firſt table. Who ſo walk on the narrow way, live to pay that duty, as owing in point of righteouſneſs and gratitude too. Therefore they are concerned to live to honour him in the world, taking that for their chief buſineſs in it, Phil. i. 21. and ſee no comfortable uſe they are for in the world, if they get him not honoured in their ſtation. So they look on their intereſt, as entwiſted with the intereſts of his glory.

(2.) Living to righteouſneſs towards ourſelves; that is, living ſoberly, Tit. ii. 12. We owe a duty to ourſelves, and it is bound on us with a bond of juſtice or righteouſneſs, in as much as we are not our own, but the Lord's. That duty is required of us in the ſecond table, obliging us to conſult the good, honour, and welfare of our own bodies, to treat them as the temples of God, and therefore to hold off from all things that may be hurtful or defiling to them; and to advance the good of our own ſouls, by aiming at and purſuing after their perfection in truth and holineſs, Pſal. iii. 14.; and to hold off from what may darken or pollute them. And this is a great part of the buſineſs of the life of thoſe on the narrow way.

(3.) Living to righteouſneſs towards our neighbour; that is, living righteouſly, ſtrictly ſo called, Tit. ii. 12. We are not born for ourſelves, but for others alſo; and we owe a duty to mankind our fellow-creatures, according to the ſeveral inſtances thereof required in the ſecond table. Since we are men, we muſt always keep on, never caſt off humanity, towards any of our kind, be they rich or poor, above us or below us. We ſhould breathe an univerſal good-will toward mankind, ſeeking the good of our kind, and diſpoſed to acts of beneficence towards them, as we have ability and opportunity. This humanity requireth, juſtice makes a debt, and Chriſtianity inſpires men with, who are on the narrow way, Gal. vi. 10. Luke vi. 36. Ah! how will we anſwer to our common Father, if we take no care to be uſeful to, and in our generation? What ſtock have we laid up for the other world, if we have not laid out ourſelves for the good of others in this? Luke xvi. 9. That temper of ſpirit, whereby one is ſelfiſh, concerned for none, but his ſweet ſelf, is a flaming evidence of being on the broad way; and much more that whereby one is diſpoſed to run down all about them, to ſpread their terror around them, to be a plague to ſociety, diſturbing all that are near them, Eccleſ. ix. 18. If thoſe in that temper ſee heaven, we muſt give up the Bible as a fable, and confound heaven and hell, Iſa. xi. 6. Tit. iii. 3. James ii. 13. Rev. xiii. 10.

Thus ye ſee that thoſe on the narrow way look upward, inward, and outward, labouring each of theſe ways to be uſeful, and to fill up their room in the world; ſo living to righteouſneſs.

And theſe two parts of the narrow way Chriſt hath chalked out to his followers by his death and reſurrection, which are the exemplary cauſes of their mortification and vivification.

Thirdly, Let us conſider the narrowneſs of the way to life. This narrowneſs of the way is not abſolute, but reſpective, in reſpect of the imperfection of our preſent ſtate: for the boundaries of it are eternal, it being for ſubſtance the very ſame the ſaints will walk in through eternity, when they will walk at greateſt liberty. But a way may be very narrow and preſſing to one, that will be perfectly eaſy and large to another, in regard of the very different ſizes the paſſengers may be of. So a ſhoe may be very ſtrait for a ſwelled foot, that will be large abundantly for the ſame foot, when it is hale and ſound. The glorified ſaints have the hale foot; ſo the way is large and broad enough to them in life: we have the ſwelled one; ſo the way, though for ſubſtance the ſame, is narrow to us going to life. Now, the narrowneſs of the way to life, riſes from a complication of theſe three.

1ſt, The exactneſs and purity of the law that bounds this way of holy obedience, Pſal. cxix. 4. No ſinful latitude is allowed here; every wrong ſtep is condemned by it. It hems in the traveller therein on every ſide; and that,

1. To the right matter of obedience; which is not to be meaſured by man's choice, but God's command, Matth. xv. 9. If it is deviſed by a man's own heart, whatever ſpecious pretext of ſanctity it has, it is rejected with a Who hath required this at your hand? Iſa. i. 12. and far more if it is forbidden of God, it is an abomination to him, though one ſhould be ſo blind as to think it good ſervice, John xvi. 2. There is no holy obedience, but in what is commanded of God.

2. To the right manner of obedience. Suppoſe it be a thing that in itſelf is duty, yet if it is not done in a right manner, it is no walking in the narrow way. Here the traveller is hemmed in to,

(1.) The love of God, as the principle of his obedience. His labour muſt be a labour of love, elſe it is loſt labour, Heb. vi. 10. Love to God himſelf muſt diſpoſe us to obey him, elſe he will not reckon we obey him at all; for he ſees the heart; and what is not with the heart, can never be acceptable, 2 Cor. viii. 12.

(2.) The will of God muſt be not only the rule, but the reaſon of our obedience, Eph. vi. 6, 7. It is no true faith, but where one believes becauſe God has ſaid it; nor holy obedience, but where the thing is done becauſe God has bid it. So one may do what God commands, and yet not obey him, if he does it not in obedience to his command.

(3.) To the glory of God, as the chief end of his obedience, 1 Cor. x. 31. If any thing elſe have that place, God will not reckon it obedience to him, Zech. vii. 6. So there is much loſt labour, where though the thing in itſelf be duty, yet it is marred by the low and ſelfiſh ends it is done for, Matth. vi. 1. Thus miniſters may loſe their preaching, people their prayers, any body whatſoever good they do, doing the ſame for ſelfiſh ends.

(4.) laſtly, Faith in God through Chriſt, as that which caſts their obedience into the mould of goſpel obedience, the only holy obedience of a ſinner, Col. iii. 17. The work of faith in the caſe is to fetch in ſtrength from Jeſus for holy obedience, 2 Tim. ii. 1. and ſo to perform it, Phil iv 13. and then to lay it over on Jeſus, for acceptance with God, Heb. xi 4. 6.

2dly, The bias of that lies away from and contrary to the holy law. This the apoſtle complains of as what made his walking in the way uneaſy, Rom. vii. 21. There are notable remains of the natural enmity in the beſt while they are here, a woful diſpoſition not liking to be bounded by the pure commandment. There are luſts of the heart, that bend forth on every ſide, and cannot be hedged in without pain. Hence the way appears narrow, and feels ſtrait and pinching: and the walking in it is indeed one continued ſtruggle to the end; the way of holy obedience lying quite croſs to the natural inclination, over the belly of which the traveller muſt go. Now there being nothing of this in heaven, the way of obedience will not be narrow to the ſaints there.

3dly, The many embaraſſments in this way from without. Our text (Gr.) calls it an afflicted or compreſſed way. Had the children of God no more ado but to make their way forward in the path of God's commandments, over the belly of their own corruptions, they might have enough ado with it. But that is not all: whatever impediments or entanglements Satan and an evil world can get laid in their way, will be ſure to be found there. Hence they have thickets of temptations, tribulations, diſcouragements, &c. to break through. Sometimes the ſmiles of the world are fair to flatter them off their way; ſometimes its frowns, to fright them from it: and ſometimes a ſpeat of ill example is like to carry them off their feet. Beſides all this there are trials from the hand of God to be met with in it. So that it is a way beſet with briars and thorns, Eph. vi. 12. John xvi. 33. Hence Heb. xii. 1, 2. Let us lay aſide every weight, and the ſin which doth ſo eaſily beſet us, and let us run with patience the race that is ſet before us, looking unto Jeſus, the author and finiſher of our faith; who for the joy that was ſet before him endured the croſs, deſpiſing the ſhame, and is ſet down at the right hand of the throne of God.

SECONDLY, We are to conſider this way its leading away to life. And here I ſhall ſhew, 1. What is that life it leads to. 2. How the narrow way leads to it.

Firſt, What is that life the narrow way leads to? That is in a word, a happy life in the other world, Mark x. 30. Entering the ſtrait gate, the dead ſinner gets life, elſe he could never go on the narrow way: and the life then received is eternal; for from the moment it is received, it ſhall never be extinguiſhed through the ages of eternity. But there is ſo great a difference, in degrees and attending circumſtances, betwixt the believers life here, and in heaven, that this laſt is called life by way of eminency. For,

1. Heaven is the region of life, where no death can enter; but whoſoever is there, lives, Rev. xxi. 4. This world at beſt is a mixture of the dead and the living, even above ground; and more than that, the dead always are the far greater part in the mixture, which makes this world an unſavoury, melancholy place to them in whom ſpiritual life is begun, Pſal. cxx. 5. But when they come there, they will find themſelves in the land of life, where there is no winter, but an eternal ſpring; no dead, but all living.

2. Their life will be perfected there, Heb. xii. 23. It is begun here indeed: but yet there is a great mixture of death with it, even in the livelieſt ſaints here; they have a whole body of death carrying about with them, Rom. vii. 24. But there will not be the leaſt member of it about them there. Even their life of comfort will be completed there, though they may have much ado to keep it from extinction here.

3. laſtly, No death can ever have acceſs there; but their life will be ſpun out in joy and comfort to all eternity, without any interruption. While they are here, they ſtill know that death is abiding them: but when they arrive there, they know, they are for ever beyond its reach any more. They are ſet down there by the fountain of life, and allowed a full participation of the waters of life, that they can die no more.

Secondly, How does the narrow way lead to life? And, 1ſt, Negatively, Not by way of merit, proper, or improper. Proper merit is what ariſes from the intrinſic worth of the thing done, fully proportioned to the reward. Such is the merit of Chriſt's obedience and death. But no ſuch merit can be in our works; for there is no proportion between our obedience and everlaſting life, whatever the papiſts pretend, Rom. viii. 18. 2 Cor. iv. 17; and whatever they be, they are due from us to God, Rom. viii. 12. Luke xvii. 10. Improper merit is what ariſes from paction enſuring ſuch a reward on ſuch a work as the condition thereof; ſo that the work being performed, the reward becomes a debt. So Adam's perfect obedience would have been meritorious, namely by paction. But no ſuch merit is in our works. Legal Proteſtants advance this, though they do not call it merit, while they pretend that God has promiſed eternal life on condition of our obedience; thinking it enough to free them from the doctrine of merit, that they do not pretend to intrinſic worth in the works, proportioned to the reward. But what more do they yield in this, than innocent Adam behoved to have yielded, had he perfected his obedience? Do they not hereby confound the two covenants? for all the difference remains only in degrees, which do not alter the kind. The ſcripture rejects this as well as the other, Rom. iv. 4. and vi. 23. Paul would not lippen to it, Phil. iii. 9.

2dly, Poſitively, The narrow way leads to life by way of order and connection. It leads thereto,

1. By way of order in the nature of things, whereby one thing neceſſarily goes before another. Thus the beginning of a thing goes before the end of it; and there is no reaching the end without beginning it. So the narrow way is the beginning of the Chriſtian courſe, eternal life in heaven the end of it, Rom. vi. 22. Thus the ſun riſing muſt go before its getting to the meridian, the ſeed-time before the harveſt, and the firſt fruits before the whole. So walking in the narrow way muſt go before life in heaven, Prov. iv. 18. Pſal. cxxvi. 5. Rom. viii. 23. This eſtabliſhes infallibly the neceſſity of holy obedience; it being as impoſſible for ſubjects capable of holy obedience to ſee life without it, as to reach the end without beginning the work, &c. Heb. xii. 14. But will any ſay, that the beginning, the ſun-riſing, &c. are the condition upon which the end is given, the ſun is ſet to the meridian, &c.?

2. By way of connection, whereby one thing is knit with another, whether in the nature of things, or by ſpecial appointment. Thus the means and the end, the way and the journey's end, are connected in the nature of things; that whoſo neglects the means, cannot reach the end; that takes not the way, cannot reach the journey's end. So the narrow way is the mean or mids to be gone through, the way to the journey's end, eternal life, Phil. iii. 13, 14. Thus the wreſtling and the prize, the Chriſtian fight and the crown, are connected by divine appointment: but the former does neither properly merit the latter, nor is it the condition thereof, 2 Tim. iv. 7, 8. compared with Rev. iv. 10. In the narrow way there muſt be fighting, becauſe there is oppoſition; but if ye go along that way, ye will get to life; even as if ye go by ſuch and ſuch places, ye will get to ſuch a city: yet is not the going that way the condition of admiſſion into the city.

The true ſtate of the matter lies here. Eternal life is freely given to the ſoul here in the firſt moment of believing; it is begun in them, John iii. 36. and v. 24. 1 John v. 12. It exerts itſelf, and hath its operation and progreſs in the walking in the narrow way: and death being the end of the way, where the body of death is dropt, the ſoul then comes to have that life completed; as one having perfected the journey enters the city. The which overthrows all merit and conditionality of works as to eternal life, and in the mean time infallibly eſtabliſhes the neceſſity of them to it, viz. conſidered in its perfection in heaven.

Practical inferences may be deduced from the whole.

Firſt, An eaſy entrance on religion is ſomewhat ſuſpicious like, and needs to be examined; becauſe it is a ſtrait gate that leads to life. I will not take on me to deny a ſovereign goſpel way of converſion, that ſwallows up any notable law work, though I have no experience of it. A ſovereign God muſt not be limited. But I muſt ſay this,

1. It is not the ordinary way. Ordinarily a law-work, greater in ſome, and leſſer in others, goes before, according to that, Gal. iii. 24. Wherefore the law was our ſchoolmaſter to bring us unto Chriſt, that we might be juſtified by faith. Thus the converts, Acts ii. Paul, the jailor, and others. And hereto I believe the experience of Chriſtians generally does agree. As for Lydia, ſhe was a convert before, a Jewiſh proſelyte, Acts xvi. 14.

2. The eaſy way of entering on religion is a flaw in the foundation, in the caſe of ſome, Matth. xiii. 20. But he that received the ſeed into ſtony places, the ſame is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it. Where obſerve, (1.) There is a receiving the word of the goſpel at firſt bruſh, anon. (2.) There is a mighty ſtir in the affections at that reception; the party is tranſported with joy. (3.) The flaw lies in the ſuperficialneſs of the work, its not going deep enough, ver. 5. viz. by the digging work of conviction and humiliation, Luke vi. 48. ſo that the party hath no root, Matth. xiii. 21. (4.) laſtly, As it came lightly, it goes lightly, ibid.

3. Whoever pretend to it, ought well to examine it, before they ſit down contented with it. And this may be done, to the ſufficient clearing the matter.

(1.) By conſidering what their entrance, whatever it was, ſet them into. If it ſet them into a ſound and thorough repentance for ſin, the matter needs no more diſpute; if not, their pretences are vain. If their repentance was ſound and thorough, whatever they had or had not before, they then got a piercing ſight and ſenſe of the ſins of their lives, and ſin of their nature too, and ſincerely repented of both, Gal. v. 24. and particularly of their predominant ſin, from which their hearts would then be looſed in a particular manner, Luke xix. 8.

(2.) By conſidering what way they are on. If their habitual track and courſe of life is a courſe of ſincere holy obedience, let them not diſquiet themſelves as to the manner of their entry; for it is not poſſible to get on that narrow way, but by the right gate, Pſal. cxix. 6. But as the ſtraiteſt law work iſſuing in a looſe courſe of life, will be found to have been but a foretaſte of hell; ſo an eaſy way of entering on religion, followed with a looſe and licentious courſe of life, will be found to be the wide gate and broad way to deſtruction. That was the religion of ſome, whom in our fathers days they juſtly called Antinomians and Ranters, who pretending to a ſovereign goſpel-way of converſion, gave the ſwing to their luſts, and led ſcandalous lives, a reproach to the goſpel. But if that be the gate to life, we may throw by our Bibles and regard them no more: But 2 Pet. ii. 17. theſe are wells without water, clouds that are carried with a tempeſt, to whom the miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever.

Secondly, Strictneſs in religion, nice, exact, and pointed walking therein, is not only juſtifiable, but neceſſary; for narrow is the way that leads unto life, and it will not allow wide ſteps. It is the way of the world to expoſe the entering by the ſtrait gate under the name of melancholy, madneſs, and diſtraction; and ſtrict walking on the narrow way, under the name of fantaſtic ſingularity, preciſeneſs, and needleſs nicety. But let the world cry it down as they will, the Bible, and particularly our text, cries it up, as not only juſtifiable, but neceſſary.

But before I come to juſtify it, and ſhew the neceſſity of it, I muſt firſt fix the true notion of it. For there is a ſpurious ſtrictneſs in religion, which is oft miſtaken for the genuine ſtrictneſs, eſpecially by the parties themſelves: whereas the former belongs to the broad way, the latter only to the narrow. That there is ſuch a ſpurious ſtrictneſs, is without controverſy, Acts xxvi. 5. After the ſtraiteſt ſect of his religion, Paul lived a Phariſee; and therefore the apoſtle's caution is very neceſſary, Gal. iv. 18. It is good to be zealouſly affected always in a good thing. Now,

1. This ſpurious ſtrictneſs in religion, which is to be rejected as a work of the fleſh, is a ſtrictneſs of men's own making. It is not God's commandment that girds them ſo ſtrait; but where God leaves them at liberty, they bind up themſelves; and ſo their ſtrictneſs is downright ſuperſtition in the ſenſe of the Bible, however they may pretend to be enemies to ſuperſtition, Matth. xv. 9. Col. ii. 20, 22. And ſo it is, though they may take themſelves to be bound to it, by God's commandment, while in reality there is no ſuch thing, John xvi. 2. For an erring conſcience taking that for God's command which is not ſo, Acts xxvi. 9. It may be diſcerned by,

(1.) Its diſproportionableneſs, making men more ſtrict in theſe things, than they are in the things unqueſtionably commanded of God, Matth. xxiii. 25. Nature is always fond of its own brats; and will treat them as one does his own children, while uncontroverted duties are treated like ſtep children; even as the earth gives its ſtrength to the weeds, while the flowers have much ado to fend.

(2.) Its juſtling out ſome ſubſtantial duties of religion, Matth. xv. 2.——6. So the apoſtle Paul teaches us the ſpurious ſtrictneſs of ſome claſhed with the ſixth command, Col. ii. 22, 23. No duty can be contrary to another. When therefore ſome point of ſtrictneſs claſhes with ſome moral duty of the ten commands, carrying one off from it, be ſure it is ſtrictneſs of the wrong ſort. Thus while men's ſtrictneſs bars them from the ordinary means of grace, in which Chriſt feeds his people, and from the duties of love and beneficence towards their neighbours, we may be ſure it is ſpurious.

(3.) laſtly, Its giving a ſet to mens ſpirits quite unlike the ſpirit of the goſpel. Spurious ſtrictneſs ariſeth from a legal diſpoſition, and gives the ſpirit a legal ſet and bias, reckoning highly on their ſtrictneſs, Phil. iii. 6, 7. It puffs up with pride and ſelf-conceit, Col. ii. 18. fills with bitterneſs of ſpirit, Tit. iii. 3. and gives a fiérineſs of ſpirit, inconſiſtent with the ſpirit of the goſpel which is a ſpirit of love and meekneſs, James iii. 17. This ſtrictneſs is to be avoided, as diſhonouring to God, injurious to one's own ſoul, and hurtful to our neighbours.

2. But there is a genuine ſtrictneſs for all that, the which is recommended in our text. And it is a ſtrict walking up to the revealed will of God, ſo far as we know it, in all things: not daring to come and go on theſe points, but ſticking cloſe to them, though to our own loſs in the world; being inflexible in them, over the belly of temptations, the world's contrary example, its faireſt ſmiles, and bittereſt frowns.

What girds the man here, and makes him inflexible, is, the authority of God on his conſcience, Acts iv. 19, 20. Wherefore, be the thing in itſelf never ſo ſmall, and the loſs or hazard in cleaving to it never ſo great; yet being commanded of God, he muſt ſtick to his point. It is enough to him, Pſal. cxix. 4. 'Thou haſt commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently.'

There is a twofold meaſure of this ſtrictneſs: and all that is in or over it, is condemnable as looſeneſs.

1. The law of God, the law of the ten commandments, James i. 25. Ezek. xviii. 5.——9. That is the eternal rule of righteouſneſs, which no circumſtances whatſoever can make to ceaſe to bind. What in our practice comes ſhort of that, whether with reſpect to our duty to God, ourſelves, or neighbour, is a defect of true ſtrictneſs; and what is over, is ſpurious ſtrictneſs unacceptable to God; for there is no wiſdom in being wiſe above what is written.

2. The example of Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 21. Herein we have the former ſet before our eyes, that we may the more clearly diſcern it, and find it the more powerfully inforced. Our Lord Jeſus was in his life the perfect pattern of true ſtrictneſs, 1 Pet. ii. 22. He was indeed by a ſpuriouſly ſtrict generation of legaliſts, accuſed as not ſtrict enough, becauſe he obſerved not the traditions of the elders, would not go to their heights to refuſe tribute to Cæſar, ſcrupled not the ſociety of publicans and ſinners, that he might do good to their ſouls, nor to make clay on the Sabbath-day to advance a moral duty of the ſixth command. But in all theſe things he was the ſtrict party, walking cloſely up to the law of God; they were the looſe party, as going aſide from it. And ſo will they be found, who, under the pretence of ſtrictneſs, bind up themſelves from thoſe things wherein they have his example to follow. The cloſer we are to Chriſt's example, the more truly ſtrict are we.

This ſtrictneſs may be diſcerned by,

1. The uniformity of it, Pſal. cxix. 6. Truly ſtrict in one, ſtrict in all, James ii. 11. For a man to pretend to be ſtrict in ſome opinions, and looſe in his practice; ſtrict in duty to God, but looſe in duty to man, is abominable. The truly ſtrict will be a ſtrict obſerver of his words and thoughts as well as his actions; of his relative duties to man, as a parent, child, maſter, ſervant, &c. as well as of religious duties to God, praying, reading, &c.; of truth between man and man, as well as of the truth of religious principles.

2. The due proportion kept in it, proportioning the concern to the weight of the matters. The neglect of this is taxed, Matth. xxiii. 23. Wo unto you ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye pay tithe of mint, and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. As the leaſt filing of gold is gold; yet the greater the weight the more is the worth, and ought to be the concern for it. So though no revealed truth, nor commanded duty, is to be ſlighted; yet religion and reaſon ſay, that according to their weight and worth our concern for them ſhould be regulated. And it is as abſurd to let our zeal run out ſo on circumſtantial truths, as to ſwallow up our concern for fundamentals; to ſhew more concern about ceremonial duties, than the ſubſtantial duties of morality; as it is to guard the feet and legs, and to leave the heart open to the ſword of the enemy.

3. laſtly, The goſpel-ſpirit wherewith it is managed, Phil. iii. 3. True ſtrictneſs ariſeth from faith in Chriſt in the heart, 2 Cor. iv. 15. So the man walks ſtrictly, as if he were to win heaven by his ſtrictneſs; mean while he quits it all in point of confidence, as if God had not required it. Hence true ſtrictneſs is always attended with a goſpel ſet of ſpirit; whereby the man is jointly concerned for the honour of the holy law, and of the grace of the goſpel; is adorned with ſelf denial, humility, meekneſs, love to God, and love to mankind, good will and beneficence to his fellow-creatures.

Now, the true notion of ſtrictneſs is thus ſtated,

1*ſt*, It is altogether juſtifiable, however it is run down in the world, and looked on with an evil eye. To juſtify it, conſider,

1. The infinite majeſty of God, whoſe commands are here ſtrictly ſtuck to, Exod. xx. 2. Will any man come and go upon his prince's orders given him, whatever he do with what he is bid by others? The infinite diſtance betwixt God and us, fully juſtifies a preciſe regard to all his commands, an inflexible adhering thereto in every point, though the whole world ſhould countermand them. And were it duly conſidered, it would oblige to exactneſs of obedience without diſputing, without ſhifting, Acts iv. 19.

2. The riſk that is run by tampering in theſe matters, Matth. x. 21. Let the matter be weighed in an even balance: put the greateſt loſs and hazard in the world in the one ſcale, to bring off from ſtrictneſs; the diſpleaſure of God muſt be laid in the other: and is not that ſufficient to downweigh the former, and to determine a wiſe man to the ſide of the ſtrictneſs? So, as long as God's frowns are more terrible than the world's, religious ſtrictneſs will be juſtifiable.

3. The life of Chriſt in the world. Was it a ſtrict life or not? It certainly was; for he could ſay, I do always thoſe things that pleaſe the Father, John viii. 29. Was it juſtifiable or not? Was he to be condemned as too preciſe? If his life was juſtifiable, how can they be condemned for ſtrictneſs who make it their pattern? eſpecially conſidering, that he left us an example to follow, and that they do not fully come up to the ſtrictneſs of it. Truly the wounds the carnal world give to the ſtrictneſs of Chriſtians, go through their ſides to Chriſt himſelf, who was vaſtly ſtricter than they can reach: and they will reckon for them, Jude ver. 15.

4. Man's ſtate of perfection. Every being is allowed to aſpire towards its perfection: and ſhall it be a crime in men to aſpire towards his? Now man's perfection lies in the religious ſtrictneſs deſcribed before. This appears from, that the glory of God is the chief end of man, and man glorifies God by conforming to his law, the eternal rule of righteouſneſs; ſo that the more exact that conformity is, the more does he reach that end; and when he is arrived at a fully ſtrict conformity to it, then he is at his perfection. This was the road God ſet innocent Adam on, who fell by letting down his ſtrictneſs. This is the point the glorified ſaints in heaven are arrived at, where there is a perfect ſtrictneſs, without the leaſt deviation. How then comes ſtrictneſs to be ſo treated in the world? Are they angry that ſome endeavour to get out of their ruins, going, though ſlowly, in the way towards their perfection?

2dly, It is not only juſtifiable, but neceſſary,

1. In reſpect of the command of God, Pſal. cxix. 4. Thou haſt commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently, Heb. exceedingly: q. d. to a degree, a pitch of exactneſs. And what that is, we ſee Mark xii. 30, 31. ‘Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy ſtrength: this is the firſt commandment. And the ſecond is like, namely this, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf.’ The apoſtle wills Chriſtians to walk circumſpectly, Eph. v. 15. Gr. exactly, nicely, preciſely: q. d. going up to the utmoſt of every thing. The pure law requires the utmoſt purity and exactneſs; and it is blaſphemy to think or ſay, that Chriſt has relaxed any thing of the purity required in every command. Therefore ſtrictneſs is as neceſſary as the authority of God can make it.

2. In reſpect of its being commanded on our utmoſt peril, Matth. v. 19, 20. ‘Whoſoever ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven: but whoſoever ſhall do and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called great in the kingdom of heaven. For I ſay unto you, that except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the ſcribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.’ Should we leave ourſelves looſe in any one point, we riſk our ſalvation, as the ſhip does ſinking, wherein one lake is left unſtopped, ver. 29. No length of time will excuſe our giving ourſelves the looſe, Matth. xxiv. 13. nor no hazard in the world whatſoever, Mark viii. 38.

3. In reſpect of our neceſſary conformation to Chriſt, 1 John ii. 6. He that ſaith he abideth in him, ought himſelf alſo ſo to walk, even as he walked. How neceſſary it is that we be conformed to Chriſt, the apoſtle teaches, Rom. viii. 29. For whom he did foreknow he alſo did predeſtinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the firſt born among many brethren. Our baptiſm ſhews it; Gal. iii. 27. For as many of you as have been baptized into Chriſt, have put on Chriſt. And that we cannot be if we are not ſtrict in religion. By a looſe careleſs courſe, we carry the image of the firſt Adam; and by a ſtrict courſe of life, we muſt bear the image of the ſecond Adam.

4. laſtly, As an evidence and character of ſincerity, Pſal. cxix. 6. ‘Then ſhall I not be aſhamed, when I have reſpect unto all thy commandments.’ The reaſon hereof is manifeſt from James ii. 10, 11. ‘For whoſoever ſhall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that ſaid, Do not commit adultery; ſaid alſo, Do not kill. Now, if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a tranſgreſſor of the law.’ For if any command is reſpected as the command of God, all his commands will be ſo: ſince they all bear the impreſs of the ſame divine authority. And one's taking it on him to come and go on God's commands, is an evidence, that God's authority has no due weight with him. See the touchſtone of ſincerity, John xv. 14. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatſoever I command you.

I ſhall give you the following advices for true ſtrictneſs in religion.
